"They are rendering our public free schools a tragic farce; they are sapping its only reliable sources of support by abstracting the United States bonds and squandering the proceeds of their sale. They have robbed you of your princely domain secured by the life-blood of very many and the severest privations of all Texas heroes and veterans. The pittance of a school fund we looked upon as secure as long as we had United States bonds in the treasury for the basis of that fund; but now your fifteenth Legislature, with sacrilegious hands, have torn down the only pillars which could give support to your free-school system. And, in doing so, they have realized that, as Alaric and Attila could invade and devastate the proud and classic city of Rome, so in this day of boasted refinement and advocacy of universal education a set of Vandals, calling themselves Democrats, of Texas, have violently taken from the childhood and youth of Texas that which is vastly more important to them than bread itself."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The State of South Carolina has been particularly favored with an advanced and efficient free-school system under continuous Republican rule during the past seven years. Probably no State South has made equal progress, unless it was Mississippi in the four years of effective management by State Superintendent Pease. In South Carolina the organization and development of a free-school system has been steady, progressive, and successful.

In his annual report for 1875 the State superintendent furnishes the following figures:

Educable children, (white,).....	80,461
" " (colored,).....	139,395
Total.....	219,856

School attendance, (white,).....	47,001
" " (colored,).....	63,415
Total.....	110,416

Average monthly wages of teachers, $30.

Average number of school months, 4½.

Increase of free schools over 1874, 227.

Total amount of school revenue for the fiscal year ending October 18, 1875.....	$489,542
---	-----------

School expenditures for 1868.....	$25,000
" " " 1869.....	112,475
" " " 1870.....	100,735
" " " 1871.....	208,618
" " " 1872.....	420,918
" " " 1873.....	455,317
" " " 1874.....	470,249
" " " 1875.....	434,164

The State superintendent, Mr. Jillson, reports that—

"Four main causes check the efficiency and success of our free common schools, and they are—

"1. Want of qualified and efficient teachers.

"2. Inefficiency and unfitness of school officers.

"3. Lack of sufficient interest of the right kind on the part of the people in general.

"4. Inadequacy of means."

Under the third head he says :

"A large and influential class of the community manifest little or no interest in our free schools." * * *

In contrast with the expenditures in the State of South Carolina for free school purposes he reports :

"The State of Rhode Island, with a school population of 43,800, expended $668,724 for the support of her common schools during the year 1874. The city of Baltimore expends more money annually for public schools than does the entire State of South Carolina."

NORTH CAROLINA.

The free-school system of North Carolina is very imperfect. The constitution of the State, adopted in 1868 by the Republicans, provides as follows :

"The General Assembly, at its first session under this constitution, shall provide by taxation and otherwise for a general and uniform system of public schools, wherein tuition shall be free of charges to all the children of the State between the ages of six and twenty-one years.

"Each county of the State shall be divided into a convenient number of districts, in which one or more public schools shall be taught at least four months in every year ; and if the county commissioners of any county shall fail to comply with the aforesaid requirements of this section they shall be liable to indictment."

A general system was established as the outgrowth of these provisions, but little progress was made in its organization before the hostile legislation of 1871. In his annual report for 1872 Dr. Sears, agent of the Peabody Fund, reports as follows : "The public mind does not seem to be so well settled here in regard to free schools as in most of the other States. The General Assembly levied no tax for schools for the present year, and the poll-taxes were in many cases applied to other than school purposes."

According to the State superintendent's report for 1874 the sum of $216,684 was expended for schools in that year.

The number of educable children in the State is 123,088.

The condition of the permanent educational fund is reported as follows by the State Treasurer, under date of August 25, 1876 :

Educational Fund.

This fund had, before the war, stock as follows, the proceeds of land grants by the General Government :

Bank of North Carolina.....	$502,700
Bank of Cape Fear	544,400
Wilmington and Weldon Railroad Company.....	400,000
Wilmington and Manchester Railroad Company.....	200,000
Cape Fear Navigation Company.....	32,500
	<hr/> 1,679,600

The bank stock was lost by the results of the war.

The stock in the two railroads was sold by the Board of Education in April, 1869—that in the Wilmington and Weldon railroad for $148,000, and that in Wilmington and Manchester railroad for $10,000. The stock in the Navigation Company was sold for $3,250 in May, 1869.

Of the amount realized from the sale of the stocks as above stated $150,000 was invested in $450,000 of special tax bonds, when that class of bonds was regarded as good. The balance was loaned on good collaterals by order of the Board of Education.

At the close of the war this fund had $250,000 old bonds which were preserved from the wreck of the war. They were converted into interest-bearing certificates under act of Assembly February 26, 1867, which certificates are now counted among the assets of the fund. Interest was paid to 1868, when it was suspended for want of funds.

The statement (J) on page 43 of the report of Treasurer, 1874, gives a complete record of assets of the Board of Education, to which are to be added $31,000 to United States bonds, making United States bonds now in possession of board $76,000.

The Literary Fund had at the close of the war a large amount of Confederate bonds and State war bonds, which were bought with funds accumulating during the war. These funds were of the currency of the country, as then existing.

[SEAL]

D. A. JENKINS,
State Treasurer.

The relation of Republicanism and popular education is not alone ascertained by comparing Republican with Democratic States, but it is apparent also by comparisons between counties in any given State South, if not as well throughout the country. Take, for example, the Republican counties of Wake, Pasquotank, and Granville, and the Democratic counties of Orange, Johnston, and Currituck. Their population and school attendance is as follows :

	Population.	Attendance.
Wake.	35,617	2,956
Orange.	17,507	783
Granville.	24,831	1,345
Johnston.	16,897	747
Pasquotank.	8,131	1,088
Currituck.	5,131	121

The ratio of attendance in the Republican counties, it will be seen, is much greater than in the Democratic counties. A comparison of all the counties in North Carolina will show that free schools flourish where Republicans rule and languish where Democrats rule.

General Observations.

The following fourteen States are, under ordinary circumstances, conceded to the Republican party: Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Wisconsin. The following are conceded, generally, to the Democrats: Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia. The remainder are claimed by both parties. They can easily be compared in the light of the last census report:

I. The fourteen Republican States have a population of 16,037,419. The fifteen Democratic States have a population of 12,149,512. In the former the number of public schools is 74,584; in the latter, 22,291. In the former the pupils in public schools are estimated at 1,022,716.

Public schools to population in the Republican States is as 1 to 15.6; in the Democratic States it is as 1 to 54.6 and a half times as much. The ratio of attendance upon public schools in the Republican States is as 1 to 15.6; in the Democratic States it is as 1 to 54.6 and a half times as great. This fact cannot be the ground of difference in results; nor on the other side. The States are contiguous. The results in 1818 and the results in 1868.

Population of 2,539,891.

MISSOURI.

Missouri has a population of 1,721,295.

The public schools in Illinois number 11,050; pupils, 677,623. The public schools of Missouri number 5,996; pupils, 320,313. In the former the ratio of public schools to population is as 1 to 229; in the latter as 1 to 287. In the former there are in attendance on these schools one pupil to every 3.45 persons; in the latter one to every 5.13.

OHIO AND KENTUCKY.

These States are contiguous. The former was admitted as a State in 1802, the latter ten years earlier.

Ohio has a population of 2,665,260; Kentucky, 1,321,011. The number of public schools in Ohio, 11,458; pupils in schools, 737,693. The number of public schools in Kentucky, 4,727; pupils in schools, 218,240. In the former the ratio of public schools to the population is 1 to 232; in the latter, 1 to 279. In Ohio there are in attendance upon these schools one pupil to every 3.35 persons; in Kentucky, 1 to every 6.

Like results will be obtained by comparing Kansas or Nebraska with Colorado or any other, except, possibly, West Virginia, where the prosperity of the public schools is attributable to other causes than Democratic power.

REFORM CATECHISM.

Q. Who originated the Credit Mobilier swindle?

A. Samuel J. Tilden.

Q. What lawyer takes fees from both sides?

A. Samuel J. Tilden.

Q. Who swears to false income returns?

A. Samuel J. Tilden.

Q. Who cries "stop thief!" when his confederates are exposed?

A. Samuel J. Tilden.

Q. Who is the fit and proper candidate of the Confederate Democracy?

A. Samuel J. Tilden.

Q. Who is not a fit and proper candidate for the support of the American people?

A. Samuel J. Tilden.

The property-holders of the District of Columbia will rue the day when Democracy rules the nation.

TILDEN AND HENDRICKS—A FEW FACTS ABOUT THEIR WAR RECORDS.

Doughface is no misnomer for Northern Democracy. Nor has the appropriateness of the appellation ever been more fully and forcibly demonstrated than is now being done to prove that Samuel J. Tilden was a patriot during the late war. From 1861 to 1865 the Democratic party, as a party, of which Mr. Tilden was a prominent leader, was in open sympathy with the rebels, and the Democratic press teemed with disloyal sentiments, and Democratic conventions, even as late as 1864, adopted resolutions declaring the war a failure. It will be remembered that prominent Democrats of the North met rebel emissaries in Canada, and numerous consultations were there held, in which the heartfelt sympathy of those gentlemen who are now crying "reform" was poured out for their Southern allies and their cause. Their sympathy for the rebels was no secret. Their conventions resolved that such was the fact, their press proclaimed it, far and wide, and their opposition to Mr. Lincoln's administration was most bitter, and finally culminated in his assassination. In some of the States, in localities where the Democracy had undisputed control, meetings were held and men enlisted and armed to resist the Government draft to fill our depleted ranks. To such an extent did this opposition prevail that it became necessary to recall troops from the front to take care of the rebel-reform Democracy at home. This is no fiction, but stubborn facts that have already passed into history.

This is the attitude the Democratic party assumed toward the Government at a time when every citizen's aid and sympathy were necessary to preserve the nation's life. It was in 1864, when the fate of the nation was trembling in the balance—the crisis had arrived and every loyal heart was palpitating with anxiety and fear; the Government needed both men and money for the common defense. The old flag was in danger and the dismemberment of the Union seemed almost inevitable. The Government, through her Executive, appealed to her patriotic sons for aid. It was a time when every loyal citizen was expected to do his duty.

Did the Democracy respond to the appeal? Did they come forth ready "to do and die" for the old flag and the land of their nativity? Be it said to their eternal shame they opposed it—with honorable individual exceptions—to the bitter end; and in the very darkest hours of our nation's peril Samuel J. Tilden, from the Committee on Resolutions in a Democratic National Convention in Chicago, in 1864, brought forth the infamous resolution declaring the war a failure, thus inspiring new hopes and raising new expectations of an ultimate victory in the hearts of the rebels in the South and their cowardly Democratic allies in the North.

Mr. Tilden has a war record which is now, as it always has been, eminently satisfactory to Jeff. Davis and the whole rebel horde, including the Democratic party of the North, whatever other people may think about it. It began in a public way on Saturday, April 20, 1861. On that day the largest mass meeting ever held on this continent was convened in Union square, New York city, to give encouragement to Abraham Lincoln in the opening of the battle for the Union. John A. Dix was the presiding officer, but among the Vice Presidents or speakers were such Democrats as Daniel S. Dickinson, John T. Hoffman, Fernando Wood, Abram S. Hewitt, Erastus Brooks, Augustus Schell, and many others, all whose names were used with their consent. That Samuel J. Tilden did not give any aid to this initial movement in favor of the Union was the fault of no one but himself. He was waited upon by Mr. Samuel Sloan, and asked to allow the use of his name as a Vice President, and curtly refused. Mr. Sloan begged and still Tilden refused to do anything to aid and abet an "abolition war." Mr. Sloan at last lost patience with this obdurate disloyalty and exclaimed, "Mr. Tilden, you will live to regret that you did not do as I asked." Tilden, who already saw Toombs calling the roll of his slaves on Bunker Hill, said, "I think not," and there the interview ended. The speakers at the meeting which Tilden thus refused to attend were Rev. Dr. Spring, John A. Dix, Daniel S. Dickinson, Senator Baker, of Oregon, Robert J. Walker, Fernando Wood, ex-Governor Hunt, William M. Evarts, Henry J. Raymond, Richard O'Gorman, Hamilton Fish, John Cochrane, David Dudley Field, Royal Phelps, and others. A letter was read from Archbishop Hughes, in which that now deceased and greatly lamented prelate uttered brave, manly, earnest words for the Union, ending by saying: "We know no party now." To the meeting to which the good archbishop wrote, and to which all these patriots spoke, Samuel J. Tilden said, "I have no sympathy with its object."

Mr. Tilden always bore the reputation of being a sly, crafty politician, and his public expressions as to the war were carefully guarded, while his secret heart went out in full sympathy with the rebels. When in private consultation with his Democratic friends he sometimes expressed his sentiments more fully, as will appear from the following extract from a letter of Dr. Russell, correspondent of the London Times, concerning a dinner party in New York, in March, 1861. Dr. Russell, (afterward known as Bull Run Russell,) writes to the Times as follows:

"In the evening, dining again with my friend, the banker, I had a favorable opportunity of hearing more of the special pleading which is brought to bear on the solution of the gravest political questions. It would seem as if a council of physicians were wrangling with each other over abstract dogmas respecting life and health while their patient was struggling in the agonies of death before them. There is not the smallest evidence of uneasiness on account of circumstances which betokened an awful crisis, if not the impending dissolution of society itself. Stranger still, the acts which are bringing about such a calamity were not regarded with disfavor, or at least were not considered unjustifiable. Among the guests were Hon. Horatio Seymour, a former Governor of the State of New York; Mr. Tilden, an acute lawyer, and Mr. Bancroft. The result left on my mind by their conversation and argument, was, that, according to the Constitution, the Government could not employ force to prevent secession, or compel States which had seceded by the voice of the people to acknowledge the Federal power. In fact, according to them, the Federal Government was the mere machine put forward by a society of sovereign States as a common instrument for certain ministerial acts, more particularly those which affected the external relations of the confederation. * * * There was not a man who maintained that the Government had any power to force the people of a State or to force a State to remain in the Union. Although they admitted the Southern leaders had meditated this treason against the Union, they could not bring themselves to allow their old opponents, the Republicans, now in power, to dispose of the armed force of the Union against their brother Democrats in the Southern States. Although secession will produce rebellion, it was, nevertheless, 'a right' founded on abstract principles, which could scarcely be abrogated consistently with due regard to the original compact. The Democrats behold with silent satisfaction the troubles into which the Republican triumph has plunged the country and are not disposed to extricate them."

It will thus be seen that Mr. Tilden had no sympathy with the North in its efforts to put down the rebellion and preserve the Union, but was actually so thoroughly imbued with the doctrine of States' rights, including the right of secession, that he could not find it in his heart to oppose and resist a dissolution of the Union. Surely the rebels of the South can find no fault with their candidate on that score, and his war record is highly acceptable to them as a matter of course.

It seems Mr. Tilden has "lived to regret" the course he pursued in 1861, or, if not to regret it, to absolutely deny it through his tools in Congress. The effort of Mr. Hewitt to prove Mr. Tilden's loyalty on the floor of the House falls flat when compared with the truth of history, as appears by the following from a highly reliable and authenticated source:

"The statement of Abram S. Hewitt that Samuel J. Tilden subscribed toward the organization of the Tammany regiment during the war is a fabrication out of whole cloth, and Mr. Hewitt should have known that it had no foundation in fact. The documents of the 'Union Defense Committee,' which was started in New York city at the outbreak of the war for the purpose of equipping regiments for active service, show that the entire cost of sending the Tammany and three other New York regiments to the front was defrayed wholly by the committee. It was, therefore, unfortunate for Mr. Hewitt to have selected the Tammany regiment as the one to which, as he stated, without the slightest foundation, Mr. Tilden gave a subscription, when the records show that he never gave even one cent to the organization. These facts do not admit of dispute. They have passed into history. The Union Defense Committee of New York, and its action in regard to regiments from that city, are matters of record in the Government offices at Washington. On page 54 of the report of this committee, issued in 1862, we find that they paid out the following sums, being the whole cost of equipping the regiments :

Tammany Regiment.....	$47,146 65
Mozart Regiment.....	67,099 83
Garibaldi Guards.. . . .	47,517 56
De Kalb Regiment.....	43,891 50

"The average cost of equipping each of these regiments was $52,997.88. The committee then say :

"These were the only regiments of which the ENTIRE cost was defrayed by the Union Defense Committee. Every article of clothing and equipment was furnished by the committee, together with rations for almost a thousand men each for a period of two months."

"Irrespective of these facts, it was rather unfortunate for Mr. Hewitt to open the 'war record' of Tilden in the House of Representatives. Of the millions of official and other documents published during the war, not one has yet been found showing that Tilden had given counsel or money or a word of encouragement in favor of perpetuating the Union. There is one, however, to be found—one under his own signature—in which he actually proposed to let the South establish an independent nation before a shot was fired—in the hope that she could make a treaty of peace with the North for common defense. Samuel J. Tilden was never known to do anything to help on the war, either by assisting the soldiers themselves or by ministering to their families during their absence or after their deaths. On the contrary, he is known to have refused assistance on many occasions. For the sake of example the following well authenticated case may be stated: Early in the war a young man of excellent family and superior character and attainments was desirous of raising a company. He waited upon Mr. Tilden, with whom he had an acquaintance, and asked him to give him a letter of recommendation to certain State officials.

"Mr. Tilden's reply was in substance as follows: 'Young man, you need not come to me for any such letter of recommendation; this war is an outrage, and I will lend no assistance whatever to its prosecution.' "

With these facts before us, and they are facts, and we defy refutation, it is left for the intelligent voter to decide for whom he will cast his ballot in November. Every household throughout the length and breadth of this great country have felt the effects of an unholy rebellion with which the Democratic party was in full sympathy, and for which it is alone responsible. Southern soil covers the bones of many, very many, of our noblest and bravest patriots, and the country is filled with limbless and maimed men, whose sacrifices were made that the nation might live. The crutch and the empty sleeve greet us everywhere, and are sad reminders of Democratic rule and of the treasonable purposes of that party, and the part that Samuel J. Tilden took in that war must, when the true historian shall have written the whole history of that gigantic rebellion, consign his name to everlasting infamy. The man with the crutch or empty sleeve, as well as the father whose son's remains repose in a Southern grave, either killed in battle or starved in Southern prison-pen, can point to Samuel J. Tilden with unerring certainty and say, as Nathan said to David, "Thou art the man."

It is unnecessary to occupy much space in ventilating the war record of Thomas A. Hendricks. It is a generally admitted fact that he was a major general in the infamous order of Knights of the Golden Circle, an organization which had for its object the promoting of the cause of the rebels and an organized opposition to the war policy of the Federal Government. Mr. Hendricks, like Mr. Tilden, is now endeavoring to prove his loyalty to his country during the rebellion, but, in the light of established facts, finds it extremely difficult to satisfy the people upon this important question. It is indeed a sad commentary upon the Democracy of this country that it becomes necessary for men who aspire to the highest offices in the gift of the people to be obliged to attempt to prove their loyalty to the Government which they aspire to rule. It is in striking contrast with that of the Republican candidates, Messrs. Hayes and Wheeler, to whose war records every loyal person can point with pride. They cannot be assailed—their reputations are above suspicion.

We cannot better illustrate Mr. Hendricks' position on the war question than by quoting from his speech at Shelbyville, Indiana, delivered February 5, 1863, in which he declared he had never advised any one to enlist in the Union army because he did not intend to enlist himself. In discussing the authority of the General Government to arrest deserters he said :

"If any young men have left their companies to come home without authority they have done an unfortunate thing, because they have not acted in accordance with law. So that you cannot fight the battle at issue in your neighborhoods. You must act in accordance with law. If anybody, however, comes into your neighborhoods without law, and propose to take anybody away by force, that is a matter without law, and you had best attend to that, gentlemen, at once." [Shouts of "We'll attend to them, old fellow!"]

In the same speech he announced his readiness to compromise with the rebels in the following language :

"What the next two years will bring about I do not know. There is one course for us to pursue, and that is to do our duty. I have hopes that this war will not last very much longer, and that there will be some adjustment consistent with the honor of the Government and the Union of the States. I am ready to compromise at any time. I am ready to say to the people of the South, 'Come in again and we will secure to you your constitutional rights, and, if you desire them, additional guarantees.' If there is any man who desires to continue fighting and spending the people's money and lives I do not sympathize with him. I should like to see these States brought together in convention again, and settle upon a mode of adjustment. I do not know whether we have a Government that will do it or not."

As late as September 14, 1864, less than a year before the close of the war, but at the very darkest period of the rebellion, Mr. Hendricks was announced to address a Democratic mass-meeting at Seymour, Indiana. The following is a literal copy of the handbill circulated to call the "faithful" together :

DEMOCRATIC MASS-MEETING.

HON. THOMAS A. HENDRICKS
Will Address the People of Jackson and Adjoining Counties at SEYMOUR, IND.,
ON WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 14, 1864, AT 10 O'CLOCK.

Let all who FAVOR PEACE, all who desire to be FREE from the death-grip of this infamously wicked, imbecile, and tyrannical Administration, its arbitrary and illegal arrests, and its drafts and conscription laws, by which peaceful citizens are dragged from their homes and all the endearments of domestic life, to butcher and be butchered, COME OUT and hear this advocate of peace and reunion. Come in wagons, come on horseback, come by railroad and on foot. Bring your neighbors, and especially your Republican neighbors, who are seeking for the truth. Bring your baskets well filled with something to eat. Other able speakers will be in attendance. Ladies especially invited. If possible, arrangements will be made with railroads to carry at HALF FARE.
AUGUST 29, 1864.

These extracts might be multiplied indefinitely, but the foregoing is enough of the sickening records of Tilden and Hendricks. They are, however, representative men of the party that placed them in nomination, and should they be elected the rebels could ask no greater boon.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.—If "civil service reform" means a school-boy catechism for men it is a practical absurdity.

If it means giving the control of the administration of public affairs to the enemies of the Government on their pretense of "non-partisanship," it is a public crime.

If it means appointments at the will of the Executive without consultation with or recommendation by the chosen representatives of the people, it is contrary to a republican theory of government.

If it means defalcations, contract swindles, and public peculations of all kinds, the Democratic Administrations which preceded and which fomented the late war have given the country enough of it to last the remainder of the century.

If it means competent men in public position, fidelity to public trusts, a steady improvement in administrative methods, and a wise and prudent economy in public disbursements, the Republican Administrations since 1861 may proudly challenge a comparison with the very best of earlier or later periods.

SOUTHERN STATE GOVERNMENTS—THEIR FINANCIAL CONDITION CONSIDERED.

Much has been said and written about the corruption and profligacy of what are derisively termed the "carpet-bag governments" of the South.' It is the design of this article to show their actual financial condition at this time, and the extent to which financial embarrassment and distress, if it does exist, is attributable to Republican administration.

The following table shows the number of miles of railroad constructed in the United States each year, as follows :

1865	1,177
1866.....	1,742
1867	2,449
1868.....	2,979
1869.....	5,118
1870.....	5,528
1871.....	7,779
1872.....	6,427
1873.....	3,948
1874.....	1,960
1875.....	2,008

In the flush times following the war, when money was plenty and the railroad fever very generally pervaded the country, the Southern States shared in the spirit of mingled speculation and enterprise. Vast areas of territory, comprising fertile and productive lands, lay many miles from rail or river communication, and were inaccessible to ready and easy markets. All their industries were prostrate and a general feeling of gloom and despondency had settled over the country.

Reconstruction under Republican auspices was generally regarded as the inauguration of a new era, in which the hope of returning prosperity, accompanied with the spirit and enterprise that characterized the North and the West, was to be speedily realized. The States of Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska were extending liberal aid to internal improvements, and why could not the South do the same? Her needs were equally great, and her ability equally good. Republicans and Democrats alike shared this prevailing sentiment, and the person who declared against it was denounced as a "fogy" and ignored in the counsels of the people.

This rage for railroad building, supported by State, county, and municipal authority, possessed every State in the South for several years before the crisis of 1873, and may be said to have been universally popular. But the panic brought a total change of sentiment, and suddenly, in the collapse that followed, the very liberal donations that had been extended to these enterprises by the concurrence of both parties were charged back upon the Republicans as extravagant and corrupt schemes that deserved to be repudiated and denounced by every good citizen. This, too, notwithstanding the well known fact that Democrats had been most urgent and officious in asking for such aid, invariably voted for it in the legislature, and were almost the sole beneficiaries, as is shown in the State of North Carolina.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Ante and post war debt of North Carolina, as reported by the Public Treasurer, October 1, 1866		$13,033,000 00
Interest on said debt at 6 per cent. to July 1, 1868, at which date the new State government, under the reconstruction acts, was organized		1,368,465 00
Total legal debt at the period of reconstruction.....		14,401,465 00
Amount of State debt as stated by Governor Holden in his message to the Legislature, dated November 17, 1868, the debt dating October 1, 1868.....		19,209,945 00
Amount of State debt on October 1, 1869, as stated in Governor Holden's message to the Legislature, dated November 18, 1869....		29,815,045 00
Total recognized debt, as reported by Public Treasurer under date of November 21, 1870, debt dating to October 1, 1870, including interest due and unpaid.....		31,640,771 75
Total debt, as stated by Governor Caldwell in message, under date November 20, 1871, debt running to October 1, 1871.....		34,887,464 45
Total debt, as stated by Governor Caldwell in message, under date of November 18, 1872, as "nearly thirty-seven millions".....		37,000,000 00
Total debt, as stated by Governor Caldwell in message, under date November 17, 1873, as over "thirty-eight millions".....		38,000,000 00
Total debt, as stated by Governor Brogden in message of November 16, 1874, debt dating to October 1, 1874.....		38,921,848 05
The interest on the aforesaid debt at 6 per cent. from October 1, 1874, to October 1, 1876, amounts to....		4,670,621 76
Which added to debt as stated by Governor Brogden in his message of November 16, 1874.....		38,921,848 05
Leaves the total debt, October 1, 1876.....		43,592,469 81

COMMENTS.

It will be seen that a large portion of the present legal debt is the accumulative interest since 1869. The additions to the ante-war debt were made—

1. During the war for internal improvements.

2. Between 1865 and 1867, by the convention and the Provisional Legislature, under Johnson's reconstruction.

3. By the convention of 1867-'68, held under the reconstruction acts, and the legislation of 1868-'69.

Of course it will be seen that the debt reported October 1, 1866, was created by the Democrats before, during, and after the war, and hence the Republicans found on the 1st of July, 1868, on assuming control of the government, an old debt, in which they had no responsibility in creating, of $14,401,465. The additions made to these State obligations by the constitutional convention of 1867 and 1868, and the Legislature of 1868-'69, were as follows:

Railroad Indorsements.

Chatham railroad.....	$3 200,000
Williamstown and Tarboro' railroad.....	500,000
W. C. and R. railroad.....	3,000,000
Western North Carolina railroad.....	6 666,000
Atlantic and T. railroad.....	2,000,000
Western railroad.....	1,500,000
N. W. N. C. railroad.....	1,440,000
Total.....	18,356,000

Not all these bonds were issued, some having been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, others having been retained for interest, and others voluntarily returned. But the increase of the debt arose from those issues. It is a fact well known, and not disputed in North Carolina, that in every case where bonds were asked for it was by Democrats in every instance, with the exception of two; the bonds were issued to Democrats who were presidents of railroads.

The Democrats voted for them uniformly in the Legislature. The Legislature was constantly surrounded by Democratic lawyers, (attorneys for these roads,) such as Bragg, Vance, Davis, Merrimon, Ransom, and most of the leading Democratic lawyers of the State.

The issues authorized to be delivered to Democrats were as follows:

R. H. Cowan, president W. C. and R. railroad.....	$2,000,000
W. Y. Hawkins, president R. and G. railroad.....	3,200,000
G. W. Swyson, president W. N. C. railroad.....	6,666,000
William Johnson, president A. and T. railroad.....	2,000,000
E. Belt, president N. W. N. C. railroad.....	1,440,000
J. R. Stubbs, president W. and Y. railroad.....	550,000
A. J. Jones, president W. R. railroad.....	1,500,000
W. Sloam, president W. C. and R. railroad.....	2,000,000
Total.....	19,356,000

The Democrats were most strenuous in advocating the issue of bonds. They received all but $3,500,000. If there was any mismanagement of the liberal aid thus extended by the State the Democracy is the responsible party.

EFFECT OF THE CONFEDERATE POLICY.

Confederate State debt, as reported by State Treasurer October 1, 1866. (this debt was contracted by the State during the rebellion)..... $18,117,836 25

Interest at 8 per cent. on above from October 1, 1866, to October 1, 1876, would be 14,494,269 00

Total Confederate debt to October 1, 1876..... 32,612,105 25

Add the ante and post war debt, as reported above, October 1, 1866, and interest to October 1, 1876, and the total would be..... 20,852,800 00

If the Confederate or Democratic policy had obtained the debt would be, therefore, on October 1, 1876..... 53,464,905 25

Or nearly ten millions in excess of the present debt of the State.

COMMENTS.

It will be remembered that the Confederate State debt was annulled by a vote of the constitutional convention of 1865. But that body had persistently refused to pass this act until President Johnson sent a telegram to the president of the convention to the effect that the State government could not be recognized unless the debt was repudiated. The telegram created the utmost indignation in the convention and among the people. Mr. Moore, an old and eminent lawyer, held the floor when the message from the President was received. He was proceeding to denounce it, when the flag upon the dome of the Capitol fell with a crash which startled everybody. Mr. Moore, with great vehemence, exclaimed, "Well may that flag drop from the dome of this Capitol when we are insulted by this exhibition of tyranny!"

This may be taken as an index of public opinion on the question of repudiating the Confederate debt. There is not a shadow of doubt that if the old ruling population—the Democrats—had been left to themselves that debt would have been to-day incorporated with the State debt. And the best possible evidence that they would have increased these new obligations is, that, without exception, they were instigated by them, voted for by them, and in a large measure appropriated to their use. So that we may conclude that if the Democratic policy had obtained throughout the State would have been encumbered with all the ante war and post war debt. Also with the Confederate war debt, amounting to the enormous sum of $76,204,574.96, which is the sum of the present State debt and the Confederate debt included.

It is the common clamor of ex-Confederate or Democratic orators and newspaper editors that the people are oppressed by enormous taxes. The taxes in North Carolina are not heavy. Why should they be? The State is paying nothing but the current expenses of its government. On the credits which have been issued the Commonwealth has realized not less than $25,000,000 in current funds. They have paid no interest, and have taken no steps toward making a sinking fund for the principal. How have they lost anything as a body politic? They are continually enjoying the benefits of the $25,000,000 realized on the sale of their bonds, and of course the treasury is richer to that amount.

It must be remembered also that in North Carolina the Governor has no veto power, and as the Legislature has been overwhelmingly Democratic since 1871 the Democratic party must be held responsible for the accumulating indebtedness as well as for the large increase during the few years of Republican rule.

ARKANSAS.

In 1837, 1838, and 1840, when the State was under Democratic rule, its bonds were issued for a large amount, and the interest on these bonds was never paid. In 1868, when the Republicans took control, they knew that to establish the credit of the State it was necessary that it should be honest, and it added the unpaid interest to these bonds, took them up and issued new ones, amounting altogether to $3,910,000. This sum is clearly chargeable to the ante-bellum Democrats. The States never received any benefit from the money, for the officials who had it in charge stole it. It was borrowed for the State and the Real Estate Bank, and was given to Democratic politicians who pretended to give mortgages on their fine plantations, but instead of doing so gave them on worthless land. On this debt the Republicans paid the interest until the Democrats came into power; since that time $2,045,000 of interest has accrued and is unpaid. This is also chargeable to the Democrats, and makes this item $5,955,000.

The Republican Legislature provided for a loan of the State's credit to assist in building railroads. They guarded the State's interest by inserting a clause in the law that any railroad, in default of the interest on the bonds loaned it by the State, should be seized by the State treasurer, placed in the hands of a receiver, and all the moneys accruing should be used to pay the interest on the bonds. Under this law bonds to the amount of $5,350,000 were issued to five railroads. The interest on these bonds was paid by the roads until 1872, when, failing to pay, they were all seized by the Republican State treasurer and put in the hands of receivers. The first Democratic Legislature repealed that section of the "railroad aid law" by which the State treasurer could sequester the roads, they were all released from the receivers, and the bonds which were issued as a loan, the State being amply secured by the Republicans, were made a gift by the Democrats to the railroads. The unpaid interest on these bonds amounts to $1,418,000. This sum added to the principal makes $6,768,000, also chargeable to the Democrats. In 1874, during the Brooks-Baxter war, bonds bearing ten per cent. interest were issued by the Democrats, and these now amount to $303,000. The Democratic Legislature of 1875 authorized the issue of $2,500,000 worth of bonds, and of these $256,000 have been issued. This makes a total of $13,282,000 of the bonds of the State. It includes every dollar of its bonded indebtedness, and the Democrats before and since the war are responsible for every dollar of it.

There were three million dollars of levee bonds issued by the State under Republican rule, but they were not a State bond, were secured on the swamp lands, were receivable for swamp lands, and more than one-third of them have been paid in these lands, and all will be.

The floating debt of the State when it passed under Democratic rule was about $1,500,000 in State scrip bearing five per cent. interest. This debt was made in 1868 and 1869. In those years the Ku-Klux undertook to rule the State. Senator Powell Clayton was then Governor, and he called out the militia and put them down. The calling out of the State forces made this expenditure, and so it may be fairly charged to the Democrats, for had it not been for their action the militia would not have been needed.

Arkansas was four and a half years under Republican rule, Clayton and Hadley being Governors. It has been four years under Democratic rule, Baxter and Garland being Governors, for though Baxter was elected as a Republican he went over to the Democrats immediately after getting into power. A comparison of expenses during these periods would not be amiss, and will show clearly what the people of the State lost by the transfer. Under Clayton and Hadley, for four and a half years, the Governor's office cost $80,089.63. Under Baxter and Garland for four years it cost $146,746. The office of Secretary of State cost under Clayton and Hadley $28,719.04; under Baxter and Garland $49,125.83. The Treasurer's office under Clayton and Hadley cost $63,593.09; under Baxter and Garland it cost $101,178.79. Under Clayton and Hadley the Auditor's office cost $90,975.90; under Baxter and Garland it cost $223,395.83. The office of Internal Improvement Commissioner cost under Clayton and Hadley $35,045.14; under Baxter $28,102.90, and was abolished under Garland. The office of State Land Commissioner under the Republicans cost $44,525.09; under the Democrats it cost $78,888.66. The office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction cost under Clayton and Hadley $155,860.07. In the first few months of Baxter's administration it cost $35,000, and was then abolished, county superintendents being substituted. Under Garland it cost $1,800 per annum, and the schools show even a less per centage under him than the expenditures.

Under the Republicans the courts cost $316,648.80; under the Democrats $340,203.24, and there are fewer judges. The Legislatures under the Republicans cost $457,815.27; under the Democrats they cost $630,102.27. These figures are given for four and a half years of Republican rule and four years of Democratic rule, and they add up for the Republicans $1,273,273.00, and for the Democrats $1,636,343.52. Such is the saving effected in Arkansas by Democratic rule, and this sum does not include $58,000 of the school fund for which the first Democratic treasurer, now a prominent candidate for Congress, was a defaulter.

MISSISSIPPI.

The State of Mississippi has been singularly fortunate in her financial management since Congressional reconstruction. The constitutional convention of 1868 inserted a clause in the constitution prohibiting the Legislature from "loaning the credit of the State to any individual or corporation." Under the proclamation of the President, in 1869, when the second election on the adoption of the constitution occurred, this clause was set apart with others for a separate vote. The Republicans voted unanimously to retain it in the constitution, and about half the Democrats voted to strike it out.

The effect of this Republican restriction has been to entirely prevent the Legislature from indorsing railroad bonds, or otherwise pledging the credit of the State to private or public enterprises, so that not a dollar of indebtedness has been incurred in this way. The State has had no "jobs," such as have characterized some of the other States North and South.

The financial condition of Mississippi can be ascertained by the following table, compiled from the official records, comparing twenty years of Democratic rule, before and since the war, with six years of Republican rule:

EXPENDITURES.
1850.....	$295,9 3 48	1860.....	$663,536 55
1851.....	226,407 41	1861.....	1,824 161 75
1852.....	802 679 76	1862.....	6,819,894 54
1853.....	229,288 45	1863.....	2,210,794 23
1854.....	584,296 84	1864.....	5,446,732 06
1855.....	311,578 19	1865.....	1 410,250 13
1856.....	784,896 79	1866.....	1,860,809 88
1857.....	1,067,080 57	1867.....	625,817 29
1858.....	614 659 00	1868.....	525,78 80
1859.....	707,015 00	1869.....	463,219 71
	5,623,741 49		20,208 891 95
			5,623,741 49

Total expenditures for twenty years,..... 25,832,643 44

Now take the Republican administration for six years. Expenditures for—

1870.....	$1,061,249 98	1873.....	$953,030 00
1871.....	1,319 626 19	1874.....	908,330 00
1872.....	1,098,031 69	1875.....	618,259 00
	3,478,906 78		2,479,619 00
			3,478,906 78
			5,957,525 76

The total expenditures for six years, $5,957,525.78.

The twenty years of Democratic administration show an annual average of $1,291,-632.32. The six years of Republican administration show an annual average of $992,-920.96.

This may be claimed to be unfair, as it embraces four years of the war; but, for the sake of fairness, let us strike out the four years of the war, or the amount expended during those four years, 1861, 1862, 1863, and 1864, and add in lieu thereof the amount expended in 1860, $663,536.55, and we have an expenditure of $12,184,019.06, or an annual average of $699,200.95, as against $992,-920.96. From this it would appear that the Republican administration has been more expensive than the Democratic administration; but there are several reasons for this: Before the war the taxes were paid in gold and silver, and everything much cheaper than since the war; and in January, 1870, when the Republicans came into power, the State warrants were worth about sixty or sixty-five cents on the dollar; the capitol and mansion were dilapidated; the penitentiary and lunatic asylum were too small, and had to be extended and repaired, and all the improvements cost nearly two prices, because payments were made in warrants at their reduced value. And the judiciary system was rendered more expensive to the State by dispensing with the probate court, the expenses of which had been formerly paid by the counties; this jurisdiction was given to the chancery court, and the number of citizens had more than doubled, and all departments of State government rendered necessarily more expensive. And again, the school system has been carried on at an expense very large, a thing that had never existed before the war. The expenditures for school purposes in the six years have been about $320,000 per annum. Let us add a few items which have been necessary since the war, and for which no expenditures were ever made by the Democracy, by way of annual averages, and it will be seen at a glance why it is that the expenditures have been larger than formerly:

EXTRAORDINARY EXPENDITURES.

For school purposes, (as above).....	$320,000
Probate court business by the chancery court, (probate salaries by the counties,) Code, 1857, (p. 423).....	36,700
Average annual improvements on public buildings, about.....	100,000
County records, &c., furnished, destroyed during the war, and exhausted, &c.....	12,500
Making an average per annum of.....	469,200

Taking this from the average, $992,920.96, leaves $523,720.96. These were necessary expenses, never incurred by a Democratic administration. The only common-school system in the State before the war seemed to be a well-organized system to squander the school fund of the State as rapidly as the same was donated by the Government, as the history of the fund will show. Take these items from the annual expenditures of the six years of Republican administration, and the average is reduced per year to $523,-720.96; thus showing the average annual expense of the Republican administration to be, on the old basis of State expenses, actually $75,480 less than the average expenses under the Democratic rule of twenty years, with less than one-half of the citizens to be governed, and at a time when expenditures everywhere were largely in advance of former years. Many other items of extraordinary expenses have been incurred since January, 1870, not included in these statements.

REPUBLICAN TAXATION.

The taxes have been increased and decreased for the various State purposes, for the six years alluded to, as follows: 1870, 5 mills on the dollar; 1871, it was 4 mills; in 1872, 8½ mills; in 1873, it was 12½; in 1874, it was 14 mills; in 1875, it was 9¼ mills. In the last three years there was a school tax as follows: 1873 and 1874, a school tax of 4 mills, and for 1875, 2 mills. This is included in the above estimate, and the counties were restricted in their levies for county purposes as follows: By act of 1872 the counties were prohibited from levying a tax which, with the State and school tax added, shall not exceed 25 mills on the dollar, and in 1875 they were restricted to 20 mills on the dollar.

DEMOCRATIC TAXATION.

The recent Democratic Legislature fixed the limit of taxation, State and county, (no township taxes are assessed in Mississippi,) at 16½ mills, but it cut off the two mills State tax for schools, and has so reduced the limit that in nearly every instance county taxes for schools will also be omitted, the assessments being devoted entirely to general purposes. Thus, the only effect of Democratic "retrenchment and reform" in Mississippi is the virtual destruction of the free school system.

STATE DEBT.

According to the annual message of Governor Ames, delivered the 3d of January, 1876, the entire State indebtedness of Mississippi, bonded and floating, was only five hundred thousand dollars.

RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

The receipts over disbursements for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1875, were $496,000.

A SOUND CONDITION.

Never before in the history of Mississippi were the State finances in a more healthy condition than during the last year of Governor Ames' administration. Warrants on the treasury were near par for the first time in twenty years; the interest on the small bonded debt was promptly paid, and the debt itself discharged at maturity.

TAXATION COMPARED WITH OTHER STATES.

To show that there was no ground for complaint on the score of heavy taxes in Mississippi, the following table is presented as compiled from the census of 1870:

New York:
Assessed value of property.....	$1,967,001,185
Total taxes.....	48,550,308
Rate of taxation, 2.46-10 per cent on the dollar.
Ohio:
Assessed value of property.....	$1,167,731,697
Total taxes.....	23,526,548
Rate of taxation, 2.01 per cent. on the dollar.
Illinois:
Assessed value of property.....	$492,890,575
Total taxes.....	21,825,008
Rate of taxation, 4.5 per cent. on the dollar.
Indiana:
Assessed value of property.....	$663,455,014
Total taxes.....	10,791,121
Rate of taxation, 1.62-10 per cent. on the dollar.
Massachusetts:
Assessed value of property.....	$1,501,983,112
Total taxes.....	24,922,900
Rate of taxation, 1.59-10 per cent. on the dollar.
Missouri:
Assessed value of property.....	$556,129,969
Total taxes.....	13,008,498
Rate of taxation, 2.5 per cent. on the dollar.
Michigan:
Assessed value of property.....	$272,242,917
Total taxes.....	5,412,957
Rate of taxation, 1.9 per cent. on the dollar.
Pennsylvania:
Assessed value of property.....	$1,313,238,042
Total taxes.....	24,531,397
Rate of taxation 1.88-10 per cent. on the dollar.
The average rate of the above States is 2.15-10 per cent. on the dollar.

TEXAS.

The State of Texas passed under complete Democratic rule in January, 1874, although for two years previous the Legislature had been overwhelmingly Democratic. Practically the Democrats have controlled the State since January, 1872.

STATE DEBT.

On the 10th of February, 1874, the State Auditor reported the State debt to be $1,748,831.75. On the 1st of last February he reported the debt at $4,792,804.84, showing an increase under Democratic administration of $3,044,023.09.

Auditor Darden further reports that the debt of the State increased during the fiscal year ending January 31, 1876, the sum of $780,473.63.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

The receipts from taxes in the last fiscal year were $2,127,495.23; yet at the expiration of that year, notwithstanding the heavy receipts, there were outstanding $543,137.84 in warrants on the treasury, with no money to pay the same, showing the actual expenditures of the State to have been $2,770,633.07.

A CONTRAST.

Under the administration of Governor Davis, Republican, who was forced out of office by the Democrats in January, 1874, a year before his time really expired, when the public schools were liberally supported and the State police were organized to preserve the peace, the total receipts were but $625,600.41, a fraction over one-fourth expended by Governor Coke, his immediate successor.

Mr. W. R. Chase, editor of the Waco Register, of date July 17th, writes as follows:

"Taxes have been heavier every year under Democratic administration than they were any year under Republican administration, and have increased from year to year. The rate may be no higher but more things are taxed.

"The condition of our State finances is that the legislative finance committee has just reported a deficiency of the rise of $300,000 of taxes to meet current expenses of the State government. The Comptroller asserts this deficiency to be $500,000. The State has been steadily run in debt at the rate of about a million of dollars a year since the present administration came into power."

EXTRAVAGANCE AND BANKRUPTCY.

The San Antonio Herald, an outspoken Democratic paper, says:

"We are cursed with a Legislature, one of a series, which, by its majorities, in spite of the beneficence of Providence, ground us down with the iron heel of oppression, have piled taxes Ossa upon Pelion high, and but partially and imperfectly executed the very laws they themselves enacted. They have run the expenditures of the State from a couple of hundred thousand dollars a year into millions; they, in their expenditures, have exceeded the revenues of the State, and instead of reforming this condition of affairs to a healthy condition by retrenching all expenses to the actual income of the State, they are to-day issuing bonds to make good the deficiencies in the treasury, which, when sold for what they may bring in the market, with all the tawdry appendages of commissioners to sell, and commissions and other expenses, running into the hundred thousands of dollars, will be met by the project to issue other batches of bonds to provide for the emergency to pay the principal and interest of the bonds now issued. In the meantime they place their sacrilegious hands upon every actual dollar and cash assets in the treasury, as the special school fund, which should be a secure fund, and this they squander to bridge over what the Legislature deems an emergency."

BROKEN PROMISES.

The San Marcos Free Press, another Democratic paper, calls on Governor Coke to resign, and sums up his broken promises in this style:

"You promised you would have the finances of the State on a specie basis in one hundred days; we all know how truthful that has been. You promised to suppress crime in the country, and you have vetoed every bill of the Legislature that tended in that way. You recommended the new constitution to the people as the best we ever had, and in your first message you recommended amendments enough to make a constitution within themselves. You were elected because of your opposition to railroad monopolies, and you have been aiding and abetting a party in the Legislature to steal land and territory enough to make a State as large as Tennessee."

Says the Austin Statesman (Democratic) of August 18, 1876:

"Comptroller Darden makes the open assertion, and he has published it in his official reports, that the present revenues are insufficient to meet the expenses of government, and, according to his theory, and it is a correct one, taxes must either be raised or bonds sold to prevent evidences of State indebtedness from being hawked at disgraceful figures. The matter of selling bonds, or making an interest-bearing debt to pay a non-interest bearing debt, is, to use a vulgarism, 'too thin.' Within the last few years a large amount of debt has been paid in this way, and the work still goes on. Nearly five millions of dollars is now the measure of the State's bonded indebtedness, and if the Executive and law-makers do not meet the issue bravely, in five years more it will be twice that amount."

A DISGRACEFUL EXPEDIENT.

The climax of Democratic imbecility was reached on the 25th of August last, when they passed a bill through the Legislature compelling the poor men of the State to make good their delinquencies by paying a capitation tax. Of this act the Austin State Gazette (Democratic) says:

"The Legislature adjourned yesterday at 12 m., and without passing an act for imposing an additional tax of fifteen cents, recommended by the finance committees to meet the deficit exhibited in the current expenses of the government. In lieu of this a tax of one dollar per capita was imposed on every suffragan of the State, in the vain expectation of realizing a sufficient amount to answer the purposes of government.

"But the subterfuge of a per capita tax will not answer the purpose. It is doubtful whether one hundred thousand dollars can be raised from this source; and if it could, it only amounts to one-fourth of what is needed to honor the floating debt of the State. It is, besides, predicated on a false principle, practically taxing the poor for the benefit of the rich. As matters now stand treasury warrants will depreciate to such an extent as to force the resignation of some of the best county and district officers. Meantime the honest creditors of the State will suffer heavy losses from depreciated State paper, and brokers will coin their gains from false legislation."

PROFLIGACY AND PLUNDER.

Of all the States in the South Texas has become most notorious for reckless and extravagant legislation. Its record for corrupt jobbery cannot be surpassed. The first Democratic assembly after reconstruction, in a single act, donated over thirty millions of acres of public lands to Tom Scott's railroad, and robbed the school fund of the State of that amount.

GEORGIA.

1860—State debt.....	$3,170,750
1865—State debt, (old).....	$5,706,500
Rebel debt.....	15,104,726

Total	20,811,226
-------------	------------

1868—State debt.....	$6,544,500
1872—State debt.....	8,618,750
1875—State debt, January 1.....	8,105,500

In 1868, when the reconstructed government was inaugurated, the rebel debt had been repudiated, and the recognized debt was $6,544,500.

RAILROAD DEBT.

The contingent liabilities for railroads for bonds indorsed are stated by Governor Conley in his message of January 11, 1872, at $7,083,400. The Governor further states that on December 2, 1871, railroads had complied with and were entitled to indorsement, and loans on bonds amounting, when the roads are completed, to $7,029,500. In conclusion, he adds: "If all roads building under the law of December 2, 1871, be completed, the entire indorsement will be $9,533,900."

The State reserves the first lien, with power to seize and sell the road on failure to pay the interest or principal.

HOW AID WAS GRANTED.

The aid is granted at an average rate of $13,000 per mile on completed sections of twenty miles, but in no case to exceed one-half the actual cost of the road invested by the company. Governor Conley, in his letter of December 2, 1871, says:

"The contingent liability of the State is as indorser of the bonds of certain railroads. This liability has been contracted since 1868, and the State, by her legislation, may be said to have adopted a general system of internal improvements by granting the loan of her indorsement to railroads in the course of construction, and after they had built and equipped a certain number of miles. This indorsement of railroad bonds is restricted by article 3, section 6, of the constitution of the State, viz: 'The General Assembly shall pass no law making the State a stockholder in a corporate company without a provision that the whole property of the company shall be bound for the security of the State prior to any other debt or lien, except to laborers, nor to any company in which there is not already an equal amount invested by private persons; nor for any other object than a work of public improvement.' In all indorsements of bonds of railroads by the State the roads seeking the indorsement have first placed themselves within this provision of the constitution, and in no case has the indorsement of the State been granted for a greater amount than one-half the estimated cost per mile of the road when completed and equipped."

BOTH PARTIES RESPONSIBLE.

The acts conferring this aid were passed by the votes of members of both political parties, as the records show, and the State is considered secure against any loss or expense on this account if the law be properly enforced.

TAXABLE PROPERTY INCREASED.

Upon the other hand, it is conceded that the value of taxable property has been greatly enhanced in the vicinity of these roads. The Georgia Air-line may be given as an example. It is shown by the Superintendent of Public Works in 1871 that the aggregate value of property through which this road passes, in a single year, increased $2,582,980, and since the road was begun the increase had been $4,742,821.

The three counties through which the Marietta and Western road passes show an increase of value in a single year of $400,000. The three counties along the South Georgia and Florida road an increase from 1868 to 1870 of $1,265,472. Equal or greater advantage to property has been realized along other new lines subsidized by the State. It is further shown that the total increase along the ten lines thus aided, from 1868 to 1871, was $14,000,000, exclusive of the value of the roads, which is four millions more than the whole indorsement made or promised to railroads which were commenced and entitled to aid on December 2, 1871. It is evident from the low valuation of property at that time that the benefits had but begun, and that a correct statement at this time would show still more marked advantages.

RAILROAD PROPERTY VALUABLE.

To show that railroads are not dead property in Georgia it may be stated that the State owns the Western Atlantic road, which was valued before the war at $7,000,000, and paid an annual net income to the State of $450,000. It is now leased for twenty years at the rate of $25,000 per month, or an aggregate of $300,000 a year.

GOVERNOR BULLOCK'S ADMINISTRATION.

Governor Conley, in his message of January 11, 1872, says of Governor Bullock's administration:

"Your honorable body will see that the only kind of bonds issued by him that are now outstanding, and that are a claim against the State, are the $3,000,000 of gold bonds issued under authority of the act of September 15, 1870, and $1,800,000 of gold bonds issued to the Brunswick and Albany Railroad Company in accordance with the act of October 17, 1870. The actual liability of the State, therefore, incurred during his administration is represented by the sum of $4,800,000. It should not be forgotten that a large portion of this sum has been devoted to the redemption of bonds falling due in 1870 and 1871, and in years previous thereto, and to the payment of interest on them and others still to fall due. The debt of the State is not, therefore, actually increased by that amount. The contingent liability by the indorsement of railroad bonds during the administration of Governor Bullock amounted to $6,683,400.

"The above statement covers the whole period that my predecessor was in office, and is a complete and accurate summary of his official action in the matter of which it treats."

The rate of general tax for State purposes under Republican rule was forty cents on $100. The average cost of the State Government for 1868, 1869, 1870, and 1871, was $1,334,915 84, including payments on public debt. The actual public debt of the State was not increased a single dollar under Republican government.

DEMOCRATIC DEFALCATION.

The largest defalcation of a public officer in the South since the war occurred in Georgia in 1875, when it was discovered that the Democratic State Treasurer was a defaulter to upwards of three hundred thousand dollars.

VIRGINIA.

The "Old Dominion" has enjoyed uninterrupted Democratic control since the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. Whatever her financial condition the Democratic party alone is responsible for it. No "carpet-bagger" has been there to be charged with plundering her people and running the State into debt.

The official reports show the financial condition to be as follows:

1860—State debt.....	$31,938,144
1865—Old State debt.....	41,061,316
Rebel debt.....	7,505,724
Total	48,567,040
Increase of old debt...	9,123,172
Total increase..	16,628,896
1870—Old debt.....	45,872,778
(Rebel debt repudiated.)
Increase of old debt since
1865.....	4,811,462
Increase from 1860.....	13,934,634
1875—Old debt....	44,735,796

The debt of Virginia was contracted before the war in aid of internal improvement, and the increase is from interest accruing during and since the war, which has been funded in six per cent. bonds.

The literary fund, amounting to $1,833,420, which the State held in trust, and $12,452,326 in bank, and other productive stock, was squandered in the rebellion.

The expenditures of the State for the fiscal year ending October 1, 1875, were $2,814,614.32.

TAXATION.

Taxes are assessed as follows:

Capitation tax, ($1.00 each)....	$264,206
Tax on personal property.....	357,301
Tax on income.....	44,014
Tax on real estate.....	1,281,106
Tax on licenses.....	519,302

Total tax..... 2,465,930

The tax on real and personal property is at the rate of 50 cents on the $100 value.

The county and township taxes, assessed for the same period as above, amounted to $1,778,602, which, added to the State tax, gives an aggregate of $4,244,532.

UNDER WHICH KING, BEZONIAN? SPEAK, OR DIE!

For a moment as it were, after the guns of Sumter awoke the echoes, the nation stood silent, as if appalled by the magnitude of the crime. But for an instant; that moment past, such a tidal wave of wrath and indignation swept from the Atlantic to the Pacific as the world had never seen! Each State poured forth its bravest and best. From the plowshare and the counting house, the study, the surgery, and the court-room, they came, at the call of their country's need.

There was a young lawyer in Cincinnati at that time who had just made a name for himself in the profession he had chosen, winning golden opinions from all sorts of people. He was of Scottish blood, and it is said came of a race of fighting men; for one of his remote ancestors at Lancarty, in Perthshire, drove back the English in a narrow pass, unaided save by his valorous sons. "Pull your plow and harrow to pieces and fight," he cried, and they obeyed him. So at his country's call away went briefs and law-books, and with Rosecrans and Scammon, Lytle and Garfield, Pope and Force, and all the thousand others whom Ohio dedicated to her country's cause—Rutherford B. Hayes rode forth to war. As W. H. Lytle, one of Ohio's most brilliant sons, sung, and proved that his words were more than poet's rhyming—so did Hayes indorse him:

'Tis not the time for dalliance soft
In gentle ladies' bowers,
While treason flaunts her flag aloft
And dares to tread on ours;
And now the swords our fathers wore,
Must in their scabbards rattle,
And we will sing the songs of yore
When marching forth to battle.

Through all the trying campaign in West Virginia, while Rosecrans fought like Napoleon, and McClellan wrote like him, Major Hayes served well and bravely. With his poet brother in-arms, Lytle, he was wounded at South Mountain, (and again in almost every engagement,) but though wounded still struggled to encourage his men, and fell twice from loss of blood before he was carried from the field. He was made Judge Advocate by Rosecrans, and while yet a colonel, again like Lytle, assigned to a brigade command. His commission as brigadier general was not announced until October, 1864, after he had borne the burden and heat of the day, and the war was almost over. In March, 1865, the brevet of major general followed.

Not once through the war did he falter; Lytle was dead at Chickamauga, and Rosecrans relieved ere he could justify himself, and Force wounded almost unto death, and Pope fighting against traitors in front and rear at the gates of the capital, and Grant just beginning to show what manner of man he was; the days looked very dark, and some wiseacres away up in Chicago voted the war a failure; and the people began to weary—it took so long to make the rebels understand that they should not succeed, and lukewarm friends abroad, or those who openly sympathized with the South, predicted that the North would yield, and altogether even the bravest heart quailed under the sombre dread and threatening of evil. But Hayes fought on, and when his friends sent him word that he was nominated for Congress, and had better come home and use his personal efforts toward the election, his reply was, "Your suggestion about getting a furlough to take the stump was certainly made without reflection. AN OFFICER FIT FOR DUTY WHO AT THIS CRISIS WOULD ABANDON HIS POST TO ELECTIONEER FOR A SEAT IN CONGRESS OUGHT TO BE SCALPED." So he was elected without any personal efforts, save his record in the field, and the next year, when the war was over, took his seat in Congress. While a member of that body his acts were in full harmony with the principles which led him to draw his sword. Uncompromisingly loyal, he gave in to no measure which would allow a loophole of help or comfort to the rebels. His one idea there in the halls of the Nation's Capitol was the same as on the fields of that Nation's battles—to save the country.

And now that country, after rewarding one brave soldier with its civic crown, offers it to this one of whom we write. Rutherford B. Hayes is the nominee of the loyal people for the Presidency. Does he deserve the prize? Is there one who fought with him or under the same flag will say "No?" Is there a spot upon his shield? Did he ever turn his back upon the foe in war or upon his principles in peace? Proudly can we answer, Never!

Thrice has his own State, the third in the Union, awarded him with the highest gift within its power, and three times has he proved himself most worthy of the trust implied by the choice. He took no advantage of his high office for self aggrandisement; and when his uncle, a wealthy man, was dying, it was by Major Hayes' own advice and desire, that instead of leaving him his whole fortune he should endow the town of Fremont with $75,000 for a public park and free library. Wealthy, yet living a quiet, unostentatious, domestic, homely life, he has come forth from his retirement only at the call of duty and at the urgent solicitations of his friends; and when the enthusiasm of the country seemed to point to James G.

Blaine as their standard bearer, and the votes at the convention ran so high for him, few dreamed that the quiet gentleman and student would be the final choice.

So, after the study of his life, we must say the choice was a wise one; although at first there was a feeling of disappointment, because the nominee had not, it seemed, the personal magnetism of James G. Blaine; he had not his flowing and ready eloquence, though when necessary to speak his words were to the point; he had not served so long in Congress; in a word, he had not Blaine's prestige; and many thought that, while Blaine would have carried everything before him, Hayes would win, if he did win, only by hard fighting. But such sentiments were owing to the first shock of surprise; they have passed away, and for many reasons the people are becoming more and more satisfied with their candidate. His record is unspotted. As a student he stands high, as a lawyer his rank was first, and as a soldier he was brave and intrepid. Four times his horse was shot under him; four times was he wounded; and yet he fought when down until carried from the field. Could a courage more lofty be found among men? There is not a crack in his armor; there is not a spot upon his shield. So far in the canvass there has not been a word about his personal or moral status that would bring a blush to the cheek of his wife or children. The Democratic papers are taking credit to themselves for this abstaining, and calling upon the Republicans to do likewise with their candidate. They should be honest at least once, and acknowledge that they do not abuse or expose Governor Hayes—simply because they can't!

The man stands so gloriously above the touch of malice that they know they cannot harm him! But, poor Tilden! ah! "Look upon that picture and then upon this!" What do we see here?

When every loyal heart was glowing with patriotic fire at the cry that came up from Sumter what did Samuel J. Tilden do? Did he, too, throw away his law books and briefs and go forth with the gallant sons of the Empire State to fight for honor and the right? Did he freely offer his own life that his country might live? No! alas, no! There was no responsive fire in his heart. All was cold, calculating, false!

On April 20, 1861, in reply to President Lincoln's proclamation calling for 75,000 troops, a grand meeting of the citizens of New York was held in Union Square to indorse that action and to pledge themselves to the maintenance of the laws and the Constitution of the United States. General Dix was chosen president, and among the vice presidents or speakers were the names of such Democrats as Daniel S. Dickinson, J. T.

Hoffman, Fernando Wood, A. S. Hewitt, Erastus Brooks, Augustus Schell, and others. Was that of Tilden included? No. One of his friends called upon him and begged him to come, but Tilden refused decidedly to have anything to do with this "abolition war." And when his friend expressed a fear that he would live to regret this refusal, Tilden, having faith that Robert Toombs would yet call his slave-roll at the foot of Bunker Hill, replied: "I think not," and remained firm in his refusal. Nor did he confine himself to negative support of the rebellion; he gave it in words when among his friends. But even before the war broke out, in 1860, he wrote as follows, speaking of the Republican party:

"It is an organized agitation on the general question of slavery, mainly irrespective of the practical application of its conclusions to any proposed measure of legislation or administration of the Federal Government. It is not easy to define the exact limit where the liberty of philosophical speculation or abstract discussion ends and an offense against good neighborhood, whether of individual families or States, begins. But it is very clear that the Republican party has passed that boundary; for an organized agitation by a majority of one community, including its government, against the social or industrial system of a neighboring and friendly community is an offense which leads to alienation and hostility, if not actual war.

* * * * *

"Elect Lincoln and we invite those perils which we cannot measure. We attempt in vain to conquer the submission of the South to an impracticable and intolerable policy. Our only hope must be that as President he will abandon the creed, the principles, and pledges in which he will have been elected. Defeat Lincoln and all our great interests and hopes are equally safe."

The italics are our own. After those words it is useless for Tilden to say he never was a secessionist, and it would be worse than folly to trust such a man with the helm of state.

Mr. Tilden refused to honor with his presence the ratification meeting of loyal men in Union Square, but when a choice coterie of rebel sympathizers and peace Democrats issued a call for a meeting at Delmonico's for the specious purpose of "obtaining a better diffusion of political knowledge," Mr. Tilden's name was appended to the paper without hesitation. At this meeting Mr. Tilden was on the committee on finance. They proposed to raise $10,000 to carry the election in New Hampshire, and those present contributed largely to that object.

The Evening Post, when the report of the meeting was published, had an excellent article upon it. "The conspirators," it said,

"mean to do anything and everything," so one of their speakers said, "to break down the loyal party of the nation, and to hand the Government over to the malignant slaveholding oligarchs who for nearly two years have been slaughtering our sons, disturbing our peace, arresting our prosperity, and threatening the very security of our homes." This brought an answer from Mr. Tilden denying that the meeting at Delmonico's was a "revolutionary intrigue." But, put as bold a face upon the matter as they could, the publication of the doings of the conclave fell like a bombshell among the conspirators. They had been so careful in admitting only such newspaper men as they thought would give a proper coloring to their reports. Mr. Tilden never dreamed that his treason would be given to the world, and he hastened, in a letter, specious in its arguments and covert treason, insulting in its contemptuous allusions to Mr. Lincoln, to cover over the mistake.

Satisfied with what he had done, or fearful of going further while the North was so antagonistic to his peculiar ideas, Mr. Tilden made no further public effort to aid and abet the rebellion until 1864, when, at the great Chicago Convention, he was responsible for the infamous resolutions which voted the war a failure. He made the motion for the forming of the resolutions, and was chairman of the committee which formed them. The second one was as follows:

"Resolved, That this convention does explicitly declare, as the sense of the American people, that after four years of failure to restore the Union by experiment of war, during which, under the pretense of a military necessity, or war power higher than the Constitution, the Constitution itself has been disregarded in every part, and public liberty and private right alike trodden down, and the material prosperity of the country essentially impaired, justice, humanity, liberty, and the public welfare demand that immediate efforts be made for the cessation of hostilities, with a view to an ultimate convention of the States, or other peaceable means, to the end that, at the earliest practicable moment, peace may be restored on the basis of the Federal Union."

This is the sum of his war record: In 1860 Mr. Tilden had been quoted as up too ies comfort een taking treason;)
nion meet-conspiracy
s infamous His treason his friends
ve attained

his present position. There would have been no United States, and, consequently, no Presidency for ex rebels and traitors to aspire to. Never by word or act did he encourage a Union soldier or advise a man to serve his country in that capacity. Need we go on? Or is the picture not black enough, confined as it is to an epoch of four years, without painting in the record of the next ten? For that record will show this man in league with thieves and all dishonor. "'Tis true; 'tis pity; and pity 'tis 'tis true."

Yes, although like his rival, clothed with the executive of his native State, we find him using that power only to abuse it; and he comes down from the gubernatorial chair with hands so soiled no honest man would care to touch them!

These are the two men between which the country must choose its leader. Which will it be? One comes to us with the record of bravery undoubted, patriotism of the staunchest, honesty the noblest. His good name is a mirror upon which there is not the shadow of a breath to dim its lustre. The other, while there are some "so poor as to do him honor," they are only among those of his own kind, men who strove to destroy the country, or to plunder their fellow-beings in the most barefaced robbery ever known since the days of highwaymen, whose challenge was, "your money or your life!"

One accepts the offered honor in a manly letter, a good exponent of his character, written by himself, and prompted only by his own probity. The other, with a flourish of trumpets about "retrenchment" and "reform," foists upon the people a tirade dictated by the bitterest enemies of the country's interests, and worded carefully to dovetail into the principles of the dastardly party which would have destroyed that country in the past, and will destroy it in the future if it gain away.

People of the United States, choose ye between them!

VERMONT has spoken! Already her voice, renewing her pledge to the Union and its defenders, has been heard throughout the length and breadth of the land. Its emphatic tones will reassure freemen everywhere that human rights are not to be betrayed nor the cause for which so many died surrendered to the enemies of liberty. Thirty thousand majority for the Republican ticket in Vermont means a united North in November. Now let the ranks close up for other work to be done. Two months of active labor is still before us. Let the example set by the Green Mountain boys inspire the nation to labor for a victory whose meaning shall be the extinction of Democracy.

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

DECEASED.

...August 18. Hon. M. C. Kerr, Speaker of the House of Representatives, died at Rock Alum Springs, Va. Mr. Kerr was born at Titusville, Pennsylvania, March 15, 1827. In 1851 he graduated at the Titusville University, since which time he resided at New Albany, Indiana, where he began the practice of law in 1852. Subsequently he was elected to several offices in the State, and from 1864 to 1876 he was continuously a Representative in Congress, except during the years 1873 and 1874. In politics Mr. Kerr was a Democrat, but of such pure, unselfish, and patriotic character as always to deserve the esteem and confidence of his political opponents. He was elected Speaker of the Forty-fourth Congress. His remains were conveyed to New Albany to be buried in the city cemetery.

POLITICAL.

...August 23. The Republican convention of the State of New York assembled at Albany for the purpose of nominating a State ticket. Ex-Governor E. D. Morgan, well known as the great war Governor of the Empire State, and compatriot of Lincoln, Morton, and Andrews, was chosen for Governor with the cordial unanimity of the convention. Hon. William M. Evarts was the next strongest candidate and received 126 votes on the first ballot, to 242 for Morgan.

...August 24. The Republicans of Colorado placed the following ticket in nomination: For Governor, John L. Routt; for Lieutenant Governor, Lafayette Head; for Judges of the Supreme Court, H. C. Thatcher, E. T. Wells, and S. H. Elbert; for Secretary of State, Wm. L. Clark; for Treasurer, Geo. C. Corning; for Auditor, D. C. Crawford; for Attorney General, A. J. Sampson; for Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. C. Halleck.

...August 24. The Democrats of Kansas assembled at Topeka, and nominated a State ticket as follows: For Governor, John Marlin; Lieutenant Governor, B. Rogers; Treasurer, M. C. South. A compromise was effected with the greenback party whereby three of its candidates for State officers were adopted by the Democrats.

August 30. The Republican State convention of Connecticut nominated the following electoral ticket at large: Ex-President Theo. D. Woolsey, of Yale College, and Hon. Marshall Jewell. The old ticket was renominated as follows: Governor, Henry C. Robinson, Hartford; Lieutenant Governor, F. J. Kingsbury, Waterbury; Secretary of State, General F. A. Walker, New Haven; Treasurer, Jeremiah Olney, Thompson; Comptroller, Eli Curtis, Watertown.

GOVERNOR SEYMOUR NOMINATED.

...August 39. The Democratic State convention of New York met at Saratoga and nominated Hon. Horatio Seymour for Governor by acclamation, notwithstanding his repeated protests against becoming a candidate. Strong efforts followed to induce Mr. Seymour to accept the nomination, but he positively refused the proffered honor, and on the 4th of September wrote a lengthy letter of unqualified declination. His chief reason for this course he states as follows: "My own opinion, confirmed by the judgment of my physicians, convince me that I am unable at this time to perform the duties devolving upon the Governor of New York. I could cheerfully sacrifice my own purposes and feelings to meet the wishes of my friends. I would not hesitate to peril my health to uphold those principles in which I believe, or to promote the public welfare, but I feel that I should sacrifice the interests of the party which placed me in nomination if I accept its action. Even the superior strength of the party with which I act could not elect a ticket with the known fact that its nominee for Governor was unequal to the performance of the labors of that office. I could not conscientiously enter upon them. I cannot do my friends the wrong of placing them in false positions by trying to do so. I therefore feel compelled to decline the nomination."

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S CIRCULAR.

...September 4. The official instructions this day issued by Attorney-General Taft to United States marshals in the late insurrectionary States constitute a most important and significant State paper. The absolute necessity of inaugurating active measures to protect the lives and the rights of citizens at home happily is at last receiving the earnest attention of the Government. The fact has been notorious for several years past that Republican citizens in the South have been repeatedly outraged in their most sacred rights by enemies of the Government, and so frequent and alarming has this practice become within the past twelve months that it threatens to overthrow republican institutions in that lawless section unless some effective measures be employed to put a check to the growing evil. Already there is utter disregard of the rights of the majority, which is Republican, in the States of South Carolina, Mississippi, and Louisiana. Were there a fair and free canvass and election the first two States would cast their electoral votes for the Republican nominee for the Presidency by at least forty thousand majority each, while Louisiana would give a Republican majority of not less than twenty thousand. But, owing to the high-handed and revolutionary policy of the enemies of Republicanism and the nation, and the success with which they have met in past elections by the non action of the Government, they now boldly threaten to sweep these States into the Democratic ranks by sheer force, if necessary, and, notwithstanding their well known Republican majorities, count their electoral votes for the Democratic nominees.

It is to defeat this daring and wicked crusade against the political rights of unprotected and helpless citizens that the Attorney General has issued the instructions referred to, and he deserves to be approved and applauded by every well-meaning citizen for the timely and patriotic act. The issue as made up by the enemy is easily defined. They mean the total destruction and obliteration of every semblance of Republicanism in the South. This design being openly and defiantly avowed, the Government would be recreant to its most sacred trust if it did not adopt resolute means to defend its character protect its citizens in their guaranteed rights, and to suppress this new rebellion against its principles and authority.

...September 4. The Republican State convention of Massachusetts assembled, and re-nominated Hon. Alexander H. Rice for Governor, and Horatio G. Knight for Lieutenant Governor.

...September 4. An election for State officers was held in Arkansas, and the Democratic ticket prevailed by a majority estimated at 30,000. The State is overwhelmingly Democratic.

...September 5. An election occurred in the State of Vermont, and was carried by the Republicans by a majority of about 26,000, the largest majority given at a State election in many years. The following ticket was elected: Governor, Horace Fairbanks; Lieutenant Governor, Redfield Proctor; Treasurer, John A. Page. Also three Republican Congressmen were chosen, as follows: First district, Charles H. Joyce; Second district, Dudley C. Dennison; Third district, George W. Hendee.

A summary of the vote of the State in past years is given below:

	Rep.	Dem.	Rep. maj
1868.. President.....	44,167	12,015	32,122
1870.. Governor.....	33,367	12,058	21,309
1870.. Congress.....	30,071	11,478	18,593
1872.. President.....	41,481	11,490	30,001
1872.. Governor.....	41,948	16,813	25,333
1872.. Congress.....	37,604	12,672	24,932
1874.. Governor.....	33,492	13,257	20,225
1874.. Congress.....	34,437	16,220	8,217

...September 6. The Democratic State convention of Massachusetts met and nominated Hon. Charles Francis Adams for Governor, and William P. Plunkett for Lieutenant Governor.

...September 6. Hon. Paren England was chosen for Governor of Nebraska by the Democrats.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

REDEMPTION OF FIVE TWENTY BONDS.

The thirty-second call for the redemption of five-twenty bonds of 1865 - May and November—has just been issued by Acting Secretary Conant, who gives notice that the principal and accrued interest of the bonds herein below designated, known as "five-twenty bonds," will be paid at the Treasury of the United States, in this city, on and after the first day of December, 1876, and that the interest on said bonds will cease on that day. That is to say, coupon bonds, net of March 3, 1865, dated November 1, 1865, as follows: Coupon bonds—$500, No. 501 to No. 3350, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 2801 to No. 14550, both inclusive—$7,000,000. Registered bonds—$100, No. 1 to No. 200, both inclusive; $500, No. 1 to No. 800, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 1 to No. 500, both inclusive; $5,000, No. 642 to No. 1100, both inclusive; $10,000, No. 1 to No. 1150, both inclusive. Total, $10,000,000.

ANOTHER CALL.

By virtue of the authority given by the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that the principal and accrued interest of the bonds herein below designated, known as "five-twenty bonds," of the act of March 3, 1865, dated November 1, 1865, will be paid at the Treasury on and after the 6th day of December, 1876, and that the interest on said bonds will cease on that day: Coupon bonds—$50, No. 551 to No. 600, both inclusive; $100, No. 851 to No. 2500, both inclusive; $500, No. 3351, to No. 9700, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 14551 to No. 26000, both inclusive—total coupon, $7,000,000. Registered bonds—$100 No. 201 to No. 650, both inclusive; $500, No. 801 to No. 1050, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 501 to No. 1800, both inclusive; $5,000, No. 1101 to No. 1550, both inclusive; $10,000, No. 1151 to No. 2100, both inclusive—total registered, $3,000,000. Aggregate, $10,000,000.

COINAGE AT THE MINT.

The following is the statement of the coinage executed at the United States mint in Philadelphia for the month of August:

Denomination.	No. of pieces.	Value.
Double eagles.....	18 489	$369,600
Trade dollars.....	84,200	84,200
Half dollars.....	1,404,200	702,100
Quarter dollars.....	1,292,200	323,050
Twenty cents.....	200	40
Dimes.....	910,200	91,020
Total silver.....	3,691,000	1 200,410
Five cents.....	310,000	15,500
Cents.....	220,000	2 200
Total base.....	530,000	17,700
Total for month.....	4,239,480	1,587,710

PUBLIC DEBT STATEMENT.

The recapitulation of the statement of the public debt of the United States for the month of August, 1876, just issued, is as follows:

DEBT BEARING INTEREST IN COIN.

Bonds at 6 per cent.	$984,999,650 00
Bonds at 5 per cent.....	712,320,450 00
	1,697,320,100 00

DEBT BEARING INTEREST IN LAWFUL MONEY.

Navy pension fund at three per cent.....	14,000,000 00
Debt on which interest has ceased since maturity.....	3,021,210 26

DEBT BEARING NO INTEREST.

Old demand and legal-tender notes.....	369,401,335 50
Certificates of deposit.....	31,880,000 00
Fractional currency.....	31,355,311 45
Coin certificates.....	29,969 800 00
	462,605,44 95

Total debt.....	2,176,947,758 21
Interest.....	24,292,915 93
Total debt, principal and interest.....	2,501,240,775 17

CASH IN THE TREASURY.

Coin.....	62,511,956 17
Currency.....	11,665,805 86
Special deposit held for redemption of certificates of deposit as provided by law.....	31,880,000 00
Total.....	105,058,762 03

Debt, less cash in the Treasury September 1, 1876.....	2,095,181,941 14
Debt, less cash in the Treasury, August 1, 1876.....	2,098,301,311 06

Decrease of debt during the month.....	3,109,369 92
Decrease of debt since June 30, 1876.....	4,257,403 85

Bonds issued to the Pacific railway companies, interest payable in lawful money:

Principal outstanding.....	$64,623,512 00
Interest accrued and not yet paid.....	644,235 12

Interest paid by the United States.....	32,680,218 42
Interest repaid by transportation of mails, &c.....	6,924,552 38

Balance of interest paid by the United States.....	$25,155,666 04
--	-----------------

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

CIRCULAR OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

On September 4th the Attorney General issued the following circular instructing marshals as to their duties in connection with the protection of voters:

SIR: The laws of the United States having made it my duty to exercise general direction over marshals in the manner of discharging their offices, I have prepared for their use this circular letter of instructions as to the coming elections—intending the same also as a reply once for all to numerous applications, in like connection, from private citizens in various States.

In the present condition of legislation the United States occupy a position toward voters and voting which varies according as the election is for State and other local officers only, or for members of Congress and Presidential electors.

In elections at which members of the House of Representatives are chosen, which by law include also elections at which the electors for President and Vice President are appointed, the United States secure voters against whatever in general hinders or prevents them from a free exercise of the elective franchise—extending that care alike to the registration lists, the act of voting, and the personal freedom and security of the voter at all times, as well against violence on account of any vote that he may intend to give, as against conspiracy because of any that he may already have given.

The peace of the United States, therefore, which you are to preserve, and whose violation you are to suppress, protects (among others) the rights specified in the last paragraph, and any person who by force violates those rights breaks that peace and renders it your duty to arrest him, and to suppress any riots incident, or that threaten the integrity of the registration or election, to the end that the will of the people in such election may be ascertained and take effect, and that offenders may be brought before the court for punishment.

Notorious events in several States, which recently and in an unusual manner have been publicly reprobated, render it a grave duty of all marshals who have cause to apprehend a violation of the peace of the United States connected as above with the elections to be held upon the Tuesday after the first Monday in November next to be prepared to preserve and to restore such peace.

As the chief executive officer of the United States in your district you will be held responsible for all breaches of the peace of the United States which diligence on your part might have prevented, and for the arrest and securing of all persons who violate that peace in any of the points above enumerated.

Diligence in these matters requires, of course, that you be, and continue, present, in person or by deputy, at all places of registration or election at which you have reason to suspect that the peace is threatened; and that whenever an embodiment of the posse comitatus is required to enforce the law such embodiment be effected.

You will observe that the "special" deputies mentioned in section 2021 of the Revised Statutes have peculiar duties assigned to them, duties which otherwise do not belong to deputy marshals. Such "special" deputies can be appointed only in cities of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward.

But the duties assigned to marshals and their deputies by section 2022, or other like statutes, belong to all duly appointed deputies, whether they be general or be "special," within the meaning of that and the preceding section. Deputies to discharge this latter class of duties may be appointed to any number whatever, according to the discretion of the marshal, in all States in which sheriffs have a similar power. Section 2030 has no practical bearing upon this point in States where no limit is imposed upon the appointment of deputies by sheriffs, because in such States the laws of the United States "prior to the 10th of June, 1872," left marshals also unlimited as to the number of their deputies.

In discharging the duties above mentioned you will doubtless receive the countenance and support of all the good citizens of the United States in your respective districts. It is not necessary that it is upon such countenance and support that the United States mainly rely in their endeavor to enforce the right to vote which they have given or have secured. The present instructions are intended only to counteract that partial malice, wrong-headedness, or inconsideration which sometimes triumphs at critical moments over the conservative and in general prevailing forces of society, and to which the present and passing condition of the country gives more than ordinary strength, and, therefore, requires the Government to particularly to observe and provide against.

In this connection I advise that you and each of your deputies, general and "special," have a right to summon to your assistance, in preventing and quelling disorder, "every person in the district above fifteen years of age, whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not, and including the military of all denominations—militia, soldiers, marines—all of whom are alike bound to obey you. The fact that they are organized as military bodies—whether of the State or the United States—under the immediate command of their own officers, does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are the posse comitatus." I prefer to quote the above statement of the law upon this point from an opinion by my predecessor, Attorney General Cushing, because it thus appears to have been well settled for many years.—(6, Opinions, 466, May 27, 1854.)

I need hardly add that there can be no State law or State official in this country who has jurisdiction to oppose you in discharging your official duties under the laws of the United States. If such interference shall take place—a thing not anticipated—you are to disregard it entirely. The laws of the United States are supreme, and so, consequently, is the action of officials of the United States in enforcing them. There is, as virtually you have already been told, no officer of a State whom you may not by summons embody into your own posse and any State posse already embodied by a sheriff will, with such sheriff, be obliged, upon your summons, to become a part of a United States posse, and obey you or your deputy acting virtute officii.

The responsibility which devolves upon an officer clothed with such powers, and required to guard the highest right of citizens, corresponds in degree with those powers and rights, and exacts of such officer consideration, intelligence, and courage.

It is proper to advise you that in preparing this circular I have considered recent important judgments given by the Supreme Court of the United States upon the acts of Congress which regulate this general topic.

I have founded the above instructions upon those acts as affected by such judgments, and I need in this place add no more than that these judgments do not concern elections for Federal offices.

You will find appended, in full or by reference, such statutory provisions as it seems important that you and your deputies shall in this connection read and consider.

In matters of doubt you are of course entitled to the advice of the United States attorney for your district.

These instructions have been submitted to the President, and have his approval.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
ALPHONSO TAFT,
Attorney General.

A copy of this was referred by the Secretary of War to General Sherman for his information and guidance.

[Exchanges please copy.]

JUST PUBLISHED,

HAYES AND WHEELER

Campaign Song Book.

SERIES I.

The Republican Congressional Committee have just issued from the presses of J. M. Armstrong, music typographer, Philadelphia, a sixteen-page SONG BOOK, with neat cover, title-page, and vignette of HAYES and WHEELER, constituting the first series of songs written by various competent authors expressly for this campaign.

Much of the music is new, and the remainder consists of selections from the best airs of all nations, and it is arranged mostly for men's voices with chorus, thus supplying a great desideratum with popular assemblies, singing clubs, and soloists.

State, County, District, or other Republican committees or clubs supplied. Retail dealers also supplied on most liberal terms.

Other series will issue as soon as the best material can be collected. This is a rare opportunity.

The second series of this book will be issued within twenty days; the third series within twenty days thereafter.

Apply to said Committee, 1001 F Street, Washington, D. C.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS,

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical, and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better, and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-Third the Cost of Reshingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface, and although the Paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition, therefore it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CRACKED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our GENUINE article, which (for shingle roofs) is when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is to all intents and purposes SLATE. On our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

TIN ROOFS

BRICK WALLS

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on new buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

NEW YORK CASH PRICE LIST.

5 Gallons, can and box	$3 50
10 " " " "	6 50
20 " " half barrel	12 00
40 " " one barrel	23 00

We have in stock, of our own manufacture, roofing materials, etc., at the following low prices:

1000 rolls extra Rubber Roofing at 3 cents per square foot. Or we will furnish Rubber Roofing, Nails, Caps, and Slate Paint for an entire new roof, at 4½ cents per square foot.

2000 rolls 2-ply Tarred Roofing Felt, at 13 cents per square foot.

3000 rolls 3-ply Tarred Roofing Felt, at 2½ cents per square foot.

200 rolls Tarred Sheathing, at ½ cent per square foot.

5000 gallons fine Enamel Paint, mixed ready for use on inside or outside work, at $2 per gallon.

Send for sample card of colors. All orders must be accompanied with the money or satisfactory city references. No goods shipped C. O. D., unless express charges are guaranteed.

Sample orders solicited.

N. Y. SLATE PAINT COMPANY,

102 & 104 Maiden Lane, New York

tions to be held upon the Tuesday after the first Monday in November next to be prepared to preserve and to restore such peace.

As the chief executive officer of the United States in your district you will be held responsible for all breaches of the peace of the United States which diligence on your part might have prevented, and for the arrest and securing of all persons who violate that peace in any of the points above enumerated.

Diligence in these matters requires, of course, that you be, and continue, present, in person or by deputy, at all places of registration or election at which you have reason to suspect that the peace is threatened; and that whenever an embodiment of the posse comitatus is required to enforce the law such embodiment be effected.

You will observe that the "special" deputies mentioned in section 2021 of the Revised Statutes have peculiar duties assigned to them, duties which otherwise do not belong to deputy marshals. Such "special" deputies can be appointed only in cities of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward.

But the duties assigned to marshals and their deputies by section 2022, or other like statutes, belong to all duly appointed deputies, whether they be general or be "special," within the meaning of that and the preceding section. Deputies to discharge this latter class of duties may be appointed to any number whatever, according to the discretion of the marshal, in all States in which sheriffs have a similar power. Section 2030 has no practical bearing upon this point in States where no limit is imposed upon the appointment of deputies by sheriffs, because in such States the laws of the United States "prior to the 10th of June, 1872," left marshals also unlimited as to the number of their deputies.

In discharging the duties above mentioned you will doubtless receive the countenance and support of all the good citizens of the United States in your respective districts. It is not necessary that it is upon such countenance and support that the United States mainly rely in their endeavor to enforce the right to vote which they have given or have secured. The present instructions are intended only to counteract that partial malice, wrong-headedness, or inconsideration which sometimes triumphs at critical moments over the conservative and in general prevailing forces of society, and to which the present and passing condition of the country gives more than ordinary strength, and, therefore, requires the Government to particularly to observe and provide against.

In this connection I advise that you and each of your deputies, general and "special," have a right to summon to your assistance, in preventing and quelling disorder, "every person in the district above fifteen years of age, whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not, and including the military of all denominations—militia, soldiers, marines—all of whom are alike bound to obey you. The fact that they are organized as military bodies—whether of the State or the United States—under the immediate command of their own officers, does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are the posse comitatus." I prefer to quote the above statement of the law upon this point from an opinion by my predecessor, Attorney General Cushing, because it thus appears to have been well settled for many years.—(6, Opinions, 466, May 27, 1854.)

I need hardly add that there can be no State law or State official in this country who has jurisdiction to oppose you in discharging your official duties under the laws of the United States. If such interference shall take place—a thing not anticipated—you are to disregard it entirely. The laws of the United States are supreme, and so, consequently, is the action of officials of the United States in enforcing them. There is, as virtually you have already been told, no officer of a State whom you may not by summons embody into your own posse and any State posse already embodied by a sheriff will, with such sheriff, be obliged, upon your summons, to become a part of a United States posse, and obey you or your deputy acting virtute officii.

The responsibility which devolves upon an officer clothed with such powers, and required to guard the highest right of citizens, corresponds in degree with those powers and rights, and exacts of such officer consideration, intelligence, and courage.

It is proper to advise you that in preparing this circular I have considered recent important judgments given by the Supreme Court of the United States upon the acts of Congress which regulate this general topic.

I have founded the above instructions upon those acts as affected by such judgments, and I need in this place add no more than that these judgments do not concern elections for Federal offices.

You will find appended, in full or by reference, such statutory provisions as it seems important that you and your deputies shall in this connection read and consider.

In matters of doubt you are of course entitled to the advice of the United States attorney for your district.

These instructions have been submitted to the President, and have his approval.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALPHONSO TAFT,

Attorney General.

A copy of this was referred by the Secretary of War to General Sherman for his information and guidance.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS,

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical, and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better, and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-Third the Cost of Reshingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is fire-proof against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface, and although the Paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition, therefore it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in Felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our GENUINE article, which (for shingle roofs) is when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is to all intents and purposes SLATE. On our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

TIN ROOFS

BRICK WALLS

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

NEW YORK CASH PRICE LIST.

5 Gallons, can and box	$5 50
10 " " " "	9 50
20 " " " "	16 00
40 " " " "	30 00

We have in stock, of our own manufacture, roofing materials, etc., at the following low prices.

1000 rolls extra Rubber Roofing at 3 cents per square foot. Or we will furnish Rubber Roofing, Nails, Caps, and Slate Paint for an entire new roof, at 4½ cents per square foot.

2000 rolls 2-ply Tarred Roofing Felt, at 1½ cents per square foot.

3000 rolls 2-ply Tarred Roofing Felt, at 2½ cents per square foot.

200 rolls Tarred Sheathing, at ½ cent per square foot.

5000 gallons fine Enamel Paint, mixed ready for use on inside or outside work, at $2 per gallon.

Send for sample card of colors. All orders must be accompanied with the money or satisfactory city references. No goods shipped C. O. D., unless express charges are guaranteed.

Sample orders solicited.

N. Y. SLATE PAINT COMPANY,

102 & 104 Maiden Lane, New York.

[Exchanges please copy.]

JUST PUBLISHED,

HAYES AND WHEELER

Campaign Song Book.

SERIES I.

The Republican Congressional Committee have just issued from the presses of J. M. Armstrong, music typographer, Philadelphia, a sixteen-page SONG BOOK, with neat cover, title-page, and vignette of HAYES and WHEELER, constituting the first series of songs written by various competent authors expressly for this campaign.

Much of the music is new, and the remainder consists of selections from the best airs of all nations; and it is arranged mostly for men's voices with chorus, thus supplying a great desideratum with popular assemblies, singing clubs, and soloists.

State, County, District, or other Republican committees or clubs supplied. Retail dealers also supplied on most liberal terms.

Other series will issue as soon as the best material can be collected. This is a rare opportunity.

The second series of this book will be issued within twenty days; the third series within twenty days thereafter.

Apply to said Committee, 1005 F Street, Washington, D. C.

Vol. 7. Republic Magazine. Vol. 7.

CAMPAIGN PREMIUMS.

MARSHALL'S LIFE-SIZE PORTRAITS

OR

HAYES AND WHEELER.

Any one sending a new subscriber and $2.00 will receive the REPUBLIC MAGAZINE one year and choice of a life-size portrait of

GOV. RUTHERFORD B. HAYES or HON. WM. A. WHEELER,

Engraved in pure Line by WM. E. MARSHALL. Autograph printed on each Engraving.

For two subscribers and $4.00 the proprietors will send the Magazine one year and a portrait of each of the candidates, (Hayes and Wheeler.)

The Magazine and premiums are in all cases sent with the postage prepaid.

A thorough circulation of these Portraits of Governor R. B. HAYES and Hon. WM. A. WHEELER being recommended by our most prominent working Republicans, and also by the National Executive Committee, as of great importance to insure the success of the Republican cause, the publishers, to enable Republican clubs, committees, and organizations to distribute them thoroughly and at no expenses, make this offer—we will fill all orders at the following rates:

Orders for	1 proof or more at 35 cts. each.
25	25	25	25	25
100	25	25	25	25
1,000	23	23	23	23
2,000	21	21	21	21
5,000	17½	17½	17½	17½

Autograph printed on each Proof.

These engravings are full life size, and are companion pictures. They are engraved in pure line by Wm. E. Marshall, and are fully equal to his celebrated and well-known portraits of Washington, Lincoln, and General Grant. They are printed on fine paper of good quality, and are thoroughly indorsed as excellent and faithful portraits and elegant works of art.

They are just the works to sell through audiences, especially at political meetings: and we therefore urge upon you to have every meeting in your neighborhood thoroughly canvassed by boys or men taking them through the audience.

Being very life-like, strong, and telling portraits, and truly portraying the characters of the nominees, they are—what a prominent member of the National Executive Committee says—"speeches to those who cannot read. Most powerful campaign documents."

Subscriptions for Magazine and premiums should be sent to REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

Those desiring the Engravings without the Magazine will please address

OSCAR MARSHALL, Publisher,

697 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

COMMENDATIONS AND OPINIONS.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

DEAR SIR: At the meeting of this Committee held on the second instant, a resolution of thanks was passed to you for the engraved portraits of Messrs. Hayes and Wheeler. In the opinion of the members of the Committee, these are the best portraits of the Republican candidates prepared; and it is thought that their general distribution throughout the country will be of service in the impending campaign. No fair observer can hesitate to admit that the faces are those of men kind yet firm in disposition, and with a thorough honesty of purpose. This Committee will be pleased to have State, County, and District clubs aid in the general introduction of these portraits. Yours truly, R. C. McCORMICK, Secretary

HON. ZACH CHANDLER, CHAIRMAN NATIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

I have seen Marshall's life-size line-engraved portraits of Governor R. B. Hayes and Hon. Wm. A. Wheeler, and I consider them excellent as likenesses and as works of art; and I am of the opinion that, if widely circulated during the present campaign, they would be of great service to the Republican party.

CONGRESSIONAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Committee directs me to acknowledge the receipt of Marshall's life-size portraits of Gov. R. B. Hayes and Hon. Wm. A. Wheeler, and to return thanks for the same, and to express the hope that these splendid representations may make the acquaintance of every voter in the land.

J. M. EDMUNDS, Secretary.

UNION VETERANS' NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

They are admirable, and I can cordially recommend them to all Republican organizations and clubs.

JNO. A. DIX, Chairman.

R419

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VIII.

WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL, 1877.

No. 4.

PRESIDENT HAYES' NEW POLICY.

The policy of the new Administration is not yet fully developed. Enough, however, has been made known to indicate its general character.

Certain Republicans fear that it is to be an abandonment of the Republican party in the South, and the virtual throwing overboard of all that has been done in the line of reconstruction since the close of the war.

Certain Democrats hope and believe that it means the acceptance of Democracy, the elevation of its old leaders, the abandonment of universal suffrage, and the abnegation of all right on the part of the Federal Government to protect citizenship in the Southern States.

Both Republicans and Democrats holding these views will be disappointed in the new policy. It neither means the desertion of Republicanism nor the acceptance of Democracy. It means the blending together of a large and influential element in both parties, and the breaking down of the color line in the politics of the South. If it fails of success, the fault will be with those who have complained of abuses which have grown out of the color line, and who are now to have an opportunity to correct them by an honest effort on the part of the President to afford a policy that will, if accepted in good faith, secure local self-government, and the ultimate removal of those irritating causes which, since the close of the war, have tended to disturb the peace and retard the prosperity of many of the Southern States.

The policy is on trial, and it should have the earnest support of every true friend of the Government, irrespective of old party lines. Its complete success calls for no abandonment of the right of suffrage on the part of any class. The humblest citizen is to be protected in his rights, and it is hoped that under its friendly influences this protection, wherever needed, will come promptly and willingly from the States affected. If this should prove to be the case, the military arm of the Federal Government will not be invoked to do what the States ought to do themselves, and the withdrawal of United States troops from Southern localities will follow as a matter of course.

The new policy looks to the elevation of the best men to offices of trust and authority, and if the Republican party in the South cannot produce men to come up to the requirements they will be sought after in the Democratic party. In other words, good men are not to be ignored because they are Democrats, nor bad men preferred because they claim to be Republicans. Republicans are to have the preference, all things being equal, but merit is to be the test, and whoever fills an office must come up to this test.

It has been claimed, and the truth of the claim will be tested by the new policy, that there is a large and influential party in the Southern States who do not countenance the violence and outrages perpetrated upon the colored voters, but are forced to look on with indifference because they have been ignored by the Administration. It has been set forth, from time to time, that the political crimes committed have been by a lawless class that could be controlled and suppressed by the better element, if that element was invited to advise and co-operate with the General Government.

The appointment of a Democratic Cabinet officer and the general invitation extended to the Southern people by this act means that an honest endeavor is to be made to bring to the front this better element of the South, that has thus far stood with folded arms, unwilling to help in the preservation of order, on the plea that such help was not invited. President Hayes has extended the invitation, and time alone can tell whether the invitation is to be followed by those good results which are earnestly hoped for.

If the new policy has no other effect than to bring the best men of both parties closer together and thus dull the edge of partisanship it will not have been tried in vain. Party spirit, of late years, has become excessively bitter. The natural tendency of its continuation in the same line would be to invite to blows, and this would involve a civil war, the most disastrous of modern times. If the new policy begets more justice and charity than were found in the old one it must lead to the pacification of all sections and to the speedy restoration of public confidence, and, thus, to prosperity.

The new policy also means a healthy reform in the civil service. Perfect independence of political influences is to be infused in the offices of the Government. Merit is to be the door of admission, and merit is to be the basis of promotion. We have claimed, and still claim, that the civil service of the past eight years has been, in point of honesty and efficiency, equal to any in our history. But there is room for improvement, and it lies in the direction indicated by the new policy of President Hayes. Government officials should feel, at all times, that their positions depend upon their merit, and that faithful service to the Government is a surer road to advancement than service to any man or party. If the President succeeds in bringing about this feeling of independence among the Federal officials of the land, the reform will be hailed as genuine and substantial.

On the whole the outlook is a cheering one, and the new policy promises good results. While we may entertain opinions at variance with some of its features, we cannot deny the honesty of the efforts put forth. The President is in earnest and will do his best to bring about peace and good will without sacrificing any one's rights or betraying a principle. If his policy fails he will be among the first to change it. While he hopes for success, he is not so wedded to a policy as to pursue it after it has proven a failure.

Let American citizens, of both parties, stand by him in his work and render him that support which is necessary for success. If the results do not come at once to justify the promise let all be patient and exercise the charity which encourages well-doing. A fair trial is all that the President asks, and a fair trial is the least that can be accorded his policy.

THE New York Bulletin publishes the comparative statistics of the debts of New York city and the United States, the former at the present time and the latter in 1860. The debt of New York city is $160,000,000. The taxes are $33,000,000 a year. The population is 1,200,000. The debt, $133 for every man, woman, and child of population, and the taxation, $27.50 per capita. In 1860 the debt of the United States was $65,000,000, or $95,000,000 less than the present debt of the city of New York. The taxes upon the United States were at that time $3,000,000 a year, or only $21,000,000 more than the present taxation of the city of New York.

Is it any wonder that New York feels the pressure of hard times; that her great stores stand empty, and that there is an irresistible call on landlords for a reduction of rents?

OF the thirty-eight States of the Union, twenty-four will be represented in the next House by a Republican majority. Even the great bull-dozed State, New York, will have a majority of its Representatives on the Republican side of the House.

VIEWS ON THE SOLUTION OF THE SOUTHERN PROBLEM.

BY A CORRESPONDENT.

In June, 1875, at the date of the meeting of the Republican nominating convention at Cincinnati, the unfortunate condition for years of Southern affairs, with its fruits—revolts, massacre, and outrage; the unyielding hostility of the property-holding and educated whites of the section to the rule of the colored majority; the unceasing demand of the latter for military assistance from the Government, and the consequent use of the bayonet in organizing and supporting their local Legislatures and governments; the deaf ear with which Congress had nevertheless met all the representations of the President respecting the condition of the South; the refusal of the Republicans to seat some of its colored representatives in the Senate, and its refusal or neglect to adopt the legislation recommended by the President as demanded by an adjustment of Southern affairs—all these and other similar causes had combined, with the excitement throughout the country attendant upon the ruin of business and the scandal of never-ending brawls and outrages, in making reconstruction odious even to the loyal mind. It had been emphatically condemned at the recent elections. The Republican majority in the Senate had been greatly reduced. The heavy Republican majority in the House had been sponged out, and an overwhelming Confederate majority had been returned in its place. The nation was manifestly disgusted—evidently surfeited with the long and apparently endless wrangle, so profitless even to the Southern Unionist, and so injurious to all the material interests of the nation. It had commanded a halt, had ordered the bloody farce to cease, and the Republicans, weakened by the successive loss of State after State, were in danger of permanent overthrow.

Under these circumstances the Republican nominating convention met at Cincinnati. In its platform it adopted as its third plank:

Third. The permanent pacification of the Southern section of the Union, the complete protection of all its citizens in the free enjoyment of all their rights, are duties to which the Republican party is sacredly pledged. The power to provide for the enforcement of the principles embodied in the recent constitutional amendments is vested by those amendments in the Congress of the United States, and we declare it to be the solemn obligation of the legislative and executive departments of the Government to put into immediate and vigorous exercise all their constitutional powers for removing any just causes of discontent on the part of any class, and securing to every American citizen complete liberty and exact equality in the exercise of all civil, political, and public rights. To this end we imperatively demand a Congress and Chief Executive whose courage and fidelity to these duties shall not falter until these results are placed beyond dispute or recall.

Upon this plank it nominated as its candidates for President and Vice President, Hayes and Wheeler. General Hayes, in his letter of acceptance, dated July 8th, 1876, says:

“The resolution of the convention on the subject of the permanent pacification of the country, and the complete protection of all its citizens in the free enjoyment of all their constitutional rights, is timely and of great importance. The condition of the Southern States attracts the attention and commands the sympathy of the people of the whole Union in their progressive recovery from the effects of the war. Their first necessity is an intelligent and honest administration of government which will protect all classes of citizens in all their political and private rights. What the South most needs is peace, and peace depends upon the supremacy of law.”

“There can be no enduring peace if the constitutional rights of any portion of the people are habitually disregarded. A division of political parties, resting merely upon distinctions of race or upon sectional lines, is always unfortunate and may be disastrous. The welfare of the South, alike with that of every other part of this country, depends upon the attractions it can offer to labor and immigration, and to capital. But laborers will not go, and capital will not be ventured where the Con-

been polit
lawl supp elem
ate v

Th net tend meal mad men with pres such has can lowe earn

If
to bi toget ship

Part cessiv its co

to in a civ time tice a one i secti publ

Th form denc
fused
Meri
meri have servi
poin any impr
indic

Hay at a upor to th vanc part ing
amor

stitution and laws are set at defiance, and distraction, apprehension, and alarm take the place of peace-loving and law-abiding social life. All parts of the Constitution are sacred, and must be sacredly observed—the parts that are new, no less than the parts that are old. The moral and material prosperity of the Southern States can be most effectively advanced by a hearty and generous recognition of the rights of all by all, a recognition without reserve or exception. With such a recognition fully accorded, it will be practicable to promote, by the influence of all legitimate agencies of the General Government, the effort of the people of these States to obtain for themselves the blessings of honest and capable local government. If elected, I shall consider it not only my duty, but it will be my ardent desire to labor for the attainment of this end. Let me assure my countrymen of the Southern States that, if I shall be charged with the duty of organizing an administration, it will be one which will regard and cherish their truest interests, the interests of the white and the colored people, both and equally, and which will put forth its best efforts in behalf of a civil policy which will wipe out forever the distinction between the North and South in our common country."

Mr. Wheeler, in his letter, adds :

"We compelled these [Southern] people to remain in the Union, and now duty and interest demand that we leave no just means untried to make them good, loyal citizens. How to diminish the friction, how to stimulate the elevation of this portion of our country, are problems addressing themselves to our best and wisest statesmanship. The foundation for these efforts must be had in satisfying the Southern people that they are to have equal, exact justice accorded to them. Give them to the fullest extent every blessing which the Government confers upon the most favored. Give them no just cause for complaint, and then hold them by every necessary means to an exact, rigid observance of all their duties and obligations under the Constitution and its amendments, to secure to all within their borders manhood and citizenship, with every right thereto belonging."

In the campaign which followed, in Congress and upon the stump, it was urged by Republican leaders :

"The North looks with hope to the old Whig element in the South, which did not originally advocate secession doctrines or accept the resolutions of '98, to return to its prominence in political affairs as an organization for the maintenance of the Constitution and the Union, and with a view to the securing of all voters who ask their constitutional rights only. I venture further to say that when that old Union-loving Government shall declare itself the promoter of the rights of all men, white and black, under the amended Constitution, it will be recognized in its relations with the Federal Government as fully as it ever was before the war ; for that is all Republicanism demands. It is to secure such a recognition and the restoration of an era of good government that we earnestly advocate the election of Governor Hayes."—Kasson, of Iowa, U. S. H. R., Aug. 14, 1876.

Upon these "sacred pledges" solemnly reiterated in every form, and guaranteed by the "the permanent pacification," the "the peace of the South ; " "a recognition without reserve or exception"—"a hearty and generous recognition of the rights of all," "the complete protection of all its citizens," of "every American citizen," "the free enjoyment" of "all their political and private rights ;" "the removal of any just causes of discontent on the part of any class ;" the obliteration of the "unfortunate" and possibly "disastrous" "division of political parties resting merely upon sectional lines ;" "by an intelligent and honest administration," by "the influence of all the legitimate agencies of the General Government" "to promote" "the efforts of the people of those States to obtain for themselves the blessings of honest and capable local government."

Upon these pledges Hayes and Wheeler carried the country. Hence, the efforts of the South to perpetuate, by military force, the local so-called "carpet-bag" governments, were condemned at the late Presidential election by the universal American voice—by the Republicans as by the Democrats. The judgment of all parties in the contest was : that in all the grand purposes or ends of government reconstruction by the military power is a failure. And is not history full of similar failures? Have similar agencies anywhere ever succeeded? After centuries of carnage, crime, and blood, in Ireland, exhausting every expedient of the most frightful military tyranny, the only fruit of which was one unbroken series of rebellions against the imperial authority, England was compelled to yield to Irishmen the rights of Englishmen. But it robbed them of their home government. It substituted for its military, in support of the imperial authority, an armed constabulary, drilled and disciplined as cavalry and infantry. Hence, to-day, as seventy years ago, Irishmen still clamor and war for local independence—for home rule—for "Ireland for Irishmen," and to-day, as a hundred years ago, the Pole is ripe for rebellion. After centuries of military violence by the Turk, in sanguinary efforts to maintain over his provinces alien governments, the Slave, to-day, for the hundredth time, is in arms for independence—for local home rule! All mankind, German, Slave and Celt, instinctively rebel against all such agencies—against alien governments supported by the bayonet; and rebellion, bloody resistance, is their only fruit, even where maintained in the name of the majority for the purposes of freedom! Can we hope for better success in the South—for acquiescence in a rule, in local governments, which in themselves are inimical to the will of the dominant classes, and which utterly fail, even with the support of the army, to maintain peace, to enforce justice, to protect the citizen, colored or white, in his liberties or life, or to secure him in the unmolested possession of his property? The colored man, the Southern Unionist, under them, is a victim of bloody persecution. Suffrage, which should have been his protection, the fortress of his independence and power, has, by its management, by its enforcement in blood by the military, been made his curse—the justification and cause of his massacre and murder, and positively threatens him with extermination.

Shall that continue forever, to the great injury of all the interests of the country—to the great scandal of the nation? Does justice demand such sacrifices? Does liberty or peace? The voice of the Republic, the judgment of all parties emphatically pronounced at the ballot-box, has decided that they do not—that the injurious and scandalous brawl shall cease.

What, then, is the remedy? What the statesman's remedy? How to untangle this frightful melange of blood and fraud—to command the peace—without relinquishing or jeopardizing the liberties and rights guaranteed the Southern Unionist by the organic law? Is it not obvious? So long as the color line in the South shall be preserved, so long as the "unfortunate" and "disastrous" "division of political parties upon sectional lines" shall continue, just so long will the colored man be a "nigger"—a pariah—hated, hunted, and murdered. With the division of his own and the white vote a new era will open out to him—an era of fraternity and peace. With a new division of parties obliterating the color line, all parties will have the highest motives to secure him in the unmolested exercise of the franchise—in obtaining at the polls the largest number of colored votes, and the inducements to secure his vote will establish him, permanently and in peace, in all the enjoyments of life, liberty, and property.

To accomplish that is one of the grand purposes of the administration—to secure to the Southern Unionist the rights guaranteed "every American citizen" by the Constitution and the laws, while removing from the States the odium of military rule; and, in its righteous efforts, it will be sustained and applauded by the patriotic of all parties!

DEWINTON.

[While the REPUBLIC will always afford to correspondents an opportunity for a free expression of opinion on all national subjects, it must not be supposed that their views are always indorsed by the editors of the Magazine. While the necessity for a military police in the South must always be regretted, it is not clear that a better course could have been adopted in the past. Its withdrawal or retention now will depend wholly upon the future deportment of the people in the localities where its presence in the past has been deemed necessary for the preservation of peace, property, and life.—ED. REPUBLIC.]

No government ever saved a dollar by repudiation, which involves always the loss of credit.

WILLIAM MAXWELL EVARTS.

Those who listened to Mr. Evarts, in his argument before the Arbitration Commission in the Louisiana case, were of the opinion that he completely cleared the case of the fog and mist in which the opposing counsel had invested it. By this great effort he has again placed himself prominently before the people.

Mr. Evarts' father was a native of Vermont. He was a man of high character; engaged in religious and educational enterprises. Like his son he was a graduate of Yale College. He died in Charleston, S. C., in 1831, at the early age of fifty.

William Maxwell Evarts was born in Boston, February 6th, 1818, and is now 59 years of age. He graduated from Yale in 1837, when only 19 years old. He at once devoted himself assiduously to the profession of law. He attained considerable eminence as a lawyer before he was known in politics. Our first personal knowledge of him in the latter sphere was as one of the chief participants in the famous "Castle Garden meeting," in 1850. That meeting was composed of the most conservative and respectable citizens of New York, and was designed to sustain the "Compromise" administration of Mr. Fillmore and to resist the spread of what was then called Secedism. The city of New York was the head of this influence, and the leading men of that metropolis, Whigs and Democrats, were swept into the current. It is not strange that Mr. Evarts was one of them. A few years afterward a Virginian named Lemmon, traveling from Virginia to Texas with eight slaves, sailed from Norfolk to New York, intending there to tranship his family and property to Texas. His slaves were, on their arrival in New York, restored to freedom by the laws of the State. The indignation of the slaveholders throughout the country was thoroughly aroused. An expensive and protracted litigation ensued. The State of Virginia became the plaintiff and the State of New York the defendant. The two most eminent men of the New York bar were employ-O'Connor for Virginia and William M. Evarts for New York; the former, as always, the advocate of slavery, and the latter the champion of freedom. Probably a more able and elaborate argument in behalf of the rights of slavery, under the Constitution, was never made than Mr. O'Connor's in this case. It was without compromise or equivocation, entirely divested of any sentiment of humanity. Mr. Evarts, however, completely overthrew the ingenious fabric of his antagonist and vindicated the Constitution and the cause of human nature. For two days Mr. Evarts addressed the Court of Appeals of the State of New York; a court composed of some of the ablest jurists of that great State. Mr. O'Connor occupied about the same time in his argument. Mr. Evarts carried the Court with him.

The judges who decided in favor of freedom were Hiram Denio, William B. Wright, Henry Welles, William J. Bacon, and Henry E. Davies. Those who dissented were Samuel L. Selden, Thomas W. Clerke, and George F. Comstock. Of the former, Mr. Denio was a Democrat, but a man of commanding intellect and a jurist of great integrity and ability. The dissentients were two Democrats and one "American," (Judge Comstock.) The importance of this decision is manifest when it is remembered that the slave power was then seeking to establish the principle that the Constitution made slavery lawful throughout the United States; as well in the so-called "Free States" as in the "Slave States" and Territories. It was intended that the Supreme Court of the United States (to which tribunal this case was appealed) should decide in favor of that interpretation of the Constitution as it had done in the "Dred Scott" decision.

Both counsel in this great trial displayed a deep study of the subject, and showed evidences of great research made in all the available sources of knowledge, ancient and modern. The court having decided the case in favor of New York and of freedom, Mr. Evarts became one of the champions of Republican principles. His argument produced a profound impression among jurists, statesmen, and thoughtful people. Mr. O'Connor, the recognized head of the bar, was vanquished.

The two York
Charles

The war of rebellion soon followed, and the public interest in discussions of slavery was drowned. The irrepressible conflict was transferred from the forum to the field. Mr. Evarts, now regarded as a leader in the Republican party, was extensively looked upon as a candidate for the United States Senate. In the election of Senator in 1861, he divided the votes of the caucus with Horace Greeley. After a protracted and unsuccessful ballot, Ira Harris was taken up as a compromise candidate, nominated by the caucus, and elected by the Legislature. Two years later Mr. Evarts was again widely spoken of for the same office. E. D. Morgan, however, was chosen.

In 1863 Mr. Seward sent Mr. Evarts to England as counsel for the United States in the matters of difference between the two countries.

Mr. Adams thus announced the arrival of Mr. Evarts in London :

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
LONDON, May 8, 1863.

SIR : Since the departure of the steamer of last week I have had the pleasure of receiving Mr. Evarts at the legation. I have placed him at once into communication with all the parties hitherto engaged on this side of the water in the preparation of evidence or in giving advice in the matter of vessels fitting out here for the use of the rebels.

In the case of the Alexandra, I am informed, though not from any official source, that her Majesty's Government have concluded to proceed in the first instance against the ship, and not the persons. The case has been removed to the Court of Exchequer, at Westminster, and is to be tried by a special jury at some period not yet fixed. In a brief conversation I had last evening with the Solicitor General on the subject, I found him far from sanguine of success in the undertaking. I presume he will not act. The Attorney General may. The enlistment law never was a popular act here. And there are so many strong interests combined to annul its provisions that we shall have to esteem ourselves very fortunate if we can obtain a jury fully disposed to do justice.

the rebels continues to an extraordinary extent. I have reason to believe that they still contemplate a possibility of some concerted operations of an aggressive character to break the blockade, and possibly to recover their foothold at New Orleans or at the mouth of the Chesapeake. But the great effort is unquestionably to forward supplies of provisions and clothing.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, &c.

Mr. Evarts remained industriously engaged in behalf of his Government until July, when, for reasons given in the following letter from Mr. Adams, he returned to Washington :

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
LONDON, July 3, 1863.

SIR : Mr. Evarts has shown to me your note to him, recommending a longer stay in this country if I should deem it expedient. At the same time he expressed a desire to go home and attend to his affairs, which require his presence, if it should appear that he was not absolutely needed here. He stated very truly that after the close of this month little remains to be done in London. All people of influence leave it for the summer and autumn. The courts are adjourned over, so that, in point of fact, were he to stay, he would have no occupation. The argument against the Alexandra is adjourned over until November. In view of these considerations, I suggested the possibility of his going home for the season, and making his arrangements to come here again in time for the assignment of the Alexandra case. This, he said, had also occurred to himself.

I am very happy to have the pleasure of Mr. Evarts' society, as well as the relief which he has furnished me from the direction of the legal operations against the outfits of vessels in this kingdom. But these are now so much simplified that I cannot see any occasion for detaining him here at the expense of the Government and to his own inconvenience merely on that account.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, &c.

Mr. Evarts was one of the counsel for President Johnson in the famous impeachment trial. His argument in this case may justly take rank with the greatest speeches in his profession. His eulogiums on Seward, Webster, and Chase are among the finest specimens of American oratory. His services to his Government and to the country, in bringing to a successful issue over-estimated. Mr. Evarts having been appointed Secretary of State by President Hayes, the whole country recognizes his eminent fitness to be the Premier of the new Administration.

THE WHIGS OF ALABAMA.

The Montgomery State Journal has a judicious and timely article in reference to the severance of the Whig element in Alabama with the Democracy. It says that "sensible men in Alabama now admit that had the generous and broad statesmanlike policy of the Whig party prevailed in the councils of the nation, there would have been no secession nor civil war among the States of the Union. That policy which was so ably and so eloquently maintained by Clay and Webster and their cotemporaries, embraced all the means and ends of peace and good will among the people of the whole country. There was nothing narrow or sectional in that policy, as contradistinguished from the Democratic policy of hate and sectionalism."

The Journal further calls attention to the well-known and important fact in political history that only a few years since in the South "the Whig party constituted the wealth, intelligence, and statesmanship of the people, just as the Republican party, at the present day, constitutes the wealth, intelligence, and moral worth of the North, East, and West. Every old Whig citizen of Alabama knows that the so-called Democratic party here was composed of all the commoner elements of citizenship; that it constantly aggressed upon the peace and welfare of the State by its unscrupulous methods of carrying elections, and of defrauding Whig citizens of their just rights. The secession convention of 1861, which deprived several Whig-Union delegates of the seats to which they had been elected, was the last desperate assault of the Democratic-Secession leaders upon the Whig-Union sentiment of the State, which was struggling to avert war and ruin."

It is a fact also that the Whig party in the South was never argued down; it was simply bullied down by Democracy on the single ground that the latter was the better pro-slavery party, and that the Whigs were not to be trusted on this paramount question. Thus the national Whigs were literally yelled and hooted down by a Democratic mob. The result was mortifying and humiliating to the Whigs. The Journal adds that ever "since 1861, the Whigs of Alabama have been hewers of wood and drawers of water for the Democratic party; they fought its battles during the war, and since the war; they have furnished it all the brains and statesmanship it has possessed since the war, and but for the abject submission to which the Democratic leaders drove the Whig citizens of the State, the government of Alabama would to-day be prosperous and great under the benign influences of Whig administrations."

Slavery is dead; and why should the political slave overseer continue to crack his whip about the ears of Southern Whigs, who are firm believers in the doctrines of national currency, national improvements, and home development, held by President Hayes?

FORTUNE is for those who by diligence, honesty, and frugality place themselves in a position to grasp hold of fortune when it appears in view. The best evidence of frugality is the five hundred dollars or more standing in your name at the savings bank. The best evidence of honesty is both diligence and frugality.

PROGRESS OF THE U. S. GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF PROF. F. V. HAYDEN, UNITED STATES GEOLOGIST.

In 1867, when Nebraska was admitted as a State, Congress set apart the unexpended balance of the appropriation for legislative expenses of the Territory for a geological survey of the new State. This sum amounted to $5,000, and its expenditure marked the beginning of the geological survey. In 1868, $5,000 more were appropriated, and the work was carried westward into Wyoming Territory. The reports for 1867 and 1868 were made to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The Report for 1867 consists of a letter of 64 pages to the Commissioner, in which the geology of the following counties of Nebraska is detailed, viz: Lancaster, Cass, Otoe, Nemaha, Richardson, Pawnee, Gage, Jefferson, and Johnson. The geology of Nebraska north of the Platte river is treated of, and space is devoted to the Salt Basins of Lancaster county, and to the forest and fruit trees of the State. The Cretaceous and Tertiary formations are also described in detail.

The Report for 1868 contains three letters addressed to the Commissioner. The first is devoted to the geography of the Missouri valley, and the other three are reports of geological explorations in Wyoming Territory. The entire report consists of 36 pages.

In 1869 the survey received its present form, and was placed under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and an increased appropriation was made for a reconnaissance along the eastern edge of the Rocky mountains from Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, to Santa Fé, New Mexico. Reports were made on the geology and mining and agricultural resources of the country passed over. The Report has 158 pages.

In 1870 the appropriation was again increased, and the area explored comprised a belt of country in Wyoming Territory along the line of the Union Pacific railroad. The report for the year is made up of papers on the geology, natural history, meteorology, agricultural, and material resources of the Territory, besides special reports on its fossil plants, fish, and reptiles. It contains 511 pages and 20 wood-cut illustrations.

In 1871 a portion of the region at the sources of the Yellowstone and Missouri rivers was explored. The party organized at Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, and proceeded by rail to Ogden, Utah. Thence, a wagon train was taken to Boteler's Ranch, on the Yellowstone river, 35 miles from Fort Ellis. A belt of country along the line of travel was explored. From Boteler's Ranch a trip with a pack-train of six weeks' duration was made to Yellowstone lake, and the geysers and hot springs of the Fire Hole or Upper Madison river. The results of that trip have become known throughout the civilized world. Descriptions of the wonders of that region have been published in American and English journals, and translated into several foreign languages. Such was the interest excited among our people by the results of the survey, that during the subsequent winter a portion of the region explored was set apart by Congress as a "National Park" for the benefit and enjoyment of the people.

The Report for 1871 contains 538 pages, and is abundantly illustrated, with 2 plates, 5 maps, and 64 figures, many of them reproduced from photographs. The general divisions of the report are geology, agricultural resources, palæontology, zoology and botany, and meteorology.

In 1872 the corps for field-work was divided into two parties, each provided with a geologist, topographer, meteorologist, naturalists, assistants, collectors, and laborers. One division started from Fort Ellis, in Montana Territory, and explored the headwaters of the Yellowstone, Gallatin, and Madison rivers, in more detail than during the previous year. The second division visited the Snake river or Lewis' Fork of the Columbia, in Idaho and Wyoming Territories, a region which before was only partially known. The Teton mountains, a prominent range, were discovered to be thirty miles out of place on all pre-existing maps of the region. From the work of 1872 two geological maps were prepared, which, although somewhat imperfect from the fact that the whole area could not be visited, are a great advance on the previous maps of the country then explored. The report for 1872 has 844 octavo pages, and contains papers on geology, mineralogy, and physical geography, and special reports on geology and palæontology, zoology and botany, astronomy and hypsometry. It is illustrated with maps, sections, diagrams, and plates numbering nearly ninety in all.

From the experience of previous years, it was found that the topographical maps of the West were not accurate enough for the delineation of the geology, so in 1872 the method of work was made more systematic. Previously the work had been somewhat disconnected, being confined mainly to routes of travel.

In 1872, when it was expected that the field of labor would, during the following year, be transferred to Colorado, a plan was devised by which geological work could be carried on in connection with the topographical, and the entire country covered. Next to entering the field with a finished topographical map of the region to be examined—a thing as yet impossible in the West—the union of topography and geology, in one and the same party, best furnishes the data for the realization of the full value of the otherwise more or less disconnected observations of the geologist, and equal benefits accrue to the topographer, for mannerism and inexpressive effects are inevitable results when a topographer sees but the surface of a country, and does not understand its internal structure. Association of topographer and geologist thus leads to benefits to each, and is certainly a great advantage to the system of field-work now followed by the survey. The work in Colorado began in 1873, with the eastern front of the Rocky mountains, and has been steadily carried westward, being completed in 1876. In addition to the regular parties combining topographer and geologist, a meander topographical party has followed, locating more accurately the roads and streams of the districts surveyed by the regular field parties.

In the latter the geologist makes detailed and special studies and sections along the lines of travel, or on special trips for the purpose, and the detail thus acquired he generalizes from the higher topographical stations, whence he obtains extensive views, and can trace the foundations across the country. The directions and locations furnished by the topographer enable him to secure the data from which he can readily color a general geological map on his report from the field.

The report for 1873 contains 718 octavo pages, with over a hundred illustrations, including maps and sections, and the report for 1874, 515 pages, with 88 illustrations, maps, plates, &c., devoted to the geology, palæontology, natural history and geography of Colorado. The reports for 1875 and 1876 are in preparation. The following is a sketch of the topographical progress of the survey:

In 1871, Dr. Hayden finding that the existing maps of the country in which he was working were not sufficiently accurate or detailed for the representation of the geology, decided to carry on geographical work in connection with the geological work. The system of topographical work pursued that year was rather crude, being the time-honored one still in use in reconnoissances by the army, i. e., the survey of the immediate line of march, with the country in sight from it, controlled by courses and distances, the former of which are measured by compass, the latter by odometer, while the whole is checked in latitude by the sextant. That year a survey was made of the principal routes from Ogden, Utah, to the settlements in Montana and a portion of the Yellowstone National Park. The Yellowstone river, from the lake to the Crow Agency, parts of the Gallatin, Madison, and Jefferson rivers were surveyed in much detail. The work has the character of being correct in detail, but not correct as a whole, owing to the want of an accurate system for controlling it.

In 1872 two well-equipped parties were put in the field, each fitted with topographers. This year the system of control was improved by the addition of a running system of triangulation, which, in conjunction with the observations for latitude, were used in correcting the work. The work done in the Snake river division was, topographically, of a high degree of excellence, and needed only a more accurate system of control to make it rank as high as any work yet done in the West.

The country surveyed this year included the heads of the Snake river, nearly all of the Yellowstone Park, with the county drained by the upper Yellowstone, the Madison, and the Gallatin rivers.

The area surveyed in these two years was about 18,000 square miles, including portions of Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana.

In 1873, when the field of work was changed to Colorado, a new departure was made in geographical work. Systematic work, covering uniformly the whole country, controlled by an accurate, complete system of triangulation, took the place of route reconnoissances. At the commencement of the work in 1873 a base line was carefully measured near Denver, and a system of triangulation was carefully expanded by well-conditioned, closed triangles, and extended over about 12,000 square miles.

The system was located, by connection with stations, at Denver, Colorado Springs, and Trinidad, whose latitude and longitude were determined by the United States Coast Survey with their proverbial accuracy.

In 1874 a second base was measured in San Luis valley; an equally good expansion was made, and connection was established with work founded on the first base. The area covered by closed triangles this year was about 10,000 square miles.

In 1875 work was resumed and the area extended about 10,000 square miles, and in 1876 it was further extended, so as to cover all of Colorado west of the 105th meridian, besides small portions of New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah, in all about 70,000 square miles. In the mountainous region, which includes about one-half of this area, natural stations could be selected which would answer all the requirements. These triangles are all well-conditioned, and the points are sharp and well defined, except in one or two instances. The sides of the triangles (aside from the expansion) range from fifteen to seventy miles, while most of them are from twenty-five to forty miles in length. In the plateau country, farther west, points are scarce, but the few that exist are admirably grouped for making well-conditioned, large triangles. Here the sides range from forty to ninety miles, being much larger than in the mountains.

The angles have been measured with theodolites of eight-inch circles, reading to ten seconds of arc. Generally, six readings on each point have been made on different parts of the circle. The mean error of closure of the triangles measured in 1873 is $10' 3''$.

When the work founded on the San Luis base was joined to that from the Denver base, the discrepancy was found to be less than one foot per mile. The area covered by the primary triangulation includes only that inclosed by closed triangles, and has no reference to the open triangles which extend to a long distance north, west, and south, and which require only the measurement of the third angle to extend this area immensely.

The secondary triangulation has been carried on by the topographers, coincidently with the topographical work. The angles were measured with a theodolite having a four-inch horizontal circle, reading to minutes. The mean error of closure is about two minutes.

In the mountainous portion of the State a connected system was kept up, by which stations were located at a mean interval of about seven miles. In the plateau country a connected system became impossible, and while it was carried out as far as practicable, locations by three points have perforce been used to some extent.

The topographical work has been done from commanding points, mainly from the stations in the secondary triangulation. It is thorough and uniformly good everywhere. The sketches, map, and perspective have been made by eye and hand.

The plane table was tried, but its advantages were found to be more than counterbalanced by its want of portability and by the additional time requisite for its employment.

All points susceptible of location, as junctions of streams, mountain peaks, plateau points and corners, buttes, &c., have been fixed in position by the intersection of sight-lines. In this manner several thousands of points have been located in Colorado. All important streams have been meandered. Heights have been measured by the cistern barometer, one or more of which have been sent with each party; by the aneroid, which has been trusted only for sub-important work, and by the vertical circle of the theodolite, which reads to minutes.

The system which was used for the determination of heights in the high mountain region was carefully planned, and has, undoubtedly, given by far the best results yet attained in this class of work.

The base barometric stations were so distributed, horizontally and in height, that any hypsometric work could be referred to a base in no case more than fifty miles off, or differing more than 2,000 feet in height. All the high mountain peaks were connected by careful systems of vertical angles, by which their relative heights were accurately determined. All barometric readings taken on them were reduced to a common point and then referred to the observations taken on the summit of Mount Lincoln or Pike's Peak as a base. As the difference in height between these and the peaks, whose heights were to be determined, is very slight, in few cases exceeding 500 feet, the main source of error in barometric work was avoided.

In the history of the survey as just sketched there are three periods:

The first comprehends the years 1867 and 1868. In these years the work consisted in the collection of geological facts, and specimens to illustrate those facts.

The second period extends from 1869 to 1872 inclusive. In these years not only was the geology of the country investigated, but also its material resources and its natural history. It was found, also, that to correctly delineate the geological features, topographical work would have to be introduced.

In the third period, extending from 1873 to the present, inclusive, the whole corps was thoroughly organized. The important relations of topography and geology were recognized, and the work so arranged that each received its proper share of attention. At the same time the physical geography, the natural history, and industrial capabilities of the country are not neglected.

MAPS ISSUED OR IN PROCESS OF COMPLETION.

In 1871 there was issued a general map in hachures, on a scale of ten miles to one inch, of portions of Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming. It was based on the topographical work of that year, but included in addition compilations from the best sources. Maps of Yellowstone lake and the Geyser basins, on a large scale, were also made.

In 1872, besides several maps of special areas, on large scales, there were issued a map of the country about the head-waters of Snake river, in Idaho, Wyoming, and Montana, on a scale of five miles to one inch, in brush-work, and one of the country drained by the Madison, Gallatin, and Upper Yellowstone rivers, on a scale of four miles to one inch, in sketchy contours of approximately 100 feet. Both these maps have also been colored and issued as geological maps.

During the progress of the survey of Colorado several preliminary maps, on small scales, have been published in the reports. Of these it is necessary to specify but a few.

In the report of the field-work of 1873, there is a drainage map of the area surveyed—18,000 square miles—on a scale of eight miles to one inch.

The report for 1874 contains a preliminary map in hachures, on a scale of ten miles to one inch, of all the work done in the State up to that time; a map of the Elk mountains, topographical and geological, on a scale of two miles to one inch; and a preliminary map of the eastern front of the Rocky mountains, on a scale of four miles to one inch.

Owing to the need of the settlers a drainage map of the San Juan country, on a scale of four miles to the inch, was also issued, and afterward incorporated in the report. Besides these there are many small geological maps of special areas.

The atlas of Colorado, now nearly ready, will contain :

First. Title page, legend sheet and map of the Primary Triangulation.

Second. A general drainage map of the State, on a scale of twelve miles to one inch.

Third. An economic map, colored to represent areas of arable, pasture, timberland, &c.

Fourth. The final map of the State, (including small parts of New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah,) in six sheets, on a scale of four miles to one inch, in contours 200 feet apart in vertical distance. The area embraced in these maps is about 70,000 square miles.

Fifth. The final geological map of Colorado, in six sheets.

Sixth. A general geologic map of the State on a scale of twelve miles to an inch.

Seventh. Two sheets containing the general sections across the State, illustrating the geological map.

Eighth. Two sheets of panoramic views.

When finished, Colorado will have a better map than any other State in the Union, and the work will be of such a character that it will never need to be done again. Colorado will never support so dense a population that a more detailed survey will be required. Accurately located points on which the local surveyors can base their work are abundant in all parts of the State. The work of the geological survey should always precede that of the land survey, as the former indicates what portions of the country are suited for settlement and should be sectionized.

PUBLICATIONS.

The publications of the survey are divided into four classes :

First. The annual reports, which give the general and geological description of the region surveyed each year, together with special reports on its palæontology, natural history, &c., and catalogues of the specimens. These reports are profusely illustrated with maps, sections, &c., and are popular as well as scientific, giving information on all points in regard to the country explored.

Second. Bulletins have issued from time to time as valuable material accumulates, or whenever it becomes necessary that facts should be placed rapidly before the public. Archæology is given a place in these bulletins as well as special branches of natural history and geology. The bulletins of a year make a separate volume.

Third. Miscellaneous publications are edited, designed to give information on various subjects of interest connected with the West. They comprise lists of elevation, meteorology, botany, and catalogues.

Fourth. This class comprehends the more technical results of the work of the survey. Monographs upon palæontology and zoology are issued in quarto form. Up to the present time six of these volumes have been issued.

In order that every branch of scientific study and investigation may have proper attention, Prof. Hayden attached to each division of the geological survey under his charge a competent mineralogist, as he deemed mines and mining features of the highest scientific and economic importance.

During the prosecution of the work of the survey attention has always been paid to the development of the natural resources of the country traversed. Mineral and agricultural wealth has been the subject of especial study, furnishing, as it does, an indication of the future prospects—commercially and financially—of the territory that at the time may be explored. With a view to increase the scientific knowledge with reference to horizontal and vertical distribution of minerals, all occurrences have been carefully noted and summarized in published catalogues. Since 1873, Colorado, one of the richest mining States of the United States, has been the subject of exploration. In accordance with the predominating industrial features of the country, particular attention was given to the investigation of its mineral riches. The mines of all the principal mining districts were examined by experts, and reports thereupon were published. Although the character of these reports was necessarily such that no direct benefit could therefrom accrue to any individual mine, it is certain that the discussion of such districts has furnished general data, the correctness and impartiality of which will go far toward assuring mine-owners and workmen of eventual success and remuneration in the work they have undertaken. It has been a prominent feature of this survey to explore (immediately after discovery) any new district that may have been announced, and to give, as speedily as possible, to the public the benefit of such explorations. Thus, the first authentic reports relative to the famous San Juan mines are to be found in the publications of the survey. Owing to the organization of the parties in the field, examinations of such nature can readily be made, without the loss of too much time, and at the same time with the co-operation of civil engineers, which may at times be desired by the geologist or mining expert. In consequence of this arrangement, it is possible for each party to obtain, in a by far shorter period of time than would otherwise be required, information that ranks high with regard to accuracy and completeness.

In connection partly with the examination of mines, special attention was given to the occurrence of minerals at various localities throughout the State. The result derived has been embodied in a catalogue of Colorado minerals. As was expected, it has been gratifying, and the publications of the survey are thus able to present a list of minerals from Colorado, exceeding in number 200 species. Attention has been directed more particularly—for obvious reasons—to those that there rank as “ores,” and their horizontal distribution affords important information as to the character and location of the mining districts. At the same time their chemical constitution furnishes a hint as to the relative value of the mines in which they occur as ores. Apart from this more practical consideration, the data collected are an addition to mineralogical science. Comparatively but little is known thus far regarding the distribution of minerals throughout the earth, and every additional catalogue, if conscientiously prepared, giving sufficient details, is a contribution to science—a contribution which from its character may, when the collection of facts is complete enough, lead to important and valuable generalizations.

Every attentive reader must have noticed that there is, and has been of late years, considerable difference of opinion among geologists and palæontologists, each eminent in his own department, as to the true geological age of several of the formations hitherto studied in the Western Territories. This difference of opinion does not arise from any failure of each to understand his own facts correctly, but because American scientists have heretofore been content to use a foreign standard, believing that it was inflexibly applicable to the whole world. Accumulated experience has shown that the various evolutionary tides of organic life have not advanced at the same rate in all parts of the world. Thus, while we find that a certain grade of vertebrates, invertebrates and plants are associated together in the strata of, and collectively characterize, a certain geological period in Europe, in America we find that the same grade of plant-life was evidently reached much earlier, and the same grade of vertebrate-life was continued much later, &c. In short, using the European standard, we find in America an actual mingling in the same strata of Cretaceous and Tertiary types of organic remains. From the fact that all fossiliferous strata are sedimentary accumulations in seas or other bodies of water, the remains of invertebrate animals are far more abundant than any other, because they lived in and upon the sediment while it was accumulating; while the remains of land animals and plants could have reached the places of their entombment only from the shores. Thus, invertebrate fossils have always been regarded as more reliable and valuable than any other in determining the geological age of the strata containing them. Indeed, they have generally been regarded as they often are, the only available evidence, and entirely sufficient. It was with this generally accepted invertebrate standard in mind, that all the early explorers of the geology of the Western Territories referred the various groups of strata they found to the different geological periods, and the differences of opinion have arisen through subsequent investigations of the fossil plants and vertebrates of the same groups. The result of all this is not confusion but beautiful harmony. It shows that we have in Western North America an unbroken series of strata, ranging from early and unmistakable cretaceous to late and equally unmistakable tertiary. There are consequently several groups of strata, transitional in their character, that different specialists, viewing their fossil contents from different standpoints, are disposed to place a little higher or lower in the geological scale, as the case may be. This is a perfectly natural condition of things, for where the geological series is complete, no man can say where one formation ends and another begins.

In 1870 a photographer was attached to the survey, and the results arising therefrom have fully proven the wisdom of thus adding a most useful art to the organization. An unthinking public might imagine that the employment of photography in connection with the work of the survey is more ornamental than useful, and that the sole business of the photographer is to secure in the field a number of pictures merely to please the eye and not for practical and scientific use. This idea is so at variance with those believed to be popularly entertained as to practical economy that it seems worth while to enumerate some of the many useful applications photography may be put to. Although in its infancy, it has been so successfully applied to many branches of Government work that it is now considered a necessity of any well-organized expedition, or in any office where there is any considerable amount of illustrating or designing, notably so with the English and Continental Governments, where large schools of instruction are supported for the sole purpose of turning out skilled employees.

In our own country photography was first used to any extent by the Government during the war in securing series of illustrations for the Surgeon General and Engineer bureaus, and since then for the reproduction of the drawings of the Supervising Architect and other work of like nature for the United States Treasurer's office. This establishment is the nearest approach to those maintained at Woolwich, Berlin, Paris, and Vienna, but is insignificant in comparison with them.

After the close of the war the previous good services of photography in the field recommended it to the exploring and surveying expeditions, and it was extensively employed by them. Its use was popularized, however, by the geological survey, under Dr. F. V. Hayden, who attached a photographic corps to the expedition of 1870, and has continued its use ever since. Besides the constant and important use made of these illustrations in the preparation of the geological and topographical reports, copies of them are now used by professors in all the principal colleges of the land to illustrate their geological teachings.

The photographic work has been under the direction of Mr. W. H. Jackson, an experienced landscape photographer, who has made an average of 400 negatives each year, ranging in size from the stereoscopic up to plates 20 by 24 inches square. The first year the work lay entirely within Wyoming and Utah Territories. In 1871 and 1872 the expeditions to the Yellowstone region afforded opportunities that were not lost, and the splendid series of photographs then secured have retained their popularity to this day. In 1873, 1874, and 1875 the work was transferred to Colorado, and the operations of the first season were confined to the mountain ranges bordering the Middle and South parks and the Elk mountains beyond. It was on the trip of 1873 that Mr. Jackson made one of his greatest successes, in securing a fine view of the Mountain of the Holy Cross. In 1874 the views covered a much greater range of subjects, taking in the parks, the San Juan mountains, and the remarkable ancient ruins south of the La Plata mountains. These ruins were first brought to the notice of the world through the photographs made of them by Mr. Jackson. The interesting results secured the previous year justified the sending of Mr. Jackson to the same region again in 1875, but extending his journey down the hitherto unexplored San Juan to the mouth of the De Chelly, and then to the Moquis Pueblos in Arizona. Many interesting ruins were discovered, which were fully described and illustrated in the bulletin, and also the annual report for that year. Returning from Moqui via the De Chelly, the plateau country between the Sierra Abajo and La Plata was found to contain many interesting ruins, and was thoroughly photographed. An interesting feature in connection with this season's work was the success attending the production of a series of 24 by 20 negatives of the most prominent points in the San Juan mountains, the very first plate of this size ever made among the Rocky mountains.

From the two thousand or more negatives made during these preceding six years we must ascertain what return they have made for the time and money expended upon their production—and entirely aside, too, from their æsthetic qualities, and the pleasure which lovers of the beautiful and picturesque may derive from them. They have done very much in the first place to secure truthfulness in the representation of mountain and other scenery. Twenty years ago hardly more than caricatures existed, as a general rule, of the leading features of overland exploration. Mountains were represented with angles of sixty degrees inclination, covered with great glaciers, and modeled upon the type of any other than the Rocky mountains; the angular lines of a sandstone mesa represented with all the peculiarities of volcanic upheaval or of massive granite, or an ancient ruin with clean cut, perfectly squared and jointed masonry, that would be creditable in modern times. The truthful representations of photography render such careless work so apparent that it would not be tolerated at the present day.

One of their most evident practical uses is in securing faithful views of the many unique and remarkable features of newly-explored territory that are subsequently to be reproduced by engraving in the reports. Especially to be noted in this line are the views of the remarkable Hot Spring deposits of the Yellowstone National Park, where the exceedingly intricate and delicate tracery of the incrustations, that would defy the most expert pencil, are readily secured in all their varied forms. So it is also with the great cañons, grand waterfalls, impressive mountain masses, the craters of old volcanoes, and beds of ancient lakes, the faulting and folding of the strata, and many other features, of which the geologist finds it necessary to have accurate representations for the illustration of his subjects. To the topographer, also, it is of great assistance in enabling him to correctly represent the surface of the country upon his map, panoramic views for that purpose being made from the summits of the highest peaks.

In ethnography it gives us faithful portraits of the varied families of our great Indian population, representing with unquestioned accuracy the peculiar types of each; their manners of living, dressing, occupations, and mythical inscriptions. In archaeology how important it is that the uncompromising lens portrays the at present almost inaccessible ancient ruins of the Southwestern Territories! These photographs can be sent all over the world, and practically answer the purpose of a personal inspection. The photographs of the ancient ruins have been of great assistance in the construction of the models of the remarkable cliff-houses that have been prepared by some of the members of the "survey." In the office the uses of photography are manifold: copying the maps of the topographers to a given scale for the engraver or photo-lithographer, and also rare documents or pictures, the production of views for the stereopticon for lectures, and for enlarged transparent photographs on glass from small originals, whereby the minutest feature of rock structure, the varied details of an old ruin, or the grand and imposing mountain mass, are brought so vividly before the eye that they can be studied to much better advantage than in nature, the mind being in rest, and far from the perplexities of the surroundings.

The total number of negatives in the possession of the survey now number nearly four thousand. Of these, upward of twelve hundred are of Indians photographed from life, representing the most prominent individuals from seventy-four different tribes. The great Sioux family is in this manner well represented, and among them are Red Cloud, Spotted Tail, and Sitting Bull; the Apaches, Comanches, Cheyennes, Utes, Navajos, &c., are also well represented by excellent negatives, showing not only their personnel, but many of their customs.

The occasion of the display at the International Exhibition at Philadelphia led to a desire to represent as forcibly as possible some of the recent discoveries of the survey of remarkable ancient ruins in Southwestern Colorado, and the success of Mr. Holmes with the Elk mountain models suggested the same means for effecting this purpose. There are six now completed of archaeological subjects, as follows:

The Mancos Cliff House, by Mr. Holmes, represents a ruin in an exceedingly well-preserved condition, perched upon a little shelf or niche in the face of a bluff, 800 feet vertically above the valley below. The model is 30 by 40 inches in dimensions, and the scale four feet to one inch.

An Ancient Cave Town in the lower cañon of the De Chelly, near the San Juan river, represents a very interesting and extensive ruin, built along a narrow shelf or bench, seventy-five feet above the valley, and overhung by the bluff. The whole ruin is nearly six hundred feet in length, with originally about one hundred or more apartments. The model as constructed by Mr. Jackson is forty inches in length, and shows one-third of the ruin; the scale is six feet to one inch.

A restoration of the above, also by Mr. Jackson, is the subject of the third of the series. In this, the buildings are built up to the condition in which they were originally supposed to have been before their desertion. They show many points of resemblance to the present Moquis eastern Arizona, noticeably so in the ladder to reach their houses of miniature people have been about the model, representing gaged in various occupations, pottery and other domestic utensils.

The Great Triple Walled Tower, McElmo, by Mr. Holmes, is a model thirty inches square, rep on a scale of four feet to one ruins of an exceedingly interesting stone tower in Southwestern Colorado.

The fifth of the series is a model of the House, in the bluff of the lower Rio De Chelly, in Arizona, on a scale of three feet to one inch, and of the same character as the Mancos model. This is intended to show the manner in which former occupants passed up and down the steep face of the bluff in which they lived, by steps hewn in the rock.

A model of the Pueblo of Northeastern Arizona, representing a village on a scale of eight feet to one inch, most picturesque and interesting of the Moqui Indians. It is situated upon the summit of a narrow, bare rock, 600 feet in height, the upper 100 feet of which are included in the model, showing the pathways up the solid rock, affording the only means of access, and up which is carried wood, water, and provisions of the inhabitants. This last forms a fitting complement to the preceding, as the latter is supposed to be the descendants, or, at least, of the same people whose houses and towers are represented by the models of the foregoing series.

The last two have been completed in time for the closing of the International Exhibition. The production of model representations for distribution among colleges and schools of learning will be continued as subjects are obtained.

Zoology has always been recognized as one of the most important departments of the Geological Survey, not only a legitimate and proper, but a very important and practically collateral department of scientific study, the relations of which to geology ography are natural and intimate. In his earlier experiences as an explorer, before the present survey was established, Dr. Hayden was for years one of the largest and most important contributors of zoological data and material: with the assistance of Mr. James Stevenson, he sent in to the National Museum from time to time collections of specimens in almost all branches of natural history, enormous in extent, and seldom exceeded in interest. In conducting the survey, from the very beginning, Dr. Hayden has engaged the services of zoologists, both in the practical work of the field and in the technical researches of the museum and the library. Among the collaborators in this department are included not a few of the most eminent zoologists of America, his constant aim being to secure the services of the most accomplished specialists in each particular branch of zoology. The results of this liberal and enlightened policy are witnessed, not only in the yearly accessions of fresh material in the way of specimens, but in the numerous zoological publications of the survey.

The Annual Reports contain various papers on zoology, by gentlemen officially connected with the survey, such as those by Mr. James Stevenson, Mr. C. H. Merriam, Ernest Ingersoll, and others. The Bulletins are still richer in this department, containing numerous papers by such distinguished naturalists as Dr. Packard, Dr. Coues, Mr. J. A. Allen, Mr. Robert Ridgway, and others no less eminent in their specialties. One of the miscellaneous publications, by Dr. Elliott Coues, U. S. A., on the Ornithology of the Missouri Region, is a closely-printed octavo of 800 pages, which is based primarily on Dr. Hayden's collections, and constitutes a formal and authoritative treatise on a majority of the birds of North America. In the magnificent series of quarto publications, or "monographs," in which the results of original and exhaustive researches are published, zoology again receives due attention. One of the volumes contains Thomas' revision of the Acrididæ, or grasshoppers, a most important and timely contribution. And here it may be remarked that if the "grasshopper problem" be solvable, we are likely to have the matter settled, now that it is to be referred to Dr. Hayden, and all available scientific knowledge is to be brought to bear upon this question of vital national importance. Another volume of the series consists of Packard's splendid monograph of the geometrid moths, which has received the highest possible commendation from all quarters. A third will consist of Coues and Allen's memoir on the North American Rodentia, the largest order of mammals, and one sustaining the most important economic relations with the agricultural interests of the nation.

In thus glancing at the zoological work accomplished by the Survey, we do not include work done in fossil zoology or palæontology, since this comes more distinctively within the field of geology itself. But to the study of the extinct faunas of the West have been applied the labors of such pre-eminent palæontologists as Joseph Leidy, E. D. Cope, F. B. Meek, Leo Lesquereux, and others, whose results are beyond praise.

AMERICAN PRODUCTS IN ENGLISH MARKETS.—There are repeated indications of the uneasiness felt in European business circles over the manner in which American manufactures are supplanting those of Europe in the markets of the world. The case of American watch-making versus the Swiss manufacture; of American cutlery against Sheffield cutlery; of American cotton goods, American beef, &c., against the English products, are also instances in point. And now the London Times expresses the deepest concern that the Turkish Government obtains so large a proportion of its supplies of arms and ammunition from the United States, and says there is no other way to account for the fact except upon the hypothesis that rifles and ammunition can be bought cheaper and of better quality in Rhode Island and Connecticut than in Warwickshire.

PROF. HAYDEN'S geological survey will be conducted this season north of the Union Pacific railroad, explored by Clarence King, and continue north and west.

WHO IS CARL SCHURZ?

The causes of the unprecedented action of the Senate in referring the Cabinet nominations—the nominations of the first Cabinet officers of the new President—to committees, renders the inquiry above very pertinent—that is, the nomination of Mr. Schurz to the portfolio of the Interior, and that of Mr. Key to the Post Office. Who, then, is Carl Schurz—Carl, the “Strong?” Is he not a soldier, a statesman, a scholar? Who doubts his patriotism? Who challenges his love of free institutions or freedom? Who his Republicanism? Aye, but he is a foreigner—a German! What does he know of American institutions? Pray, who was Alexander Hamilton, the West Indian? Who Albert Gallatin, the Switzer? What did they know of American institutions? What did Hamilton, whose fame as a soldier vanishes in the greater fame of his genius as a statesman—a civilian—Hamilton, one of the authors of the Federalist, the ablest treatise upon American institutions, and who has been claimed as the founder of our Constitution, the author of the plan of Government, the institutions, embodied in our great organic charter as a nation—Hamilton, whose knowledge, profound and practical, of finance, as of politics and law, made him the first Secretary of the Treasury, under Washington—at the beginning of our Government—and who, as such, established for all time the main features of our financial system? Truly, what did Hamilton know of our institutions? And what did Albert Gallatin, distinguished like Hamilton for his practical statesmanship and his profound knowledge of our institutions, as he was for his patriotism and the purity of his character—who, also as Secretary of the Treasury, added the labors of his genius to that of Hamilton’s, in perfecting our system of finance, and who was at different times selected by the Government, with the applause of the nation, as its representative abroad, in the highest diplomatic capacity, at the Court of St. James and at Paris?

And who were the signers of the Declaration of Independence—those founders of our liberties, those authors of our existence as a nation? Were not many of them foreigners? Who was Button Gwinnett? an Englishman! Who was Robert Morris? an Englishman—one whose financial abilities and credit, in our Revolutionary struggle, sustained Washington and our armies in the field in the darkest hours of the war. Who was James Smith? Who Matthew Thornton and George Taylor? Irishmen! Who John Witherspoon and James Wilson? Scotchmen! All foreigners, who, in the struggle in support of the Declaration that “these colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent States,” in giving birth to the nation and its institutions, pledged their “lives,” their “fortunes,” and their “sacred honor.”

And what are those institutions? Are they the original product of America? Are they native to the soil? Or are they simply transplanted from the old country—the work, the creation of the so-called foreigner, in ages prior to our existence as a people, after centuries of battle, sacrifices and blood, from Arminius to William III, and simply adopted, naturalized, in this, by the descendants of those from whose brains and prowess they sprung. Indeed, even in our own times, among the ablest treatises upon American institutions, exhibiting a knowledge and an appreciation so profound of their character, forces, and scope as to command the applause of the egotistical but able Thomas Hart Benton, is De Tocqueville’s, the Frenchman’s, as De Lolme’s, the Switzer’s, on the English Constitution, is of the institutions of England. Hence, were we to strike from the history of the nation the works or deeds of the so-called foreigner, his services to the cause of independence, to the work of founding, starting, establishing, and illustrating our much-boasted American institutions, we would rob Americans of many of its most brilliant pages! So, were we to blot out, in the records of the Republican party—of Republicanism—the services or works of Carl Schurz, we should rob it of some of its most important triumphs. Dare we do that?

Ingratitude is the curse of party, but Republicans cannot afford to ignore or belittle such services as Schurz'. A compact statement of these we give on another page. We cannot repeat them here, but they answer, and completely, the inquiry: "Who is Carl Schurz?" In the field, in the Senate, and on the stump, ever actively in harness, since 1856, and with a courage and an ability rarely equaled, he maintained the principles of Republicanism. In 1858, and again in 1860, he antagonized Stephen A. Douglas, who ranked as one of the ablest of American debaters, and all will remember the "Little Giant's" scoriation in 1860, at Cooper Institute, by Carl. All, too, will remember the campaign in 1875 in Ohio. It was a battle of giants! Nominally, the struggle was for the possession of the State; really, it was one for the mastery of the nation. The local early disappeared in the national issues. Thurman and Allen, with their eyes fastened upon the Presidency, openly rejoiced in certain victory. The Republicans, disheartened by defeat, and with a majority of the nation manifestly against them, clamoring for a change, doubted and wavered. Had they been beaten, had the Republicans failed to recover Ohio in 1875, a Democratic triumph in the national contest of 1876 was certain. Hence, it was a perilous hour for Republicanism. General Hayes, as the leader in the battle, summoned Schurz to his support—summoned him from Europe; and confessedly, even by those who affect to frown most upon his present appointment, it was Schurz' gallant fight, his masterly exposition of finance, his brilliant, trenchant, and caustic exposure of the demagogical craft of the Democracy, and his eloquent appeals to the patriotism of the masses, that secured victory to the Republicans—that enabled them to enter the contest of 1876 as a compact and aggressive party, and in advance decided the issue in favor of the Republican nominees—in favor of Hayes and Wheeler! Verily, who is Carl Schurz? What does he know of Republicanism? Of American institutions?

What claim has he on the Republican party?

STEAM POWER AND NATIONAL PROGRESS.—From a census recently made of the working and material development of France, it appears that the total machine force of the country is at present 1,500,000 horse power, representing a force of 4,200,000 draft horses, or 31,500,000 men—that is to say, ten times the valid industrial population of France. This substitution of machine-work for hand-work has produced an economical revolution in French industry, which it is interesting to compare with the industrial state of France in 1788, before the introduction of machines. The first steam-engine that appeared in France was set going in 1789. It came from the manufactory of Boulton & Watt, at Birmingham, and was used for the water supply of Paris. Unfortunately, from the great Revolution to 1815 machinery industry in France almost disappeared, and it was not until 1824 that the French began to manufacture steam-engines, and many of their manufactories now rival those of England. In 1852 France possessed only 6,000 steam-engines, representing a force of 75,000 horses. In 1862 the number of engines had risen to 22,500, and the horsepower to 618,000. From this year the increase was extraordinarily rapid, until, as stated above, the horse-power of the steam-engines in France attained 1,500,000 last year. In 1788, of one milliard of manufactured products, sixty per cent. was workmanship and forty per cent. raw materials. To-day the proportion is directly the reverse; the workmanship is forty per cent. and the raw materials sixty per cent., and yet it must be remembered that workmanship has increased forty per cent. during the past twenty years. To-day the annual production of France is about twelve milliards, of which the raw material is seven milliards and the workmanship five milliards, whereas, in 1788, the workmanship would have cost eleven milliards. It results from this that the introduction of machine work has led to a saving of six milliards in workmanship. Such figures speak for themselves.

HENRY CLAY'S CENTENARY.

"RALLY, WHIGS! RALLY, WHIGS! HO!"

"I would rather be right than be President!" Such was the memorable declaration of the "GREAT PACIFICATOR!"—"the great embodiment" of the old Whig party—of HENRY CLAY!—than whom since Washington this country has seen none wiser or greater as a party leader—none his peer in chivalrous manhood, intrepid patriotism, lofty eloquence, or practical statesmanship!

Henry Clay was born April 12th, 1777, and consequently, the 12th instant—April 12th, 1877—will be the centenary anniversary of his birth. Shall it be celebrated? It is a notable fact that all the members of the present Administration, with the exception probably of Mr. Schurz, were faithful captains in the old Whig camp; and, in view of the serious Southern complications, the scandal of their increasing brawls, and the perils with which they menace the liberties of the Southern Unionist, are laboring to revive the old Whig element in the South, to separate it from the Secessionist Democracy, and attach it to Republicanism, as a means of restoring peace to that section, and establishing the liberties of all its citizens!

What, to that end, would contribute more than a grand ovation—a national ovation—to Henry Clay—on his centenary birthday? His memory, in the minds of tens of thousands, is still green! The inspiration of his great name, the influence of his exalted patriotism, are still fresh and active! It was in crises like the present, and amid similar complications and perils, that his dauntless patriotism and unrivaled statesmanship always triumphed, and that he won the imperishable sobriquets of "the Great Commoner!"—"the GREAT PACIFICATOR!" His example and name, properly invoked, on such a day, would more than all other causes aid in stimulating the old Whig loyalty, in reviving the old Whig sentiments and feelings, in rekindling the old Whig fires throughout the South, and give to the new movement in that section —the proposed new policy—an impetus which must ultimately result in success!

Who, indeed, has forgotten the influence of his example, of his electrical sentences, in 1850, when denouncing a "solid South!" "I know no South, no North, no East, no West!" "I owe no allegiance to any ideal or contemplated Southern Confederacy!" "My allegiance is due to the whole Union!" "If Kentucky, to-morrow, should throw up the banner of resistance, I, for one, will not fight under that banner! No, sir, never—never!" A "solid South" was his abhorrence! Its principles and aims he denounced as treasonable—its advocates as traitors! His was a patriotism which never hesitated or halted—his were "the high, the exalted, the sublime emotions of a patriotism, which, soaring toward Heaven, rises far above all mean, low, or selfish things, and is absorbed by one soul-transferring thought of the good and the glory of one's country"—his a "public virtue," "which, catching its inspiration from the immortal God, and leaving at an immeasurable distance below, all lesser, groveling, personal interests and feelings, animates to deeds of self sacrifice, of valor, of devotion, and of death itself!"

Thus, in 1820, at the crisis involved in the perilous conflict over the admission of Missouri into the Union, and in which the existence of the Union was seriously menaced, it was the genius of Clay which triumphed in quieting the strife, and adjusting the difficulties of the sections. So, again, in 1832-'33. It was the patriotism of Henry Clay, the magnanimity of his spirit, which interposed to save the life of Calhoun, to rescue the nation from civil war, and restored the peace while defeating nullification. And again in 1850. The sections, lashed into fury by malignant demagogues, fought spitefully over the spoils of Mexico, and the Republic rocked to its very foundations. The crisis was full of peril. It was one in which the patriotism and genius of Clay ever triumphed.

He had retired from active public life, and had reached an advanced age ! He did not hesitate. He left his retirement at the call of his countrymen, entered the Senate Chamber, and devoted the remaining hours of his life to his country. Through his commanding abilities, his imperial will, his eloquence, experience, and skill in the lead, in the long and dangerous struggle which ensued, he quieted the angry strife, healed the "gaping wounds" of the nation, and once more gave peace to the sections.

Where will we find another life of equal nobility? Where a record so brilliant of a patriotism, services, or real heroism so grand? Outside of every other consideration, do they not, of themselves, deserve all the honors of his country? Shall they be gratefully awarded? Will his countrymen, in this new crisis of our affairs, in the cause of pacification, the peaceful reunion of our whole people upon the basis of the Constitution, of Liberty, Equality, and Law, unite on his centenary birthday in a grand ovation to the "Great Commoner," the "Great Pacificator," Henry Clay?

ORGANIZATION OF NEXT HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

An extra session of the Forty-fifth Congress, it is stated, will be called to convene early in June next. For many pregnant reasons, the President's wish was to avoid such a session, if possible, but the Jacobins of the late House, in their rancorous revolutionary heat, by defeating the army appropriation bill, has rendered a special session absolutely necessary. There is no expedient consistent with the law and the duties of the Executive by which it can be avoided. So the Attorney General declares. As the law now stands, there will be, after the 30th of June next, no appropriation or fund out of which the army may be supported, and an extra session is demanded as a means of obtaining supplies, or the most serious difficulties will ensue.

Hence the organization of the next House of Representatives is very naturally a matter of exciting interest. What will be its political complexion? Under the laws the Democracy claim that the late Clerk is master of the situation, and will have it in his power to determine its political character, through the preparation of his list of new members. Will the Republicans submit?

The law declares that—

"The names of those persons and of such persons only whose credentials show that they were regularly elected in accordance with the laws of their States respectively, or the laws of the United States, shall be placed upon the roll."

It further provides, that, in the event of the Clerk being unable to perform that duty, it shall devolve upon the Sergeant-at-Arms, and, when the latter is unable to act, that it shall be performed by the Door-keeper. The Jacobins of the late House, during its closing hours, supplemented this law by a rule which directs the Sergeant-at-Arms to obey the Clerk while acting as presiding officer. But where will the Clerk find his authority to act as presiding officer? The law does not give it to him. Congress by no law can invest an officer of one House with power in another House. The Constitution, the organic law, forbids it. It declares: "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority shall constitute a quorum to do business," &c. "The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers," &c. "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings," &c. But nowhere is one House empowered to choose officers, or to make regulations or rules for a succeeding House—to judge of or determine the elections, returns, or qualifications of the members of a future House. Where, then, will Clerk Adams obtain his authority to act as presiding officer—as Speaker pro tempore—of the next House during its organization? No law of Congress, no rule of the preceding House, can legally invest him with such authority, nor clothe him with power to "judge of the elections, returns, or qualifications" of the new members. That by the Constitution is confined to the new House. Even his functions, all his authority or power, as Clerk, ceased with the life of the House which appointed him. So did those of the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Doorkeeper—all the officers and functionaries of the late House—all as a matter of law and fact passed out of existence with the House which appointed them. Heretofore, in similar cases, the old officers have acted, not as a matter of law or right, but by sufferance, as a means to the organization of the new House. How, then, if resisted, or if his authority be challenged, will Clerk Adams and his confreres support, or enforce the revolutionary usurpations by which it is proposed to invest them with extraordinary powers in the new House?

Nothing daunted by these constitutional difficulties, the Jacobin Democracy boldly claim that he is invested with all the power needed to count in a Democratic majority, to preside in the preliminary stages of the organization, and to secure the speakership to the Democracy by excluding from the floor of the House, under the rules which empower the presiding officer to preserve the decorum of the body, all whose names he may reject from his list. But those rules, if objected to, will have no force in the new House unless it formally adopts them. They are the rules of a defunct House. Hence, a spirited opposition will tumble this infamous fabric of usurpation about Clerk Adams' ears, and reduce him to the condition of Clerk Hugh A. Garland in December, 1839, at the organization of the House of the Twenty-sixth Congress. Under the previous custom, not as a matter of right or law, he was permitted to act as presiding officer. For days he practically defied the House: he refused to call the names of the members from New Jersey, or to put any motion in relation to them, when, on the fourth day, Mr. John Q. Adams, rising in his seat, disposed of Mr. Clerk's usurpation of authority over the representatives of the nation, and the House at once elected Mr. Adams Speaker pro tempore during the proceedings attending the organization. If he is not very cautious, and wiser than we think, Mr. Clerk Adams may find himself in the mortifying position of Clerk Garland at the Twenty-sixth Congress.

But how will he make up his list? By what rule will he be governed? Are his powers simply ministerial, or are they judicial? Even the law under which he will act confines him to the "credentials" of claimants to seats for his evidence of membership; it gives him no power in cases of contest; it circumscribes his selections to those "regularly elected" under the laws. Who were regularly elected? What are their credentials? The certificates of the Governors? Among other States there are conflicting credentials from South Carolina, Louisiana, and Florida. How will he decide? Already it is stated that, in the case of Colorado, a case really not open to dispute, he ignores the certificate of the Governor and gives the election to the Democratic claimant. Will he do so in other States? How in Florida? Will he recognize Gov. Stearns or Gov. Drew? How in South Carolina? Will he recognize Chamberlain or Hampton? How in Louisiana? Will he recognize Packard or Nicholls? The simplest statement of the facts illustrates the monstrous character of the usurpations contemplated by the desperate and unprincipled Jacobins of the late House in attempting to give to a quasi Clerk, a mere subordinate of the House even when legally in the exercise of his functions, and in the next House without any official character except by the sufferance of the new members, a power to decide in matters so weighty and grave—a power to judge of the "elections, returns, and qualifications" of members. The nation will watch his proceedings with no light interest.

EITHER man must be content with poverty all his life, or else be willing to deny himself some luxuries, and save, to make the base of independence in the future. But if a man denies the future, and spends as he earns, (whether his earnings be one or ten dollars a day,) let him look for lean and hungry want at some future time, for it will surely come, no matter what he may think.

INSIDE VIEW OF THE U. S. PATENT OFFICE.

In a letter to the Commissioner of each of the Bureaus of the Interior Department, under date of March 21st, (a copy of which is inserted on page 270 of the present issue of the REPUBLIC,) the Secretary called for a statement showing the present condition of their respective charges. The Honorable Commissioner of the Patent Office, in his reply, gives a clear and comprehensive view of his office in its various divisions; and as the subject is full of interest to the public generally, the report is herewith presented in full to our readers:

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
March 27, 1877.

Hon. Carl Schurz, Secretary of the Interior:

SIR: In accordance with your order of the 20th instant, I have the honor to submit the following statements: Upon reflection I find that in this office a consideration of the organization will necessarily include more or less discussion of the force employed, and, to some extent, the character of their employment. That force consists of two distinct classes—the examining and the clerical, with the usual auxiliaries of laborers and messengers.

THE EXAMINING CORPS.

The examining corps consists of twenty-two principal examiners, each having a first, second, and third assistant; of an examiner of interferences and an examiner of trade-marks. Each principal examiner has charge of a class relating to some one or more kindred subjects-matter. Each one of these principal examiners, with the aid of his assistants, examines all applications in his class as to patentability, decides all questions relating thereto, both of law and fact. His favorable decision is practically final, and the patent issues upon his order. In case of his adverse decision appeal may be taken to the Board of Examiners-in-Chief. This board consists of three equal members, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Their legal duty is to hear appeals from adverse decisions of the principal examiners and from the examiner of interferences; to review the decisions of those examiners, and they may affirm or reverse them. From their adverse decision appeal may be taken to the Commissioner in person or to the Assistant Commissioner acting as Commissioner.

The examiner of interferences, who has also assistants, has original jurisdiction in cases where conflict arises between applicants or the applicant and patentee as to priority of invention.

The examiner of trade-marks receives all applications for trade-marks and labels, and considers the propriety of registering such matters. He acts under the supervision of the Commissioner and appeals from him are taken to the Commissioner in person.

In addition to the assistant examiners, who aid the principal examiners in the adjudication of the claims of applicants for patents, each examiner has a clerk who assists in the correspondence and in the care of the files and records of his room.

Each examiner receives at his room all the applications pertaining to his class, but before they are sent to him all questions as to fees, to the more formal matters, such as oath, petition, signatures, kind of drawing, &c., are determined by the chief clerk or his subordinates or by the Commissioner in person.

All applications when received are examined in the order of their receipt. The examiner and his assistants make such examination into the records of the office, prior patents, printed publications, foreign patents, and the like, as may be necessary to refresh his memory and enable him to decide as to the novelty of the invention presented in the application.

The law requires him, if he reject, to state explicitly the reasons of his rejection. The applicant or his attorney may then amend, present arguments if he thinks best, and the case must be reheard. The second decision of the examiner may be final, and from that appeal may be taken, as hereinbefore stated. This system brings inventors and their attorneys directly and constantly into contact with the office.

Although, strictly speaking, no money interest is here concerned, the eagerness of pursuit is none the less on that account. The rights sought are those of property; that is to say, the exclusive use of a supposed valuable invention, and added thereto is often the pride of invention. Added to this is the fact that many attorneys prosecute cases for fees contingent upon success in procuring the patent. The result is an unremitted pressure for patents. The advantage of this is that the office is under constant and interested scrutiny, sharp to detect and earnest to complain of defects. On the other hand, constant pressure requires as constant resistance on the part of the examining corps, in order to guard the rights of the public, and refuse patents not justified by the law. Changes in the head of the office and gradual changes in the personnel of the examining corps have caused changes in the resultant of these two forces, so that on the one hand there has been at times complaint as to the strictness of the office in rejecting applications that may have seemed frivolous, and on the other hand complaints that the country has been flooded and people harassed with patents which ought never to have been granted.

THE CLERICAL FORCE.

To this examining corps the clerical force is mainly auxiliary. The chief clerk and his assistants receive all papers and moneys, orders for copies and applications for patents, and deal most directly with the public in such matters. The correspondence of the office is carried on through the chief clerk and his assistants in all matters except such as relate to the adjudication of applications for patents. Subordinate to the chief clerk is a division which receives all applications for patents and distributes them to the different examiners, keeping record of such receipts and distribution. To this division are returned all the files in cases in which patents have been ordered to issue by the examiners. This business includes a preliminary examination as to form of applications, fees, &c., and their acknowledgment and receipt, notice of defects, making files, receiving and assigning amendments, calling for balance fees in issue cases, &c. More than twenty thousand applications are here received each year, and a much larger number of amendments and other communications. Eleven clerks are here employed.

Another division, also subordinate, receives orders for copies, of which large numbers are daily made, attaches certificates, distributes these orders, sees that they are properly filled, keeps accounts thereof, sends the Official Gazette, and answers correspondence as to these matters. Nine clerks are in this division.

Another division receives and records assignments, furnishes abstracts of such assignments, keeps accounts of fees received, and has the custody of records pertaining thereto, employing for these purposes seven clerks.

The copies furnished by the office are partly in manuscript and partly printed matter. The printed matter consists of specifications, of which, since 1866, the office upon the issuances of a patent has printed a large number of copies and keeps them on hand for the use of the public when required. The manuscript copies are those of older patents or files, correspondence and decisions in patent cases. All these matters certified to are often used by those interested in patents in courts or elsewhere. The manuscript copies are made in the copying division, which consists of some forty ladies under the supervision of a chief, the force being varied with the varying amount of work.

Another subdivision has in charge the filling up of the patent heads, the formal document to which the signatures of the Secretary and the Commissioner of Patents and the seal of the office are affixed; and connected with this is the custody of the seal and proper attachment of specifications and drawings to the certificates, and like matters. Files are here numbered, and the number, name, and residence, assignment and title are entered on the record. Patent heads made up from the record book and red ruled; record books filled up, indexed, signed, and sent to binders; patent heads compared with the headings of the specifications and drawings and then compared with the record books; files sent to printer and charged; printed specifications and photo-lithographs received from printer and draughtsmen, checked off, examined and sent to pasting-room; all reprints of cases, or replenishing of exhausted copies sent to printer and charged; letters in regard to errors in printing, &c., answered; a complete list of patents issued each week, giving the number, class number, name, residence, assignment, and title, is made, and also a similar list for the printer. Three lists of patents for office use are compared with the record each week. Volumes of specifications and drawings for the record-room are put up and sent to the binder. Volumes of specifications of designs and trade-marks for the record-room and examiner of trade-marks are indexed and sent to the binder. The number of employees engaged on this business is nine clerks and a messenger.

STORE AND SPECIFICATION ROOMS.

In connection with this division is a store-room, in which is kept the bulk of the recent issues of specifications and drawings, arranged in order, banded and kept in cases. Three persons are employed here. Also in connection with this is a specification room, where are kept the recent issues of specifications and drawings, and where the classification of the Official Gazette is corrected to fill orders for different classes of patents. The Official Gazettes are here folded, wrapped and sent to the mail room, and specifications and drawings pasted and put in cases. Orders for the weekly issues are entered on books in this room and filled. The number of employees is eighteen. Two other employees have charge of another room, where back issues of specifications and drawings are stored. Another subdivision receives, records, distributes and checks off when filled, all orders for manuscript copies; estimates all manuscript copies, copies from books all patent heads for manuscript orders and for printed orders also; has control of the files in patented cases (some two hundred thousand), and charge of the room where interested parties may examine them. Orders are here filled for the printed specifications, drawings and patent heads compared, connected, seal attached, and proper entry made in books: the patents sent to issue room. Eleven clerks and a messenger are here employed.

Another division of four clerks and messenger, also subordinate to the chief clerk, receives, arranges and distributes models; and still another, consisting of an officer in charge and twelve assistants, who have charge of all patented models, and exhibit them to the public when required. Those models are examined by inventors and attorneys to ascertain the novelty of inventions sought to be patented.

One of the larger subdivisions has charge of all matters relating to drawings. The duties in detail are as follows:

1st. Examination of drawings of all applications for patents as filed; their acceptance or rejection, designating informalities, and pricing of same.

2d. Reproduction (by photo-lithographic process) of all drawings, consisting of current issues, quarto page library edition, back work (by classes) and special orders; and included under this head are delivery of drawings and tracings to contractor, comparison and action upon proofs and copies, receiving and delivering copies, and supervision and verification of all bills for photo-lithographic reproductions from drawings.

3d. The preparation of drawings from models to complete applications; tracings of drawings to fill orders for attorneys and others; tracings of drawings of classes of inventions preparatory to reproduction of same.

4th. Accounts of temporary employees, i. e., tracers, headers, model draftsmen, &c.

5th. Pricing of all model and tracing work.

6th. Photo-lithograph copies of cases patented prior to July, 1871, i. e., where classes have been reproduced, copies of designs and trade-marks.

7th. Original drawings of all classes of inventions patented, including designs and trade-marks.

8th. Files of rejected, abandoned, withdrawn and forfeited cases, when two or more years have passed since last action.

9th. Recording and classifying drawings of all cases as allowed by examiners, and retaining the same waiting payment of final fees.

10th. Printing and comparing name, number, date, and invention upon drawings of weekly issues of patents; attaching copies of drawings to printed specifications to accompany patents; recording, classifying, attaching claims, &c.

11th. Distribution of thick photo-lithographic copies to different examiners.

12th. Supervision of records of patents, including bound volumes of drawings and specifications, letter-books, alphabetical lists of inventors, classified indexes of inventions, recording weekly issues, &c.

13th. Filling of orders for drawings, and files from this and attorney's room 1.

14th. Estimating cost of classes of inventions, furnishing copies of same, and filling orders for photo-lithographs as reproduced.

The force in this division classified is as follows :

Regular Appointments—23 clerical duties, 1 model draftsman, 1 retouching drawings, 1 laborer, 1 messenger.

Temporary Employees—1 skilled draftsman, 6 model draftsmen, 1 clerical, 1 photo-lithograph expert, 2 charge of rooms, 1 retouching drawings, 3 headings, 9 order tracers, 17 photo-lithograph tracers.

Number of regular appointments, 27; temporary employees, 41; total, 68. •

The work relating principally to the publications of the office include the compilation and supervision of the publication of the weekly edition of the Gazette, the monthly edition of specifications and drawings, the yearly edition of the Gazette in two volumes, and the making of an index for each edition. In addition, there is in progress "A General Index of Patents granted from 1790 to date," and a yearly index of patents and patentees. This room is also charged with the work of assorting the thick drawings, and attaching the claims belonging thereto. Requisitions on the Public Printer for printing and binding are also made in this room, and a general supervision had of the work done at the Government Printing Office for the Patent Office. The accounts with the Public Printer for printing and binding for the Patent Office are also kept here, and the supervision of the reproduction of the plates for the Official Gazette devolves upon this room, as does much of the correspondence which naturally arises with the contractors for the photo-lithographic work used in the publication of the Gazette. The classification of patents is also a part of the duties assigned to this room. Seven persons are employed.

The text of this publication and of patents is printed at the Government Printing Office, and is paid from the printing appropriation of the Interior Department. The illustrations, as well as all photographed copies of drawings, are supplied by contractors, and paid from special appropriations.

The attorney's room is kept for the convenience of attorneys and applicants doing business with the office, and is in charge of a clerk with three or four boys, who bring papers and other records to this room for the use of the public.

The office has a library of some 30,000 volumes, relating more or less directly to the business of the office, in charge of a librarian and assistants.

DUTIES OF THE EXAMINING CORPS.

In discussing the efficiency of the force as to the examining Corps, I shall be compelled to refer to the character of their work. The duties of the examining corps are partly scientific and partly judicial. They require general intelligence, mechanical aptitude, scientific training, familiarity with the state of the art for each particular class, a knowledge of the law and the decisions of the courts relating to patent matters, a judicial turn of mind, willingness to hear arguments and receive information, and firmness to decide adversely to eager applicants. The examiner in the performance of his duties is required to make laborious searches in order to ascertain the novelty or lack of novelty of applications submitted to him. In making the search he acts the part of prosecuting attorney at the same time. When the search is completed it is his duty to decide questions, nice and perplexing, as to differences between the processes or machines sought to be patented and those already shown in references in his class. I need hardly add that this duty requires of the examiner an amount of patience, fairness, intelligence and fidelity not often to be found. And further, that on the one hand he shall be so sustained that he can act honestly and intelligently, without fear and without favor; and on the other that he shall not be so sustained that he can in security act carelessly, unjustly, or unwisely.

MANNER OF APPOINTMENT.

This examining corps is made up of persons appointed under different systems. Prior to 1869 appointments therein were made, so far as I am aware, practically without examination. When an examination was ordered it was not competitive, was sometimes after the appointment and tended to mere form. To my knowledge many were made without even the form of an examination. Commissioner Fisher, in the early part of 1869, instituted a plan of competitive examination. This was continued, with perhaps some intermission, until it was merged into the general civil-service system, which was put into operation under the Presidential order of April 16th, 1872. That order continued in force until April, 1875, since which time I think there have been practically no examinations except in isolated cases; and but one competitive examination either for appointment or promotion. The result of this mixture of systems is a variety in the examining corps in respect to fitness greatly in excess of that which the ordinary differences among classes of men would lead us to expect.

A few of the older examiners and assistant examiners were, in my judgment, incompetent for the positions they held, and some have been reduced in grade or discharged since I came into office. In respect to others I propose to submit recommendations. Many of the older, and most of the examining corps appointed since 1869, are able and faithful officers. With respect to them I have but few recommendations to make. In the performance of their difficult executive and judicial duties they need only the incentive that faithful official services will be appreciated. The standard of the examining corps may, and undoubtedly should, be raised. It is possible on the pay allowed by law, although that pay has not been enough, to retain some of the best and most experienced men. Still, it is possible, as it now stands, to elevate the standard of the corps point of ability, but it is a work which needs to be done gradually. Some of the less able officers have acquired by long experience considerable knowledge of the details of the business, and in some respects render better service than inexperienced though abler men. But they have long since reached their maximum, and the maximum is small. On the other hand great care is required in the selection of new men.

CHARACTER OF THE CLERICAL FORCE.

The duties of the clerical force I have perhaps already sufficiently indicated in my statement of the organization of the office. This force consists very largely of ladies. In fact they have been employed during the past eight years to do almost all the copying work and part of the other work required by the office. For their admission to the office there has been practically, I think, no examination. They have generally been appointed on personal solicitation. The clerical force has been greatly changed within the past two years, and not always, in my judgment, for the better. Its efficiency is not up to the standard required by the public interests nor that which the salaries paid ought to command. The renovation of this force and the elevation of the character of it require time and patience. By carefully sifting out the incompetent and inattentive I am confident that the office may be benefited, both by the addition of a better element and by better services from those who are retained.

THE QUESTION OF REDUCTION.

In respect to reductions, I am of the opinion that the examining corps should be kept up to the maximum allowed by law. The clerical force, I think, may be reduced when improved in the manner heretofore indicated and when the method of carrying on the clerical business is changed, as I shall hereinafter suggest.

In this connection I desire to consider the sixth topic of the circular. The method of conducting the receipt of applications, examination of cases, and issue of patents appears to have been carefully thought out at a very early period in the history of the office. It works well, is as simple as is consistent with the proper safeguards and checks, and needs no change.

The copying business, to which I have referred in the statement of the organization of the office, and also touched upon in relation to the clerical force, was not originally provided for. The system has grown up, meeting new demands as they arose, so that it cannot so well be called a system as a collection of little systems. For instance, an order for printed specifications, with the money accompanying it, may go to one clerk to be furnished by him and the money paid to him. An order for an abstract of assignment or an assignment to be recorded, for both of which fees are required, may go to the assignment clerk as an independent transaction. As he is an honest man I believe he does not put the money in his pocket, but the honest administration of the business depends on the man and is in spite of the system. Further than this, the divided responsibility is perplexing and is not favorable to the prompt performance of the business. This whole business of furnishing copies involves the receipt of a large amount of money and brings the office daily into contact with the public, and promptness in attending to business in this branch, as well as in the examination of patents, is absolutely needed to satisfy the public. I propose to reorganize this part of the office in some respects, so as to make the chief clerk directly responsible; to have him receive all orders and superintend their examination; to have the fees paid directly to him, or rather to the financial clerk, who is one of his assistants on his personal staff; to send to the rooms where copies are stored or where they are made no orders except those made by clerks under the immediate supervision of the chief clerk on orders taken from a stub book, where the receipt of the money will also be entered, so that these stub books will show at night exactly the business of the day, the money received from all these smaller items, and whether or not the orders have been filled. By this I hope somewhat to reduce the force.

In the management of this part of the office I have had very efficient help from Major Lockwood, chief clerk, who, though new to the office, has had large and valuable experience in another department of the Government.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROPERTY.

I have also given attention to another matter. I find there is no system of responsibility for the property of the office. The law (section 481, Revised Statutes) makes the Commissioner of Patents the custodian "of all books, records, papers, models, machines and other things belonging to the Patent Office." Manifestly the direct and personal custody of even a small part of these books and other things is not possible to the Commissioner, considering the magnitude to which the office has grown. For instance, the librarian has charge of the scientific library, each examiner of a small library in his own room and of other property belonging to the office, and so on throughout the office. There was no accountability and no record, so far as I am aware, for all these various articles. I have caused an inventory to be made for each room, and I am preparing property books in which I propose to keep a record of all the property in the custody of every officer of the bureau, to invoice to each such things as are in his custody and take receipts from him, and to do this not only for the property now on hand, but every article which may be procured, and to deal in these matters precisely as is done in the military service.

In respect to existing abuses I have already, perhaps, indicated my views. The evils to be remedied are not acute, but chronic, diseases, which are to be remedied by an improvement of the system, increased accountability and a healthier way of official living. But a good system is not more necessary for the force employed than a good and efficient force for the purpose of carrying out the system, and the nature of the force depends upon the ap-

Oregon, of the Cronin college notoriety, and Mr. Morgan, of Alabama, both Democrats, and their admission objected to, were admitted to seats in the Senate and sworn in as members. The credentials of Mr. Corbin, of South Carolina, the Republican representative of the State, were referred to the committee.

The bank of Nevada effected the sale of one million ounces of fine silver to the United States Government.

At a meeting of the Union League Club, of New York, at which Gov. Jewell, Peter Cooper, and Judges Peabody and Noah Nash were present, resolutions were passed indorsing the sentiments of Mr. Hayes' inaugural address and his Cabinet appointments.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of business men and leading bankers was also held in New York city, in Wall street, at which the sentiments of the inaugural address and the Cabinet nominations were approved and applauded. Wm. A. Booth presided, and the meeting was addressed by John A. Stewart, John A. Stevens, John Jay, and George T. Hope. Cheers were given for Hayes and the Union.

The charge by the Finance Committee of the San Francisco Board of Supervisors against the Republicans of fraudulent voting at the last election, was refuted by the publication of the list of pretended fraudulent voters in the evening papers of that city. It embraces the names of some of the oldest and most prominent citizens, naturalized and native—even the name of the Democratic county clerk, who is also a prominent member of the Democratic State Central Committee.

John Sherman's nomination was confirmed as Secretary of the Treasury. Twenty-six Democratic Senators, all present, voted against the confirmation—which was a practical and complimentary indorsement of Secretary Sherman's sturdy and unflinching Republicanism.

.....March 9. At a joint meeting of the Merchants' and Cotton Exchanges of St. Louis, and at a meeting of the Cotton Exchange of Memphis, resolutions were adopted approving the policy and Cabinet selections of President Hayes.

Marshall Jewell, at Hartford, Conn., and W. G. Brownlow, at Knoxville, Tenn., telegraphed their congratulations to President Hayes.

Ben Butler, in a visit to the President, assured him of his support.

In the Senate of the Ohio Legislature, the resolution offered by Mr. Monahan, a Democrat, indorsing the sentiments of the President's inaugural address, was adopted.

At a meeting here, at which Senator Johnston, of Va., presided, and W. W. Corcoran, of this city, was a vice president, resolutions were adopted indorsing Fitzhugh Lee's scheme of immigration to Virginia.

The Rhode Island prohibitionists, at their State Convention nominated for Governor, Gen. Van Zandt; for Lieutenant Governor, Albert C. Howard; for Secretary of State, Joshua M. Anderman; for Attorney General, Warren R. Perce; for General Treasurer, Samuel Clark. Clark is a Democrat; the others are Republicans.

.....March 10. The Cabinet nominations were confirmed.

Hon. E. B. Washburne, Minister to France, is in Washington.

Senator Blaine dined with the President.

Mr. Garfield has retired from the Ohio Senatorial contest.

The Republicans of Schenectady, New York, indorsed the policy and Cabinet selections of the President. So did the Minneapolis, Minn., Board of Trade.

The North Carolina Legislature appointed a commission, composed of the Governor, Treasurer, and Attorney General of the State, to devise some plan for the settlement of the State debt acceptable to the bond-holders and not too burdensome upon the people.

.....March 11. President Hayes was offered the "National Pew" at the Metropolitan church, but with Mrs. Hayes and family attended the Foundry—a church of less aristocratic pretensions.

.....March 12. Hon. Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania, resigned his seat in the United States Senate, and retires to private life after thirty-two years of active public life.

The resignation of Senator Sherman was received by Governor Young. After formally tendering his resignation, Mr. Sherman says: "Permit me in doing so to express my profound gratitude for their generous support and confidence during a period of twenty-two years of continuous service in Congress. I have held no position of trust and honor but what they have conferred, and no words can convey the sense of my obligations to them. I now accept from President Hayes, with much hesitation, an office of great labor and care, solely from a sense of duty, with an earnest desire to promote a public policy as announced by him, and with the hope that in so doing I may still preserve the good will of the people of Ohio."

Secretaries Evarts and McCrary, Attorney General Devens, and Postmaster General Key, were sworn in by Justice Cartter, and the first meeting of the new Cabinet was held. Secretary Sherman had previously qualified, but Secretary Thompson had not arrived from Indiana.

The Packard and Nicholls governments in Louisiana indorsed the President's policy.

The Union League of Philadelphia, the Produce Exchange of Toledo, Ohio, and the citizens of Terre Haute, Michigan, indorsed the President's policy.

.....March 13. New Hampshire, at its election for State officers and Congress, sustained the policy of the President, by the election of the Republican candidate for Governor by about four thousand majority. Republican Congressmen were elected in the second and third districts—a Democrat in the first district. The Legislature and Executive council are largely Republican.

Don Cameron, in the Republican Senatorial caucus at Harrisburg, was nominated, by a vote of 128 to 1 for Morton McMichael, to succeed his father in the U. S. Senate.

The Republicans won a victory at the Camden, (New Jersey,) municipal election.

Ex-Secretary Morrill was appointed Collector of Customs at Portland, Maine.

.....March 15. Fred. Douglass, a colored man, was nominated by President Hayes Marshal of the District of Columbia.

Stanley Matthews nominated by the Republican members of the Ohio Legislature as United States Senator to fill the seat vacated by Secretary Sherman. The vote stood: Matthews, 43; Howland, 29; Taft, 2; Shellabarger, 8; and Lawrence, 1.

Republicans of Louisiana issue an address to the citizens of the United States.

Ex-Secretary Boutwell was nominated and confirmed as commissioner on the new edition of the Revised Statutes.

The First National Bank at Allentown, Pennsylvania, suspended payment.

.....March 16. A complimentary testimonial to Justice Bradley, by a large number of leading citizens of Newark, New Jersey, was published, indorsing the Justice's course on the Electoral Commission.

Peter B. Sweeney, of the notorious Tweed ring, was reported as having arrived in New York from Europe.

.....March 18. The Republican State Central Committee expelled P. B. S. Pinchback from membership, and A. Dumont was elected president of the committee.

The United States Senate closed its special session—adjourned sine die.

.....March 19. Over three hundred illicit whisky distillers have surrendered themselves under General Grant's proclamation of pardon, pleaded guilty, and propose to abandon the business.

The National Bank at Lansingburgh, New York, failed.

Governor Vance, of North Carolina, in reply to a letter of some colored men, refuses to lend them any aid in a scheme for colonizing themselves outside of North Carolina. The State needs their labor. They have now all the political and social rights they need or can enjoy—the rights to work for the white man and vote the Democratic ticket. Where will they find such another elysium?

General Grant proposes a two years' trip through Europe.

Governor Hubbard, of Connecticut, vetoed the bill giving members of the Legislature a mileage of twenty-five cents each way, on the ground that it is a violation of the Constitution providing against the Legislature increasing its own pay; and vetoed the new registry law, on the ground that the requirement that an elector shall be made an elector anew when he removes to another town is an unconstitutional interference with the franchise.

.....March 20. Stanley Matthews was elected Senator of the United States by the Ohio Legislature, and Don Cameron a Senator by the Pennsylvania Legislature.

A committee, appointed by a meeting of the German citizens of Washington, called upon President Hayes, and tendered him their congratulations and respects. They subsequently called upon Secretary Schurz, and wished him "God speed" in his work, as the head of the Interior.

Judge Reed, of the Supreme Court of South Carolina, decided that Hampton is the legal Governor of the State.

The nomination of Gen. George B. McClellan as Superintendent of Public Works of New York was rejected by the Republicans in caucus, and the nomination was accordingly rejected by the Legislature, on the ground of incompetency.

The New York Republican State Central Committee indorsed President Hayes and his policy.

.....March 21. The Cabinet decided unanimously to send to Louisiana an advisory commission to inquire into the condition of affairs in that State, and to report any recommendations upon which the Government may be enabled to proceed to decisive and final action regarding it.

An extra session of the Forty-fifth Congress was decided on: it is stated that it will be called to meet on the 4th of June.

The Connecticut House passed the new election law over the veto of the Governor, but sustained his objections to the bill giving increased mileage to members.

The distribution of seed for the season by the Agricultural Bureau here has ceased to all, except those districts West which were afflicted with grasshoppers in 1876, and for which a special appropriation was made by the late Congress at its last session.

In the New York Senate, the vote by which the act allowing women to hold office on School Boards was lost, was reconsidered, and the bill passed.

At Indianapolis a man quietly walked into the Indiana National Bank, coolly placed a corded box, which he carried, on the floor near the counter, stepped on it, and reaching over the railing grabbed packages of bank notes amounting to about $25,000; he escaped with the plunder; $5,000 reward.

At Harrisburg, the Pennsylvania Legislature in joint assembly declared Don Cameron duly elected to the United States Senate in the place of his father; and at Columbus, the Ohio Legislature in joint convention declared Stanley Matthews duly elected United States Senator in the place of John Sherman.

Ex-President Grant was served with a copy of the nar., by one of Marshal Douglass' deputies, in the case of the crazy Biggins vs. Grant. Biggins, some years ago, was greatly annoyed at the General's constant appearance at his bedside, and in his dreams; so meeting him on the street he threatened the General, that if he caught him there again, he would "bulldoze" him. He was arrested, pronounced insane, and sent to the lunatic asylum. Hence, his suit for false imprisonment.

.....March 22. U. S. Minister Washburne was presented by a committee of German citizens with a series of resolutions expressing their gratitude and regard for his noble conduct, and his protection in Paris of their countrymen, during the Franco-Prussian war.

The Packard Senate in Louisiana seated J. J. Monette of the Third Senatorial District and General Thomas C. Anderson of the Tenth District in the places of Ducros and Garland, who were declared elected by the Returning Board, but who are in the Nicholls Senate.

Nine men arrested by Nicholls' police in New Orleans for enlisting men in Packard's militia were brought before Judge Whitaker, of the Superior Criminal Court, on application for writ of habeas corpus, and remanded to prison without bail.

The Brooks, of Boston, owners of several millions of property in New Orleans, paid their taxes to the Nicholls Government. Burnside, the largest property-holder in the State, did the same, as also many other large property-holders in the State.

.....March 23. At the session of the Cabinet it was determined to invite Chamberlain and Hampton, rival Governors of South Carolina, to visit Washington for consultation with the Government as to South Carolina affairs.

The Pennsylvania Legislature adjourned sine die. Thomas V. Cooper was elected President pro tem. of the Senate.

The retrenchment bill, regulating the salaries of municipal officials, passed both branches of the Boston city Government. The saving will amount to $95,000 per annum.

The Mormon bishop, John D. Lee, "the father of sixty-four children, ten dead and fifty-four living," was shot for his complicity in the terrible Mountain Meadow massacre. In a confession he implicates Brigham Young, Haight, and other bishops and high priests of the infamous Mormon stew, as more deeply guilty in the frightful massacre than himself, and claims that he is simply a victim to their greater villainy and cowardice.

Dr. Major Mary Walker had one of the watchmen arraigned in the Police Court for ejecting her forcibly from the Treasury building. He claimed that he acted under orders. She was abusive and asserted her rights as an American citizen. The judge held that as a citizen she was entitled to admission, subject to her good behaviour, but dismissed the culprit upon his own recognizances. Secretary Sherman subsequently directed that she be admitted so long as she behaved as an orderly citizen.

Clerk Adams, of the House of Representatives, rose to explain. He shall simply and strictly obey the law—nothing more—in making up the list of members of the Forty-fifth Congress. It requires him to include the names of such persons, and of those only, whose credentials show that they were regularly elected according to the laws. All but ten or twelve of the credentials have been received, and for those he has written. When received he will prepare his list. He has nothing to do with contested seats, and the testimony or papers in such cases are only sent to him to be reserved for the use of the House.

E. B. Washburne, our Minister to France, resigned, and his resignation was accepted by Secretary Evarts in a note in which he compliments Mr. Washburne upon the able performance of the difficult duties of his mission.

.....March 24. The famous Boss Tweed agrees to surrender property to the amount of about $250,000, and in consequence will be shortly released from the Ludlow street jail. The suit against Peter B. Sweeney, one of the Boss' notorious "Ring," has been positively set for trial in June.

In an interview of ex-Secretary Fish with Alexander H. Stephens, the latter urged as the great need of the South non-intervention and local home rule, and in all Southern appointments those of men, without reference to existing party rules, who have the confidence and respect of the Southern people. He urges upon the President the example of Washington, who appointed Hamilton and Jefferson to places in his Cabinet, although knowing them to be of opposite political faiths.

.....March 26. Wade Hampton accepts President Hayes' invitation to visit Washington, for the purpose of stating his claims to the Governorship of South Carolina.

Gov. Packard replies to Nicholls' manifesto of the 24th, denying its claim that the Nicholls "Government is a fixed fact, complete in all its branches," and denounces the said Nicholls as "destitute of one shred of legal title to the office he attempts to usurp."

The "business men" of Charleston send a delegation to Washington "to speak for Hampton and South Carolina."

Secretary McCrary telegraphs Packard that "the President desires that the situation remain unchanged."

Kellogg telegraphs Packard that the President declared to "Ellis and others" "that Nicholls has no legal courts."

.....March 27. Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina, arrived, and had an interview with the President.

.....March 28. The completion of the Southern Commission was announced. It consists of ex-Governor T. C. Brown of Tennessee, Judge C. B. Lawrence of Chicago, Wayne McVeigh of Pennsylvania, General Joseph R. Hawley of Connecticut, and John M. Harlan of Kentucky—four Republicans and one Democrat. It will meet in New Orleans on Wednesday, the 6th of April.

The much-bruited letters of Stanley Matthews and Charles Foster were published. They express, “in the strongest manner possible,” a “desire to have adopted such a policy as will give to the people of South Carolina and Louisiana the right to control their own affairs in their own way,” and pledge their belief that such will be the President’s policy, but do not authoritatively in his name pledge him to anything.

.....March 29. Wade Hampton arrived in Washington. His defiant Wilmington speech preceded him. He wants no recognition. He said “I am going to [Washington] to demand our rights—nothing less—and, so help me God, to take nothing less.” He had an interview with the President. He urged the condition of South Carolina—its injurious effects upon the planting and all the industrial interests of the State—as a reason for the withdrawal of all Federal interference in support of Chamberlain.

.....March 30. Ex-Governor McCormick, of Arizona, has been appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in the place of Mr. Conant, who has been made chief agent of the syndicate in London.

EXPORT OF AMERICAN BEEF TO EUROPE.

Statement of the Quantity and Value of Fresh Beef Exported from the United States to Great Britain during the Eight Months ended February 28, 1877.

[Prepared by the Bureau of Statistics.]

YEAR.	MONTH.	FROM NEW YORK.		FROM PHILAD'A.		TOTAL EXPORTS.
		Pounds.	Dollars.	Pounds.	Dollars.	Pounds.	Dollars.
1876.	July.....	1,170,200	101,250	1,170,200	101,250
"	August.....	1,365,000	134,811	1,365,000	134,811
"	September..	2,451,550	218,005	2,451,550	218,005
"	October.....	2,569,075	224,730	150,610	14,308	2,719,685	239,038
"	November..	2,974,480	275,550	1,219,500	115,852	4,193,980	391,402
"	December..	3,036,980	257,843	737,500	68,062	3,774,480	325,905
1877.	January	1,796,000	185,550	776,450	69,880	2,572,450	255,430
"	February ...	3,605,610	293,838	1,348,000	127,619	4,953,610	421,457
		18,968,895	1,691,577	4,232,060	395,721	23,200,955	2,087,298
				To England.....		19,409,955	1,701,118
				" Scotland.....		3,791,000	386,180

Within the last two years a new business of great importance has sprung up between New York and several English ports—the fresh-meat trade, which promises to work a complete revolution in the butcher shops of Old England.

An enterprising dealer of New York has discovered by practical experiment that in a dry atmosphere, having a constant temperature of from thirty-six degrees to thirty-eight degrees Fahrenheit, meat may be preserved fresh for a long time. At a slightly lower temperature delicate fruits may be preserved quite fresh, and so that they will retain their flavor. Care must be taken that the freezing-point is never reached. There are not, so far as we know, any recorded experiments on the extreme limits of the time that fresh food can be kept in this way, but even strawberries have been preserved in an excellent condition for three weeks.

Taking advantage of the high price of beef in England, a Glasgow firm commenced, some two years ago, importing live cattle from this country; and this having been successfully done, they enlarged their imports, until now several thousands have been sent over. The first American live cattle shown in London were imported by this firm in the Anchor Line steamship Olympia in July, 1875, and, being a novelty, attracted great attention. Since then many lots have been imported by other parties. The dead-meat trade, which was the natural consequence of the other, was commenced in October, 1875. The success of this venture was due to the perfect method of refrigeration employed. While meat was constantly shipped during the warm summer of 1876, not a single invoice was lost of those properly refrigerated. Where this matter did not receive proper attention, whole shipments were lost. At present six of the Anchor Line Royal Mail steamers on the Glasgow line are fitted each with two refrigerators, capable of holding from 180 to 225 carcasses. Thus the carrying capacity of each ship in the way of meat is from 360 to 450 carcasses, and one of these vessels is due every Wednesday at the port of Glasgow.

The cattle intended for British use are all taken alive to New York city. After being dressed, the carcasses are put into a refrigerating room, where a constant stream of air cooled by passing over ice plays on them. This stream is kept up by means of an engine of twenty-five horse-power. The object of this is to extract all the animal heat from the carcass before it is shipped, and the effect of this thorough chilling is that meat brought from New York in the summer-time keeps longer after being delivered at Glasgow than that of animals killed in the latter city. It is also much more suitable for curing purposes, being older, and the fibers more open. After refrigeration, the quarters are sewn in canvass sacking, and shipped on Friday, so as to be safely located in time for the departure of the steamer on Saturday. On board the ship the walls of the chambers or safes are about nine inches thick, and composed of wood, a layer of resinous paper, a space for air, then a layer of felting, and, lastly, a covering of wood.

The meat-room is lined with patent oil-cloth, and also with air-tight boarding; the roof is studded with iron hooks, at such distance as to keep the quarters of beef from touching each other, friction being found to damage their chances of preservation. The place is kept exquisitely clean. On the side of this chamber, opposite to the ice-house, are placed wooden flues open at the top, and perpendicular to another and larger flue, which runs along the same side of the chamber, and crosses the floor into a wooden chest, attached to which is a fan worked from above by a donkey steam-engine. The fan, when set in motion, causes a current which draws the heated air from the top of the compartment down through the wooden flues, and along that running across the floor into the chest, thence passing into the ice-house with great force by an orifice at the top. The air becomes cold in the ice-house, and this cold air, passing out of the ice-house at the bottom, is sent into the meat-room. The air is subjected to the same treatment again and again, so that a constant current of pure cold air is being supplied by the refrigerator at a temperature of about thirty-seven degrees, or sufficiently cold to preserve the meat, but without freezing. When the fan is in motion, the current of air is strong enough to draw into the flues any small pieces of paper thrown into the air. The door of the meat-store, as well as that of the ice-house, is cased with India rubber, and is fastened on with screws, which make it air-tight if required. The ice-house is somewhat smaller than the meat-room; it is packed with block ice. The floor, being covered with coarse canvass, acts as a filter for any sediment which may gather.

THE Richmond Enquirer, a Democratic organ of Virginia, makes confession that "charges of are becoming as common as [the Democratic government] was a carpet-bag government! is pitiable! Will a Virginia Southerner, steal? Horrible! rible, indeed, than the original

SPECIE PAYMENTS AND MATERIAL PROSPERITY.

All the more weighty influences point conclusively to an early easy resumption of specie payments, and to the certainty of a return to substantial prosperity in the near future. A few facts in support of this conclusion, and first:

REDUCTION OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The recapitulation of the statement of the public debt of the United States, for the month of March, 1877, just issued, is as follows:

Debt, less cash in the Treasury,
April 1, 1877.....	$2,074,674,126 63
Debt, less cash in the Treasury,
March 1, 1877.....	2,088,781,143 04
Decrease of debt during month..	$14,107,016 41

The reduction of the public debt $14,107,016.41 and the funding of forty million five per cent. bonds in four-and-a-half per cent. bonds during the first month of Secretary Sherman's administration is something to be proud of, and a good indication of future success. This is a larger sum than was ever reached by either of his predecessors in the same period of time.

There were some heavy reductions under Mr. Boutwell, for instance: June, 1869, $13,384,777.97; June, 1869, $16,410,132.54; May, 1870, $11,697,793.39; June, 1870, $14,301,962.37; July, 1870, $20,303,772.04; August, 1870, $17,034,123.74; September, 1870, $13,403,325.59; April, 1871, $11,011,250.65; October, 1871, $13,458,620.51; March, 1872, $12,391,451.32; April, 1872, $15,481,968.64; May, 1872, $12,588,088.62; September, 1872, $10,736,635.89; October, 1872, $10,327,343.09. There were no heavy reductions under his successors until Mr. Sherman came in. The total reductions during the two terms of President Grant were $436,682,116.97.

RECENT COURSE OF FOREIGN TRADE.

Our foreign trade for the last calendar year shows a decrease of $64,694,027 in total imports, and an increase of $56,725,312 in total exports, as compared with 1875, the excess of total exports for the year being over $185,000,000. The following table is a complete and suggestive summary. It is a comparison of imports with exports during the past eight years—in one case with specie included in both, and in the other with specie deducted from both—the figures given being the excess of imports or exports respectively in each year:

	Specie Included—		Specie Excluded—
	Imports.	Exports.	Imports.	Exports.
1876..	$185,384,145	$164,009,077
1875..	64,464,806	1,937,241
1874..	63,190,035	7,716,764
1873..	$22,545,047	$55,608,696
1872..	118,875,561	194,813,195
1871..	52,122,956	112,759,011
1870..	2,256,776	57,602,131
1869..	69,692,422	101,589,986

This table shows an extraordinary change in the trade movement, which is probably not equaled in commercial history.

DECREASE IN IMPORTS.

The official returns for January show a heavy decline in merchandise imports as compared with the corresponding month in 1876, the following being the comparative figures for the month, gold values:

	1877.	1876.	1874.
Merchandise.	$37,655,786	$42,099,201	$34,756,563
Specie.....	2,139,307	759,293	1,031,516
Total....	$39,795,093	$42,858,494	$35,788,079

Taking the entire seven months of the fiscal year—July 1 to January 31—the imports thus compare, gold values:

	1876-7.	1875-6.	1874-5.
Merchandise.	$232,066,484	$270,438,608	$292,948,470
Specie.....	31,286,987	11,372,320	9,659,112
Total....	$263,353,471	$281,810,928	$302,607,582

The merchandise imports for January occupy a position nearly midway between those for the corresponding time in 1875 and 1876; and although they show a decline as compared with the previous January, they are $5,386,326 in excess of the previous month of December, and are the largest thus far during the present fiscal year, August standing next with $35,000,000, and October next with $34,000,000. The specie imports, not quite one million in July, ran up rapidly to one, two, five, and six millions in successive months, closing the calendar year with $11,884,286 in December, in part offsetting the extraordinarily heavy exports of domestic produce for that month; in January the specie import fell to $2,139,307.

INCREASE IN EXPORTS.

Turning to exports, the following is the comparative movement for January, mixed values :

	1877.	1876.	1875.
Domestic produce.....	$67,341,814	$56,638,778	$51,483,379
Foreign Merchandise.....	960,942	1,273,646	1,104,664
Total goods..	$68,302,756	57,912,424	52,588,043
Specie.....	2,962,629	2,352,624	11,142,162
Total	$71,265,385	$60,265,048	$63,730,205

Taking the exports, gold values, for the same seven months as above used for the imports, we have the following movement:

	1876-7.	1875-6.	1874-5.
Domestic produce.....	$364,626,822	$301,470,528	$298,917,442
Foreign Merchandise.....	8,022,063	8,206,366	8,205,366
Total goods..	$372,648,885	$309,676,894	$307,122,808
Specie.....	25,928,970	25,470,792	47,996,955
Total.....	$398,577,855	$335,147,686	$355,119,763

The produce exports fall off over nine millions from the $76,569,689 in December—the heaviest to be recorded in any one month—but are over five millions in excess of November's exports.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS COMPARED.

The following is a comparison of the period of seven months in each of the three fiscal years, gold values, the first comparison being of goods only, the second of specie only, and the third of both goods and specie combined, the quantity marked with a (*) being a decrease :

	1876-7.	1875-6.	1874-5.
Goods imports..	$232,066,484	$270,438,608	$292,948,470
Goods exports..	372,648,885	309,676,894	307,122,808
Excess exports..	$140,582,401	$39,238,286	$14,174,338
Specie imports..	$31,286,987	$11,372,320	$9,659,112
Specie exports..	25,928,970	25,470,792	47,996,955
Excess exports..	*$5,358,017	$14,098,472	$38,337,843
Total imports..	$263,353,471	$281,810,928	$302,607,582
Total exports..	398,577,855	335,147,686	355,119,763
Excess exports..	$135,224,384	$53,336,758	$52,512,181

This shows an excess of twenty millions a month of exports over imports, in goods alone, since June, and of over nineteen millions in goods and specie combined. It is scarcely to be expected that this rate of excess will continue, but if it should the year's trade would result in a balance of $240,000,000 in favor of this country. This is certainly a most extraordinary showing, and none the less whether it is interpreted as an evidence of poverty or of prosperity; the $185,000,000 of export excess for the year ending with 1876 will probably be not far from $200,000,000 for the fiscal year ending with June next.

THE SPECIE MOVEMENT.

The specie movement also has turned in this direction, and this fact may comfort those who cherish the idea that sufficient specie to pay the Government notes can be accumulated without any withdrawal of bank notes. The production of the precious metals, by Dr. Linderman's figures, was 85,350,000 during the fiscal year last completed, and $1,056,631,889 since June, 1859; during the same period the total export of both domestic and foreign was $1,189,687,856, and the total import, $283,517,602, leaving as net export, $906,169,984 an annual average of about $53,100,000. The production for that period in excess of the net exports, therefore, was $150,461,635. Allowing for use in manufactures, the increase in stock on hand during that time was about sixty-five millions of dollars, and of this the addition during the last year was, say, forty millions of dollars. The tables show that the product during the last seven months has been kept at home, and that there has been a net import of more than five millions besides, against a net export of fourteen millions during the previous year, and thirty-eight millions during 1874-5. The increase in the excess of imports of goods is $101,344,115 during the seven months, as compared with 1875-6, and there is a change of $19,456,489 in the specie movement, making a total change of $120,800,604 in the combined movement, and an increase of $81,887,626 in the net excess of exports over imports. If the product of gold and silver be taken as $7,000,000 a month, the stock in the country must have been increased over $50,000,000 since last June.

These facts, together with the fall of gold to 4½ and 5, indicate conclusively that the return to specie payments need not be long delayed. The greenback and gold will soon be counted of equal value in all our mercantile transactions.

THE MANUFACTURING INTERESTS OF THE SOUTH.

Some few years ago it was quite an easy matter to apportion to each section of this mighty continent its various sources of wealth: to the New England States belonged the industries; to the West the raising of wheat, and to the South the production of cotton; but as the country has developed, the minds of all shrewd business men have been opened to the necessity of combining manufacturing enterprises with agricultural pursuits; the West was the first to adopt the necessity of producing goods in proportion to what was grown within her districts, for she found out she never derived any benefit of reciprocity from the importation of the articles she paid so dearly for in the East. Apart from the mere question of grain, it is one of the first principles of political economy to diversify as much as possible the different channels in which labor is employed, and so of late years it has dawned upon the South that so long as she continued to plant cotton and make it her chief source of occupation, she could only attract to her territory the very poorest class of field labor, for from statistics it has been clearly shown that the cotton laborer very rarely is able to earn anything over and above his actual expenses, and of course the man who has nothing to spend does nothing for the opening up or progress of that section in which he is working.

The contrast has been very marked between the farming hands of the cotton States and the working men in the manufacturing districts; to this end the South has been obliged to push forward her utmost energies in encouraging everything that tended to promote her future wealth, and so has determined to appropriate a certain share in the rapid growth the United States has made in manufactures, which have doubled within the last ten years. The financial crisis of 1873 did a great deal of good to the South, as while all industries were at a stand-still in the North, suffering as they did from the incumbrances of debt, contracted in prosperous times, the few cotton factories that had been erected in the South were all doing a most successful business. In Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Texas mill property to this day is paying large dividends; the only way to keep trade ever on the increase is to create new activity, the moment it is discovered that certain other localities are outstripping the South of her legitimate occupation, the spinning, as well as the growing of cotton. The great drawback to the proper advancement of manufacturing enterprise is that both State and municipal laws prevent the untrammelled execution of local energy; and while, of course, it is very difficult for legislators to see that the wealth of their various sections depends upon the self-supporting capacity of their inhabitants, still it is an essential point to inspire due encouragement to build up every kind of enterprise, instead of pulling it down by stringent taxes, for the amalgamation of agricultural and manufacturing pursuits is the only way for any people to acquire permanent wealth and retain a lasting independence.

EMIGRATION FROM GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.—The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics furnishes the following table, (compiled from the official report of the British Board of Trade,) showing the emigration from the United Kingdom to the United States, British North America, and Australia, respectively, during the years 1874, 1875, and 1876:

DESTINATION.	1874.	1875.	1876.
United States.....	148,161	105,046	75,533
British North America..	25,460	17,378	12,327
Australia.....	53,958	35,525	33,191

The total number of persons who emigrated from the United Kingdom to the United States from 1815 to 1876 was 5,467,075.

The amount of money remitted by settlers in the United States and British North America to their friends in the United Kingdom from 1848 to 1876, inclusive, was £19,685,068; the greatest amount in any one year being £1,730,000, in 1854.

THE BUCKSHOT WAR.

In 1838 Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll, a leading and distinguished member of the Quaker City Demoskratos, was ambitious of airing his statesmanship in Congress as the Representative of the Third Congressional District of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. At the previous election, in 1836, Mr. Ingersoll had been defeated by the sitting member, Mr. Charles Naylor, who, in 1838, was a candidate for re-election. But Mr. Ingersoll was not discouraged. Defeated again, in 1838, in the canvass before the people—in an effort to carry the field by violence under a cry of fraud—he next attempted to manipulate the count of the return judges.

The election was held on Tuesday, October 9th, 1838. By law the return judges of the district—six in number, three Democrats and three Whigs—were required on the Friday following, at the State House, “to compare and cast up the returns” of the several polling precincts of the district, and, from them, “to execute, under their hands, one general and true return” of the whole district. That meeting of the return judges was preceded in the Democratic papers by inflammatory diatribes and lampoons, and upon the street by incendiary placards, all announcing to the people of Philadelphia county that their liberties were in danger, and summoned them to attend the count en masse to protect their rights. Accordingly a furious crowd assembled. The count embraced the whole of Philadelphia county, which included the First and Third Congressional Districts. Mr. Ingersoll, with the Van Buren county candidates to the Legislature—two as Senators and eight as Representatives—appeared, and practically asserted the right to regulate the count.

The wildest scene of confusion and uproar ensued. Amid the din Mr. Ingersoll charged fraud in the vote. In the canvass of the county there were seventeen judges—ten Democrats and seven Whigs. A Democratic clerk of the Seventh Ward of the Northern Liberties was introduced, and stated that a tally list of that ward, the one not put in the ballot-box, was missing: he charged that it had been stolen. The seven wards of the Liberties, which, in their aggregate vote, was heavily Whig, comprised about one-half of the population of the Third District. The rejection of their vote would elect Ingersoll: to count them would give the district to Naylor. Hence, upon the charge of the Seventh Ward Democratic clerk that a tally list of that ward had been stolen, Mr. Ingersoll demanded the rejection in the count, not merely of the vote of the Seventh Ward, which was Democratic, and the rejection of which would only increase Naylor’s majority, but the vote of the whole seven wards of the Liberties.

Of course the Whigs revolted at such a proposition. But the Democratic judges, by a vote of ten to seven, excluded the vote of the Liberties, and even ejected their return judge, Mr. Bela Badger. The Whigs refused to submit. The Democratic judges denying them the use of their returns, the Whig judges made the return required by law from their own returns, and what they could collect from other sources, and dispatched it through the legal channel to the Secretary of the Commonwealth at Harrisburg, by whom it was received. The ten Democratic judges also made out a return, necessarily a mutilated return, and placed it in the Prothonotary’s office. If it ever reached Harrisburg, it did not in time to invalidate that of the six Whig judges, by which the Whig candidates to the State Senate and House were elected. Too late the Van Buren county candidates realized that they had been sacrificed as victims to Mr. Ingersoll’s ambition. But for them there was no retreat: they must abide the consequences.

Having secured in the county canvass the rejection of the vote of the Liberties, and the ejection of its return judge, Mr. Ingersoll was confident of victory. By the ejection of Mr. Badger he had now a majority of the judges of the Third District—three to two—and in the count of that district it was at once proposed to exclude the vote of the Liberties. The Whigs rebelled. They, with the judge of the Liberties, made "one general and true return" of all the votes in the district, by which Mr. Naylor had over seven hundred majority, and transmitted it to Harrisburg. The Democratic judges also made a return. It excluded the Liberties, and certified that in about one-half of the district Mr. Ingersoll had a majority. Of course Governor Ritner gave to Mr. Naylor the certificate of election, as the member elected in the Third Congressional District of Pennsylvania to the Twenty-Sixth Congress.

The scene of battle was now transferred to the State capital. Practically, so far, at every step Mr. Ingersoll had been worsted, and had carried with him in his defeat the Van Buren county candidates to the Legislature. At Harrisburg, in the December following, further important stakes were to be played for: the organization of the Lower House, with its spoils and perquisites, and the election by the Legislature of a United States Senator and a Treasurer to the Commonwealth. Those the Democracy claimed. The Whigs had a small majority in the Senate. If they secured the representation from Philadelphia county it would give them the organization of the House, a majority on joint ballot, and with it the United States Senator and the State Treasurer. There was the rub: how to secure the Democratic representation from Philadelphia county. The situation was alarming: the "unterrified" furious! If the Democratic delegation had, or were entitled to, a majority of the votes cast in the county, the Democratic managers had so manipulated the returns to secure the representation in the Third District as to leave the Executive authorities at Harrisburg without any legal or official information on the subject. The return of the six Whig judges elected the Whig candidates, who received their certificates of election.

At the meeting of the Legislature the war began in earnest. For a time it had a serious look—bloodshed seemed imminent. The Whigs had the regular returns and the seal of the State. The Democrats claimed a majority in Philadelphia county, backed by an immense mob of their partisans, all armed, and resolved on war if their demands were denied or evaded. The organization of the House they would have. That they could only secure by dispossessing the Whig claimants. But how to do it? Under the laws and the Constitution of the State the Whigs, even if not elected, had a right to their seats until unseated by a regular contest upon petition and the presentation of proofs before the Legislature of the rights of the contestants. The houses only could decide. That they could only do after organization and the appointment of committees. Hence, the Democratic claimants, backed by their mob of armed adherents—"butchers," "hired ruffians" and "assassins," as the Whigs called them; "the people," "the patriotic yeomanry" of the State, as the Democracy styled them—demanded admission before organization—demanded that they be allowed to participate in the organization; and that they determined to enforce, peaceably or by violence, as the exigency demanded. As a prelude to what was to follow, the Whig representatives were everywhere insulted, everywhere outraged—in the Capitol, on the street, and at their boarding-houses; and the wildest alarm prevailed throughout Harrisburg.

The two houses met on the 4th day of December, 1838: the House at 10 o'clock, A. M. The mob filled the galleries, swarmed in the lobbies, with loud cries and threatening aspect. A struggle at once began. The Whigs contended that the members having the regular returns should be seated. They could not, prior to an organization, entertain a contest. The Constitution and laws of the State and the rules of the House forbade it. That the Democracy furiously opposed. They demanded the admission of the Van Buren members, who, they contended, had a majority at the late elections, and were consequently entitled to their seats. The Whigs remained firm, and the House, after much wrangling, separated into two bodies. The Whigs organized by the election of Gen. T. S. Cunningham as Speaker, and the Democracy by the election of Mr. William Hopkins, of Washington. Finally, these two bodies adjourned without violence.

At 3 P. M. the Senate met. Of this body, at that time, Mr. Thaddeus Stevens—"Old Thad."—was a prominent and active leader—feared and hated then, as at his death, by the "great untterrified." As in the House, the Locofoco mob swarmed in the galleries and lobbies, and created a most frightful uproar. The session was a stormy one. Senators were applauded, or hooted and hissed, by the mob, amid shouts of, "Give us our rights!" or, "Blood!" "Blood!" "Blood!" The majority were resolute and firm; they would yield nothing to the clamors of the mob. After an organization by the election of Mr. Charles B. Penrose as Speaker, the swearing in of new members and some other important business—all performed amid the clamorous efforts at terror by the mob—the Senate, on motion, agreed to meet at 10 A. M., and then attempted to adjourn, but before the adjournment could be announced the mob, exasperated at the tenacity of the Whigs, rushed, at a concerted signal, with horrid yells and din, and shouting for "blood," into the chamber, tearing down the doors, uprooting desks, and forcing Senators to escape by the windows.

On the following day a similar scene of violence was enacted in the House. The aisles, lobbies, and galleries of that body were early filled with a mob of ruffians. The Hopkins (Democratic) branch of the House had adjourned to meet at 10 A. M., and the Cunningham (Whig) branch at 2 P. M. At the latter hour the Whigs attempted to assemble, but the Democratic branch had not adjourned. Mr. Spackman (who, at the request of General Cunningham, advanced to the Speaker's chair, filled by Mr. Hopkins, to move an adjournment) was seized by the mob when he reached the platform, and was about to make the motion, and violently thrust out of the house. That proved the signal of tumult. The mob outside rushed in, and, uniting with their fellows on the floor, took possession of the hall, after tearing down the doors, uprooting and overturning desks, and otherwise mutilating the furniture and hall, and forcing the Whig members to retreat in every direction to save their lives or escape violence.

The mob now established themselves in the two chambers. The leaders addressed them in the most inflammatory and treasonable harangues, which were responded to by demoniac yells and denunciations of death against the most distinguished men of the State if they dared to return to their seats. The reign of terror was perfect. The mob had complete possession, not only of the legislative halls, but of Harrisburg, and Governor Ritner, (a Whig,) apprehensive of violence, which was denounced against him, did not for days dare approach the Executive chamber. Says the Harrisburg Intelligencer of December 5th, 1838: "The mob have now possession of the town, and mob law reigns supreme. The officers of the law make no attempt to put down the disgraceful scene: no life is safe." The sheriff of Dauphin county (one William Cochran) openly aided the rebels, and united with them in plans to hang Thaddeus Stevens and others.

At this alarming crisis of affairs Governor Ritner issued a proclamation, declaring that "a lawless, infuriated, armed mob from the counties of Philadelphia, Lancaster, Adams, and other places," had, under the lead of Federal office-holders, overthrown the law, had expelled the Legislature and Executive authorities, and still hold possession of the town and Capitol. He therefore ordered the citizen soldiery to immediately march to Harrisburg, and called upon all good citizens to aid in reinstating the government and laws.

The old Commonwealth was shaken to its very foundations. All over the State excited public meetings were held by the two parties: by the Whigs to express their horror and indignation at the lawless deviltry of the mob, and to devise measures to sustain the government and the laws—by the Democracy to denounce the resistance of the government to the demands of the rebel insurrectionists, to inflame the passions of the populace against the Whigs, and to defeat if possible all succor to the civil authorities at the capital.

The peril was great and alarming. All government at Harrisburg had ceased: the laws were wholly paralyzed. In vain did Governor Ritner appeal for aid to the United States military at Carlisle Barracks under Captain E. V. Sumner: in vain did he appeal to President Van Buren, at Washington; in vain did he multiply proofs to that august Democratic chief that the Legislature, as the executive branch of the State government, had been overthrown by a lawless mob, and dare not re-assemble. The President would not interfere. The Constitution forbade it. The astute Sumner at Carlisle Barracks, posted in advance as a part of the conspiracy, refused to interfere, and for the reasons subsequently elaborated by President Van Buren.

Said the Captain on the 5th: "The disturbance" at Harrisburg "appears to proceed from political differences alone." Said Van Buren on the 11th: "The commotion" at Harrisburg, "does not appear to arise from any opposition to the laws, but grew out of a contest between two political parties regarding their respective rights." The insurrectionists might outrage the Legislature—might even hang the Legislators and the Governor; they might murder, burn, and plunder the citizens and the city: to Van Buren it was no evidence of hostility to the laws—it was simply an emeute growing out of the rivalry of parties: he would not interfere.

Consequently, the Whigs were everywhere outraged with impunity; were everywhere denounced by the Democracy in the grossest vituperation, as were all efforts of the State government to reinstate the laws—at Philadelphia as at Harrisburg and throughout the State—in the Globe, the national Democratic organ here, and in Congress. Even the State militia were denounced in the House as the "armed mob" of a tyrant for "the murder in cold blood, with buckshot," of "the innocent, peaceable, unarmed citizens"—"the sovereign people of Pennsylvania assembled in their majesty!"

Hence, although Democratic Federal office-holders might head the insurrectionists, yet nothing Democratic—no one under the control of the Democracy—should assist in reinstating the laws until the demands of the mob rebels had triumphed—until the civil authorities of the State had succumbed to the mob Democracy in arms. Captain Ramsey, at the Frankford U. S. Arsenal, on assuming command, had found upon its books the record of an issue by his predecessor, approved by the Department at Washington, to a Locofoco sheriff, of 1,500 rounds of ammunition for use in quelling a riot. Upon such a precedent, so approved, he had not hesitated to honor the requisition of "a Governor of a sovereign State," and to promptly issue ammunition to the State troops under the Governor's call. For that he was severely reprimanded by the Secretary of War. He was sternly ordered to recover the ammunition thus issued, and to report at Washington. At the same time Major Craig, the commandant of the U. S. Arsenal at Pittsburg, was ordered to issue no ammunition or arms to the State troops, and consequently the militia were forced to proceed to Harrisburg with buckshot instead of ball cartridges. Hence, in party history, this famous Locofoco emeute is known as the "BUCKSHOT WAR."

Commodore Jesse D. Elliott and Midshipman Robinson, being at Carlisle and fully apprised of the insurrection against the State authorities, felt it their duty, not as officers, but as citizens, to attend the Governor at Harrisburg, and assist him "with their counsel, or in any other way he might require their services." For even that they were severely rebuked by the Secretary of the Navy. They were ordered to instantly return to Carlisle and to report their arrival there at Washington.

The rebel mob, thus emboldened, formed a provisional government, and issued, through its Commander-in-chief, Adam Tiller, a call to the local militia to march to its support.

Nevertheless, in the presence of proceedings and acts so revolutionary and violent, the Democracy throughout the country, at their meetings, in Congress, and in their press denied that there was an insurrection, a rebellion, at Harrisburg, and denounced the Governor's call for the State militia as tyrannical and infamous. The "commotion" there was constitutional and patriotic—a grand uprising of the independent yeomanry of the State in vindication of their liberties and rights, and made every effort, seconded from Washington, to prevent all help reaching the beleaguered State government at the Capitol.

At length the State troops marched with "buckshot" cartridges. The arrival on the 8th and 9th of General Patterson at Harrisburg, from Philadelphia, with the first division of Pennsylvania militia, occupying town and State arsenal, for a moment alarmed and disconcerted the insurgents, and proportionately encouraged the Whigs. A belligerent calm ensued. On the 8th the Senate, which had not met since the Tuesday previous, again assembled, with Mr. Strohm, of Lancaster, in the chair. On the 10th Speaker Penrose reappeared. He had been deterred since the 4th from resuming his duties by threats of assassination. But the struggle in the Legislature for the organization of the House continued with equal resolution and bitterness, though not with the same external violence. The Whigs declared their determination to maintain the Constitution and the laws; they declared that they would yield to no intimidation. The Senate and the Hopkins Democratic branch of the House met at the Capitol; the Cunningham branch at Wilson's. No legislation could be effected. On the 15th the Senate still hesitated to formally recognize the Cunningham House, but on the 20th it declared the Hopkins House illegally constituted. That aroused all the belligerent ire of that pugnacious branch: it denounced the Senate for usurpation in passing "upon the constitutional organization of the House," "a co-ordinate branch of the government," and appointed a committee to draft a plan to revolutionize the State, and involve it in all the horrors of civil war.

Here the courage of some of the Whigs began to weaken. General Patterson's command, on the 20th, had all returned home. The troops from Cumberland and Adams, which had taken their place and held the State arsenal, were more favorable to the Democracy. D. R. Porter, the Democratic Governor-elect, and who was soon to be inaugurated, was at Harrisburg. The situation was anything but pleasant, even if safe, for the Whigs: against the counsel of "Old Thad.," they proposed to compromise. That proved their Waterloo. It announced their fears to the Democracy, and made the latter sure of the situation: they accordingly rejected all overtures from the Whigs. They would have all or fight.

Finally, a number of Whigs seceded from the Cunningham House and joined the Hopkins House—a number sufficient to give the latter body a quorum of "regularly returned" members in addition to the contestants from Philadelphia county. That decided the battle. Hence, on the 25th, on motion of Mr. Michler, the Senate, by a vote of 17 yeas to 16 nays, recognized the Hopkins House as "within the pale of the Constitution," and notified it that the Senate "was ready to proceed to business."

So the struggle ended. The great "BUCKSHOT WAR," after a campaign of twenty-two days, closed in the triumph of the "great untterrified." They secured the organization of the House, with its offices and spoils, and Daniel Sturgeon, who figured in the melée as the Democratic Treasurer of the State, was transferred to the Senate of the United States; but Charles J. Ingersoll did not sit in the Twenty-sixth Congress—in the House of that Congress which began its sessions in December, 1839, by the unexampled outrage of disfranchising the State of New Jersey in its organization—by excluding without a legal contest, and before organization, to secure to the Democracy its offices and spoils, the Whig Representatives from New Jersey, bearing the great seal of the State.

Its deviltry, however, furnishes an illustration of the immemorial tactics of the Democracy as a party: first, fraud—then violence; or usurpation, violence and fraud combined; and when these fail to seat or maintain them in power, then rebellion, carnage, blood! In 1838 it worked its own cure. Attracting the attention and exciting the indignation of the whole country, it contributed greatly in the combination of causes which a little later achieved a grand Whig triumph in the election of Harrison and Tyler as President and Vice President of the United States.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES IN THE UNITED STATES.

We claim to be decidedly and pre-eminently a nation which reads. No European or other foreign people possess the craving for mental food which we Americans display, neither have they the wonderful ostrich-like mental digestion of which we can also boast. Bread or stone, it is all one—down it goes, perhaps with a wry face or a gulph, and the cry is, like the horse-leech's daughters, still for more. To what cause this effect is assignable it is difficult to discover. Perhaps it is to the mixed blood which runs in the national veins—the characteristics of all people mingled into one. We have the solidity of the English, the wit and insouciance of the Irish, the stolidity of the German, the frost of the Scandinavian, with the fire of the Italian, the pride of the Spaniard, and the gayety of the French, and the result is a type which it puzzles ethnologists to define, and yet which causes us to be unerringly assigned our nationality the moment we set foot on alien shores. This mixture of blood gives us a spice of each distinct current, and one contradicts the other, while preponderating over all is the lasting effect of the stern, uncompromising spirit of our puritan forefathers, whose intense personality tinctured the form of civilization they have handed down to us from those days of grim, narrow, self-righteousness. To these many sources we may ascribe the self-satisfied self-assertion, which is our greatest failing, and the restless craving for knowledge yclept "Yankee curiosity," which amuses our relations over the water so much. But this Yankee trait, properly cultivated, directed, and cared for, has made us a smart people, and given us, when our national age is considered, a wonderfully forward place in the ranks of intellectual culture. As a proof of this we need only look around us at the public museums, art galleries, and libraries with which we have endowed our cities. This general quickness of thought and desire for mental culture is fostered undoubtedly by our form of government, under which all, no matter how humble or how poor, can anticipate brilliant possibilities in the future, if they have the power within themselves to win them; for no stern, repressing laws of caste will crush the spirit down—and so looking forward, naturally seek to be prepared for a thorough enjoyment of the prize when it is attained. Away off down the dim vista of our hundred years we find the boy Franklin struggling up through the darkness of poverty and all its narrowing cares and paralyzing effects to the light of knowledge and of science, until at length he controls the very thunderbolt! What a struggle he found himself obliged to make—how steep the path and thorny the way to the goal—his life tells us; but that he appreciated the difficulties and endeavored to smooth the road for others we also know, and the Philadelphia Public Library stands an eloquent tribute to his courage and success to-day. No nation can be great which neglects mental culture; the highest civilization is based upon the school, and the keystone to the arch of national prosperity is the spelling book. But the school must be carefully guarded, and the spelling book when once mastered must be followed by judicious mental training, else it were better their blessings had never been known. As an aid and corollary as it were to the schools, public libraries are indispensable, but the establishment of them should be a subject of much care, and the choice of books, particularly where the young are to be considered, a matter of grave study. The aim should be to draw the youthful mind away from frivolous reading which will only serve to poison and debase it, and to lead it imperceptibly into the course most likely to develop and establish for it a firm foundation upon which to build the success of a lifetime, and to do this without disgusting or alarming. To be useful the library must be open to all, without regard to age, but to prevent injury to the tender minds of the very young rests very much with the librarian. He must recognize, not only his duty to the mute though eloquent objects of his care, but also to the living searchers after knowledge; that he is a teacher as well as a custodian, and that he has a higher rôle than even the preacher or the pedagogue, for with him rests the perfecting or the ruin of the work they have begun. Next in importance to the guiding of the young but supple minds is that of influencing the older, but equally ignorant; those who have awakened to a conviction of their mental deficiencies, or have only attained the means of correcting them, at an age when the school room is forsaken by the more fortunate, for the real lessons of life; to these the royal road to knowledge is verily "up hill all the way," and the labor of guiding and advising a weary one. But it would be foolish to draw any definite line as to the choice of books in a free library; the majority should be unquestionably of a popular character, not too heavy to disgust or too light to be ignored. Science can be made attractive to the simplest, while history and biography can be clothed in all the charms of the novel without losing a grain of usefulness by the genius of competent authors.

Although it is greatly the fashion among our wealthy citizens to "run over" to the Old World for a short relaxation every few months, while many take their children to Paris or Dresden for their education, or to impart a "finish" and style to them after the rudimentary education has been accomplished in our own schools, there are many among us as intelligent and as appreciative whose shorter purses prevent this costly gratification. To these, to whom the treasures of art found in the galleries of Munich and Dresden, Florence or Rome, had been known only through the medium of written descriptions or poor copies, the Centennial exhibit was a thorough treat—a liberal education in those branches; but we trust a visit to the Art Gallery and its "Annex" will bear fruit in awakening the idea of the importance of well-selected art galleries as a part of public free libraries, particularly where those libraries are more frequented by the young. Let them take their "Lives of the Painters" from the shelf, and when reading of Grotto's "O," or of Michael Angelo's "Moses," be able to understand the wonders which genius such as others achieved more completely by the aid of good copies of these and other artists' works. Then, too, the embryo painter or sculptor will here find studies for his pencil or chisel, and suggestions which all the books in the world could not convey half so well. Besides, æsthetic culture in these days is essential to all the trades, more or less; and artistic taste and skill can be displayed in and enhance the commonest industries. Here we are behind other countries, and are just waking up to the fact. In France and Germany, and particularly in Switzerland, we find this idea fully advanced and its great importance recognized. While we have much reason to be proud of our artists, "native here, and to the manner born," but who live and die in Italy, as finding more congenial atmosphere for their æsthetic natures there, we cannot but regret that Yankee "thrift" forbids their perfect development beneath their native skies. But how can native artists anticipate national recognition and encouragement when our solons in Senate assembled decide upon giving the order for a national painting not to the best artist—by no means—but to the lowest bidder, the cheapest worker, as if it had been a proposal to supply stationery and dust-brushes to the departments? No! if we would point to our artists and art galleries with the same pride that we do to our libraries, we must not seek for what is cheap but for what is good. Painting and statuary are as much aids to education as books, to some—to most all brains a quicker means. Visitors to the old-time cities of Europe, rich in their exquisite treasures of art, can with difficulty be induced to leave them; but with us, to a stranger, after a drive through the public park, (if there is one,) a visit to the public schools, a saunter through the library, (in case one has been established,) a sight, if the town is not too young, of some old-time relic in the way of a house which has survived the march of progress since the Revolutionary days—or one of Gen. Washington's chairs, (I didn't say anything about a hatchet,) or Penn's desk—or something else equally old and well-authenticated—finds, if he is detained by business or the weather, nothing to divert and amuse but a novel or the gossip of a bar-room! Nor is the cost of mere art collections so great as to alarm the spirit of national thrift: copies in plaster and terracotta of the famed marbles can be had at comparatively small cost, and good copies, too—exact reproductions; so with paintings, and where painted copies cannot be afforded the exquisite photographs of copies prepared for photographing, by special permission, are marvelously cheap! May those in charge of our public libraries quickly understand their incompleteness without the “Art annex.”

The bibliomaniac owes a debt of gratitude to the Commissioner of Education in that he has given to the country a work which, under the title of “A Report upon the Free Libraries of the United States,” has collected not only histories and statistics of the various libraries, but papers relative to binding, catalogueing, shelving and all the minutiae of the care of books, besides papers upon bibliography from the pens of men the best calculated to discuss the subject. Of course in these centennial times such a publication is expected to take the matter in review from the grand starting point a hundred years ago, and one of the most interesting papers is that which gives an account of the efforts of Franklin and his friends of “The Junto” to form a debating society, out of which grew the Philadelphia Library and the American Debating Society. It was pure accident which directed Franklin’s steps to Philadelphia. When he left Boston he intended to settle in New York, but as there was already one printer there, (in 1723,) and he had no employment for an assistant, he was advised to go to Philadelphia, where a young man had lately died, leaving a vacancy in a printing office in that city!

The next public library to be established was in 1748, in Charleston, S. C., and another in 1753, in Georgetown, S. C. The first public library in New York was not begun until 1754. These were followed by other cities, or rather by other societies in other cities—for they all had their origin in the efforts of private individuals. But in the progress of civilization and mental culture the State has recognized the importance of these institutions by taxation for their support, and the funds so supplied include sufficient for the building of handsome structures to contain the books and the payment of salaries to the librarians. This Report shows that there are few large cities in the Union now without their public library.

The editors of this Report are Messrs. Warren & Clark, and in his letter to the Secretary, Commissioner Eaton gives the year 1870 as the date of the inception of the idea. We can congratulate the above-named gentlemen upon the result of their six years’ labors. The editors have furnished several papers themselves, but the majority are from the pens of librarians and scientific men. Mr. Spofford, the Librarian of Congress, gives several, and we need no greater proof of the wonderful growth of our country in its life of a hundred years, than, after reading of Franklin’s struggles, to pay a visit to the Congressional Library and glance through its alcoves shelving thousands of volumes. This library has increased wonderfully since the new copyright law transferred that branch of the Interior Department to the care of the Congressional Librarian, as this law requires that two copies of every publication copyrighted in the United States shall be sent to this Library. Of course the amount of trash in dime novels, jest and song-books, besides other literary ephemera is very great, but they serve to mark the growth of the country in a literary sense since the day when one printer sufficed for New York city, and Franklin could find employment in Philadelphia only through the death of another.

Among the very interesting papers in the publication before us is the one giving minute and particular descriptions of public libraries in ten of our principal cities, viz: Brooklyn, Baltimore, Boston, Charleston, Cincinnati, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco, which contain a great deal that is of personal interest. These have been the outgrowth of individual effort, and are “public” libraries, but not in every case “free.”

The Peabody Institute of Baltimore was founded by George Peabody in 1857. Mr. Peabody was then living in London, but he selected twenty-five gentlemen of Baltimore to act for him, and placed in their hands the sum of $350,000; further increasing that sum by gifts to $1,400,000. The library building was ready for use in 1861. Readers of the REPUBLIC will need no reminder of the many other public-spirited acts of the great philanthropist. The want of a place of resort in the evening a little higher than the bar-room or theater, having been felt by several young clerks in Baltimore, they held a consultation over ways and means in 1839. The result was, "The Mercantile Library Association," and the terms of membership are annual subscriptions varying from one to three dollars. The Maryland Institute, for the promotion of the mechanic arts, was originally organized by Fielding Lucas, Jr., and John H. B. Latrobe, in 1825, but, after ten years existence the entire property of the Institute was destroyed, and the society was not reorganized until 1847. The earliest public library in Baltimore was established in 1795, at a meeting of which Right Rev. John Carroll, D. D., the Catholic Bishop, was chairman. It would occupy too much space to enumerate all the like public institutions in the Monumental City, we must give a little attention to others. In Boston we find the Massachusetts Society existing since 1791, when it was organized by a few gentlemen interested in American history. Each decade since has witnessed one or two foundations of literary institutions or libraries down to 1872. Public spirit among her citizens gave Brooklyn her Mercantile Library, as well as several others. Although the people of the Southern States before the Revolution displayed equally with those of the North a desire to foster mental culture, their "peculiar institution," when the country had shaped itself into a nation, prevented a healthy growth of this sentiment, and confined it entirely to the governing class. Private libraries were numerous and costly, and the standard of education among the upper ranks was very high, but there it stopped. The laws forbade anything like learning to the negro, and the "poor white trash" were too small and too scattered a portion of the community to make it worth while to establish schools for them, while above all was the fear that if such schools should be allowed the negro might surreptitiously acquire sufficient knowledge to make him dissatisfied with his life—in other words, slavery and the school-room were antagonistic, and would not thrive in the same atmosphere. Consequently we find but few public libraries in the Sunny South. The Charleston Library, mentioned above as instituted in 1748, still exists, however, and also the Apprentices' Library, an organization of later date. The Georgia Historical Society, at Savannah, established a library in 1871. Galveston, Texas, has a fine "free" library.

Since the war much has been done toward establishing libraries through the South, where they did not exist previously, and re-establishing those which the exigences of these sad four years rendered useless or destroyed altogether; but the condition of many of the Southern States prevents any very rapid growth in this direction, and we can only hope that, as that terrible time recedes further and further into the past, its paralyzing effects will entirely disappear.

The public libraries of Chicago were nearly all destroyed by the fire of 1871. Some have been reorganized, and some have grown up since. The record of that city in this way is a good one. Rapid growth is a feature of our Western cities, and none give a better example of this than Chicago—our Phoenix, as she may justly be called. And when we remember that not a hundred years ago the whoop of the savage echoed from the now vine-clad hills of the Ohio valley, and that Lo, the poor Indian, with his untutored mind, saw God in the sun and heard Him in the wind that swept through the forest where Cincinnati "raises to eternal heaven her marble halls" at the present day, we cannot but feel a thrill of delight as we contemplate her wonderful development. Her original settlers were nearly all men of means and of fine intellectual culture, and it was as important to them to arrange for a library as for their houses. In 1802, thirteen years after the town was begun, the Cincinnati Library was organized at a meeting of the citizens at Mr. Yeatman's, and a committee of three, Jacob Burnet, Martin Bauer, and Lewis Kerr, were appointed to solicit subscriptions. The year 1808 saw the Circulating Library established. In 1821 the Apprentices' Library, and in 1828 the Ohio Mechanics' Institute first saw the light. The library of the latter was kept in a building well known as "Trollope Folly," or Bazaar. Six years after, the Young Men's Mercantile Library also was founded. But we must not linger too long in the Queen City, much as there is to attract and detain us. The public libraries of New York city are also numerous, and in the New York Society Library we have the oldest "circulating" one in the country—it being established in 1700, when Bellomont was Governor of the Province. We have already mentioned the organization of the oldest Philadelphia library, and will only say that this city is not behind her rival in number or age of these establishments. St. Louis being, like Cincinnati, a comparatively young city, her libraries are also of later date; then, too, she had the prejudices of the slaveholder to combat, and, consequently, she suffered equally with the cities further south. We come at last to San Francisco, where we find, to our astonishment, only three public libraries, but, it must be remembered the peculiar class which originally settled there: men whose one idea was to reach the highest pinnacle of wealth in the shortest time, and who had little time for any books beyond their day-book and ledger.

This publication was a part of the Centennial exhibit of the Bureau of Education, and which bureau has been much crippled by the economy of the House during the two sessions just past, consequently the report could not be as exhaustive as it otherwise would have been. But its usefulness will be seen at a glance, and it is offered in so attractive a form as to fix the interest from the first. Few are aware of the care which the General Government has taken in regard to public libraries. This has been shown by liberal grants to Territories, and by the fine libraries in the several departments of the Government at Washington besides the Colossus at the Capitol, which bids fair soon to overrun its present barriers—a very Niagara of books! There are many Government publications of much value to the people at large, such as the Pacific Railroad Explorations and Surveys, the Patent Office Reports and Gazette, the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion, yet strange to say there is no deposit of a complete series of these, even in the Library of Congress.

We have mentioned the various subjects of papers in this volume hap-hazard, but the plan of the report has been carefully arranged and is a very good one. First, we have the history of public libraries in the United States; second, their present condition and extent is shown; third, the various questions of library economy and management are discussed; and fourth, as complete statistical information of all classes of public libraries as it is practicable to obtain is presented, and thus forming a volume of incalculable value to the bibliographer and the bibliomaniac, besides introducing many interesting topics to the casual reader, and affording a means of whiling away an hour or two with profit and pleasure in turning over its pages.

HON. STANLEY MATTHEWS has been elected to the United States Senate by the Ohio Legislature. Mr. Matthews is one of the ablest men in Ohio, and for years has ranked as one of the foremost lawyers in the land. Not a single dissenting vote was cast against his election as Senator from Ohio. This is the first time, we believe, that such an event has occurred in the history of the Republican party. We learn from reliable authority that this action of the Democratic members of the Ohio Legislature was influenced by the earnest appeals of influential Southern Senators and Representatives, who desired that this compliment should be extended to Mr. Matthews in recognition of the friendly and liberal spirit he has exhibited toward the South, and of his earnest advocacy of the policy of pacification and reconciliation.

SKETCHES OF THE CABINET.

In the brief sketches following are embraced the principal political services and characteristics of the personnel of President Hayes' Cabinet. Its composition is a declaration of the policy of the administration. In executive ability, in brilliant attainments and works as statesmen and jurists, few of our former Cabinets surpass or equal it, and it begins its operations with the applause of all—with the earnest prayers of the nation for its success in the management of the difficult and weighty matters intrusted to it.

WILLIAM MAXWELL EVARTS.

William Maxwell Evarts was born in Boston, Massachusetts, February 6th, 1818. His father was Jeremiah Evarts, who was graduated at Yale College in 1802, and who, after four years' practice at the bar in New Haven, became the editor of a religious magazine, was in 1812 chosen Treasurer of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and afterward wrote a number of essays on the rights of the Indians. He died in Charleston, South Carolina, in 1831. William M. Evarts, after a preparatory education in his native city, entered Yale College and was graduated in 1837, in the same class with Hon. Edwards Pierrepont, the present Minister to England. At the time of his graduation he was but nineteen years of age. He had then chosen his profession, and having obtained his degree at college, he began his law studies in Harvard. While in the Law School there he developed rapidly the ability as a speaker which he had shown in college, and an unusual diligence as a student. His course finished, the young lawyer went to New York, and in 1841 was admitted to the bar. His keen logical insight soon commanded attention, while by his ability as an advocate in many important cases, he raised for himself steadily the reputation of a leader in the ranks of a profession at that time including some of the most learned and eloquent practitioners which the Empire State has produced. The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him by Union College in 1857; in 1865 the same honor was offered to him by Yale College, and in 1870 the degree was bestowed upon him by Harvard. On the 19th of April, 1849, he was appointed Deputy United States District Attorney for the New York City district, holding the office precisely four years to a day. In April, 1851, while acting as District Attorney, during the sickness of the regular incumbent, he signalized himself by his able prosecution of the persons engaged in the Cuban filibustering scheme known as "the Cleopatra expedition." In 1853 he resumed the private practice of his profession, and continued in it until his entry into President Johnson's Cabinet, achieving a position which was scarcely second to that of any lawyer in the United States. In 1853 he again gained considerable reputation by his conduct of the celebrated Lemmon slave case, as counsel for the State of New York. In 1850 he invited criticism by his advocacy, in a speech delivered in Castle Garden, of the Compromise measures which were so bitterly opposed by the anti-slavery men of the period, and incurred a hostility in consequence of the position which he assumed that time only could remove from the minds of his hearers. He supported the Fugitive Slave law. In the contest for United States Senator in 1861, Mr. Evarts and Horace Greeley were the rival candidates before the Republican caucus. Mr. Evarts was finally withdrawn by his friends, who voted for Ira Harris, who was elected. His personal history in late years has become inseparable from the record of the nation itself. When Andrew Johnson was impeached by the House of Representatives in 1868, Mr. Evarts was retained by the President, and in his office of leading counsel no doubt contributed by his great knowledge of constitutional law, by his earnest advocacy of his client's cause, and by his untiring efforts in the memorable case, to the success of the President. President Johnson appointed him Attorney General, and he retained the office until the incoming of the Grant Administration, in 1869, performing all the duties pertaining to his station with eminent ability. When the Treaty of Washington came to be carried out by the tribunal at Geneva, Mr. Evarts was retained by the Administration as counsel to act with Mr. Caleb Cushing and Hon. Charles Francis Adams. His admirable services on that occasion can never be forgotten. To his clear and unanswerable presentation of the disputed claims of this Government was no doubt due, in great measure, the decision in favor of the United States. A case demanding more delicate or careful treatment had probably never arisen between the two nations, and Mr. Evarts proved himself a trustworthy agent in whom to confide an important duty. During his long career as a lawyer he has been identified with many prominent cases, conspicuously as the counsel of Henry Ward Beecher in the great scandal suit. The report that he had received an exceedingly large fee for an opinion on the Berdell mortgage upon the Boston, Hartford and Erie Railroad made his name famous at one time. He was counsel in the celebrated Parish will case, and also in a contest of the will of Mrs. Gardner, the mother of President Tyler's widow, finally gaining the case. From time to time he has been consulted in cases demanding an extensive knowledge of the laws governing corporations, and very recently he has taken a part in rapid transit litigation in New York. He has held many honorable positions there, having been for years president of the Bar Association, and being now president of the Union Club. When Grant and Wilson were candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency in 1872, he entered into the contest against Greeley and Brown, and made an impressive speech in Cooper Union. His opinion on the Virginia seizure in 1873 attracted a great deal of attention, and his eulogy of Chief Justice Chase, pronounced at Dartmouth on June 25th, 1873, was one of his noblest rhetorical efforts. He was selected by the Centennial Commissioners to be the orator on the one hundredth anniversary of Independence, and in Philadelphia delivered an oration prepared in the broadest spirit of patriotism, which added new laurels to the wreath he had already won as an orator and a statesman. In the campaign which opened last summer in New York his name was mentioned at Saratoga with sufficient strength to indicate the wide-spread admiration that is felt for the man. He has been known as a Republican almost from the time of the party's organization, and in the convention at Chicago which nominated Abraham Lincoln, he led and became the spokesman of the New York delegation, presenting the name of William H. Seward in a superb speech. When Chief Justice Chase died, William M. Evarts was confidently spoken of by lawyers as most likely of all men in the nation to be his successor. On the eve of the election last fall he made a great speech for the Republican candidates in Cooper Union, in which he skillfully delineated the weakness and insincerity of the Democratic candidates, and spoke out unfalteringly for the Republican nominees. His arguments before the Electoral Commission are still fresh in the public mind, and the announcement that he has been chosen to fill the chief place in the incoming President's Cabinet will give encouragement to those who desire to see the dignity of the nation maintained, and will command respect if not admiration abroad, where the fame of Mr. Evarts has been established as second to that of no other American statesman. Mr. Evarts is a member of the firm of Evarts, Southmayd & Choate, in Wall street. He was appointed a member of the Charter Commission, formed by Governor Tilden two years ago to report a plan for the better government of cities. In September last he delivered a speech at the unvailing of the Seward statue in Madison square, and on November 26th was the orator at the unvailing of the Webster statue in Central Park, New York.

JOHN SHERMAN.

Hon. John Sherman, the Secretary of the Treasury, was born in Lancaster, Ohio, May 10th, 1823. He was descended from a family of Connecticut Shermans, founded by a refugee Roundhead, and his ancestors bequeathed to him a large share of sterling courage, conscience, and good sense. His father—Charles Robert Sherman—was a lawyer, and afterward a judge of the Supreme Court. He had a family of eleven children, who, at his death, became scattered. William Tecumseh, now the General of the Army, a brother of John Sherman, became by adoption a member of the family of Hon. Thomas Ewing. John attended school at Mount Vernon until he was fourteen years of age, when he was sent to the Muskingum Improvement to earn his livelihood and to learn engineering. At sixteen years of age a political change gave the Democrats control of the Muskingum Improvement and deprived John Sherman of his place. He began the study of law with his brother, Charles T. Sherman, at Mansfield, Ohio. After a four years' novitiate he obtained a license, and having reached the age of twenty-one, he immediately entered upon practice. He formed a partnership with his brother—John riding the circuits and Charles doing counsel business in the office—which lasted for eleven years. In politics John Sherman was an ultra Whig. He attended the Whig National Conventions of 1848 and 1852, and in the latter year was chosen a Presidential Elector. In 1854, when the Nebraska issue arose, he accepted a nomination for Congress in the Thirteenth Ohio District, and was elected. To the House of Representatives he brought a capacity for fluent debate, a large knowledge of affairs, habits of hard work, the reputation of being sound in judgment, sincere in purpose, and superior to personal considerations in the discharge of his duty. So well were his constituents pleased with his record in the Thirty-fourth Congress that he was returned for the three succeeding terms. When Mr. Chase resigned his seat in the Senate in 1861, to become Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Sherman succeeded him, and has since retained his seat in that body. He was placed upon the Finance Committee; and his speeches against the State banking system, slavery in the District of Columbia, and finance and taxation generally, commanded universal attention. In the Thirty-ninth Congress he devoted himself to the reduction of taxes, and introduced a bill to fund the public indebtedness into a five per cent. loan, by which means it was believed specie payments could have been reached in 1867, but the bill was mutilated in the Senate and defeated in the House. In the Fortieth Congress Mr. Sherman became chairman of the Finance Committee, and reported a new bill for funding the national debt. This bill he supported in a speech on February 27th, 1868. It authorized the sale of 10-40 five per cent. bonds to redeem all outstanding debts; exempted these bonds from State taxation; provided for the payment of one per cent. annually of the public debt; offered to the holders of the 5-20s the option to exchange them for 10-40s at par; authorized the conversion of legal tenders into bonds and bonds into legal tenders; and authorized contracts payable in gold. By a large portion of the people this was looked upon as a just, wise, and necessary measure, while it was attacked by others as a violation of the pledged faith of the Government and a step toward repudiation. In appearance Mr. Sherman is tall, straight, and exceedingly spare, with brown hair, gray eyes, a large head, high, square forehead, and a countenance indicating the possession of decision, firmness, and self-control. In temperament he is tender and sympathetic. In debate, he speaks rapidly, without effort at display, with great freedom from tricks of oratory, and with animation, going straight at his mark and commanding undivided attention. His personal and political history are alike free from reproach. He has ever been the staunch friend of President Hayes, and his name was not unnaturally mentioned in connection with the formation of the Cabinet at an early moment after the result of the election was known. When, in 1876, the Ohio State Convention was considering the subject of presenting the name of a candidate for the Presidency, Senator Sherman wrote to a member of the convention, urging that Governor Hayes should be put forward, with the assurance of the hearty support of the Republicans of Ohio, and his suggestion was adopted. His financial ability is undisputed, and his experience in the House and Senate, and his familiarity with the finances of the country, will make him a valued adviser of the President.

GEORGE W. M'CRARY.

Hon. George W. McCrary, Secretary of War, is in the prime of life, having been born August 29th, 1835, in Evansville, Ind. Soon after his birth his parents removed to Wisconsin Territory, settling in that part of it which afterward became the State of Iowa. He worked upon the farm for several years, and saved enough money to give him a tolerably good education in a Western academy. In 1854 he made his appearance in the office of Rankin & Miller, in Keokuk, dressed in a suit of homespun. He was duly installed as a student in law, but his appearance was so much against him as to excite ridicule and sarcasm among strangers who saw him in the office. One of his preceptors was Samuel F. Miller, now Judge of the United States Supreme Court. He saw through the homespun and found the material of an able man beneath. When he was asked what he expected to make of that "gentleman," meaning McCrary, he replied: "A first-class lawyer." A year after his entrance into the law office of Miller & Rankin he was admitted to practice, having then only reached his twentieth year. He was abundantly successful from the beginning of his career. Taking an active part in politics, in 1857 he was elected by the Republicans to represent Lee county in the State Legislature, and was the youngest member in the House. He discharged his duties with marked ability, and in 1861 he was elected to the State Senate. Here he served until the close of the war, holding the position of chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs during his first term, and that of chairman of the Judiciary Committee during the second. Upon the appointment in 1863 of Judge Miller to the Supreme Court, Mr. McCrary was selected by him as his successor in business, and from that time until 1868 he devoted himself to the practice of his profession. He was then nominated for Congress by the Republicans, and was elected by a majority of 5,013. In 1870 he was nominated by acclamation, and in the succeeding election received a majority of 3,366. His renomi-nation in 1872 was again made by acclamation, and he was a third time elected. In the campaign of 1874, when he was a fourth time elected to Congress, he received 11,384 votes, against 9,521 for Leroy G. Palmer, the anti-monopoly candidate. He was not a candidate for re-election last fall. His record in Congress is one of which any man might be proud. He has steadily opposed land grants, fought sturdily all monopolies, insisted from the first upon retrenchment and economy, voted to abolish the franking privilege, and has been one of the most prominent advocates of a thorough and radical reform in the civil service. When he was first elected to Congress he served on the Naval Committee, the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and the Committee on Elections. The latter committee had charge of the famous contest between Brewer and Adams, of Kentucky, and in disposing of it Mr. McCrary made a minority report which so favorably impressed the House that all precedents were forgotten and thrown aside, the minority report was adopted, and the Republican House unseated a Republican and put a Democrat in his place. The familiarity he had shown with election laws won for him the appointment, at the beginning of his second term, of chairman of the Committee on Elections—a compliment unheard of before for so young a member. In the Forty-third Congress he was chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals, and in the last Congress he was a member of the Judiciary Committee. Mr. McCrary's record in relation to the formation of the Electoral Tribunal is too recent to need detailed mention. In Congress he has won not only a reputation for tireless industry, wisdom, honesty, and faithfulness, but has shown by his life that it is possible for a man to be a politician and at the same time to retain his integrity so completely, that after nearly ten years of public service no taint of corruption in any shape has ever adhered to his garments, nor has he ever been soiled by the breath of political scandal.

RICHARD M. THOMPSON.

Hon. Richard M. Thompson, the Secretary of the Navy, now of Indiana, is a Virginian by birth, a native of Culpeper county, and was born on the 9th of June, 1809. He received a good English and classical education, but his tastes led him away from the place of his birth to seek adventures in the wilds of Kentucky, to which State he removed before he became of age. Here he remained for a few years in the capacity of a clerk in a country store, in the town of Louisville. The shop, however, was not to his taste, and he removed to Lawrence county, Indiana, where he tried school-teaching. Again he entered a store, but this time with a purpose beyond becoming a merchant, for, while he sold goods by day, he took up the study of the law and devoted his nights to preparation for that profession. A three years' probation of this sort brought him within the bar, to which he was admitted in 1834. He early developed a taste for political affairs, and the same year he was admitted to the bar he was elected to the Indiana Legislature as a Whig. In 1835 he was re-elected, and, his second term in the Assembly completed, he was chosen, in 1863, a State Senator. He served as President pro tem. of that body during his two years' term. His voice was heard for Harrison in the historic "Tippecanoe and Tyler too" campaign, in which contest he worked with great zeal, both as a writer and stump speaker. He was an elector for the State of Indiana in that election. Rising in the esteem of his constituents, in 1841 he was chosen to Congress, and in 1844 his name again appeared as an elector on the Whig ticket. In 1847 he was again in Congress, and at the end of his term declined a renomination. As a mark of the confidence which was felt in his ability, at the time of President Taylor's Administration, he was offered by the President the appointment of Chargé d'Affaires to Austria, which he declined. He also declined the office of Recorder of the General Land Office, which was tendered to him by President Fillmore. In the Republican convention of 1860, at Chicago, he framed and read the platform, and he has earned the reputation in the West, and in fact throughout the Northern States, of having prepared a greater number of platforms than any living politician, and of having prepared most of them well. In 1864 his name was again placed upon the electoral ticket in Indiana for the third time since he had entered political life, and in 1868 he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention in Chicago which nominated Gen. Grant. Again, in 1876, he took part in the national convention, and, as chairman of the Indiana delegation, nominated Senator Morton in a speech which was certainly not the least effective of the many superior speeches heard on that occasion: Though nearly 70 years of age, Mr. Thompson is a man full of strength and vigor; with a figure tall, straight, and commanding, a countenance of great strength and intelligence, his presence is at once inspiring and pleasing. As a speaker he is one of the best ever heard in our political campaigns, and is always listened to with satisfaction.

CARL SCHURZ.

Carl Schurz, the Secretary of the Interior, appointed by President Hayes, was born at Liblar, near Cologne, Prussia, March 2d, 1829. When the revolution of 1848 broke out, it found him pursuing his studies in the University of Bonn, and joining Gottfried Kinkel, professor of rhetoric in the university, in the publication of a liberal newspaper. In 1849, owing to an unsuccessful attempt to promote an insurrection in Bonn, he fled with Kinkel to the palatine, and took part, as an adjutant, in the defense of Rastadt. The fortress surrendered, and Schurz escaped to Switzerland, only to return secretly to Germany in 1850, when he skillfully effected the escape of Kinkel from the fortress of Spandau, in which he had been condemned to serve twenty years' imprisonment. He was correspondent in Paris, in 1851, for German journals; afterward spent a year teaching in London; and in 1852 came to the United States. He spent three years in Philadelphia studying law, when he removed to Madison, Wisconsin. He delivered speeches for the Republican party in German during the campaign of 1856, and in 1857 was defeated as the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor of Wisconsin. His first English speech was delivered during the contest between Stephen A. Douglas and Lincoln, in 1858. In 1860 he was a delegate to the Republican Convention at Chicago, and was largely instrumental in securing that part of the platform relating to citizens of foreign origin. He spoke in both German and English throughout the campaign. President Lincoln appointed him Minister to Spain, but he resigned in December, 1861, and, accepting the commission of brigadier general, he assumed command, June 17th, 1862, of a division under Gen. Sigel, and took part in the second battle of Bull Run. On March 14th, 1863, he was promoted to be major general, and in the battle of Chancellorsville his division was routed by Jackson. At the battle of Gettysburg he commanded the Eleventh Corps, and he afterward participated in the battle of Chattanooga. Returning to the practice of law at the close of the war, he was employed in Washington as a newspaper correspondent in 1865-'6, and made a report to Congress, as Special Commissioner appointed by President Johnson, on the condition of the Southern States. His report was extremely distasteful to the President. He removed to Detroit and founded the Detroit Post, and became in 1867 the editor of the St. Louis Westliche Post, both of which newspapers were conducted with remarkable ability. In 1868 he was temporary chairman of the Republican National Convention in Chicago, and labored in the canvass for Gen. Grant's election. He was chosen United States Senator from Missouri in 1869, his term ending 1875. At the expiration of his term the Democrats of Missouri elected the former rebel Gen. Cockrell as his successor. Opposing some of President Grant's administrative acts, he took a leading part in the organization of the Liberal Party, and presided over the convention at Cincinnati which nominated Horace Greeley. In visits to Europe in 1873 and 1875 he was received with much consideration in Germany, and on his return participated in the Ohio canvass with Gov. Hayes, opposing the inflation schemes of Gov. Allen. During the campaign of 1876 he devoted himself assiduously to the Republican cause, making speeches in German throughout the East and West, speaking night and day, and attracting immense audiences of Germans in every city which he visited. In appearance he is tall and slight, with dark hair and beard. In debate he is a rapid and fluent speaker, and a complete master of English, which he speaks without a perceptible trace of foreign accent. Among his best known works are the "Irrepressible Conflict," "The Abolition of Slavery as a War Measure," and his "Eulogy on Charles Sumner." His course has always been fearless. While he has been independent in his views, and has recognized no authority superior to his own individual judgment, he has, during his political life of more than twenty years, won the respect of all classes of citizens.

CHARLES DEVENS.

Charles Devens, the new Attorney General, is one of the most thoroughly respected men in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, although he has by no means been recently a conspicuous man in politics, or in any other sphere than that of the Judiciary. He is about fifty-seven years of age, having been born in Charlestown, Massachusetts, April 4th, 1820. He entered Harvard College when he was fourteen years of age, in the year 1834, and was graduated in 1838. He then entered the law school of the same college, from which he was in due time graduated, and in 1841 was admitted to the bar, beginning his practice in Franklin county. In 1846 he was elected to the State Senate, and was appointed United States Marshal for Massachusetts in 1849, holding the office until 1853. He supported the Fugitive Slave law. Upon the outbreak of the war he entered the service as major of the Third Battalion of Massachusetts Volunteer Rifles. He soon rose in rank, being appointed colonel of the Fifteenth Massachusetts in August, 1861. On April 15th, 1862, he was promoted to be brigadier general, and for gallant and meritorious conduct before the capture of Richmond, April 3d, 1865, he was brevetted major general of volunteers. From September, 1865, to June, 1866, he was Military Governor of the Eastern District of South Carolina, after which he was mustered out of the service. He was conspicuous throughout the war for his galantry in the field and his ability in every branch of the soldier's sphere, entering into numerous engagements. His first action was at Ball's Bluff, and his last in the engagement at Appomattax Court-house. He was wounded at Ball's Bluff, Fair Oaks, Chancellorsville, and Cold Harbor. He was appointed Associate Justice of the Superior Court of Massachusetts in 1867, retaining that position until October, 1873, when he was appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

DAVID M. KEY.

Postmaster General David M. Key was born in Greene county, East Tennessee, in 1824. His father was a Baptist minister. Young Key was reared on a farm, and, after obtaining a common school education, taught school to obtain means to pay his way through college. In 1850 he was graduated at Hiwassee College, East Tennessee, studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1853, and settled in Chattanooga, where he has ever since resided. In 1861 he joined the Confederate army, entered the service as lieutenant colonel of the Forty-third Tennessee Regiment, served through the war, and surrendered in North Carolina under General Joseph E. Johnston. In 1865 his old friend Andrew Johnson pardoned him. He returned to his home in Chattanooga and renewed the practice of law. In 1869 he was elected to the Constitutional Convention, and was earnest in securing the rights of full citizenship to the colored people, with whom he is very popular. Although a Democrat, his course has been so liberal as to win the respect, admiration, and often the support of Republicans. The county of Hamilton, in which he resides, is Republican; but its members in the Legislature were his zealous supporters. In 1875 Mr. Key was appointed by Governor Porter to fill the vacant seat of Andrew Johnson in the Senate. He was recently defeated as candidate for election to that office, lacking only three votes, but received every vote of both parties from East Tennessee, which gave Hayes 10,000 majority. He also received every Republican vote in the Legislature. His defeat was due to his non-partisan course in the Senate. He voted for the Mississippi investigation, and was the only Democratic Senator who did. At his home he is regarded as a representative Confederate, a just, liberal, honest man, who thoroughly accepted the situation in 1865, and has done all in his power to promote good-will and harmony between the sections. In 1870 he delivered an oration over the graves of the Federal dead at Chattanooga, which touched the popular heart, winning golden opinions from ex-soldiers of both sides. He is a man of imposing presence, and, while not brilliant or showy, has solid qualities and sterling integrity which command respect. He has long been regarded as the leading lawyer of East Tennessee, and from 1870 to 1875, when he was appointed Senator, was Chancellor of the Chattanooga Circuit. In the Senate in December last he made a speech declaring his opinion that Oregon should be counted for Hayes and Wheeler. While he did not question the honesty, the motives, or the patriotism of Oregon's Governor, he thought he had made a mistake in his selection of an elector to fill an assumed vacancy. While he maintained his views as a Democrat without apology, he expressed them with moderation, and without betraying the alarm that was too apparent in some of his Democratic brethren. He repeatedly spoke of the Republican candidates during the election as patriotic and honest men, of whom any party or country might be justly proud.

BERLIN is full of feverish excitement, and threatened with riot from the laboring classes, who present a picture of distress and wretchedness such as the scenes in Lyons, France, and among our own people in the mining regions are but pigmies. Before the great Franco-Prussian war Germany was said to be the most prosperous nation on the Continent. But it appears with her as it has with all countries which have passed through the storms of a desperate conflict, that the reaction has come owing to the fact that the war stimulated various kinds of unproductive industries which exhausted the healthy, vigorous resources of the Empire, and caused a prostration at present of her industrial interests,

A PARALLEL:

OR, REMARKABLE RESEMBLANCE BETWEEN THE POLICY OF GOVERNMENT OF PRESIDENT MONROE AND PRESIDENT HAYES.

In looking over the famous correspondence between General Andrew Jackson and Mr. James Monroe, the fifth President of the United States, which took place just previous to the accession of the latter to the office of Chief Magistrate on the 4th of March, 1817, it will be seen, that after a lapse of sixty years, the magnanimous action taken by President Monroe, in accordance with the patriotic advice and counsel of the Hero of New Orleans, has been adopted and is now pursued by President Hayes, under circumstances of sectional differences and discords of momentous magnitude not altogether unlike in character as existing when Mr. Monroe reached the Presidency, from those of the present day, when the bold and fearless reformer is now in the great chair of State.

It will be remembered by those familiar with the history of the eventful period embraced in the war of 1812, during which the administration of Mr. Madison was surrounded and menaced with trying and fearful difficulties, that to the people of the Eastern States—and especially to the old Federal party of that section—the war of 1812 was exceedingly unpopular; and, perhaps, no tidings were ever more joyfully received by any rulers of nations than was welcomed by Mr. Madison late in December, 1814, of the happy termination of the war by the treaty of peace just concluded at Ghent.

The war was over, but the heart-burnings and political animosities that had sprung up during that trying time in our country's progress still remained behind, and the business and peace of the country as well as the successful administration of government was constantly and unfavorably affected by the bitter warfare carried on between the then Federal and Republican parties. It was the ardent and patriotic wish and desire of General Jackson that these political discords should be softened down or removed altogether, as far as practicable, by a judicious and magnanimous action on the part of the Government. Hence his letter to Mr. Monroe of the 12th of November, 1816, from which the following passage is taken as bearing prominently on such policy :

“Pardon me, my dear sir, for the following remarks concerning the next Presidential term ; they are made with the sincerity and freedom of a friend. I cannot doubt they will be received with feelings similar to those which have impelled me to make them. Everything depends on the selection of your ministry. In every selection party and party feelings should be avoided. Now is the time to exterminate the monster called party spirit. By selecting characters most conspicuous for their probity, virtue, capacity, and firmness, you will go far to, if not entirely, eradicate those feelings which on former occasions threw so many obstacles in the way of government, and, perhaps, have the pleasure and honor of uniting a people heretofore politically divided. The Chief Magistrate of a great and powerful nation should never indulge in party feelings. His conduct should be liberal and disinterested, always bearing in mind that he acts for the whole and not a part of the community. By this course you will exalt the national character and acquire for yourself a name as imperishable as monumental marble. Consult no party in your choice ; pursue the dictates of that unerring judgment which has so long and so often benefitted our country and rendered conspicuous its rulers. These are the sentiments of a friend. They are the feelings—if I know my own heart—of an undissembled patriot.”

Mr. Monroe, to a great extent, shaped his policy of government with reference to appointments in accordance with the advice of his warm and devoted friend and patriot, the great old chief, and placed prominently in his cabinet as its premier John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts.

In reply to General Jackson upon the subject, in a letter dated Washington city, March 1st, 1817, he thus explains his action and policy :

“I shall take a person for the Department of State from the eastward, and Mr. Adams' claims, by long service in our diplomatic concerns, appear to entitle him to the preference, supported by his acknowledged abilities and integrity, his nomination will go to the Senate. Mr. Crawford will remain in the Treasury. After all that has been said, I have thought that I should put the administration more on national grounds by taking the Secretary of State from the eastward than from this quarter, or from the South or West. By this arrangement there can be no cause to suspect unfair combination for improper purposes. Each member will stand on his own merit, and the people will respect us all according to our conduct. To each I will act impartially, and of each expect the performance of his duty. While I am here I shall make the administration: first, for the country and its cause; secondly, to give effect to the government of the people, through me, for the term of my appointment, not for the aggrandizement of any one."

Fortunate and happy will our entire country be, if now and in the future its governmental affairs shall be carried on by such patriots, and under such auspices. Friendly and proper fraternal feeling will, ere long, be restored among the descendants of those patriotic men of the Revolution, who, during a long and dark period that tried the souls of the bravest, fought side by side under the command of the great Washington for the liberties and welfare of all; and when the Southern States shall have assured to them domestic peace and tranquillity, by the proposed magnanimous action of our present Chief Magistrate, the East, forgiving or forgetting past errors of commission, remembering, if history and tradition do not misrepresent the past, that in that section during the war of 1812 there was some expressed intention of going out of the Union unless the war was stopped—then the South, bounding up from her desolation, will gratefully accept the restoration; and at no remote period sectional distinctions may be removed—no North, no South, no East, no West, but to be an American citizen will be as proud a title as that claimed and enjoyed in the palmiest days of the Roman Republic.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

THE EXECUTIVE.

LOUISIANA.

The President and his Cabinet have been giving very close attention to the Southern difficulties. They propose a further investigation into the facts in the Louisiana case, and have decided upon a commission for that purpose. Those only who are afraid of more light and truth on the subject oppose the measure.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

In reference to South Carolina, after coming to an understanding regarding the ultimate purpose of the Administration in the matter, the following letter was prepared and a copy directed to be sent to the gubernatorial contestants in South Carolina:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 23, 1877.

SIR: I am instructed by the President to bring to you his purpose to take into immediate consideration the position of affairs in South Carolina, with a view of determining the course which, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, it may be his duty to take in reference to the situation in that State as he finds it upon succeeding to the Presidency.

It will give the President great pleasure to confer with you in person if you shall find it convenient to visit Washington, and shall concur with him in thinking such a conference the readiest and best mode of placing your views as to the political situation in your State before him. He would greatly prefer this direct communication of opinion and information as to any other method, ascertaining your views upon the present condition and immediate prospect of public interest in South Carolina.

If reasons of weight with you should discourage this course, the President will be glad to receive any communication from you in writing, or through any delegate possessing your confidence, that will convey to him your views of the impediments to the peaceful and orderly organization of a single and undisputed State government in South Carolina, and of the best methods of renewing them. It is the earnest desire of the President to be able to put an end as speedily as possible to all appearances of intervention of the military authority of the United States in the political derangements which affect the government and afflict the people of South Carolina. In this desire the President cannot doubt he truly represents the patriotic feelings of the great body of the people of the United States. It is impossible that protracted disorder in the domestic government of any State can or should ever fail to be a matter of lively interest and solicitude to the people of the whole country. In furtherance of the prompt and safe execution of this general purpose he invites a full communication of your opinions on the whole subject in such one of the proposed forms as may seem to you most useful.

By the direction of the President, I have addressed to the Hon. Wade Hampton a duplicate of this letter.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. K. ROGERS, Private Secretary.

To the Hon. Daniel H. Chamberlain, &c.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

MINISTER WASHBURNE ASKS TO BE RECALLED.

The following is the correspondence between Minister Washburne and the President on the subject of Mr. Washburne's request to be recalled as United States Minister to France :

WASHINGTON, March 22, 1877.

To the President:

In pursuance of a determination long since formed to return home at the end of eight years of service as Minister of the United States to France, I now have the honor to request that I may be recalled, the same to take effect immediately, or upon the presentation of the letters of credence of my successor, as may be more agreeable to you. In making known to you my desire in this regard I beg leave to express my best wishes for the success of your Administration, for your own personal welfare, and the peace, happiness and prosperity of our country.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
E. B. WASHBURNE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

WASHINGTON, March 23, 1877.

E. B. Washburne, Esq., &c.:

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch of the 22d instant, accompanied by a letter which you have addressed President, asking to be recalled as of the United States near the Republic, the same to take effect ly, or on the presentation of the letter of credence of your successor, as may be most agreeable to the President.

I am instructed by the President to say, in reply, that your request for recall will be granted and your resignation accepted, on the understanding that you will remain in your official position until your successor shall be appointed and shall have presented his letter of credence. I am also instructed to add an expression of the President's appreciation of the faithful manner in which your official duties have been performed, and of the services rendered to your country and your countrymen in France, in a period of unusual embarrassment and difficulty, services which must ever remain on record as among the most important rendered by the diplomatic representatives of this Government.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COIN.

The Treasurer of the United States has been directed, upon the receipt by him from any national bank designated as a public depository of the United States, located in any city in which there is no independent Treasury office, of a certificate stating that a deposit has been made to his credit in general account of the sum of one thousand dollars, or any multiple thereof not exceeding ten thousand dollars, in currency, to cause a shipment to be made from some mint of the United States to the bank issuing the certificate, of a like amount of subsidiary silver coin, the expense of transportation to be paid by the mint.

LICENSED OFFICERS OF STEAM VESSELS.

In compliance with a resolution passed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors at their annual meeting, held January 17th, 1877, the following rule, from the Revised Rules and Regulations governing the Steamboat-Inspection Service, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, was promulgated for the information of all licensed officers of steam vessels, and a rigid compliance with its provisions enjoined upon all concerned :

"RULE 55. Whenever a steamer meets with an accident involving loss of life or damage to property by sinking, burning, explosion, or other cause, it shall be the duty of the licensed officers of any such steamer to report the same, without delay, to the nearest local board ; provided, when from distance it may be inconvenient to report in person, it may be done in writing, and the report sworn to before an authorized magistrate."

Local inspectors are instructed to furnish copy of the circular with every master's, pilot's, and engineer's license is-

-ed.

REDEMPTION OF 5-20 BONDS OF 1865— MAY AND NOVEMBER.

By virtue of the authority given by the Act of Congress approved July 14th, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," notice is given that the principal and accrued interest of the bonds herein-below designated, known as "Five-twenty Bonds," of the Act of March 3d, 1865, dated November 1st, 1865, will be paid at the Treasury of the United States, in the city of Washington, on and after the tenth day of June, 1877, and that the interest on said bonds will cease on that day:

Coupon Bonds.

$500—No. 38851 to No. 40400, both inc.
$1,000—No. 98651 to No. 108100, both inc.
Total coupon, $7,000,000.

Registered Bonds.

$50—No. 491 to No. 496, both inc.
$100—No. 6351 to No. 6386, both inc.
$500—No. 3961 to No. 3973, both inc.
$1,000—No. 15051 to No. 15163, both inc.
$5,000—No. 6768 to No. 7385, both inc.
Total registered, $3,000,000; aggregate, $10,000,000.

The principal and accrued interest of the bonds herein-below designated, known as "Five-twenty Bonds," of the Act of March 3, 1865, dated November 1st, 1865, will be paid at the Treasury of the United States, in the city of Washington, on and after the fifteenth day of June, 1877, and that the interest on said bonds will cease on that day:

Coupon Bonds.

$500—No. 40401 to No. 42300, both inc.
$1,000—No. 108101 to No. 121000, both inc.
Total coupon, $9,500,000.

Registered Bonds.

$100—No. 6387 to No. 6394, both inc.
$500—No. 3974 to No. 3976, both inc.
$1,000—No. 15164 to No. 15177, both inc.
$5,000—No. 7386 to No. 7493, both inc.
Total registered, $500,000; aggregate, $10,000,000.

All United States bonds, forwarded for redemption, should be addressed to the "Loan Division, Secretary's Office," and all registered bonds should be assigned to "the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption."

Where parties desire checks in payment for registered bonds drawn to order of any one but the payee, they should assign them to the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption account of the owner or owners.

TREASURY CIRCULAR TO INDIAN AGENTS AND OTHERS.

Under sections 1764 and 1765, Revised Statutes, double salaries or extra compensation will be disallowed in the settlement of accounts.

Under section 189, the employment of attorneys or counsel, at the expense of the United States, is forbidden by law. The Department of Justice should be called upon to attend to matters requiring legal action or advice.

Under section 236, all claims or accounts requiring semi-judicial action to determine or adjust, or any claim arising out of breach of contract, loss of property, or other uncertain matter, should be referred to the Office of Indian Affairs for consideration and report to the Treasury Department; all current expenses should be paid in, and vouchers rendered with the accounts of, the quarter in which the expense was incurred, or else referred as above required; however, if, from the non-receipt of funds, or other good cause, (which must be fully stated on voucher,) payment cannot be made during the current quarter, or before its accounts are rendered, it may (in exceptional cases) be made in the next succeeding one, but in no case at any later period. The practice of disbursing officers of adjudicating uncertain or doubtful claims, or of including in the current quarter vouchers for expenses incurred long previous, must be discontinued.

Disbursing officers are not authorized to pay the heirs or legal representatives of a creditor of the Government the balance due until the accounts of such creditor have been acted upon at the Treasury; however, on special application by the disbursing officer, the amount due being small, he may be authorized by the Comptroller, after an examination of the vouchers at the Treasury, to make payment to the heirs or legal representatives.

An agent paying the balance of salary due his predecessor or other disbursing officer, who is at the time a debtor to the United States, does so in violation of law—such claims must be settled at the Treasury Department.

It is entirely out of the province of a disbursing officer to rectify alleged errors in the payment of accounts of other officers, or to pay any claims for short allowances on former settlement.

When a disbursing officer makes an illegal or double payment on the order of a superior, he does it at his peril, and the Government reserves the right to charge it to either or both.

Witnesses to payments or other transactions must affix their signatures opposite every mark witnessed—and certificates of interpreters and others must be worded so as to show distinctly what they are certifying to—in case of payments, by giving names, numbers, or amounts, or all of them. A certificate as to the correctness of the “foregoing” is not sufficiently explicit.

Credit will not be given a disbursing officer for a transfer of funds to an officer or other person not under bonds, until the money has been satisfactorily accounted for.

An officer having property or funds cannot escape accountability by surrendering it to others not authorized to receive it.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

PAY OF THE ARMY.

The following tables give the pay of officers in active service :

GRADE.	Yearly Pay.	Monthly Pay.
Colonel	$3,500 00	$291 67
Lieutenant Colonel.....	3,000 00	250 00
Major.....	2,500 00	208 33
Captain.....	1,800 00	150 00
First Lieutenant.....	1,500 00	125 00
Second Lieutenant.....	1,400 00	116 67

GRADE.	MONTHLY PAY.
	5 years' Service.	10 years' Service.	15 years' Service.	20 yrs' Service
	10 p. c.	20 p. c.	30 p. c.	40 p. c.
Colonel.....	$320 83	$350 00	*$375 00	$375 00
Lieut. Colonel.	275 00	300 00	325 00	†333 33
Major.....	229 17	250 00	270 83	291 67
Captain.....	165 00	180 00	195 00	210 00
First Lieut....	137 50	150 00	162 50	175 00
Second Lieut..	128 33	140 00	151 67	163 33

* The maximum pay of a colonel is by law $4,500 per annum, hence less than full 40 per cent. can accrue.

† The maximum pay of a lieutenant colonel is by law $4,000 per annum, hence less than full 40 per cent. can accrue.

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR.
INQUIRIES BY THE SECRETARY INTO THE WORKING, ETC., OF THE DIFFERENT BUREAUS OF HIS DEPARTMENT.

The following letter has been addressed by Secretary Schurz to all the heads of bureaus in the Interior Department :

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1877.

SIR: I desire you to report to me, in writing, at as early a day as possible on the following points :

1. The organization, distribution and method of business in your bureau.
2. The force employed, and the character of their employment in detail.

3. The efficiency of the force, giving your judgment as to the changes that may be desirable in the personnel for the interest of the service.

4. What reductions may be practicable.

5. Your observations as to existing abuses, if any there be, and as to the remedies to be applied.

6. Your views as to changes, if any, that may be desirable, in the business methods of your bureau.

Your report will serve as a basis of future examination.

Very respectfully, C. SCHURZ,
Secretary.

MUCH IN LITTLE.—The New York Inquirer says : “ Within the great and universal the small and tender nestle and find rest. The prairie, that has kept itself all day to the lone traveler a wide, wild wilderness—space on the right of him, space on the left, and space before, broad, silent, dead—at night shows misgivings for its inhospitable greatness. And as the darkness begins to fall the vast stretch of land relents, comes hovering in and centers in a pleasant light seen ahead, and in a well-illuminated home, walled in, comfortable and tidy, from the endless outreach. There the feet, grown weary with the long, waste journey, find repose on ground reclaimed. There, beneath a roof—the first that has struck the eye for miles and miles—the unbounded good-will comes to a point in the breasts of friends, friends to the stranger, to give him good cheer of love and food. The Infinite draws itself in from its interminable spaces sprinkled with stars, to the little nest of birds, to the cradle with a baby in it, to the family sitting-room, dismantled by a boy playing horse with the furniture. Out of the infinite space is hewn the nook of an arbor, where elegant ease and pleasantries may sit ; then there is the quiet yard, with tree and vine, walk and flowers. Out of the high without top, and the deep without bottom, and the broad that has no end, is molded the home, where coming repasts make the house fragrant ; where pictures, music, and books enliven the scene ; where children sport ; where middle-age meets the sturdy demands of life ; where the old rest from their labors. The immense, as seen in the ever-beaming bouquet of suns and nebulae that the longest-sighted telescope cannot see across, tones itself down into a flower-pot in a window. The Infinite Spirit tones itself down from the love that delights to create a world and form the race, to the love that kisses young lips, steadies unsteady feet, holds to the truth of God and rears a sanctuary to His worship.”

THE FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

LIST OF MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE SENATE.

Republicans in roman, Democrats in italic, Independent in SMALL CAPS.]

Term expires.	Term expires.
ALABAMA.	MISSISSIPPI.
1883 George E. Spencer.	1881 Branch K. Bruce.
1883 John T. Morgan.	1883 L. Q. C. Lamar.
ARKANSAS.	MISSOURI.
1879 S. W. Dorsey.	1879 Louis V. Bogy.
1883 A. H. Garland.	1881 F. M. Cockrell.
CALIFORNIA.	NEBRASKA.
1879 Aaron A. Sargent.	1881 A. S. Paddock.
1881 Newton Booth.	1883 Alvin Saunders.
COLORADO.	NEVADA.
1879 Jerome B. Chaffee.	1879 John P. Jones.
1883 Henry M. Teller.	1881 William Sharon.
CONNECTICUT.	NEW HAMPSHIRE.
1879 Wm. H. Barnum.	1879 B. Wadleigh.
1881 William W. Eaton.	1883 Edwin H. Rollins.
DELAWARE.	NEW JERSEY.
1881 Thomas F. Bayard.	1881 T. F. Randolph.
1883 Eli Saulsbury.	1883 John R. McPherson.
FLORIDA.	NEW YORK.
1879 Simeon B. Conover.	1879 Roscoe Conkling.
1881 Charles W. Jones.	1881 Francis Kernan.
GEORGIA.	NORTH CAROLINA.
1879 John B. Gordon.	1879 A. S. Merrimon.
1883 Benjamin H. Hill.	1883 M. W. Ransom.
ILLINOIS.	OHIO.
1879 R. J. Oglesby.	1879 Stanley Matthews.
1883 DAVID DAVIS.	1881 A. G. Thurman.
INDIANA.	OREGON.
1879 Oliver P. Morton.	1879 John H. Mitchell.
1881 J. E. McDonald.	1883 Lafayette F. Grover.
IOWA.	PENNSYLVANIA.
1879 William B. Allison.	1879 J. D. Cameron.
1883 S. J. Kirkwood.	1881 William A. Wallace.
KANSAS.	RHODE ISLAND.
1879 John J. Ingalls.	1881 A. E. Burnside.
1883 P. B. Plumb.	1883 Henry B. Anthony.
KENTUCKY.	SOUTH CAROLINA.
1879 T. C. McCreery.	1879 John J. Patterson.
1883 James B. Beck.	1883 D. T. Corbin, (C.)
LOUISIANA.	TENNESSEE.
1879 (Vacancy.)	1881 James E. Bailey.
1883 W. P. Kellogg, (C.)	1883 Isham G. Harris.
MAINE.	TEXAS.
1879 Hannibal Hamlin.	1881 Samuel B. Murey.
1883 James G. Blaine.	1883 Richard Coke.
MARYLAND.	VERMONT.
1879 George R. Dennis.	1879 Justin S. Morrill.
1881 W. P. Whyte.	1881 Geo. F. Edmunds.
MASSACHUSETTS.	VIRGINIA.
1881 Henry L. Dawes.	1881 Robert E. Withers.
1883 George F. Hoar.	1883 John W. Johnston.
MICHIGAN.	WEST VIRGINIA.
1881 I. P. Christiancy.	1881 Frank Hereford.
1883 Thomas W. Ferry.	1883 Henry G. Davis.
MINNESOTA.	WISCONSIN.
1881 S. J. R. McMillan.	1879 Timothy O. Howe.
1883 William Windom.	1881 Angus Cameron.

Republicans, 41; Democrats, 33; Independent, 1; Vacancy, 1.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[Republicans in roman, Democrats in italic.]

ALABAMA.	2. William F. Slemons.
1. John T. Jones.	3. Jordan E. Cravens.
2. Hilary A. Herbert.	4. Thomas M. Gunter.
3. J. N. Williams.
4. C. M. Shelley.	CALIFORNIA.
5. Robert F. Ligon.	1. Horace Davis.
6. G. W. Hewitt.	2. Horace F. Page.
7. William H. Forney.	3. J. K. Luttrell.
8. W. W. Garth.	4. Romualdo Pacheco.
ARKANSAS.
1. Lucien C. Gause.	COLORADO.

James B. Belford.

CONNECTICUT.

1. George M. Landers.
2. James Phelps.
3. John T. Walt.
4. Leri Warner.

DELAWARE.

James Williams.

FLORIDA.

1. William J. Purman.
2. Horatio Bisbee, Jr.

GEORGIA.

1. Julian Hartridge.
2. William E. Smith.
3. Philip Cook.
4. Henry R. Harris.
5. Milton A. Candler.
6. James H. Blount.
7. William H. Felton.
8. Alex. H. Stephens.
9. H. P. Bell.

ILLINOIS.

1. William Aldrich.
2. Carter H. Harrison.
3. Lorenz Brentano.
4. William Lathrop.
5. H. C. Burchard.
6. Thos. J. Henderson.
7. Philip C. Hayes.
8. Greenbury L. Fort.
9. Thomas A. Boyd.
10. B. F. Marsh.
11. R. W. Knapp.
12. Wm. M. Springer.
13. Thomas F. Tipton.
14. Joseph G. Cannon.
15. John R. Eden.
16. W. A. J. Sparks.
17. Wm. R. Morrison.
18. William Hartzell.
19. R. W. Townshend.

INDIANA.

1. Benoni S. Fuller.
2. James R. Cobb.
3. George A. Bicknell.
4. Leonidas Sexton.
5. Thomas M. Browne.
6. Milton S. Robinson.
7. John Hanna.
8. Morton C. Hunter.
9. Michael D. White.
10. William H. Calkins.
11. James L. Evans.
12. A. H. Hamilton.
13. John H. Baker.

IOWA.

1. J. C. Stone.
2. Hiram Price.
3. T. W. Burdick.
4. N. C. Deering.
5. Rush Clark.
6. Ezekiel S. Sampson.
7. H. J. B. Cummings.
8. W. F. Sapp.
9. Addison Oliver.

KANSAS.

1. William A. Phillips.
2. Dudley C. Haskell.
3. Thomas Ryan.

KENTUCKY.

1. Andrew R. Boone.
2. James McKenzie.
3. John W. Caldwell.
4. J. Proctor Knott.
5. Albert S. Willis.
6. John G. Carlisle.
7. J. C. S. Blackburn.
8. Milton J. Durham.
9. Thomas Turner.
10. John B. Clarke.

LOUISIANA.

1. Randall L. Gibson.
2. E. John Ellis.
3. Chester B. Darrall.
4. George L. Smith.
5. John E. Leonard.
6. Charles E. Nash.

MAINE.

1. Thomas B. Reed.
2. William P. Frye.
3. Stephen D. Lindsey.
4. Llewellyn Powers.
5. Eugene Hale.

MARYLAND.

1. Daniel M. Henry.
2. Charles B. Roberts.
3. William Kimmell.
4. Thomas Swann.
5. Eli J. Henkle.
6. William Walsh.

MASSACHUSETTS.

1. William W. Crapo.
2. Benjamin W. Harris.
3. Walbridge A. Field.
4. Leopold Morse.
5. Nathaniel P. Banks.
6. George B. Loring.
7. Benjamin F. Butler.
8. William Claflin.
9. William W. Rice.
10. Amasa Norcross.
11. George D. Robinson.

MICHIGAN.

1. Alpheus S. Williams.
2. Edwin Willits.
3. Jonas H. McGowan.
4. E. W. Keightley.
5. John W. Stone.
6. Mark S. Brewer.
7. Omar D. Conger.
8. Charles C. Ellsworth.
9. Jay A. Hubbell.

MINNESOTA.

1. Mark H. Dunnell.
2. Horace B. Strait.
3. Jacob H. Stewart.

MISSISSIPPI.

1. H. L. Muldrow.
2. Van H. Manning.
3. Hernando D. Money.
4. Otho R. Singleton.
5. Charles E. Hooker.
6. J. R. Chalmers.

MISSOURI.

1. Anthony Ittner.
2. Nathan Cole.
3. L. S. Metcalfe.
4. Robert A. Hatcher.
5. Richard P. Bland.
6. C. H. Morgan.
7. Thos. T. Crittenden.
8. Benj. J. Franklin.
9. David Rea.
10. H. M. Pollard.
11. J. B. Clark, Jr.
12. John M. Glover.
13. Aylett H. Buckner.

NEBRASKA.

Frank Welch.

NEVADA.

Thomas Wren.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

1. Frank Jones.
2. James F. Briggs.
3. Henry W. Blair.

NEW JERSEY.

1. C. H. Sinnickson.
2. John H. Pugh.
3. Miles Ross.

4. Alvah A. Clark. 5. Augustus W. Cutter. 6. Thomas B. Peddie. 7. A. A. Hurdenbergh. NEW YORK. 1. James W. Covert. 2. William D. Veeder. 3. S. B. Chittenden. 4. Archibald M. Bliss. 5. Nicholas Muller. 6. Samuel S. Cox. 7. Anthony Eickhoff. 8. Anson G. McCook. 9. Fernando Wood. 10. Abram S. Hewitt. 11. Benjamin A. Willis. 12. Clarkson N. Potter. 13. John H. Ketcham. 14. George M. Beebe. 15. Stephen L. Mayham. 16. Terence J. Quinn. 17. Martin I. Townsend. 18. Andrew Williams. 19. Amaziah B. James. 20. John H. Starin. 21. Solomon Bundy. 22. George A. Bagley. 23. William J. Bacon. 24. William H. Baker. 25. Frank Hiscock. 26. John H. Camp. 27. Elbridge G. Lapham. 28. J. W. Dwight. 29. J. N. Hungerford. 30. E. Kirke Hart. 31. Charles B. Benedict. 32. Daniel N. Lockwood. 33. G. W. Patterson. NORTH CAROLINA. 1. Jesse J. Yeates.	2. Curtis H. Brogden. 3. Alfred M. Waddell. 4. Joseph J. Davis. 5. Alfred M. Scales. 6. Walter L. Steele. 7. William M. Robbins. 8. Robert B. Vance. OHIO. 1. Milton Sayler. 2. Henry B. Banning. 3. Mills Gardner. 4. John A. McMahon. 5. Americus V. Rice. 6. Jacob D. Cox. 7. Henry L. Dickey. 8. J. Warren Keifer. 9. James S. Jones. 10. Charles Foster. 11. Henry S. Neal. 12. Thomas Ewing. 13. Milton I. Southard. 14. E. B. Finley. 15. N. H. Van Vorhes. 16. Lorenzo Danford. 17. William McKinley. 18. James Monroe. 19. James A. Garfield. 20. Amos Townsend. OREGON. Richard Williams. PENNSYLVANIA. 1. Chapman Freeman. 2. Charles O'Neill. 3. Samuel J. Randall. 4. William D. Kelley. 5. Alfred O. Harmer. 6. William Ward. 7. Isaac N. Evans. 8. Heister Clymer.	9. A. H. Smith. 10. Samuel A. Bridges. 11. Francis D. Collins. 12. Hendrick B. Wright. 13. James B. Reilly. 14. John W. Killinger. 15. Edward Overton. 16. John I. Mitchell. 17. Jacob M. Campbell. 18. W. S. Stenger. 19. Levi Maish. 20. Levi A. Mackey. 21. Jacob Turney. 22. Russell Errett. 23. Thomas M. Bayne. 24. W. S. Shallenberger. 25. Henry White. 26. John M. Thompson. 27. Lewis H. Watson. RHODE ISLAND. 1. Benjamin T. Eames. 2. Latimer W. Ballou. SOUTH CAROLINA. 1. Joseph H. Rainey. 2. Richard H. Cain. 3. D. Wyatt Aiken. 4. John H. Evins. 5. Robert Smalls. TENNESSEE. 1. James H. Randolph. 2. J. M. Thornburgh. 3. George G. Dibrell. 4. Haywood Y. Riddle. 5. John M. Bright. 6. John F. House. 7. W. C. Whitthorne. 8. John D. C. Atkins.	9. Wm. P. Caldwell. 10. Casey Young. TEXAS. 1. John H. Reagan. 2. David B. Culberson. 3. J. W. Throckmorton. 4. Roger Q. Mills. 5. D. C. Giddings. 6. Gustave Schleicher. VERMONT. 1. Charles H. Joyce. 2. Dudley C. Denison. 3. George W. Hendee. VIRGINIA. 1. Beverly G. Douglass. 2. John Goode, Jr. 3. Gilbert C. Walker. 4. Joseph Jorgenson. 5. George C. Cabell. 6. J. Randolph Tucker. 7. John T. Harris. 8. Eppa Hunton. 9. A. L. Pridemore. WEST VIRGINIA. 1. Benjamin Wilson. 2. Benjamin F. Martin. 3. John E. Kenna. WISCONSIN. 1. Charles G. Williams. 2. Lucien B. Caswell. 3. George C. Hazleton. 4. William P. Lynde. 5. Edward S. Bragg. 6. Gabriel Bouck. 7. H. L. Humphrey. 8. Thaddeus C. Pound.
--	---	--	---

Republicans, 144; Democrats, 148.

LIST OF SENATE COMMITTEES.

[The first-named on each committee is the Chairman.]

Privileges and Elections—Morton, Mitchell, Wadleigh, Cameron of Wisconsin, McMillan, Hoar, Saulsbury, Merrimon, Hill.
Foreign Relations—Hamlin, Morton, Conkling, Howe, McCreery, Bogy, Eaton, Johnston.
Finance—Morrill, Dawes, Ferry, Jones of Nevada, Allison, Howe, Bayard, Kernan, Wallace.
Appropriations—Windom, Sargent, Allison, Dorsey, Blaine, Davis of West Virginia, Withers, Eaton, Beck.
Commerce—Conkling, Spencer, Burnside, McMillan, Patterson, Gordon, Dennis, Ransom, Randolph.
Manufactures—Booth, Bruce, Rollins, Johnston, McPherson.
Agriculture—Paddock, Sharon, Hoar, Davis of West Virginia, Gordon.
Military Affairs—Spencer, Wadleigh, Burnside, Hamlin, Teller, Plumb, Randolph, Cockrell, Maxey.
Naval Affairs—Sargent, Anthony, Conover, Blaine, Kirkwood, Whyte, McPherson.
Judiciary—Edmunds, Conkling, Howe, Christiancy, Davis of Illinois, Thurman, McDonald.
Post Offices and Post Roads—Hamlin, Ferry, Jones of Nevada, Paddock, Conover, Kirkwood, Saulsbury, Maxey, Bailey.
Public Lands—Oglesby, Paddock, Booth, Chaffee, Plumb, McDonald, Jones of Florida, Grover, Garland.
Private Land Claims—Thurman, Bayard, Bogy, Edmunds, Christiancy.
Indian Affairs—Allison, Oglesby, Ingalls, Saunders, Hoar, McCreery, Coke.
Pensions—Ingalls, Bruce, Teller, Kirkwood, Davis of Illinois, Withers, Bailey.
Revolutionary Claims—Johnston, Jones of Florida, Hill, Dawes, McMillan.
Claims—McMillan, Mitchell, Cameron of Wisconsin, sin, Teller, Hoar, Corbin, Hereford, Harris, Morgan.

District of Columbia—Dorsey, Spencer, Ingalls, Rollins, Saunders, Merrimon, Barnum.
Patents—Wadleigh, Booth, Chaffee, Kernan, Morgan.
Public Buildings and Grounds—Dawes, Morrill, Hamlin, Saulsbury, Jones of Florida.
Territories—Patterson, Christiancy, Chaffee, Garland, Saunders, Grover, Hereford.
Railroads—Mitchell, Howe, Dawes, Dorsey, Teller, Ferry, Morton, Ransom, Bogy, Barnum, Lamar.
Mines and Mining—Sharon, Chaffee, Kirkwood, Plumb, Hereford, Coke, Hill.
Revision of the Laws—Christiancy, Ingalls, Davis of Illinois, Wallace, Kernan.
Education and Labor—Burnside, Patterson, Morrill, Bruce, Sharon, Gordon, Maxey, Bailey, Lamar.
On Civil Service and Retrenchment—Blaine, Oglesby, Patterson, Booth, McCreery, Whyte, Beck.
To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate—Jones of Nevada, Rollins, Dennis.
Printing—Anthony, Sargent, Whyte.
Library—Howe, Edmunds, Ransom.
Rules—Ferry, Hamlin, Merrimon.
Engrossed Bills—Bayard, Withers, Anthony.
Enrolled Bills—Conover, Paddock, Grover.
Levees of Mississippi River—Bruce, Blaine, Conover, Cockrell, Harris.
To Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service—Chaffee, Conkling, Windom, Merrimon, Eaton.
Transportation Routes to the Seaboard—Cameron of Wisconsin, Windom, Conover, Burnside, Saunders, Davis of Virginia, Harris, Lamar, Beck.

NOTE.—A few changes will necessarily be made in the above list on reassembling of the Senate.

DEPOT OF Botanic Medicines,
CORK-FILLING WATER COOLERS
AND REFRIGERATORS.

—
LARRABEE'S
Rheumatic Liniment
OR PAIN EXTRACTOR,
FOR EXTERNAL APPLICATION.

Also of his own preparing, Ginger, Black Pepper, African Cayenne, Mustard, and other Spices, warranted PURE, for family use, in 2 ounces, $\frac{1}{4}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. packages; Sage, Sweet Basil, Summer Savory, Sweet Marjoram, Thyme, and all kinds of Shaker Herbs.

MANUFACTURED BY

Wm. H. RANDLE,

(Successor to E. Larrabee,)

22 South Calvert Street, Baltimore, Maryland.

ESTABLISHED 1862.

D. E. SOMES.

F. C. SOMES.

D. E. SOMES & CO.,

SOLICITORS OF

PATENTS.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

SPECIAL ATTENTION TO EXTENSIONS, RE-
ISSUES, INTERFERENCE CASES, AND TRADE MARKS.

We employ the best artists in drawings and give special attention to the careful wording of the claims.

Information Furnished.

WE REFER, BY PERMISSION, TO

- Hon. James G. Blaine, U. S. Senator, Maine.
- " Z. Chandler, ex-Secretary of the Interior.
- " A. H. O'Grady, ex-U. S. Senator, New Hamp.
- " H. Hamlin, U. S. Senator, Maine.
- " P. W. Hitchcock, U. S. Senator, Nebraska.
- " J. S. Morrill, U. S. Senator, Vermont.
- " J. S. Farnsworth, M. C., Illinois.
- " Wm. S. Holman, ex-M. C., Indiana.
- " H. W. Parker, M. C., New Hampshire.
- " E. H. Rollins, U. S. Senator, New Hampshire.
- " J. W. McClurg, late Governor of Missouri.
- " Wm. Lawrence, M. C., Ohio.
- " Sidney Edgerton, Akron, Ohio.
- " Alexander H. Rice, Governor of Mass.
- " James M. Ashley, Ohio.
- " John Hutchins, Ohio.
- " Robert McKnight, Pennsylvania.
- " E. B. Spaulding, Banker, Buffalo, N. Y.
- " Alfred Ely, Rochester, New York.
- " R. E. Fenton, ex-U. S. Senator, New York.
- " F. E. Spinner, ex-U. S. Treasurer.
- " John N. Goodwin, late Gov. of Arizona.
- " John T. Nixon, Judge U. S. Court, N. J.

CUT THIS OUT
It is Worth $5.00.

To every reader of this magazine who sends us this certificate and \$1.00 we will forward, for one year, "THE TREASURE," a magnificent Illustrated Monthly Journal and Housekeepers' Magazine, and one copy of our new and elegant premium Chromo, entitled a masterpiece of the Dusseldorf School of genre painting, by Prof. Jordan, size 20 $\frac{1}{4}$ by 15 $\frac{1}{4}$, executed in the highest style of art, retail price of which is \$5.00. and a copy of the following beautiful poem descriptive of the Chromo, in elegant illuminated colors for framing:

"ASKING A BLESSING,"

Ay, but wait, good wife, a minute;
I have first a word to say;
Do you know what day to-day is?
Mother, 'tis our wedding-day!

Just as now, we sat at supper
When the guests had gone away:
You sat that side, I sat this side,
Forty years ago to-day!

Then what plans we laid together;
What brave things I meant to do!
Could we dream to-day would find us
At this table—me and you.

Better so, no doubt—and yet I
Sometimes think—I cannot tell—
Had our boy—ah, yes! I know, dear:
Yes, He doeth all things well.

Well, we've had our joys and sorrows,
Shared our smiles as well as tears;
And—the best of all—I've had your Faithful love for forty years.

Poor we've been, but not forsaken;
Grief we've known, but never shame.
Father, for Thy endless mercies,
Still we bless Thy holy name!

AGENTS

This is a rare chance for you to make money. We will pay you large cash commissions and give you exclusive territory. Send us one dollar, avoid unnecessary correspondence, receive your territory, and go to work at once. Upon receipt of which we will forward Agent's outfit, Certificate of Agency, &c.

Address

THE TREASURE PUBLISHING CO.,

No. 49 CEDAR STREET, NEW YORK.

REIGART'S
American and Foreign PATENT AGENCY.

OFFICE: CORNER EIGHTH AND F STS.,

Fronting U. S. Patent and General Post Office,

WASHINGTON, D. C.,

Where all business relating to patents will be promptly attended to.

DRAWINGS, SPECIFICATIONS, ETC.,

Executed in the best manner by the undersigned,
Late an Examiner in the U. S. Patent Office.

J. Franklin Reigart,

Solicitor

If brothers will SEND in the name of some good business man, who will attend to the business for them, we will forward the necessary blanks and instructions,

AND YOU can then make application through him, to become a member of the "ODD FELLOWS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY," of Chicago, Illinois.

Each member is assessed according to his age or liability, so that the young men do not have to pay for the old.

Your heirs

WILL RECEIVE

a benefit which is limited to $5,000 and when 80 per cent. of the total amount exceeds $5,000, the amount to be collected from each member decreases

IN

the same ratio. We mail to each member a notice, giving the name, number of Lodge, and date of death, and the assessments are due days from the date of said notice. We have received more members the first year than any association ever organized for the same purpose, and will come when the

THIRTY

DAYS

"O. F. B. SOCIETY," of Chicago, Ill., will have a larger membership than any Life Insurance Company ever organized.

Office: 112 E. RANDOLPH STREET,

S. L. HURST, Secretary and Actuary,

CHICAGO, ILL.

Pennsylvania Railroad.

THE OLD ESTABLISHED ROUTE AND SHORT LINE

BETWEEN

BOSTON, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BAL-TIMORE, WASHINGTON, RICHMOND,
WATKIN'S GLEN, CHICAGO, CIN-CINNATI, ROCHESTER, LOUIS-VILLE, PITTSBURGH,
ST. LOUIS.

And all parts of the West, Northwest and Southwest.

PARLOR AND PALACE SLEEPING CARS
ON ALL THROUGH TRAINS.

Tickets Sold, and information given in regard to Trains, &c., at the following

OFFICES OF THE COMPANY:

BOSTON.—Nos. 203 and 205 Washington Street.

NEW YORK.—No. 526 Broadway, No. 1 Astor
House, No. 944 Broadway, No. 8 Battery Place, Depot foot of Desbrosses Street, Depot foot of Courtlandt Street, Depot Jersey City.

PHILADELPHIA.—No. 838 Chestnut Street, S. E.
Corner Broad and Chestnut Streets, No. 116 Market Street, Depot Thirty-second and Market Streets, Depot foot of Market Street, Depot Front and Berks Streets; No. 4 Chelton Avenue, Germantown.

BALTIMORE.—N. E. Corner Baltimore and Calvert Streets; Calvert Station, N. C. Railway; Union Depot, Charles Street.

WASHINGTON.—N. E. Corner Thirteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, N. E. Corner Sixth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue; Depot Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, Corner Sixth and B Streets.

RICHMOND.—No. 826 Main Street; Depot R., F.
and P. R. R., Corner Eighth and Byrd Streets; Exchange Hotel.

And Principal Ticket Offices on the Route, in New England and the South.

FRANK THOMSON, D. M. BOYD, JR.,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.

R. H. MARSH,

940 F St., Washington, D. C.

CLAIMS, PATENTS, INSURANCE.

Improved Ventilator for Railway Closets.

Patented April 11, 1876.

The annexed cut represents a section of the water-closet seat and basin pipe of a railway car, with the Improved Ventilator attachment under the floor of the car.

The motion of the train in either direction causes the air to pass downward through the forward funnel c, creating a vacuum at the base of the pipe a, thus securing a downward current through the basin pipe B.

The attention of Railway Companies and all others interested in the health and comfort of the traveling public is invited to the Improved Ventilator, represented in the above cut. Its simplicity commends it to all who have examined it. It effectually prevents the upward draft in the discharge pipe of Railway water-closets, thereby cutting off the which have hitherto found their way into the cars through the closet hoppers. The Improved Ventilator has been recently tried upon the cars of the Maine Central Railroad and the Portland and Rochester Road, and the following certificates confirm fully the advantages claimed for it by the inventor:

NOXIOUS GASES, DUST, WIND, AND CINDERS,

MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD,
PORTLAND, ME., January 4, 1877.

LUTHER JONES, Esq., Lewiston, Me.:

DEAR SIR: We have now on the cars of this road sixteen of your Improved Ventilators for water closets. We find they possess all the advantages you claim for them, and exactly answer the purpose for which they are intended.

Yours truly,

PAYSON TUCKER,
Superintendent.

PORTLAND AND ROCHESTER RAILROAD,
PORTLAND, ME., January 31, 1877

LUTHER JONES:

DEAR SIR: We have tried your Ventilator for water closets. It works first-rate, and is one of the most desirable improvements for the comfort of the traveling public that has been made. We shall use them on all our passenger cars.

Yours truly,

J. M. LUNT,
Superintendent.

THE TRAVELING PUBLIC

will at once recognize the vital necessity of this improvement and fully appreciate the comfort and protection which it affords. It can be placed upon any car at a small expense, and without any alteration of car. Upon receipt of five dollars one will be furnished for trial.

Address

Luther Jones,

Lewiston, Maine,

SOLE AGENT FOR THE NEW ENGLAND STATES.

Press Notices of the Republic Magazine.

It contains much valuable reading.—Eagle, Union City, Ind.

Presents an attractive table of contents.—News, Waldoboro', Me.

It is, in fact, a record of the nation.—Locomotive, Stuart, Iowa.

We cannot too highly recommend it.—News, Fayetteville, Ark.

A sterling and ably edited Magazine.—Grand Era, Baton Rouge, La.

Commends itself to us very highly.—Pioneer, St. John the Baptist, La.

Supplies a want long felt by public men.—Chronicle, Lebanon, Mo.

Its contents are varied and interesting.—The Shaft, Osage City, Kansas.

Replete with matters of more than ordinary interest.—Record, Butler, Mo.

Should find its way into every household in the Union.—Mail, Dakota City, Neb.

A seventy-page monthly, and is one of the best of our exchanges.—Globe, Flint, Mich.

Beyond question the ablest political Magazine published.—Journal, La Cygne, Kansas.

In its particular line it is one of the best monthlies published.—Globe, Golden, Colorado.

The articles are characterized by great ability and moderation.—Sentinel, Lemars, Iowa.

Of all the Magazines on our table, the one we prize the most is The Republic.—Journal, Galva, Ill.

A well-printed and well-managed octavo, each number containing 64 pages.—Morning Star, Dover, N. H.

Some of its contents we have republished in the Pilot—the remainder are all good.—Pilot, Jackson, Miss.

Well filled with interesting and instructive matters pertaining to politics.—Banner, Black River Falls, Wis.

Well conducted and many reliable facts of information can monthly be found in its pages.—Republican, Savannah, Mo.

A neat, sixty-four page monthly Magazine, devoted to the dissemination of political information.—Pilgrim, James Creek, Pa.

It is needless to add that its articles are elaborately and carefully written.—Eastern Chronicle, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

Should have a wide circulation, and it would thus wield an influence for good on the public mind.—Times, Sheboygan, Wis.

We do not know of any work of this size and price that contains so much valuable information.—Gazette, Onawa City, Iowa.

Every political man ought to have this Magazine, as it contains valuable information on the politics of the day.—Record, Buchanan, Mich.

Full of information for politicians, and all interested in the doings of the Government and Government officials.—Times, Perry, Kansas.

The Republic, published at Washington, D. C., at $2 per annum, is one of the best political Magazines in the country.—Sentinel, Centralia, Ill.

It is just what we want and intend to keep on our desk to refer to, as a complete depository of knowledge of current political events.—Review, Decatur, Ill.

A work of decided merit, and almost indispensable to those who wish to keep thoroughly posted in regard to our national affairs.—Gratiot Journal, Ithaca, Mich.

Of immense interest to all who would be well versed in political transactions, and in everything of importance that pertains to the Government.—Republic, Princeton, Wis.

It is a real political Magazine, and should be in the hands of every man who would be informed upon all of the political questions of the day.—Schuyler (Neb.) Register.

If the promise of the number before us be fulfilled by those that follow, it will certainly be one of the most valuable political Magazines ever issued in this country.—Gazette, Lancaster, Ohio.

The Republic is devoted "to the dissemination of political information," and we earnestly recommend it as worthy the active and liberal support of Republicans everywhere.—Celina (Ohio) Journal.

Conducted, as it is, with great ability, it will prove a valuable acquisition to the politicians of the country who are seeking after correct information in this day of enlightened and progressive public opinion.—Citizen and Gazette, Urbana, Ohio.

A new political monthly.—We have received a copy of The Republic, a monthly Magazine devoted to the dissemination of political information. It is a valuable periodical, and one of which we will have more to say at no distant day.—Monitor, Marion, Ind.

The Republic is well printed, will contain not less than forty-eight pages of reading matter, and will be furnished at $2 per annum; single copies 25 cents. Letters may be addressed to the Republic Publishing Company, Washington, D. C.—Free Press, Waltham, Mass.

We commend The Republic, an ably edited magazine, to all persons desiring correct information on matters of a national political character. All questions are discussed in a manner and style not usually within the scope of the daily press.—Marion (Va.) Chronicle.

We have received the first number of The Republic. The times and the necessities of our political relations demand just such a work. Every Republican who wishes to be versed in the real, true history of our Government as it transpires would do well to send for it.—South Jersey Republican, Hammonton, N. J.

The Republic is a publication much needed, and we trust will receive a liberal patronage in Arkansas. The ablest writers and thinkers of the party will contribute to its pages, and we commend it especially to all who wish to keep themselves informed of the views of leading minds on great issues.—Fayetteville (Ark.) News.

We have received No. 2 (April) of The Republic, a monthly magazine published at Washington, D. C. We expressed a favorable opinion of this magazine on receipt of the first number, and it is not necessary to repeat. It is a very useful publication. The entire contents are interesting to all intelligent readers.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Daily Telegraph.

The Republic will be a thesaurus of political literature mainly, and will bring under review, by the ablest statesmen, all matters of political economy and action, with governmental policy and measures. It will embody a large amount of reliable statistics and valuable information, which every intelligent citizen will think it important to have.—Vassar Pioneer, Mich.

The March number of a new monthly Magazine bearing the title of The Republic is on our table. It hails from Washington, D. C., and is devoted to the dissemination of political information. If the promise of this, the initial number, be fulfilled by those to follow, it will certainly be one of the most valuable political Magazines ever issued in this country.—Lancaster (Ohio) Gazette.

The first number of The Republic, now upon our table, contains several able articles upon topics that usually interest reading people irrespective of any political opinions which they may entertain. The subscription price is only $2 per year. More reading matter for the same amount than can be found in most of the monthlies with which we are acquainted.—National Index, Tyler, Smith County, Texas.

JA
R
SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. VI.—No. 1.

JANUARY, 1876.

Whole No. 35.

Contents:

	PAGE
The Work of the Forty-Fourth Congress.....	1
Product and Movement of the Precious Metals.....	7
Henry Wilson, Eighteenth Vice-President of the United States.....	8
Navigation Laws. Chapters V. and VI. (To be continued).....	17
Slavonian Europe.....	26
The School Question.....	30
The Revised Statutes.....	32
Church and State—President Grant's and Mr. Blaine's Proposed Amend- ments.....	38
Education in Virginia.....	42
An Important Measure.....	46
Labor in Europe and America.....	47
The Democratic House.....	53
Executive and Department Doings.....	55
The Inter-Oceanic Canal.....	62
List of Senators and Representatives in the Forty-Fourth Congress....	63

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

1876.

Vol. 6.

PROSPECTUS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its sixth volume with the Centennial year, January, 1876.

It has grown in public favor, and has received substantial encouragement from every State and Territory in the Union.

Its early promises have been made good. Its pages have been filled with political information, with the suggestions of wisdom growing out of experience, with facts and figures carefully arranged, making a fund of knowledge, of itself, a valuable text-book to all interested in Governmental affairs.

In view of the Presidential election, which takes place in 1876, the REPUBLIC desires to increase its field of usefulness by adding to its list of subscribers. It already numbers among its readers, many of the most thoughtful and intelligent citizens of the country. The deep interest expressed by them in the work, is to the publishers, evidence of an appreciation that thousands of others would entertain of the REPUBLIC, could it be brought to their attention. Will not our friends take upon themselves the slight labor of inviting other good citizens to add their names and their influence to a magazine that is published in the interest of public morality and good government.

In the future, as in the past, the REPUBLIC will advocate an honest administration of Government, whether municipal, State or National.

It will favor loyalty, honesty, economy, and personal ability as pre-requisites for office.

It will give credit where credit is due; and impartial criticism whenever required.

It will seek to hold up intelligence as the safeguard to National safety, and will defend our free-school system as essential to its preservation.

It will advocate improvements, that experience may commend, in the education of the young; but will oppose all efforts to divide the public-school funds, or to introduce into the schools sectarian influences.

It will advocate the perpetuation of the Republican party as the best, if not the only means to secure the preservation of the Union, and the impartial execution of the laws.

It will labor earnestly to bring about such reforms as the spirit of progress may demand, and in all things seek to present those methods of administration, which the wisdom and experience of a century have confirmed.

It will give to its readers a clear insight into the various branches of Government, by a faithful record of their doings.

These are among the leading features of the work to which the REPUBLIC is devoted. It pledges anew its best energies to make the Centennial volumes worthy the Nation it serves, and the year it enters upon.

To the Republican press of the country, co-laborers in the grand mission of preserving good government, the REPUBLIC sends greeting and thanks. If increased activity can merit a continuation of the good will expressed, our brethren of the press will still extend their hands in generous welcome. The Presidential campaign will bring upon all, increased responsibilities and new demands. The REPUBLIC will bear its share and perform its duty without fear or favor, keeping ever in view, that the highest reward that patriotism can win, is the consciousness that its efforts have advanced civilization and contributed to the cause of good government.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

Vignaud
11-23-27

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VI. WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY, 1876. No. 1.

THE WORK OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Monday, December 6, 1875, was a cloudy day. The face of nature was shorn of brightness. The sun was veiled and the air obscure and chill with mist. Signs of mourning draped the Capitol. From that proud pile a funeral train had recently descended, bearing away the lifeless form of Henry Wilson, the late Vice-President of the United States. Up the stairways and into the vast edifice poured an eager multitude, unmindful of the distinguished dead, and kindled with the excitement of that living scene. On no previous opening of Congress was there a greater throng. A Republican Senate with a Democratic House had never before been witnessed.

THE SENATE CHAMBER.

The hall of the American Senate had been prepared with unusual taste and elegance by the faithfulness and care of the Sergeant-at-Arms, Major John R. French, a sterling and excellent officer. It remained still dressed in the rich dark emblems of the recent obsequies. At 12 o'clock M. the Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, Senator from Michigan, and President pro tem. of the Senate, struck the gavel, and in a moment the great assemblage was hushed to silence. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Sunderland, of the Presbyterian Church, chaplain of the Senate. The usual preliminary forms were immediately dispatched. Senator Boutwell, of Massachusetts, then arose to announce in the Senate the death of the Vice-President of the United States, and give notice of an early day when resolutions in his memory would be proposed for the consideration of the Senate.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A peculiar interest centered in this great forum of the people's delegates; because here for the first time in nearly a score of years was the Democratic party to be invested with the dominant power. The proceedings for the organization of the House had been settled in the Democratic caucus the Saturday before. To witness the vision had come together from far and near the leaders and the led of this old party of strange and saddened history. The motley crowds surged through the halls which were crammed to their utmost capacity above and below. No hungrier set of men was ever gathered beneath the dome of the Capitol.

At the appointed hour the Hon. Edward McPherson, Clerk of the last House of Representatives, appeared at the desk and called to order. By this time all the doorways and corridors were packed with a dense mass of human beings; men, women, and children pressed together well nigh to suffocation.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE.

The first thing in order was the roll-call of the members elect, during which the clerk announced in regard to the credentials of certain members from Louisiana and New York points of doubt, which he submitted to the decision of the House. At the close of the call it was found that 286 members had answered to their names, some half dozen of the members elect not having yet arrived. Representative Lamar, from the State of Mississippi, then moved the election of a Speaker preparatory to the organization of the House. The motion being agreed to on the part of the Democrats, he put in nomination Hon. Michael C. Kerr, a member from the State of Indiana. The Republicans nominated Hon. James G. Blaine, a member from the State of Maine. The result of the election was as follows :

Whole number of votes cast, 282; necessary to a choice, 142, of which—

Michael C. Kerr	received	173
James G. Blaine	“	106
Alexander Campbell	“	1
Wm. B. Anderson	“	1
A. S. Williams	“	1

giving Mr. Kerr a majority of 64 votes over all. The Speaker-elect was then conducted to the chair by Messrs. Randall and Blaine. After a brief address from Mr. Kerr, the oldest member in continuous service on the floor, Hon. William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, administered to him the oath of office. A message from the Senate was received, informing the House that a quorum was present, and proposing the customary committees to inform the President of the fact.

The Speaker then proceeded to the swearing in of the members, during which, a question being raised on the reception of Mr. Morey, claiming a seat from Louisiana, the first issue was joined between the majority and minority, and a spirited discussion ensued. The Republicans fairly won their point and carried it in triumph. Mr. Morey was sworn and permitted to take his seat. It was a sight, indeed, to behold. In a House where the Democrats have a clear working majority of more than sixty members, and among whom it is said there are some eighty ex-rebel officers, to witness the reading of the two forms of oath, which told the work that each man of them had done in the terrible history of the past, and to see the half dozen or so of colored members standing forward among the rest, the fruit of the agony which had lifted them from bondage—a bondage which to perpetuate, so many of their now fellow members had exerted their utmost power in the protracted horrors of a bloody civil war—all this was calculated to fill, as it did, the mind of the thoughtful observer with deep and serious reflection. The completion of the organization of the House was then made on a resolution moved by Mr. Lamar. George M. Adams, of Kentucky, was elected Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Forty-Fourth Congress. John G. Thompson, of Ohio, was elected Sergeant-at-Arms. L. H. Fitzhugh, of Texas, was elected Doorkeeper. James M. Stewart, of Virginia, was elected Postmaster, and Rev. I. L. Townsend, of the Episcopal Church of the District of Columbia, was elected Chaplain. A message was then sent to the Senate, informing that body of the organization of the House and its readiness to proceed to business. A committee was also appointed to wait on the President and inform him that the Congress was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, submitted resolutions proposing the rules of the Forty-third Congress, with the exception of Nos. 166, 167; and also proposing a committee of five, consisting of the Speaker and four members to be named by him, to revise the rules of the House and to propose alterations and amendments to the same. These resolutions were adopted.

The rules which were thus excluded are as follows: “166. All motions to suspend the rules, except where they may be suspended by a majority, shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority, as in case of the previous question. January 20, 1874.” “167. Whenever a question is pending before the House, the Speaker shall not entertain any motion of a dilatory character, except one motion to adjourn and one motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn. But the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of any bill or joint resolution shall not be ordered during the first day of its consideration unless two-thirds of the members present shall second the demand: Provided, That this rule shall not apply to House resolutions offered in the morning hour of Monday: and provided further, That it shall not apply to any proposition to appropriate the money, the credit, or other property of the United States, except the annual appropriation bills. February 1, 1875.” A resolution was then adopted relating to the drawing of seats, and the House adjourned.

SECOND DAY.

In the Senate were presented the credentials of Hon. James E. English, from Connecticut, to take the seat of Orris L. Ferry, deceased during the recess. Mr. Adams, the Clerk of the House, announced a message from that body informing the Senate of its organization and the appointment of a committee to wait on the President; after which the Senate took a recess; at one o'clock the Senate was called to order, and the annual message of the President was submitted and read.

THE MESSAGE.

This document is longer than the previous messages of President Grant, and presents to the country questions of the gravest consideration. It commences with a review of the progress and prosperity of the Republic during the first century of its existence, and is a clear and powerful résumé of a growth and strength almost unequalled in history.

INTELLIGENCE.

It then discusses the necessity of the universal spread of intelligence among the people; and suggests an amendment to the Constitution, to be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, making the education of the children of the country, in a system of free public schools, compulsory; forbidding in such schools the teaching of religious, atheistic, or pagan tenets; and prohibiting all national aid, directly or indirectly, to any religious sect or denomination. It suggests the fact that at the present rate of increase the value of church property by the year 1900 will amount to $3,000,000,000; and that the contemplation of so vast a property may lead to sequestration, through violence and blood. To avoid this result, it suggests the taxation of all property equally, whether church or corporation, exempting only the resting places of the dead, and possibly, with proper restrictions, church edifices. It presents a flattering view of our foreign relations—reciting the gratifying fact that Portugal has abolished servitude in her colonies, and humanely counseling legislation to prohibit American citizens holding slaves in any other country or having interest therein; also, announcing the reparation of Chili in the case of the whale-ship Return, seized without sufficient cause more than forty years ago; and the decision of the arbitrator in favor of our Government and against that of the United States of Colombia for the seizure and detention of the United States steamer Montijo; likewise the conclusion of a reciprocity treaty with the King of the Hawaiian Islands; and an arrangement with the Spanish Government for the payment of the sum of $80,000 for the benefit of the surviving sufferers of the ship Virginus. It discusses, in the clearest and calmest manner, the affairs of Cuba, and the complications and evils, which increase in magnitude every succeeding year, from the unhappy condition of that distracted and almost exhausted Island. It concludes that the occasion has not arrived for the recognition either of its independence or of belligerent rights to the insurgents; but plainly intimating that the time may come when it will be the duty of this Government to consider the question of mediation or intervention. The Message also treats of the "Free Zone," as it is called, a project of Mexican legislation applied to certain States of that Republic along our Texan border, whereby much injury accrues to our revenue as well as to honest commercial enterprise. The depredations on our people continue, and the complications remain as yet unsettled—no adequate means of suppression having as yet been applied. The joint commission for the adjustment of American and Mexican claims is bringing its labors to a close. The questions of difference between this Government and that of Venezuela have been put in the way of final adjustment by the recognition on the part of that power of her just obligations to the United States. A treaty has been formed with Belgium regarding commerce and navigation; and conventions established with the Mexican Republic for the further extension of the joint committee upon claims; with the Hawaiian Islands for commercial reciprocity, and with the Ottoman Empire for extradition. The Message treats of the work and continuance of the Court of Commissioners on Alabama Claims—showing that of the 1,382 claims presented, a little more than half have been adjudicated, and recommending suitable legislation to enable it to finish the business before it; at the same time suggesting that Congress should, by law, create some court or jurisdiction for the relief of aliens upon claims against the United States. The Message discusses the value and necessity of telegraphic communication in the transaction of business; reciting the condition of the first ocean telegraph cable, the action of the French Government, in 1869, to a new company, which completed the laying of their cable between France and this country in July of that year; the subsequent laying of a third cable direct from this country to the Islands of Great Britain by the United States Direct Cable Company; and suggesting certain proposals in regard to them, which are -

1. The landing of the lines between this and any other country to secure equal and impartial rights.

2. The prohibition of combinations of lines for the purpose of controlling the rates of transmission.

3. Compelling the lines to give precedence to the official messages of the Governments they connect.

4. Retaining the power of the Governments to fix a limit to the rates of messages sent from their shores.

The message goes on to state that the executive will be governed in his actions on this subject by the above principles until Congress shall have regulated these vast interests by law.

FRAUDULENT CITIZENSHIP.

The message calls attention to the evils of fraudulent naturalization and expatriation, reciting the fact of many and frequent cases of dishonesty by which it is sought to impose upon this Government. The President thinks that more definite legislation should be had upon this subject, as well likewise upon the status of American women who marry foreigners, and of children born of American parents resident abroad, and also to give legal effect to marriages of American citizens contracted in foreign countries.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

The message then treats of the finances of the country elaborately and comprehensively, showing that the receipts from cusoms for the last fiscal year have been $157,187,722.33, showing a decrease from the year before of $5,935,111.34, and the receipts from internal revenue for the same period of $110,007,493.52, an increase of $7,597,703.53 over the year before. The Treasurer's report sets out a complete view of the workings of the department for the last year, and also contains recommendations for further legislation on important points. The message continues discussing the importance and necessity of specie resumption at least by the first day of January, 1879, and earlier, if possible, and suggests certain points for the action of Congress in furtherance of this end as follows:

1. A repeal of so much of the legal-tender act as makes the notes receivable for debts contracted after January 1, 1877, thus securing quotations at real, not fictitious values.

2. Authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem not exceeding two million dollars monthly of legal-tender notes by issuing in their stead a long bond at 3.65 per cent. of denomination, from $50 to $1,000 each, thus obviating redemption in large sums suddenly.

3. Giving power to the Secretary of the Treasury to accumulate gold for final redemption, by increasing revenue and curtailing expenses. To increase the revenue by restoring the duty on tea and coffee would add some $18,000,000 to the present amount received from imports, while the duties on articles entering into manufactures of all sorts might be measurably, if not wholly, remitted. Another source of accumulation would be devising some better method of verifying claims against the Government, especially those growing out of the late war. Many of these claims are most likely wholly fraudulent, or at least excessive; they are urged upon fictitious testimony, and in many other ways known only to the unscrupulous. An efficient remedy here would cut off a large drain upon the resources of the Treasury.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The message submits the documents pertaining to this department with the specification of the following points requiring Congressional action:

1. The necessity of making $300,000 of the appropriation for the Subsistence department available before the beginning of the next fiscal year.

2. The enactment of a system of annuities for families of deceased officers.

3. The repeal of the law abolishing mileage and a return to the old system.

4. The trial with torpedoes under the Corps of Engineers, with appropriations for the same.

5. A permanent organization for the Signal Service Corps.

6. Appropriation for continuing the compilation of the official records of the war.

THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The Message asserts the present satisfactory condition of our Navy for a people situated as we are, and our dispositions for peace. Fifteen of the single turreted monitors have been substantially rebuilt, and are ready for sea as soon as they can be manned and put in commission. The five double turreted monitors, the most powerful of our vessels of war, are undergoing repairs and could be put to sea in the course of six months. These, with two iron torpedo-boats now ready, make a fleet for home defense equal to any force that can readily be brought against it. Our wooden Navy comprises some forty vessels, one-third of which are entirely new, and the remainder, though needing some repairs, could shortly be made ready for effective service. The expenses of maintaining a naval force equal to our position, character, and relations are of necessity large, but the estimates for regular annual appropriation the coming year are somewhat less than for the current year. Some extra appropriations asked for now are deemed of pressing importance in the face of any possible contingency which may arise.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

From the report of the Postmaster-General it will be observed that the deficiency to be supplied from the General Treasury is greater than that of the preceding year, but no branch of the public service excites more popular interest than the rapid and certain transmission of the mails. Next to the free school the post-office is the great educator of the people. The subsidy of $150,000 per annum given to vessels carrying the mail from New York to Rio de Janeiro having ceased in September last, leaves the country without these facilities. The Message suggests a renewal of that contract, and not for monthly, but semi-monthly trips. It also suggests an amendment to the act of March 3d, 1875, by which now almost all matter may be sent through the mails to any distance in packages not over four pounds in weight for sixteen cents per pound. The amendment proposes to exclude from the mail, merchandise of all descriptions, and limit the transportation to enumerated articles.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Attention is called to the discovery of gold in the Black Hills, and the increasing difficulty of preserving peace between the Indians and the miners of that region; also to the condition of the Indian Territory, of which a special report will be made at an early day; to the steady growth of the business of the Patent office, showing an excess of receipts over its expenditures, as also the magnified industrial activity of the country; to the operations of the Land Office, from which it appears that less land was disposed of this year than last by 2,459,601 acres, and the cash receipts less by $690,322.23. The cause of this decrease is ascribed to the plagues infesting the frontier States and Territories, deterring parties from entering new lands. The entire area of the public domain surveyed is 680,253,094 acres, of which 26,077,531 acres were surveyed last year, leaving 1,154,471,762 acres of land still unsurveyed. The statistics of the Pension Office show a decrease on the roll of pensioners since 1873 of 1,420 persons, while the annual amount paid to them has increased by the sum of $44,733.13, caused by the increased liberality of Congress, the average of annual pension given to each invalid person on the rolls having been increased from $90.26 to $103.91. At the close of the last fiscal year there were on the rolls of the Office 234,821 persons, of whom 210,363 were army pensioners, 105,478 being invalids, and 104,885 widows and dependent relatives; 3,420 were navy pensioners, of whom 1,636 were invalids, and 1,784 widows and dependent relatives; 21,038 were pensioners of the war of 1812, 15,875 of whom were survivors, and 5,163 widows. The estimated amount for the payment of annual pensions for the coming year is $29,535,000, being an amount of $965,000 less than for the present year.

The Message proceeds to comment upon the reports of the commissioner of Agriculture and the commissioner of Education as charged with two of the fundamental interests of the country. These various subjects are presented as pertaining to the Department of the Interior, which within two months past has received a new chief in the person of the Hon. Zachariah Chandler, from whose stainless honesty and extraordinary business capacity and wide experience may be anticipated the most brilliant and satisfactory administration in one of the most complicated, extensive, and difficult branches of the Government, that has been witnessed in its history. At no period of his long public career, in no crisis of affairs however dark or perilous, has this distinguished patriot and honored citizen been found wanting, and the country may confidently rely upon him if life and health are spared, to bring order out of confusion and dignity instead of reproach in every quarter of his jurisdiction.

CONCLUSION OF THE MESSAGE.

The President concludes his seventh annual message, and the last but one in his second term of office, by allusions and recommendations touching the International Exhibition to be held at Philadelphia in the centennial year of the national existence. He recites the labors of the Board of Commissioners having charge of the preparations for this grand occasion, and invokes the aid of Congress in furtherance of their designs. He informs the country of the world-wide interest which has been awakened among the nations of the earth in this illustrious event now so nigh at hand. He likewise refers to his recent western tour through the Territories of Colorado, Wyoming, and Utah, and again calls the attention of Congress to the necessity of more thorough legislation affecting the substantial interests of the population in those vast regions, and especially to the scandalous condition of affairs existing throughout the Mormon community, declaring in emphatic terms that "polygamy as an institution should be banished from the land." And in the same breath he more than intimates that Congress should prohibit "the importation of Chinese women, but few of whom are brought to our shores to pursue honorable or useful occupations." And for more effectually applying a remedy to these and other evils, the President recommends that a large joint-committee of the two houses of Congress should be appointed, whose duty it shall be to visit during the coming summer all the mining States and Territories, and report at the next session of Congress such legislation as may seem most calculated to secure the best interests of all the people and of the Government itself.

Anticipating the choice of his successor before he will again have the honor of addressing to Congress his farewell message, he feels compelled to recapitulate the points which he deems of so much consequence to the future well-being of the Republic—

1. That the States shall be required to afford the opportunity of a good common-school education to every child in their limits.

2. No sectarian tenets shall ever be taught in any school supported in whole or in part by the State, Nation, or by the proceeds of any tax levied upon any community; make education compulsory so far as to deprive all persons who cannot read and write from becoming voters after the year 1890, disfranchising none, however, on grounds of illiteracy who may be voters at the time this amendment takes effect.

3. Declare Church and State forever separate and distinct, but each free within its proper sphere, and that all church property shall bear its own proportion of taxation.

4. Drive out licensed immorality, such as polygamy and the importation of women for illegitimate purposes.

5. Enact such laws as will secure a speedy return to sound currency, such as will command the respect of the world.

Recurring again to the Centennial year, and as we are on the threshold of our second century, the message suggests that it would seem as though this should be a fitting time for these reforms. He concludes:

"Believing that these views will commend themselves to the great majority of the right-thinking and patriotic citizens of the United States, I submit the rest to Congress."

To these noble proposals of the President we trust there may be added, what must be approved by all the best of the land, a course of legislation more perfectly adapted to secure on the one hand the manufacturing and commercial rights of the citizen, and on the other, more effectual remedies against the frightful evils of intemperance—Sabbath profanation, and the gambling frauds of our wide-spread manifold diversified business operations; for the purity of political parties; for the rights of women; for the proper responsibility of the public press, and for the morality which is the only solid foundation of public virtue and of the stability, peace, and perpetuity of States. The paper, however, as it stands, forms one of the most remarkable public documents ever issued from the Executive Mansion, and is destined to be the key-note sounding to the battle of the future against the most powerful enemies of the common welfare and the coming prosperity and pride of our great Republic.

Its reading was heard to the end by the assembled representatives of the States and the people with profound attention. It now remains to be seen what harvest shall be gathered from such seed sown.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The President pro tem. of the Senate laid before the body reports from the heads of the various Departments, from the courts and officers of the Government, which were ordered to lie upon the table and be printed. Whereupon the Senate adjourned.

SECOND DAY IN THE HOUSE.

Proceedings were opened by the Rev. I. L. Townsend, Chaplain of the House, who appeared in full Episcopal costume, and read his prayers from the Prayer Book of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Oliver, member-elect from Iowa, was sworn in and took his seat. The memorial of James H. Platt, Jr., contestant from the second district of Virginia, was ordered to be printed in the Record. After a recess to one o'clock the House was called to order and proceeded with the drawing for seats. Exceptions were made in favor of Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, and Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, after which the drawing proceeded. The first name drawn was that of John O. Whitehouse, of New York, and the last was that of Henry R. Harris, of Georgia.

RECEPTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The message from the President was then received and read, when, upon motion of Mr. Randall, it, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

THIRD CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

A memorial from William Henry Trescott, relating to the right of representation from the third Congressional district of South Carolina, was referred to the Committee on Elections, and ordered to be printed in the Record. After the presentation by the Speaker of sundry communications required by law the House adjourned to Friday, the 10th of December.

In the Senate on the third day little but routine business was transacted. The time was consumed in the presentation of documents, petitions, memorials, and resolutions, in the withdrawal of papers from the files and referring them to the appropriate committees, and in the introduction of bills upon various subjects, and at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes P. M. the Senate adjourned.

PRODUCT AND MOVEMENT OF THE PRECIOUS METALS.—The San Francisco Bulletin presents some important statistics relative to the treasure product and movement at California and Nevada for a series of years past, including the following statement covering the production from 1865 to date:

	California.	Nevada.	Total.
1865.....	$28,500,000	$11,250,000	$39,750,000
1866.....	25,500,000	10,000,000	35,500,000
1867.....	25,000,000	13,500,000	38,500,000
1868.....	22,000,000	12,000,000	34,500,000
1869.....	22,500,000	12,000,000	34,000,000
1870.....	25,000,000	16,000,000	41,000,000
1871.....	20,000,000	23,000,000	43,000,000
1872.....	19,000,000	28,750,000	47,750,000
1873.....	17,000,000	35,750,000	54,750,000
1874.....	15,000,000	38,000,000	53,000,000

Totals.. $219,500,000 $200,250,000 $419,750,000

Though the above does not include the product of Montana, Utah, and Colorado, it is nevertheless the great bulk of the production of precious metals in this country.

The product of California shown above was nearly all gold, while that of Nevada was nearly two-thirds silver.

HENRY WILSON, EIGHTEENTH VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

"An old man broken by the storms of State," he passed from our midst in the early morning of November 22, 1875. Representative of the worthier elements of American character, Henry Wilson, though broken in body, went to his grave with a name and fame unbent and unbowed by the tempests of partisan hate and personal detraction, which, during a long and eminent life, swept and surged around every public man of his time. The voices that seek detraction were then, and are now, almost entirely silent, and the few that deprecate are so evidently forgetful of the facts and conditions relating to and attending this man's career, as to succeed best in presenting the measure of their own pitiful meanness to the public gaze. Henry Wilson lived openly in the garish daylight of a Democratic society for over thirty years, steadily advancing from one post of honor to another; and the best response to these feeble critics is the universal regard that crowns his name with the love of a people whom he honored, and the gratitude of a nation he served—largely, wisely, and unselfishly.

Henry Wilson, (born Jeremiah Colbath,) was of the people—humble, manly, and true. His life illustrates the romance of democratic institutions. De Tocqueville once wrote that honor belonged to an aristocracy, and virtue to a Republic. Mr. Wilson's public virtue embraced personal honor in the better sense, and outlines distinctly the horizon of a generalization which limits the highest manly traits, to those who are the fortunate possessors of the power belonging to one form of social and political life. Honor and virtue to be genuine must be inseparable; virtue is the blade, and honor its keen and ready edge. Macaulay deprecated modern democracy because it reduced men to a level, and gave no room or play for that martial ruffianism which has too often been dignified by the name of heroism. But that a republic gives the largest opportunity for even aristocratic qualities let the life and character of Charles Sumner attest; while that the leveling of democracy is not downward, the career of Henry Wilson fully proves.

Is it not a romance? The coldest statement of the outline facts are epical in expression. He was born on the 16th of February, 1812, and died on the 22d of November, 1875, and was consequently sixty-three years, nine months, and six days old when he passed beyond. His parents were of the poorest class, and the family had been so as long as they were known in New Hampshire. They were of the hardy old country stock, which, transplanted to the bleak, granite hillsides of that State, or the rugged western regions of North and South Carolina, has given birth to so many notable men. Calhoun, Jackson, Johnson, Houston, Wilson, and Lincoln are some of the names that come to the common memory as representative of this class. Henry Wilson was therefore born in an inhospitable clime and to the bleakest poverty known to earliest American years. Want rocked his cradle, and penury shadowed the stumbling steps of his childhood. Toil was the foster-parent of his boyhood, and from ten years until twenty-one he served a task-master no less severe than the harsh soil on which they both labored. Social amenities and graces found no place in the grim days of his youth. A twelve months' disjointed training at the rude winter school begun an education whose value was best attested by the young man's absorption of the best books accessible to him. Over a thousand volumes of history, political science, biography, and other solid literature, were literally devoured by the future statesman. With the scantiest of means at manhood, this scion of the rudest democratic surroundings, ventured into a larger sphere. Pack on his back, he left the neighborhood of Farmington, going first to Great Falls, a village in which, with the ripeness of well-earned honors about him, nearly forty years thereafter, he stood a candidate for the second highest office in the gift of his fellow-citizens, and alluded to his former visit in these words:

"I remember that in October, 1833, I walked into your village from my native town, went through your mills, seeking employment. If anybody had offered me nine dollars a month I should have accepted it gladly. * * I know the hard lot that toiling men have to endure in this world, and every pulsation of my heart, every conviction of judgment, every aspiration of my soul, puts me on the side of the toiling people of my country—ay, of all countries."

From New Hampshire he traveled to Massachusetts, settling finally in the prosperous little town of Natick, where for forty years thereafter he resided, learning and working at the shoemakers' craft; organizing and taking part in the village debating society and lyceum; active in town politics; reading thoroughly; working hard; living frugally; seeking an education, cheated of his hope of a college course by the dishonesty of a debtor; entering into local politics as a Free Soil Whig; becoming known as a manufacturer of shoes, an expressman, a well-informed political speaker, organizer, and editor; rising steadily through all social hostilities in a State where at the time, though founded on the clearest out of democratic ideas—the equal right of every citizen and the primal town-meeting—the social exclusiveness was as marked as that of South Carolina and Virginia, and far more embarrassing, because it did not rest so wholly on property in man or money, but on birth and position and the culture thereof; this man, strong of frame and wholesome in brain and body, moved from one position to another, gathering reputation and garnering renown as the years swept into the century. Representative and Senator in the General Court; presiding officer of State Senate and Constitutional Convention; delegate to the National Conventions of the Whig party, the Free Soil, then of the American or Know-Nothing organization, and finally an organizer of the National Republican party. He was also chosen a general of the State militia; elected United States Senator to fill the seat vacated by Edward Everett, as Charles Sumner had been to succeed Daniel Webster; twice thereafter returned to that great legislative body; colonel in the volunteer army of the Union during the earlier portion of the civil war; chairman of the Military Committee of the Senate, and later elected Vice President of the United States.

When he was born—Poverty's most unpromising scion—the Union embraced but seventeen States and contained with the Territories a population that did not exceed seven and three-quarter million persons. When he died—the trusted of a nation and one of the most honored of its statesmen—thirty-seven great States were already embraced by its folds, and the population had swollen to at least forty-five millions. When he entered active life, poor, unknown, and feeling as only such an aspiring intellect can the deficiencies that beset his path and hindered his progress, caste and class ruled the councils of the land, and a million of slaves or more made a mockery of the Republican name. Thirty-five years of his manhood was spent in that battle with the slave power. When he died, mingling with the solemn requiem of national sorrow came the pealing hosannas of a race redeemed and a country regenerated, in praise of the humble son of Labor, whose patient will, comprehensive sagacity, and political ambition had always been their most useful and practical ally.

Who shall say that there is no personal romance in Democracy—that in modern life there is no room for the heroic virtues? The glamors of a feudal banditism, dignified under the name of chivalry, gilds the rhetoric but falsifies the philosophy of old world historians and publicists. Democracy has nought to fear while its records are made luminous by such careers as Garrison's, Lincoln's, and Wilson's. Modern life need not dread the reproach hurled at it as bringing all things to a dead lymph level while the names of a Livingstone and Hugh Miller are resplendent in heroic travel and literature, or the military deeds of those who fought for caste are more than outshone by those who fought for or have commanded in the name of liberty; nor is there need of shrinking comparison when Garibaldi's heroic life, in one field, and Grant's great service in another, are recalled. This is the era of the common people, and well are they vindicating through such lives as Henry Wilson's their right to stand in the world's ways, and do their devoirs in its history.

It is with the public career of Henry Wilson that the people have to deal. No man of this century has probably lived more openly. His private life has been so simple and sane that the curiosity that creates inquiry into the daily habits and surroundings of prominent persons—which is one of the earliest evidences, and probably the most disagreeable, of the Democratic spirit—has seldom been aroused in his direction. His private life was in reality but the vestibule of his public career. His early manhood was its toiling preparation for the nearly two score years of service, which divides itself naturally into these three phases:

The place he filled and the service he rendered as a working politician and popular speaker; his position and service as Senator and statesman; the place filled by him as author and historian. In each of these spheres he occupied a large space, and in all of them he has left a well-rounded record of work done and service rendered to his country and mankind.

To understand the position of Henry Wilson, and the great influence he possessed as a politician, two things must be borne in mind: 1st. The fact that he had so trained himself by dint of hard and almost omnivorous study, as well as all the circumstances of his own life of toil and endeavor, as to be always level with the common apprehension, whether he addressed it by the voice or pen. 2d. That he came into active politics just before the struggle over slavery had reached its stormy zenith, and that he was able, by reason of the soundness and sweetness of his moral nature, and his genius for perceiving the relations of ethics to politics, to stand in the forum and crystallize the slowly rising wrath of a people essentially Republican in tone into compact and formidable party cohorts—thus leading the anger of long-suffering convictions into those safe channels and revolutionary processes of action which best befit and most surely strengthen parliamentary and representative forms of government.

At the age of twenty-four Mr. Wilson was a pronounced anti-slavery man. He was then identified with the Whig party. His ability as a debater was so marked that at this time, while attending an academy at Concord, New Hampshire, he was able to turn the tide of criticism adverse to John Quincy Adams in an anti-slavery meeting, and bring over to his view an orator no less distinguished than Wendell Phillips, then in the early glory of his manly beauty, and the rising dawn of his great powers. A friendship begun between them at this time, which during life never faltered or changed. It is to be said here, and perhaps the fact is in itself the highest tribute that can be paid to his memory, that from that date down to the closing days of his busy career Henry Wilson never failed to make his appearance at the so long unpopular Abolition meetings, to speak his mind openly, criticising freely, but never faltering in his devotion to its principles. This, too, when ambition must have held ample sway within his brain, and the brand of Abolition was almost like that of Cain. This devotion was repaid by the kindest confidence on the part of those uncompromising critics and agitators. From 1840 down to 1860 Henry Wilson received from the giants of that agitation—Phillips, Garrison, Parker, and the others—such recognition as fell to no other politician in the land. Charles Sumner, himself, did not meet with more ample homage or kindlier respect; yet Mr. Wilson had apparently everything to lose, and nothing to win, in the earlier and uncertain years of his career by such compromising fellowship.

But he knew that their aim was right, while he never accepted their policy of abstention from political action. He had read too closely the annals of his own and of the mother-country not to comprehend that all public wrongs in Anglo-Saxon communities, seek to finally right themselves through the ordinary machinery of political parties, and legislative crystallization of their decrees. There was a purpose running through his career, indistinct, perhaps, at first, but always growing clearer as the years passed, to destroy that which would not help freedom; to break, and re-mould all parties, until at last, one should be formed that, controlling national affairs, would emancipate the Republic, and make of its august claims a living reality. He has himself described this ideal when, long after it had become a reality, he stood defending it before the people of the land :

"In the ranks of this rising party gathered the noblest spirits of the land ; the Christian upon whose vision flashed the imperative injunction of Holy Writ—break every yoke—undo the heavy burden—let the oppressed go free ; the scholar, who found in the pages of the mighty dead of all ages testimonies that deepened his convictions and quickened his zeal for the equal rights of struggling humanity ; the philanthropist, who saw as he gazed into the grave of buried nations that slavery poisoned their lives and hastened their decline and death. Into this new organization came also the veteran abolitionist, who, with Brougham, scouted 'the wild and guilty fantasy that man can hold property in man,' and who had proclaimed emancipation to be the duty of the master and the right of the slave, when he 'held,' in the words of Whittier, 'property, liberty, and life itself at the mercy of lawless mobs ;' the Free-Spoiler, who believed with William Ellery Channing that to extend slavery, 'we invite the scorn, indignation, and abhorrence of the world ;' the Whig, who believed with Adams that slavery taints the very sources of moral principles ; with Clay, that 'it is a grievous wrong no contingency can make right ;' with Webster, that 'it is opposed to the whole spirit of the Gospel and to the teachings of Jesus Christ ;' and the Democrat, in whose ears lingered the deathless words of Jefferson and Madison, the Democratic leaders of our earlier times. This political organization, born of the holier aspirations of our people, became the Republican party."*

When Henry Wilson became actively identified with politics as a Whig Daniel Webster was in the zenith of his fame. As the younger man moved sturdily on to reputation and influence, the shadow of the Great Expounder fell with darkening bane over Massachusetts' affairs. That powerful personality bestrode the political life of that State as the fabled Old Man of the Sea did the neck of Sindbad, the sailor. The incubus was almost as deadly. Nearly all that there was of culture and class feeling, with the selfishness of wealth, were gathered round Mr. Webster. He was so much of a king among men that hero-worship seemed to be almost allowable in his case. Theodore Parker said "He was more college than the college itself, and had a university in his head."

He was bitterly hostile in all his later life to the anti-slavery agitation—the leaders of which were no "respecters of persons"—especially of those in high places who betrayed liberty. The selfish interests of a commercial and manufacturing community were at the time closely bound up with the South and its trade. Slavery and cotton were twin bonds of the Union. It was against all these forces, and the high personalities of Webster, Everett, Winthrop, and their confreres and supporters, that Mr. Wilson took his stand, and that, too, with their own party ranks.

In order to properly estimate the value of Mr. Wilson's public service, it is necessary to realize in some degree the condition of New England—its political and social life at the time. Wealth and culture were allied with ignorance and prejudice to stamp out the men who dared deride their Moloch and defend the true God of our Republican Israel. Moral courage of high character, convictions ingrained into the very nature of a man, was necessary to enable an ambitious politician to risk all his prospects by placing himself in marked hostility to the dominant will of his party. Mr. Wilson did more. He risked social ostracism at the very time when he needed every adventitious aid that energy and good fortune could bring to his side.

Mr. Parker years after, when criticising Senator Wilson for some seeming concession to the South in the Senate, speaking at the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Anniversary of January 30, 1857, said appropriately of this point :

"Henry Wilson has done many noble things ; I trust he will do many more. I have always held him to be a brave, an upright, a just, and honorable man. He has endured temptation before now. In 1848, when the Whigs nominated General Taylor, Mr. Wilson refused to sustain him. He was poor ; not very thriving or thrifty, with a family dependent upon him. He was ambitious of the respect of worthy and respected men. Some Whigs told him they would make him agent in their factory, with a salary of $2,500 or $3,000 to begin with, and more in prospect, if he would not oppose General Taylor ! We don't ask you, said they, 'to say a word, only to hold your tongue, and let your victuals stop your mouth.' Henry Wilson would not hold his tongue ; he spoke manfully against the continuous encroachments of the slave power, against the corruptions of the Whig party."

He might have been forgiven by the high-caste Whigs for opposition within ; but their hostility was sealed when he went on to the open platform alongside the hated abolitionists, and expressed the honest convictions of his heart and brain. From the first this man's power was recognized. He was always respected, either from fear or affection. The fund of knowledge he possessed ; his open and engaging appearance ; that comradeship of the workshop born " his continual contact with the daily life of common men," which he never lost; his sagacious apprehension of the public will, and his clear and level capacity for reaching the popular judgment, were always estimated at their full value by his opponents. His associates have sometimes undervalued them, influenced in their judgment at times by other mental traits he possessed, to which further reference will be made.

* Speech at Bangor, Maine, August 27, 1868.

Henry Wilson, in making himself the political champion of unpopular ideas and policy, had to learn the lesson of sacrifice for duty's sake, and to often brace himself against temptations. Had he temporized ever so slightly, official positions would have been at his disposal—some of them affording, too, a sorely needed pecuniary independence.

It is not necessary to do more than indicate the outlines of his political career. From 1838 to 1842 Mr. Wilson was one of the most popular Free-Soil Whigs in Massachusetts, and first became widely known by a financial debate with Amasa Walker, in which the "Natick Cobbler," as he was then called for the first time, defeated that able economist. He was an earnest advocate of General Harrison's election, and was himself chosen for the first time as Representative in the State Legislature. He was then twenty-eight years of age, engaged in the manufacture of coarse shoes in a small way, and just married. In 1843 and 1844 he was elected to the State Senate, virtually leading from the first to the last the opposition to the annexation of Texas. He was the chosen associate and friend, in all the bitter agitation of the period, of Charles Sumner, Frank W. Bird, Judge Allen, E. R. Hoar, Wendell Phillips, Palfrey, Stephen C. Phillips, Charles Francis Adams, and others of the best specimens of New England culture and character. Re-elected to the Massachusetts House in 1845; in 1848 he was also sent a delegate to the Whig National Convention which nominated Gen. Taylor. He repudiated this action because the candidate was a slaveholder, and returned home to assist in organizing the Free-Soil party. From that date begins the national career of Henry Wilson.

That the claim made in his behalf of being a chief organizer of the rising political anti-slavery sentiment is not extravagant the records of the time will fully prove. His words, like Martin Luther's prose, were a half-battle. He was among the foremost, if not the first party politician in the land to declare uncompromising hostility to slavery, its increase, and even its existence. To understand the importance of such action the distinction must be clearly maintained between the agitating Reformer and the working and organizing politician who deliberately accepts the practical limits that are necessarily set by party lines, in order to accomplish a desired result, with the hope of being able to move forward thereafter with increased vigor.

A very considerable proportion of the resolutions, etc., introduced on the anti-slavery side in State Legislature and party convention were from the pen of that "Natick Cobbler," who studied "Colburn's First Sessions" at twenty-three, and defeated Amasa Walker in an economic discussion at twenty-seven. He had even then made himself a master of the English tongue—"pure and undefiled," and though never aspiring to the dignity of oratory, or claiming the graces of scholarly rhetoric, he will be found to have commanded a sturdy eloquence, that clothed itself in a simple and translucent style.

It was at the time Mr. Wilson led the opposition in the Massachusetts Legislature to the extension of slavery through the annexation of Texas that Mr. Macaulay, speaking then in the British Parliament, said of the United States, that "They seek to extend slavery with more energy than was ever exerted by any other nation to diffuse civilization." Mr. Wilson offered resolutions against annexation. When it was accomplished, he supported those of Charles Francis Adams, which declared that Massachusetts would not accept the act as binding or legal, and afterward offered in the House a motion for the Judiciary Committee to report a bill making it a penal offense to surrender a slave escaping from Texas and taking refuge in Massachusetts. Mr. Wilson, in a speech sustaining his motion, declared (1845) that "everything indicated an impending struggle between freedom and slavery that would absorb the mighty energies of the nation; and in that contest it was fit that Massachusetts should lead."

Mr. Wilson, at a convention called soon after, reported a preamble and resolutions of the boldest character. One of the latter declared, "We solemnly announce our purpose to the South, and to the execution of that purpose we pledge ourselves to the country and before heaven, that, rejecting all compromise, without restraint or hesitation, in our private relations and in our political organizations, by our voices and our votes, in Congress or out, we will use all practicable means for the extinction of slavery on the American continent." The preamble was prepared by the Reverend Samuel Hunt, of Natick, who during the later and literary labors of the late Vice-President has been associated with him as his private secretary. To his competent hands has been committed the completion of the 3d volume of "The Rise and Fall of the Slave Power in America."

Mr. Wilson's withdrawal from the National Nominating Convention of the Whig party in 1848 was a remarkable episode, alike in national affairs and the life of the actor himself. A meeting was called immediately of the delegates who sympathized with him. Fifteen persons were present. Their names are worth recalling. They were Louis O. Cowan and Samuel Bradley, of Maine; Charles Allen, Henry Wilson, and Daniel W. Alvord, Massachusetts; Isaac Platt, John C. Hamilton, and Robert Colby, New York; Horace N. Conger, New Jersey; Lewis D. Campbell, Samuel Galloway, John C. Vaughan, Stanley Mathews, John Burgoyne, and H. B. Hurlburt, of Ohio. Of these, it is not known if any are living outside of the Ohio representation. L. D. Campbell has become a Bourbonized Democrat; Stanley Mathews is a well-known lawyer, and "Liberal;" John C. Vaughan resides in Leavenworth, where he is Recorder of the municipal court. Mr. Galloway is still an active Republican speaker. The Democratic convention had also practically divided on the slavery issue, and from these elements came the combination out of which was born the Free-Soil party. Mr. Wilson was the leading organizer in New England, and from that date came the political strategy and combinations which in the next six years wrested Massachusetts from the control of the "Hunker" politicians and "Doughfaces"—made Robert Rantoul, Jr., and Charles Sumner, United States Senators; George D. Boutwell, Governor; N. P. Banks, Speaker of the State House of Representatives; Henry Wilson, himself, presiding officer pro tem. of both the State Senate and the Constitutional Convention; secured the passage of the Personal Liberty bill, and at last put the master-spirit, as an organizer, into the Senate chamber at Washington.

For two years or more Mr. Wilson was the editor of the Republican and Emancipator, the organ of the Free-Soilers. It was a service given without reward other than of a duty done, and at considerable personal toil and inconvenience. A gentleman who was employed thereon tells how Mr. Wilson would come into Boston from Natick, and after attending to his manufacturing business turn his face to the bare and cheerless sanctum, where he would dash off, standing at a rude shelf-desk fastened against the wall, the leading editorials for the next issue. He was in the prime of life, fresh, ruddy, wholesome-looking. Going down to the little publication office he would often obtain fifty cents from the till and go to the National Theatre for recreation. When cash was very low, twenty-five cents would content him, when he would go into the gallery of that resort—among the "gods." He was a controversialist slow to anger, but very severe when aroused by unjust attacks. His opponents learned to dread him, for he never replied except to slay. One instance of the kind was in the case of a Whig politician holding an important Federal post, who wrote a series of ferocious assaults on Henry Wilson. The latter would come to his own office, hair pushed back off his forehead, face red with anger, avow his determination to reply, and then tear up the rejoinder he indited. At last even "forbearance ceased to be a virtue," and the Republican appeared with a caustic editorial answering the assailant, and closing by charging him with gross corruption in the duties of his office, the character of which was specified in distinct terms. The Whig was unable to clear his reputation, and was driven from public life in consequence.

Mr. Wilson was a prominent opponent of the Fugitive Slave Law. He declared after Webster's seventh of March speech, in the State Legislature and in Faneuil Hall, that he would unite with "any party or body of men to drive from power those who sustained that policy." He would aid any one to rebuke Webster "and place in his seat a Senator true to the principles and sentiments of the Commonwealth."

During the memorable contest which first sent Charles Sumner to the seat which he so long honored, Mr. Wilson was the unquestioned organizer of the combination by which that result was achieved. It lasted from January, 1851, to April 24th, when Mr. Sumner was elected on the twenty-sixth ballot for the full term; Mr. Rantoul's election was for the unexpired balance of a term that ended before Mr. Sumner's election.

Mr. Wilson was several times invited to accept the Democratic vote and so obtain himself the high honor that lay in the balance. Mr. Sumner never failed to recognize the fidelity of his friend and colleague. In a letter written on the evening of the day upon which his election was secured, he said in a note to Henry Wilson, that "To your ability, energy, determination, and fidelity our cause owes its present success. For weal or woe you must take the responsibility of having placed me in the United States Senate. I am prompted to add, that while you have done all this I have never heard from you a single suggestion of a selfish character, looking in any way to any good for yourself; your labors have been as disinterested as they have been effective."

Those who knew Mr. Wilson intimately are aware how highly he valued this tribute; as they need not be told of the sincere devotion with which he worked with, and the almost simple admiration he manifested toward his eloquent and cultured colleague.

Probably the massive learning that weighted the latter almost to pedantry, and which Mr. Wilson admired all the more from having been debarred from acquiring, had very much to do with the affectionate regard and esteem in which Mr. Sumner was held by his friend. They differed widely in details, but their purposes were identical, and no one more freely acknowledged this than the senior Senator.

Mr. Wilson was made presiding officer, as has been before stated, of a State Constitutional Convention. He was also President of the National Free-Soil Convention which met at Pittsburg in 1852. In his opening speech he said: "Let us feel that we must free the Federal Government from slavery—from all responsibility for it wherever it exists under its authority, and place it actively and perpetually on the side of freedom."

The "Know-Nothing" or American order sprung into being in 1853. Whatever were its characteristics elsewhere—selfish, sectional, proscriptive as they were—in Massachusetts there was much that was worthy. Mr. Wilson was elected by it, with twenty years of anti-slavery life behind, to the United States Senate. Its legislative majority condemned the Kansas and Nebraska bill, passed the personal liberty act, opened the public schools to colored children, and otherwise placed themselves on the right side. Its strength was largely due to the fact that the Democracy of that State in their desire to defeat the work of the Constitutional Convention over which Mr. Wilson presided, had appealed to Catholic hostility to the public schools, even then exhibited, to defeat the Constitution, because it contained inhibitory provisions as to the use of public money for any sectarian purposes. The warning is one not to be unheeded in present circumstances. When the proscriptive amendment to the Constitution requiring foreign born citizens to reside longer than others in that State before possessing civic privileges, Mr. Wilson was the first public man of any party who openly opposed its adoption.

Mr. Wilson's action in the National American Convention held in Philadelphia, June 5, 1855, is a matter of public history. His position was bold and uncompromising; that of the pro-slavery propaganda was both bold and brutal. The New England delegate declared that he had twenty years before pledged himself to liberty. Rising to the perilous occasion—a well known Southern bully sat at his feet with a revolver ready for use, Mr. Wilson said: "The past belongs to slavery—the future to freedom. The past is yours—the future is ours. We wish you men of the South to distinctly understand that we have the power to prohibit slavery in the Territories, and to abolish it in the District of Columbia, and we mean to do it. We mean to repeal the Fugitive Slave Act; and we mean that Kansas shall never come into the Union as a slave State—no, never." The speech with which he declared he would not support the platform adopted, rings like a trumpet call: "I will not support it; I will support no man who stands upon it." He said: "Your party will be withered by the blasting breath of the people's wrath." But why quote more. What he did and what he said, as a politician battling, organizing, intriguing even, if the purists chose so call it, for human rights and national regeneration, make many luminous lines on the scroll of the Union's record. His days were full of toil; his nights were ceaseless vigils in its behalf. No man in the land did more to make political opinion; none as much to organize victory—in so far as the formation of determined party action was concerned. His face and form was more familiar to the whole people than was that of any other man who filled an equal space in the public eye. From the date of the National Republican party's organization at Pittsburg, February 22, 1856, when Mr. Wilson formally became one of its honored leaders, (for he had been long preparing for just such a massive and potential movement,) he did more work on the stump in arousing the country than any public man in the land. The number of formal addresses he made from 1856 down to his recent death is stated to have been over fifteen hundred, while of impromptu speeches the number must have been legion. It is not necessary to repeat what has already been said as to the quality of his speeches, or as to the extent of his work. It will, however, be appropriate to suggest that his greatest successes have been achieved as an organizer of political opinion rather than as a manager of a party when formed. His moral, intellectual, and physical courage was of the highest order, when in the open face of his foe—the antagonist of his conviction—the opponent of the general policy he maintained. It was only within his own party household that Mr. Wilson showed either timidity or faint apprehension of conflicting positions. He dreaded greatly all internal dissensions, and at times appeared to be vacillating and weak—almost harsh also in his judgment of those whose indiscretion, or over-zeal, placed the general cause in seeming jeopardy. Out of incidents which illustrate these traits have come some of the causeless blab of slanderous critics as to Mr. Wilson's courage. None who knew him ever doubted his possession of the highest type—that which neither sought or evaded danger—except as duty demanding either course.

Henry Wilson took his seat in the United States Senate for the first time during the Thirty-Third Congress, when it assembled for its second session, December 4th, 1854, to fill a vacancy caused by the retirement of Edward Everett. The Missouri compromise had been abrogated by the passage of the Kansas and Nebraska Act. The rifle-shot that had killed the Free State settler, Dow, and made his name that of the first martyr for freedom in Kansas, had in its echoes rung the death knell of American slavery. The bloody beginning of the devastating end had already come. Parties were breaking under the attrition. The pro-slavery Democracy were in power. Stephen A. Douglas' bid for Southern support in his Presidential aspirations proved to be a barren victory. The Whig party only existed by the frailest tenor. Northern men with a sense of self-respect were abandoning both of the organizations. During the early part of 1854 several attempts were made to organize a new party combining the Free-Soilers and anti-Nebraska Democrats and Whigs. The name adopted by the several conventions that were held was that of "Republican." Mr. Wilson was nominated for Governor by such a body that met at Worcester, July 20, 1854.

From 1855 unto 1861, when the slaveholder's rebellion transferred to the hands of himself and Republican associates, in and out of Congress, the tremendous task of saving the Union, emancipating the slave, and reconstructing the Republic on the basis of Equity and Liberty, Mr. Wilson's Senatorial experience was necessarily an extension of the position he had so long occupied—that of a political agitator against the national domination of slavery, with the added responsibility of aiding the rapid accession to power of a new party pledged to a policy momentous and weighty from whatever standpoint it was to be regarded.

To fitly understand Mr. Wilson's historical value, as well as the great influence he then and afterwards exercised throughout the North, it is necessary to possess a realizing sense of the condition of things in the National Capital, especially as to the insane spirit of ruffianism which prevailed in the dominant pro-slavery circles. The murderous assault on Mr. Sumner is the chief incident upon which the minds of men naturally rest. But that was not an isolated fact. Day after day, week after week, for years together, the anti-slavery leaders who stood in the Congressional breach, did so at the peril of their lives. They walked always as over a prepared mine, that at any moment might have exploded. It was only by the open and expressed declaration of their intention to defend themselves that the Northern Senators who represented the opposition to the political control of the slave power, were able to protect their persons and maintain their rights as Senators and freemen. The most flagrant insults were daily offered. A notable illustration of this was given by Senator Gwin's sneer at Mr. Wilson as "a cobbler," replied to effectively by Mr. Wilson immediately questioning the insulter, as to whether it was not better to be called a cobbler than a thief? The obvious inference was not unwarranted. It is a cheap piece of detraction to sneer at Mr. Wilson's personal courage, as since his death a well-known journalistic "scold" has done with perfect impunity. The evidence of his contemporaries, as well as of the public records, form the fittest answer. Theodore Parker, a man of moral and physical courage so cool as never to be questioned, said in 1857 these words:

"Last spring, you know what honorable service he performed after his generous colleague had been so foully assaulted. His own life was in peril. I should not dare tell you how imminent his bodily peril was, nor how he was defended; nor do I care to remember what other Northern men trembled and turned pale. Remember this—he cannot now go to his place in the Senate without a revolver in his pocket."*

Mr. Wilson's career as a statesman fairly begun at the memorable session of 1860–61. On the National party assuming control of the Government and becoming the majority in the Senate chamber, by the rebel withdrawals, Mr. Wilson was made chairman of the military committee thereof. There is no need to pronounce the duties it performed most onerous, or the chairman's labors herculean in character. The persons most competent to do this have long since given expression to their estimate of the extent and quality of his work.

On the floor of the Senate he was untiring. The Congressional Globe teems with his legislative exertions. To his initiative was due the passage of the article of war which forbade the army from being employed to return fugitive slaves; several acts under which colored men were enlisted into the military service, their wives and children made free, their full pay and finally bounty secured to them.† He offered the first prop-

* Anti-Slavery speech at Boston, Jan. 30, 1857.

† Mr. Wilson offered on the 8th of July, 1862, a bill which became law on the 17th thereof, by which, as it passed, colored men were allowed to enter the service as laborers or for such other military duty as they might be found competent for. On the 20th of July, Gen. Jas. H. Lane of Kansas was appointed a recruiting commissioner to raise several regiments of infantry; among them one or more to be composed of "men of African descent." The first officer appointed was Richard J. Hinton, at Leavenworth, who was mustered in August 4, 1862, as First Lieutenant and Acting Adjutant. The first recruit was enlisted August 6, 1862. This was the earliest LEGAL organization of colored troops, and the fact is historically worth preserving.

fishing within such distance of such coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors, it shall be forfeited, together with its cargo and everything on board. Third, It was lawful for American fishermen to enter such bays or harbors for shelter or to repair damages, or to purchase wood or obtain water, but for no other purpose whatever—subject, nevertheless, to such restrictions as might be necessary to prevent such fishermen from taking and curing fish therein. Fourth, That if any person, upon requisition of the Governor of Newfoundland, or person exercising the office of Governor, shall refuse to depart from such bays or harbors, or neglect to conform to any regulations in force, he shall forfeit the sum of two hundred pounds. For a few years the fishermen pursued their trade in quiet, but in 1823 two British men-of-war appeared in the Bay of Fundy and elsewhere in the waters of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, an event which threw the fishermen into dismay. This molestation by British men-of-war seemed not to have arisen from a sudden emergency, but to have become a permanent part of the proceedings. Some vessels were seized and the voyages of others ruined. Protests and depositions concerning the wrongs of Americans were transmitted with memorials to the President, and the subject was taken up by the Department of State. The demand was for indemnity and reparation. On the other hand, the British functionary required the punishment of the transgressors for the act of violence perpetrated (in recovering two vessels that had been seized) on persons bearing his Majesty's commission while in discharge of their public duties. No results followed. The President, however, caused inquiry to be made, and afterwards the attention of Congress was directed to the disputes by a member from Maine. Any punishment by the United States for the offense alleged was out of the question. The strong feeling excited toned down in the course of time. And it is possible that the British Commander had exhibited overzeal in the cause, for his successor did not imitate his example. A long period of quiet was at length broken. The British Chargé d'Affaires, at the instance of the colonial authorities, called the attention of the Secretary of State to repeated acts of irregularity committed by fishermen of the United States, which led to the issue of instructions to collectors of ports to notify persons engaged in the fisheries to observe the limits of the treaty. Nova Scotia affected to have been injured by the fishing of Americans, and passed an act of great severity in some of its provisions. Officers of the revenue and others were empowered to go on board any vessel or boat hovering within three miles of any of coasts and stay on board as long as she remained within that distance. If a vessel, bound elsewhere, hovered for four and twenty hours after the master had been required to depart she might be taken into port to search her cargo, and the master might be examined under oath, or failing to answer forfeit one hundred pounds; and if any prohibited goods were on board, the vessel and cargo were to be forfeited. If the vessel was foreign and not navigated according to the laws of Great Britain and Ireland, and was found fishing within three miles of the coasts both vessel and cargo were also liable to forfeiture. Other sections of the act related to suits, the suing out of writs, the damages and costs, &c. One provision was that if any suit was brought against any person on account of a seizure, and judgment was given against him, and the judge or court should certify that there was probable cause for the seizure, the plaintiff, besides the thing seized or its value, should not receive more than two pence damages, nor any costs of suit, nor should the defendant be fined more than one shilling.

The next proposition of the Nova Scotian House of Assembly embraced a plan of protection by the employment of steamers on the part of the home government and of a preventive force on the part of the government of the colony, the latter of which was adopted. Then colonial politics came into play. Political leaders in the colony had their plans. A joint address of the Legislative Council and House of Assembly was transmitted to the Queen, complaining of habitual violations of the convention of 1818 by Americans, and praying for an additional naval force to put an end to these aggres-sions. Lord Glenelg, the British Colonial Secretary, remarked in a dispatch to the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, in reply to this address, that the subject had engaged the serious attention of her Majesty's government, and it had been determined to send during the fishing season an armed force on the coast of Nova Scotia, to enforce a more strict observance of the treaty by American citizens, and the American Government had been invited to give its friendly co-operation. Orders had accordingly been issued to the naval commander of the West Indian and North American station to detach, as soon as the fishing season should commence, a small vessel to the coast of Nova Scotia and another to Prince Edward's Island, to protect the fisheries. Although the instructions to this officer were not to overstep the bounds of the treaty in the support of British rights, it was quite natural that seizures of vessels should follow. In March, 1839, the consul of the United States at Pictou reported to the Secretary of State that these British naval vessels would be stationed as decided. Much of the outcry which had been made he knew to have had its origin in the disappointed feelings of Nova Scotia fishermen, on seeing themselves outstripped in the successful pursuit of so valuable a branch of commerce by the superior perseverance and skill of American enterprise; yet a tempting shoal of fish was sometimes, through ignorance or excitement, pursued across the prescribed limits. But it may be asked, if the fish were not captured by American fishermen, who were on the spot to take them, would they have put themselves in the way of the British vessels, where the fishermen were probably bemoaning their ill luck, hard fate, or empty nets? Where was the harm, then, if British fishermen would not in any way have caught the fish, because their boats were not there, for Americans to bless their stars and take advantage of the situation? A shoal before an American boat was not to be lost because British fishermen, half a mile away in their vessel, saw a specimen of American activity in which they did not participate, and could not by reason of the distance. If Americans did not take them from the sea the fish would have remained there. Then why complain of those occurrences which could not have been overruled, and which, if American fishermen had failed to profit by, would not have enriched their British co-laborers? Many seizures of American vessels were made by the cruisers during the year. But it was a great hardship to find that the effect of the complaints of the colonists of the island of Grand Menan had caused the British commanders to refuse shelter to our flag even in stormy weather. Nearly a hundred vessels had been driven from positions secured them by the treaty to seek refuge in an American harbor; and so exasperated were the fishermen that they generally went armed. Elsewhere there was much difficulty. Masters of vessels, at sea or at anchor, felt themselves unsafe. They were molested along the entire coast of Nova Scotia, and many became dispirited, adjusted their affairs, and retired at the end of the season. There seemed an evident intention to drive American fishermen from the Bays of Fundy and Chaleurs, and other large bays, by drawing a line from headland to headland, and to deny resort to colonial ports and harbors for shelter and to procure water, except in cases of actual distress; to dispute the right to fish on the shores of the Magdalene islands, and thus to render the treaty stipulations valueless; and to close against us the Strait of Canso, unless the voyage was made dangerous by being compelled to round the island of Cape Breton, when bound to or from the Gulf of St. Lawrence. These were among the pretensions of Nova Scotia in the year 1839, and from the inquiry of the American commander in those waters, and who performed his duty efficiently, it was observed by the Secretary of State that "the injustice and annoyances suffered by our fishermen had so irritated them that there was ground to believe that violence might be resorted to" before another season. The Assembly of Nova Scotia was still persistent. In March, 1840, another address to the Queen was passed, in which her Majesty was reminded of the grievances of the colony. But at last the condition of affairs became intolerable, and the American government communicated to its Minister at the Court of St. James on the subject, directing him to make a statement of our wrongs. No instructions were given; for the language of the treaty was clear, if fairly interpreted. Thus the matter with all the questions involved reached a channel which would bring it to the notice of the British government, which would have to deal with it on its merits alone.

Statement of the Codfishery of the United States, exhibiting the tonnage employed, bounty paid to fishing vessels, imports of salt, exports of dried fish, and the value of the same.

Year.	Tonnage.	Bounty.	Salt imported.	Dried fish exported.	Value of exports.
			Bushels.	Quintals.
1789.....	19,185	None.	1,250,255
1790.....	28,348	None.	2,355,760
1791.....	32,542	None.	1,850,479	383,237
1792.....	32,060	1,779,510	364,898
1793.....	50,163	$72,965 32	2,027,332	372,825
1794.....	28,671	93,768 91	2,958,411	436,907
1795.....	30,934	66,280 47	2,233,186	400,818
1796.....	34,963	76,889 63	3,975,922	377,713
1797.....	40,629	80,475 76	2,674,251	406,016
1798.....	42,746	94,684 30	2,891,453	411,175
1799.....	29,978	128,605 87	2,471,969	428,495
1800.....	29,427	87,853 45	3,095,807	392,726
1801.....	39,381	74,520 92	3,282,064	410,948
1802.....	41,521	104,447 92	3,564,605	440,925
1803.....	51,813	117,173 57	3,862,804	461,870	$1,620,000
1804.....	52,014	145,986 73	3,479,878	567,828	2,400,000
1805.....	57,466	152,927 72	3,652,277	514,549	2,058,000
1806.....	59,183	162,191 99	3,941,616	537,457	2,150,000
1807.....	69,306	161,254 17	4,671,628	473,924	1,896,000
1808.....	51,988	142,911 89	1,300,177	155,808	623,000
1809.....	34,486	47,166 11	No returns.	345,648	1,123,000
1810.....	34,826	3,406 44	No returns.	280,864	913,000
1811.....	43,233	None.	No returns.	214,387	757,000
1812.....	30,459	None.	No returns.	169,019	592,000
1813.....	20,878	None.	No returns.	63,616	210,000
1814.....	17,855	None.	333,344	31,310	128,000
1815.....	36,938	1,811 74	2,020,131	103,251	494,000
1816.....	48,126	84,736 26	6,854,821	219,991	935,000
1817.....	64,807	119,919 51	2,884,504	265,514	1,003,000
1818.....	69,107	148,915 65	3,678,526	308,747	1,081,000
1819.....	76,076	161,623 35	3,874,852	280,555	1,052,000
1820.....	72,040	197,834 68	4,711,329	321,419	964,000
1821.....	62,293	170,052 91	3,943,727	267,305	708,778
1822.....	69,225	149,897 83	4,087,381	241,228	666,730
1823.....	78,253	176,706 04	5,127,657	262,766	734,024
1824.....	77,446	208,924 08	4,401,399	310,189	873,685
1825.....	81,462	198,724 97	4,574,202	300,857	830,356
1826.....	215,859 01	4,564,720	260,803	667,742
1827.....	206,185 55	4,320,489	247,321	747,171
1828.....	94,756	239,145 20	3,962,957	265,217	819,926
1829.....	101,797	261,069 94	5,945,547	294,761	747,541
1830.....	98,529	197,642 28	5,374,046	229,796	530,690
1831.....	106,188	200,429 39	4,182,340	231,577	625,393
1832.....	102,454	219,745 27	5,041,424	250,544	749,909
1833.....	111,445	245,182 40	6,822,672	249,689	713,317
1834.....	117,485	218,218 76	6,038,076	253,132	630,384
1835.....	223,784 93	5,375,364	287,721	783,895
1836.....	63,306	213,091 03	5,088,666	240,769	746,464
1837.....	80,552	250,181 03	6,343,706	188,943	588,506
1838.....	70,064	314,149 00	7,103,147	206,028	626,245
1839.....	72,248	6,061,608	208,720	709,218
1840.....	76,036	8,183,203	211,425	541,058

CHAPTER VI.—FOREIGN TRADE OF THE UNITED STATES.

THE SCIENCE OF POLITICAL ECONOMY—PRINCIPLES PLAIN AND EASY TO BE UNDERSTOOD—THOSE ON WHICH OUR FOREIGN TRADE IS CARRIED ON—DEFINITION OF THE SCIENCE OF POLITICAL ECONOMY—UTILITY—VALUE—GRAIN AND THE KOH-I-NOOR DIAMOND—LABOR IS THE SOURCE OF WEALTH—SOCIETY EVIL OVERRULED FOR GOOD—MORAL LAW OF PRODUCTION—ECONOMIC LAWS OF HUMAN NATURE—DIVINE RESTRAINT—INTERNATIONAL VALUES—EXCHANGES—EXCESSIVE IMPORTS—COMMERCIAL CRISES—BILLS OF EXCHANGE—EXPORTS PAY FOR IMPORTS—FUNCTION OF MONEY—BALANCE AGAINST US—EXCHANGE OF EQUAL VALUES—METHODS OF ADJUSTMENT—ADJUSTMENT OF PRICES—SUPPLY AND DEMAND—THE PRICE OF A THING IS ITS MARKET VALUE—COST OF LABOR IN PRODUCTION—EXCHANGEABLE VALUE—ARTICLES OF LUXURY—NECESSARIES OF LIFE—TOOKE—MILL—PRINCIPLES TO BE REMEMBERED—COST OF FOREIGN PRODUCTS—ADVANTAGE OF INTERCHANGE WITH NATIONS—LABOR AND CAPITAL AT HOME—LABOR AND CAPITAL ABROAD—BARBADOES—SUGAR AND MOLASSES—PROVISIONS—POLITICAL ECONOMY IN PRACTICE.

The foreign commerce of the United States is too important a subject to be treated in a cursory manner. It deserves the close attention, not only of the politician and merchant, but of all who desire to possess an intelligent opinion where intelligence may be of public value. The system upon which our foreign trade is carried on cannot be referred to without making reference also to political economy. There is a science of political economy almost as exact as mathematics. But there are various theories of political economy which have their different advocates; and certain terms which ought to have a fixed and definite meaning but which have not. Nevertheless, there are common truths or principles of political economy which the best thinkers admit, and which may be stated from the works published with so much plainness, that all who desire to understand them can do so with little risk of failure.

One writer says that the science of political economy was not the creation of one, but of many minds; and the discovery of principles, or of the application of principles, has enlarged its scope and increased its efficiency. Political economy may be defined as a science of human nature, as much so as morality, civil polity, jurisprudence, or psychology. It relates, not indeed to the individual man, as ethical science does to a considerable extent, but to men collected in society, and acting and competing with each other in the pursuit of wealth. It is not a science merely of the production of wealth; for if there were but one man in the world, though by the labor of his hands he might surround himself with the comforts and even the luxuries of life, and might thus be properly accounted wealthy, no such science as political economy would be conceivable. He would estimate the things around him in proportion to their absolute utility, or their fitness to satisfy his wants and desires—not in proportion to their value, as that term is considered by economists. Value consists in the estimation of men, and must in a certain sense be arbitrary or conventional. A bushel of grain is more useful than the Kohinoor diamond; but the diamond is more valuable than many bushels of grain, and may be exchanged for many. Value is founded upon exchangeableness, and therefore requires the existence of two or more persons. Political economy is a generalization of the motives, habits, and dispositions of men, so far as these are manifested in the pursuit of wealth. Mill says, it is the science relating to the moral or psychological laws of production and distribution—the moral or psychological laws as distinct from the material or mechanical. The distinction may be thus illustrated: The process by which crude iron ore is manufactured into table-cutlery, though it is a production of wealth, does not at this point concern the economist; it is the business of the metallurgist, the smith, the artisan. The economist looks only to the estimate which men form of the comparative value of iron ore and finished cutlery, as manifested by the proportions in which they are willing to exchange them for each other. In political economy the init and fundamental principle is that all wealth is created by labor. This principle is more extensive in its scope and more beneficent in its operation than most others; and it is a rule directed against an unwise interference of Government with the fiscal concerns and industrial habits of society. It is also a truth in another science; and when rightly understood has a singularly interesting application. With a slight paraphrase of the language of Holy Writ, it may be said that "God has appointed the wickedness of man to praise Him, and that the remainder of wrath He will restrain." What may be called the economical laws of human nature, in their general effects upon the well-being of society, manifest the contrivance, wisdom, and beneficence of the Deity just as clearly as do the marvelous arrangements of the material universe, or the natural means provided for the enforcement of the moral law and the punishment of crime. The lowest and most corrupting passions of mankind, cupidity, avarice, and selfishness, while they bring their own penalty on the individual who indulges them, are still overruled for good in their operation upon the interests of society. Nay, they are made the most efficient means of guarding it from harm and advancing its welfare. Consider the manner in which the inhabitants of a great metropolis are supplied with food and all other necessities of life, without wastefulness and yet without stint, each family receiving every day just what it wants, and as much as it wants, and being admonished through the price to limit or economise its consumption of any article, whenever a failure in the harvest or of the supply, or even the prospect of such failure, renders economy essential—all this being accomplished without any general organization, but through the efforts of thousands of dealers, each one of them regarding only his own good, and not the general good of the community, and such one acting, not in intentional concert with his fellows, but in open and often hostile rivalry with them. No social machine contrived by man, and no beneficent device of human government could perform so difficult a task at once so faithfully, so certainly, and so incessantly as is performed by an agency which even the most sceptical mind must pronounce divine. This is but one instance to illustrate the universal working of that law of the Creator and Governor of the world which everywhere compels the cupidity and selfishness of individuals to contribute to the general good. In the vast circle of employments in civilized society there is not one in which a person can profitably exert himself without at the same time profiting the community in which he lives, and lending aid to thousands of human beings whom he never sees. Without wishing it, or knowing it, all men are servants of one another; all are co-operating with one another as busily as bees in a hive; and each individual effort is needful to the general prosperity. To study the operation of this delicately and divinely constituted machine is the business of the political economist. He finds that human governments often interfere with it, and do more harm than good. They do harm when they attempt to limit competition, to establish prices, to pass sumptuary laws, to sanction monopolies. Whatever discourages or becomes an impediment to industry is sure to be followed by paralysis of trade. It would seem that effort should be directed to the removal of impediments which accident, prescription, or the rivalry of other governments have thrown in the way of that general freedom of commercial and industrial enterprise which is a law of the moral universe. Political considerations or government necessity may justify an interference in one quarter which needs to be balanced by some action in another. The necessary exceptions will be found to confirm its spirit and principle. All duties on imports, and even all internal taxes, are a departure from the rule, but a necessary departure for the sake of a greater good, namely—the support of the institutions of Government. But if these imposts are large, it may be necessary to direct some of them, not with a view to revenue, but to protection, in order to counterbalance a burden which others have laid upon domestic industry.

So clear an exposition of what is generally considered as a very complex subject is the fruit of much reading and of careful reflection. It gives also the groundwork of Congressional action in relation to industrial enterprise. And as legislation is but the expression of national wants and wishes, which have been called into existence by experience, the more immediate application of the principles of political economy to our commercial intercourse with other nations will be shown. A writer says that the theory of international values and exchanges is a valuable part of economic science. On its first being demonstrated it convinced those who were urging the universality of the doctrine of free trade, without regard to the condition of a country, that the importation of foreign manufactures may be excessive, and continue for a longer or shorter period. The truth of this will be made evident in another part of this work, when new taxes were required to increase the revenue. An excess of imports must inevitably depress the prices of our exports in all foreign markets, for all the advantages of this country for producing the articles exported is neutralized by the American exporter being compelled to exchange them for foreign goods upon the most disadvantageous terms. But excessive importation tends to depress the prices of domestic products, cripple domestic industry, and bring on commercial crises, which are equally disastrous to our agricultural and manufacturing interests. To effect domestic exchanges expedients are resorted to which obviate the necessity of using actual silver and gold coin for money, and a paper currency takes the place of the metallic, in the shape of notes, bills of exchange, &c. A merchant in New York has debts due to him in London for cotton, flour, tobacco, and other American products which he had sent there to be sold. Another merchant in New York owes money which he has to pay in London for manufactured cotton, silk, iron, &c., which he has received from England, and consumed or sold in America. The transactions on both sides are represented by bills of exchange, and it is evident that, in the long run, our exported goods must exactly pay for our imported goods, and the account of the two must balance each other.

If the account did not balance, if our exports were not equivalent in value to our imports, the deficiency would have to be made up by sending specie abroad. The exports of any country must exactly balance its imports—for the same reason that when two individual producers of different articles trade exclusively with each other, they must really barter merchandise for merchandise, exchanging equivalent values of different kinds—money serving no purpose between them but that of facilitating the exchanges of goods. This, in fact, is the only office that money, as such, ever performs. It is one that diminishes the friction of exchanges. But money and bills of exchange cannot help the merchants to pay their debts. They only represent and facilitate the operations out of which those debts have grown. Thus, in 1836, the imports into the United States were about $190,000,000, and the exports even less than $129,000,000, showing apparently a balance against us of $61,000,000. We ran deeply in debt that year and had to suffer for it afterwards. In 1838 the balance was $5,000,000 the other way, and in 1839 it was $41,000,000, which, together, amounted to $46,000,000, and probably paid off, or nearly paid off, the balance against us in 1836.

As a general proposition, the foreign trade, say with Great Britain, is really a barter of merchandise for merchandise, equal values being exchanged, and money playing only a subordinate part. Foreign trade is only a long and heavy account current of one nation with all the rest of the world, charges on one side being set off by charges on the other, and the account being finally adjusted by the transfer of a sum in cash to represent the balance. But our trade is not confined to England. It extends to every nation of the earth, and to every isle of the sea. The account is not balanced with each nation separately; far from it. In the case of China, our purchases very much exceed our sales; in the case of Great Britain, our sales very much exceed our purchases. One case is set off against the other. Our debt to China is paid by transferring to her a part of the debt due to us by England, i of bills of exchange on London sent to China direct. Again: Our annual exports to the British West Indies greatly exceed our imports. The West India planters may pay in bills of exchange for the articles of provision from the United States by transferring a part of the debt due to them for the sugar, molasses, spirits, &c., which they have sent to England. And the very bills of exchange might be used in paying our debts to China for tea. One article of merchandise is really paid for with another, though the one is obtained from Canton and the other is sent to Jamaica. A single shipment of half a million of dollars may suffice to balance an immensely long account, opened with England, the continent of Europe, China, and both Indies, amounting in the aggregate to sixty or seventy millions, so little money is used in the whole circle of transactions.

But how is the price of the articles exchanged adjusted in the interchange of commodities between two countries? The general principle is, that the price so adjusts itself that the demand shall be just equal to the supply. If the supply be too great, if the market be overloaded with the article, the price must fall; and this fall of price will bring the commodity within the means of a larger class of consumers. That is, the demand for it will be increased so much as to take off the quantity which is a drug in the market at the higher price. The fluctuations of price constantly operate to make the demand just equal to the supply. Now, the price of a thing is its market value, or temporary exchangeable power reckoned in money. Its permanent, or natural, exchangeable value will depend on the cost of production, or the amount of labor that is needed to produce it. Some articles may for a time, from unforeseen circumstances, sell below their cost; but less will be produced, and the price will rise again. The market value is perpetually it of the true value, ldom exactly coin-

a departing from it
And the principle value is this:—the adjusted with refer-d demand, and so adjusted as to make the demand equal to the supply; while the true or exchangeable value is always regulated by the cost of production, or the amount of labor needed for the creation of the article. The price, however, does not vary in the same ratio with the excess or deficiency of the supply. If the commodity be an article of luxury, a deficiency of a third in the amount offered for sale will not make the price one third larger; people will do without it rather than pay too high. But if the article is a necessary of life, which the people must purchase, a deficiency of one-third may increase the price to double, triple, or quadruple. Mr. Tooke says: "The price of corn in England has risen from one hundred to two hundred per cent., when the utmost computed deficiency of the crops has not been more than between one-sixth and one-third below an average, and when that deficiency has been relieved by foreign supplies." To what point, then, will the increase of price, whether of luxuries or necessities, be carried? Mr. Mill says: "To that point, whatever it be, which equalizes the demand and supply; to the price which cuts off the extra third from the demand, or brings forward additional sellers sufficient to supply it."

These principles should always be borne in mind in considering the subject of the foreign trade and international values. And perhaps it may be well to recapitulate:—We really purchase commodities with commodities. We pay for our whole imports with our whole exports. If in our traffic with any one country, say China, our imports much exceed our exports, the balance is not paid in money, but by transferring to China the debt due to us from another country, with which our trade is such that our exports exceed our imports. It is only the balance of the immensely long account of our trade with all countries whatsoever which is paid in money. For instance, the official returns for the year ending June 30, 1848, show that our total imports for that year amounted to one hundred and forty-four millions, while the specie we sent abroad was less than three millions. Our total exports of domestic produce for that year exceeded one hundred and thirty millions, and all the specie we received from abroad was less than six millions. The actual cash balance that year, of course, was the difference between these two sums of specie—about three millions of dollars.

The cost of domestic products is the labor that is expended upon their production. But the cost to us of foreign products is, not the labor which has been expended upon their production, but the labor which we must expend upon the articles that are given in exchange for those products. Mr. Mill claims that the advantage of an interchange of commodities between nations consists simply and solely in this—that it enables each to obtain, with a given amount of labor and capital, a greater quantity of all commodities taken together. This it accomplishes, by enabling each, with a quantity of one commodity which has cost it so much labor and capital, to produce a quantity of another commodity which, if produced at home, would have required labor and capital to a greater amount. To render the importation of an article more advantageous than its production it is not necessary that the foreign country should be able to produce it with less labor and capital than ourselves. We may even have a positive advantage in its production. But if we are so far favored by circumstances as to have a still greater positive advantage in the production of some other article which is in demand in the foreign country, we may be able to obtain a greater return to our labor and capital by employing none of it in producing the article in which our advantage is least, but devoting it all to the production of that in which our advantage is greatest, and giving this to the foreign country in exchange for the other. It is not a difference in the absolute cost of production which determines the interchange, but a difference in the comparative cost. An excellent illustration is furnished by Barbadoes. The inhabitants of Barbadoes, favored by their climate and soil, can raise provisions cheaper than we can in the United States, and yet Barbadoes buys nearly all her provisions from this country. Why? Because, though she has the advantage over us to raise provisions cheaply, she has a still greater advantage in her power to produce sugar and molasses. If she has the advantage of a quarter in raising provisions, she has an advantage of one-half in regard to products exclusively tropical. She can thus, by trading with us, obtain our breadstuffs and meat at a smaller cost of labor and capital than they cost ourselves. Say, a barrel of flour costs ten days' labor in the United States, and only eight days in Barbadoes, her people can profitably buy American flour if they pay for it with sugar which cost them only six days' labor; and the people of this country can profitably sell them the flour, or buy the sugar, provided that the sugar, if raised in the United States, would cost eleven days' labor. This is a striking example of the benefit of foreign trade to both the countries which are parties to it. If Barbadoes produced both commodities with greater facility, but greater in precisely the same degree, there would be no motive for the interchange.

Here then, in a small space has been gathered much valuable information on the system adopted by nations in carrying on their foreign trade. There are principles underlying every movement which must be recognized if commercial transactions are to be attended with profit. A knowledge of economic science is necessary to the merchant. It is required not only as a guide to operations, but in order to lay the groundwork for successful calculation. The bold speculator may sometimes carry off a large prize, and the spirit of speculation is an element that must pervade all commerce. But speculation must be subject to control if the investment is to turn out fortunate. The merchant prince whose name is heard and respected in every foreign port is a man who has mastered the subtle details of the science, and knows how to take advantage of every market, and reap a profit from every dealing. In the course of years, hundreds of millions of dollars in specie are sent abroad to be used in the settlements of the foreign trade. But the years which bring the largest profit to the merchant are those in which the imports and exports balance each other. And that the supply may not exceed the demand in any of the world's markets requires the most careful vigilance, and that kind of active wisdom which when it discovers that the cargo of a ship which has sailed would glut a market if landed, changes the destination of the vessel to a port where her cargo is needed and may be profitably sold.

SLAVONIAN EUROPE.

The want of neighbors may selfishly affect the character of a nation, as a witty writer has recently asserted of our own, by making it indifferent to the welfare of others. As a rule, however, it would seem, judging by the experiences of old-world countries, that it is too much neighborhood that curses most of them. France and Germany have certainly found it so, as have Austria, Denmark, and Italy during the last fifteen years. Turkey, constantly broiling, has kept the rest of Europe on the alert, for fear that the conflagrations might extend beyond her own kitchen. Count Andrassy, the Hungarian premier, may well sigh for the immunity which our continental isolation affords.

The Austro-Hungarian statesmen can be pardoned if they should deem the outbreak in the Herzegovina a contretemps to be deplored by them. The rallying points in the Austro-Hungarian empire, not only for its own progress, but for the regeneration of the curious ethnographical compound that besets it, interiorly and exteriorly, are, without question, the German, the Czech or Bohemian, and the Magyar populations. Together they do not exceed eighteen millions, of whom the German is less than half. But these are the most advanced and the most stable. With the lead that the Magyars now have, and which later the Czechs will obtain, a few more years of the active growth that has been going forward for ten years past might well enable the Austrian Cabinet to settle, more equitably than is now possible, some of the future relations of the heterogeneous populations in its own midst and in Turkey also. It may well be doubted if there is a single point beyond Hungary itself in all the region (almost a terra incognita to Americans) known as Eastern Europe, sufficiently advanced to make a common center for the Slavic populations of the Danubian valley and its tributaries. If there is it must be found in Servia.

Modern politics, as they relate to Eastern Europe, offer an interesting study. A brief sketch will attract even the general reader. A shrewd Englishman who has traveled widely and observed closely characterizes the "sick man" comparison as untrue when applied to Turkey. "He is alive and full of life, too; for all the craft, cunning, and talent of one of the craftiest races in existence combine with all their energies to sustain him. The Greeks themselves are his most zealous supporters." The Neologes, Greek newspaper at Constantinople, urges an alliance between Greece and Turkey, and declares also that there is no future for Hellenism in the advance of Pan-Slavonic influences. The Turks themselves, in Europe, do not much exceed two million persons. The remaining Mahometans, on the east side of the Bosphorus, are Slavs and Wallachs—principally the former. These Musulmen are the descendants of the feudal spahis and landed proprietors of the western divisions of European Turkey, whose ancestors early adhered to the crescent, in order to preserve their lands. It is these people who are the worst oppressors of the Christian populations, as well as the most bigotted of the followers of Mahomet. It is upon them, too, that the Porte most largely depends in the suppression of the Christian Slavs now in arms in the Dinaric Alpine region.

The Turkish Empire in Europe can be arranged for present purposes into three divisions: First, the tributary provinces, Servia and Roumania, the latter being again subdivided into Moldavia and Wallachia. Second, the subordinate districts, or eyelats, now more or less affected by the Herzegovinian rebellion. Besides that province, those adjacent, Bosnia with Turkish Servia and Croatia, are more or less disturbed. The third division embraces Bulgaria, originally a Greco-Italian colony, but now quite Slavonic in its character, except as to the degree of hostility felt toward the Sultan's government. South of Bulgaria are the eyalats or provinces that include Rumelia, (embracing Thrace and Macedonia,) Thessaly, Salonica, Albania, and Epirus. The Greeks usually speak of the inhabitants of these provinces as of Hellenic stock. They are, in fact, Slavic, with an admixture of Wallachs, Jews, Gypsies, and the old Italian element, belonging to the Roman colonies, and later, when they formed part of the Eastern Empire. In fact, there is very little Hellenic blood left in Greece—the Slavic and Dacian-Gothic stock seems to have stamped itself on that famous peninsula. In Epirus and Albania there is a considerable adhesion to Mahometanism, mainly from the same motive that induced the conversion of the Bosnian Slavs who were landed proprietors when the Osmanlis conquered the Greek Empire.

The general political interest must, in the main, center in the tributary provinces, that in regard to present complications depends, of course, on the insurrection itself. Servia is the pivotal point. Prince Milano is a rather good-looking, not over-gifted princeling of twenty years of age or so, who has been educated chiefly under Austrian influences, and came to his present place through the assassination of his uncle by conspirators identified with the "Young Servian" party. Milano hardly seems to have the capacity for a bold and vigorous leader. He has been enervated by the influences of that confluence of semi-barbarisms—a stuccoed Paris—which is termed Vienna. The Servians themselves are now the most promising of the Southern Slavonian communities.

Individually and collectively, the Serb is handsome, brave, and poetic—a peasant-race following its leader well, but with that singular democratic freedom of manners which is characteristic of such stock, and is always a social mark of primitive peoples. The Servians are decidedly ambitious; their country is at present pastoral, but with railroads would rapidly develop into a grain-growing region. They have commenced a fair system of free schools, practice manhood suffrage, and a compulsory military service, like that of Switzerland, by which an army of at least 130,000 men tolerably well drilled for such a warfare as they would necessarily pursue, also quite well equipped and organized, could be put in the field. Two or three good railroads, and ten years more of developing peace, would make of Servia the best possible nuclei for the probable southeastern Slavonian nationality, which the near future seems to hold among its possibilities.

Moldavia and Wallachia, the two provinces united as Roumania, are also tributary. The inevitable Prussian is here in the person of a Hohenzollern cadet—Prince Carl or Charles, who graduated from a Prussian lieutenancy of dragoons into the seat of one of the promising minor sovereignties of Europe. Roumania is of later and different origin than Servia. The latter was cradled by a long and stormy insurrection; the former was born of the ill-conjoined (for Turkey) Crimean war and the subsequent Congress of Paris, where a large slice from the breast of that unfortunate was served up as a new national dish. The real purpose was to create a barrier between Constantinople and Russia. By placing these provinces under the guarantee of the seven contracting powers that signed the Treaty of Paris in 1856—England, France, Prussia, (now Germany,) Austria, Italy, Russia, and Turkey itself—it was of course expected that they would grow gradually into a national ambition of their own—not at all likely to accept absorption into Russia as a finality. Whatever may be said as to the fairness of this way of dealing with Turkey, by her own allies, too, the scheme was a promising one in sense. It has worked pretty well. The constitution and government of Roumania is quite liberal; the rapid development of the railroad system has made the progress of these provinces. The people are not to all appearance stock, or possessed of as "staying" as are their neighbors of Servia. Prince Carl seems to be a fair ruler, but least, has not developed any of the "iron" qualities of his house. The Roumania is about equal to them and quite as well organized.

Servia lies south of the Danube, north thereof. This makes, under present conditions, a factor political and military importance. Her southwestern frontier is not far removed from that portion of Herzegovina where the present insurrection begun. The southern extremity of Bosnia, very narrow thereabouts, is inhabited by a sparse population in full sympathy. It is cut up by easily defended defiles of the Dinaric mountain system, and separates active and independent Serbia from insurgent and fighting Herzegovina.

The Herzegovina field is easily defended. If the insurgents have means they may readily be supplied with arms, as Austrian Dalmatia, with its Adriatic seaboard, lies along the western border of the mountain bowl in which the insurrection is progressing. The Bosnian peninsula cannot well be occupied to advantage by the Turks, while semi-independent Serbia and Turkish Serbia, lying east, are in full sympathy, and within a day or two's march, through mountain defiles easily traversed by insurrectionary bands, and as easily held against military forces attacking them, with Montenegro, independent and under Russian protection to the south, whose people hate the Turks and are always "spoiling for a fight" with them.

To all intents and purposes, then, Roumania can be counted out. Should the fight go on it will undoubtedly be the policy of Berlin to hold back the Hospadar until the period when his moving can effectually decide an issue.

There are some interesting facts in relation to the Herzegovina movement which seem to give it a more formidable aspect than preceding insurrections against Turkey have assumed. The population is estimated at from 260,000 to 300,000, of whom 112,000 are set down as Greek Catholics, 35,000 to 45,000 as Roman Catholics; while of the remainder about 110,000 are Mahometans, and the balance Jews and Christians known as Paterenes or Paulists. This sect has a memorable history. Filibe, a city in Rummelia, is the present head-center of the sect founded by the famous schismatic, Basil, the Armenian theologian, whom in the twelfth century the Greek Emperor, Alexis Comnenus, burnt for his heresy. His followers became known as Paulinists, Paulicians, and at present as Paterenes. Their doctrines have deeply marked the history of Western Europe, being the foundation of the Albigenses in France and Spain, and later of the Waldenses in Italy. They gave rise to the English Lollards, the Bohemian Hussites, while Eastern Nestorians and Western Calvinists can claim a doctrinal sympathy with Dr. Basil. This sect has a strong hold in the Herzegovina, and also in Bosnia and Turkish Serbia. The Franciscan friars were early sent to combat them, and these monks are the only celebrants of the Latin service in the insurrectionary provinces. For the first time in the history of Slavic-Turkish outbreaks the Greek and Latin Catholics appear to act in harmony.

Outside of European Turkey itself there are two great powers directly interested in the solution of the Slavonian question on the Danube. These are Russia and Austria. France has lost her role of general intermeddler in European affairs, and must perforce content herself with looking after her own matters. There are blessings unawares, and this is one of decided benefit to France. Germany has plucked her robes and wears them with lofty pride. It remains to be seen whether they will prove as great a curse to the Teuton as they have been to the Frank.

Great Britain's chief interest is in the shekels she has loaned to Turkey and their repayment. Her only other interest is to keep the road open to India. That, may necessitate the occupation of Egypt; a contingency now much discussed by the European press. A few years more and the Khedive's power will have become so well consolidated that he might not only make himself independent of Constantinople, but of Lombard and Downing streets also. If the present trouble does not produce a general complication, the Khedive of Egypt will yet rule over an African empire extending to the equator.

Practically the solution of the Slavonian question in Eastern Europe lies between Austria and Russia. Whatever may be said of or by the latter power it may always be regarded as certain that her agents and treasury are busily engaged in fomenting Turkish disintegration so as to promote Russian interests. If they do not seem to work as earnestly as in the past, it is not because they are not at work, but, in reality, because Czarism, or the present system, is on trial in Russia, perhaps even on the eve of disrapture, and the "powers that be" do not find themselves, as formerly, wholly untrammelled by home complications. Recent reports indicate the partial discovery of another one of the great revolutionary conspiracies which have been continually forming in Russia ever since the Napoleonic wars.

The Empire of Austria seems to have the largest stake in seeing maintained the statu quo in Turkey. Successful disrapture now would throw the game into the hands of Russia. Berlin would probably aid St. Petersburg. Peace and internal development for Servia and Roumania must permanently bring advantages to the Austro-Hungarian government. The railroad system developing in the Danubian provinces must link them more closely to Austria. The chief obstacle to the coalition of the Turkish Slavs, the Servian and Roumanians, with those in Austria, is to be found in the difference of religion, as the latter are nearly all Latin Catholics, while the former are of the Greek Church. The "Young Servia" party—that of action—hopes to make that country the leader, now and hereafter. The Roumanians are of the same general mind, with a Germanic influence in the Government, while in Moldavia, its northern province, a decided Russian propaganda is always in active eruption.

Inside the Turkish Empire in Europe there are various forces fighting to maintain the statu quo; outside of it are others even more potent still. In dealing with those inside, there must be set down as foremost the practical alliance with the Sultan's government of the great body of the Greeks—about one million strong. They are and have always been the chief merchants and traders, the manufacturers and the priests, the bankers, also, and in later years the diplomats. They are the journalists of the Levant, as well as of European Turkey. During the past thirty years or so there has been a good deal of new blood infused into the leading Phanariote and Levantine families. The former designation embraces the Greek colony at Constantinople, from which the Turks have always recruited their chief allies; those who have long absorbed control of the Greek-Christian interests, temporal and theological. Next to these allies, the right hand of the Osmanlis minority in controlling their heterogeneous Christian subjects, comes the religious differences and ethnographical distinctions which have been so fruitful of division and consequent subjection.

As the majority of the Christian populations are of the Greek Church, the Greek, who in reality has neither race or national identity, but is only a keen-witted, subtly-ambitious, money-making, intriguing individual, seeking personal advancement, has again been the useful instrument of the Turk. The Sultan's government has long been known as more liberal and equitable in dealing with the Christian churches under its control than are those churches in dealing with each other. Mahometan fanaticisms and outbreaks are local, not governmental.

After all, the serious question in all this discussion is the impending presence in eastern Europe, as an immediate and direct influence, of the Slavonian race. There are seventy millions of this stock. They outnumber either the Germanic and the Roumanic or Latin peoples. There are twenty millions in the Austrian Empire; those in European Turkey with the Poles of Prussia make another ten or twelve millions. The balance are Russian. That Empire is under the control of a curious admixture. The Czar and the Imperial family influences are all Germanic in character. The ruling church influence is Greek and Eastern—neither Slavonic or Asiatic. The people are Russian, i. e., Slavonian. The rich merchants and the artizans—the men of the towns—are "old Slavs" in character and politics. The men of the "Land Commune"—the peasants, twenty millions of whom were emancipated in 1861—are a people old in stock, but fresh, young, and primal in their cosmo-political aspects.

The most important point in connection with the possible, aye, the probable consummation of this dream is the fact that the nian is essentially democratic, and what is so dreaded by those who take their opinions ready-made and to order—Communitic in character. The common ownership of the soil, with co-operative cultivation and communal government of the peasants, are the distinctive and apparently ineradicable marks of the Russian Slav. One of the least understood, but most interesting of historical studies is that of this fundamental institution of Slavonic life. Everywhere it is to be seen, though in Russia it exists in its most distinctive form. In Poland the Commune was uprooted in part by the enforced grafting of a feudal system. Among the Southern Slavs, however, it is to be found. Their social idea or germ is evidently handed down from the earliest forms of Aryan life. The Slavs settled in villages and cultivated in common. All inside was zagon, and belonged to the Commune; all outside was sudo and foreign; each village was swoboda or free. The old men were the rulers, selected by the whole village. The cottage and garden land belonged to the family. The rest was worked by all, and the harvest belonged to all. This is to-day essentially the Russian Commune. Every effort has been brought to bear to stimulate individual ownership and occupancy since emancipation. The failure has been so marked that in suppressing the last formidable Polish outbreak the Government deliberately established the Communal system in Lithuania for the purpose of permanently separating the Polish peasantry from the nobles—therefore allies against Russia. The policy seems to have worked well. Without the Commune, Russian emancipation would have either resulted in reaction or a revolution.

The transfer of this great race to the Golden Horn; from the frozen Neva to the sunny Bosphorus; from the inhospitable Baltic to the classic Ægean sea; to regions where the soil is already ripe for the consideration of the momentous questions embraced by the Russian or Slavonic land system, might result in making the western and not the eastern half of that continent the "sick man of Europe." All these issues are bound up in the present contest, or the one sure to come, whether it shall be waged in the near future on the Danube, in the Servian, Bulgarian and Moldavian plains, or as now among the Dinaric Alps by the Bosnian and Herzegovian mountaineers.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

In reviewing the anti-slavery revolution now drawing to a close, it is remarkable to observe how closely the Democratic party has followed in the track of Southern resistance. When we elected Mr. Lincoln and aimed to restrict slavery, the South seceded and made war. Gen. McClellan's platform was, stop the war. When we re-elected President Lincoln and abolished slavery, President Lincoln was assassinated. Mr. Seymour's platform was virtually the Blair letter repudiating the anti-slavery amendments. When we elected General Grant and confirmed reconstruction on the plan of impartial suffrage, the Ku-Klux rising took place. Mr. Greeley's platform was reconciliation with that part of the Southern people represented by the Ku-Klux. When we re-elected President Grant and decided that the recent amendments should be enforced, the White League made its appearance. And it is fair to presume that the prevailing sentiment of the Democratic Convention next year, will be sympathy with the White League.

A secret object of aversion with the White League is the common school, and especially the colored school; and this is not only likely to interfere with the subordination of the working class, but also on the ground of unwonted expense. The expense of a modern popular State is in the best of times much greater than that of an aristocratic slave State. Government by the whole people, in the interest of the whole people, involves many public burdens inseparable from modern culture and enlightenment, among which one of the most characteristic is the maintenance of common schools, in order that every citizen may have intelligence enough to discharge his duties in the State in which he has a voice.

On the other hand, in an old-fashioned slave State, governed by a wealthy class with a single eye to the interest of that class, the functions of government could be reduced to their lowest terms, and they were performed by members of the privileged class who were directly interested in keeping down the expense. The working class, without property or freedom, knew the Government chiefly as a police, and even this function was more limited than in a free State, being largely supplied by the control of the master and overseer.

Now, if a well-rooted free Government is naturally more expensive than the government of a slave State, much more is this the case with the first establishment of free government in a country where the greater part of the people lack the preparation of early instruction and the habit of public responsibility, while those who are otherwise most competent to take part are bitterly hostile to the new order of things. The waste and dishonesty that have been incidental to reconstruction and enforcement under these circumstances have aggravated the necessary burdens, which would in the best of hands have been severely felt by those who had just been impoverished by war and emancipation. This has afforded a pretext for still further resisting the inevitable, and thus postponing that honest and thorough acceptance of the logical results of this great revolution which alone can give the South lasting peace and her rightful share in the common prosperity.

The danger, then, in those States which are controlled by the White League or kindred organizations is that the dominant party there will not stop with the reformation of abuses, but will go on to restore as far as possible the old political régime, and that they will not only check waste, but so cut down the legitimate expenses of modern popular government as to cripple its beneficent energies at a time when a broad foundation should be laid, and nothing omitted to secure a safe and prosperous future. In the eyes of the old South, nothing is more extravagant, not to say pernicious, than a thorough system of public schools, without any denial or abridgment of the right to common instruction on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. This view has already led to deplorable results in Texas and Arkansas, and the same thing is now to be feared in Mississippi.

In the North the Catholic hierarchy is, for reasons which it is not necessary to discuss, as hostile to common schools as the old South; and both look to the Democratic party for aid and comfort. President Grant's speech, therefore, on the eve of the late elections, was an instance of his happy faculty of hitting the nail on the head, and not only understanding his times in general, but seeing the critical point in the battle. Governor Hayes declares he owes his election to the school question; and the defeat of Tammany Hall, as well as the reduction of Governor Tilden's majority to a manageable quantity, was largely owing to the popular feeling on this subject. In New York, it will be remembered, there was no financial issue.

The party that holds the initiative shapes the opposition it encounters. In the approaching Presidential canvass Republicans must expect to encounter the condensed resistance to the previous four years' progress. Once fairly overcome, that resistance will cease to endanger the results of what may probably be regarded as the last aggressive anti-slavery administration. The revolution then will be complete in its main outline, and the details must, in the nature of things, be left to time and the growth of a new public spirit throughout the South.

Reconstruction and its enforcement mean simply the establishment, in spite of lingering resistance, of modern popular States on the ruins of the old slave States. The last effective resistance to the principle of impartial suffrage was overcome by the resolution of President Grant, and there is now being encountered, under one form or another, secret or avowed hostility to that which alone can make universal suffrage anything but a peril or a mockery. Free suffrage logically implies free schools, and all opposition to the system, whether from class interest or clerical prejudice, must be crushed out if we desire to make the anti-slavery revolution complete, or to maintain the integrity of American institutions.

It is an issue which the people can understand as soon as pointed out, and the importance of which they can readily estimate. The best of platforms in other respects, and the best of candidates, cannot save the Democratic party from another defeat unless it can free itself from complicity with Southern and Northern designs upon the common schools. But it is difficult to see how that party can escape the logic of history, which has made it the natural ally of all who cherish such designs.

THE REVISED STATUTES. *

When Charles Sumner first entered the Senate one of the early public measures introduced by him was a proposition to revise and consolidate the general statutes of the United States. This greatly needed measure was pressed upon the attention of the Senate year after year by Mr. Sumner, until finally, in 1866, Congress took the requisite action, and a commission for this purpose was authorized. The gentlemen first appointed upon the commission, (among whom was our present minister to Spain,) though eminent in their profession as practicing lawyers, made little progress with the work during their term of office. In 1870 the commission was reorganized by the appointment of Judge C. P. James, of Ohio, Judge V. C. Barringer, of North Carolina, and Benjamin V. Abbott of New York. These gentlemen prepared the revision of the statutes of a general nature, constituting substantially the first volume of the present work as the same was presented to Congress (though then in an unfinished state) in December, 1872.

The resolution prescribing the duties of the commissioners authorized them to suggest to Congress such changes in the law as they might deem essential to its harmony and completeness. This power was exercised sparingly and with great judiciousness, but it was the subsequent opinion of Congress that no departure whatever from the strict meaning of the original law should be embraced in the revision. Accordingly the work as reported by the commissioners was referred to the Joint Committee of the respective houses of Congress on the Revision of the Laws, with instructions to cause the same to be completed in conformity with this view for presentation to Congress at the opening of the succeeding session. The Joint Committee selected the Hon. Thomas J. Durant, of Washington, who has been not inaptly styled "the greatest civil lawyer in America since Roselius," to perform this important service. The eminent judicial ability and conscientious devotion in the discharge of public duty for which Mr. Durant is distinguished was a guaranty that the work committed to him would be properly and faithfully performed. Under his personal supervision each section of the commissioners' report was compared with the original law as found in the Statutes at Large, and the revision in its present form was submitted by him to the Joint Committee in December, 1873, and duly reported to Congress. Meanwhile, copies had been sent to the several United States judges, district attorneys, and other prominent persons throughout the country, requesting notice of any errors or discrepancies which might be discovered in the work. Pending the final passage of the revision, the Committee on the Revision of the Laws on the part of the House of Representatives, consisting of Judge Poland of Vermont, Judge Hoar of Massachusetts, Judge Lawrence of Ohio, Judge Duell of New York, Hon. J. Allen Barber of Wisconsin, Hon. James M. Pendleton of Rhode Island, Hon. W. S. Moore of Pennsylvania, Judge Cason of Indiana, Alexander H. Stephens of Georgia, Hon. C. W. Kendall of Nevada, and Hon. Robert M. Knapp of Illinois, made a further and final examination of the work. This labor, the most onerous as well as the most important which could be performed by a committee of Congress, was executed by these gentlemen with a diligence, thoroughness, and painstaking care which entitle them to all praise. The work was apportioned among the several members of the committee, each of whom received the matter assigned him, testing its accuracy by a reference to and examination of the Statutes at Large in every instance. The committee further availed themselves of the experience and knowledge of officers of the executive departments of the Government respecting matters with which such officers were especially familiar.

*Revised Statutes of the United States. Parts I and II. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., 1875.

Few persons are aware of the vast amount of labor involved in these repeated examinations of the whole seventeen volumes of the Statutes at Large for the purpose of insuring the correctness of the revision, but it will readily be perceived from the brief history here given of the precautions taken in this regard, that the revision contemplated as accurate a reflex and embodiment of the original law as was possible to be made, and that certainly no room remains for any reasonable presumption of an intentional departure from pre-existing legislation.

In describing the processes by which the Revised Statutes came into existence, this particularity of detail has been adopted because some attempts have been made by the Opposition press to discredit the revision through allegations of its being at variance with the original law, especially with respect to that portion relating to customs duties.

That such allegations have been made under a total misapprehension as to both the prior and the present state of the law there is no more doubt than there is that the same allegations have been reiterated without any attempt to verify them, but solely with a view to the disparagement of a work undertaken by a Republican Congress.

The earliest statements respecting the alleged inaccuracy of the revision of the customs laws which were brought to public attention appeared in an article published in the New York World while the revision was being prepared for the press. General Butler, the former Chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws on the part of the House of Representatives, forwarded a copy of the World's statement to Mr. Durant, with a request for an examination and report. The result of Mr. Durant's examination was duly communicated to General Butler, and by him laid before the committee. It appeared that out of a list of some twenty articles subject to duty mentioned by the World as bearing a different and increased rate under the revision than had formerly been imposed, not more than two or three were found to be specifically mentioned either in the revision or in the original law, and that these were articles embraced in the last tariff act that preceded the revision, (the act of 1872,) which placed an additional duty of ten per cent. upon certain importations. As to these articles, therefore, the misstatement of there having been an unauthorized increase of duty was clearly shown. As to the articles not specifically named in the law, the compiler of the list as published in the World may have been misled by a comparison of a late with some former set of Treasury Regulations into assuming, without an examination, that the law had been changed. That no examination of the law could have been made as a basis for the statement of alleged variations was apparent from the facts in respect to the articles included in the list referred to, which were specifically named in the tariff schedules. Had the writer in the World examined either the Statutes at Large or the revision itself he would have discovered the amended law, or the reference thereto. That he did not do so is the only alternative against a presumption of intentional misstatement. There is no desire to presume the misstatements intentional, but no doubt can exist that they must have arisen without proper inquiry into the facts.

The larger portion of dutiable goods are classified under general heads. It is often very difficult to determine in which class any particular article of manufacture belongs, and that changes in classification sometimes become necessary is merely an incident of the administration of the customs laws which cannot be avoided. Besides, every amendment to the law, by subsequent legislation, renders a revision of the Treasury regulations necessary as to all articles embraced in the amendatory act or affected thereby i the status of their classification. The presumption therefore that any change possibly found at any time in the Treasury regulations denotes an unauthorized change of the law in the Revised Statutes is wholly unwarranted.

It is apparent that all the charges which have been made alleging a change in the rate of duties under the Revised Statutes have no better foundation than such as are here indicated. It is within the power of any person, having access to the Statutes at Large and to the Revised Statutes, to satisfy himself as to the correctness or incorrectness of any particular section or matter in the revision if he will take the trouble to do so. That duty has been performed before pronouncing the present judgment. Care has been taken, not only to examine each instance which has been brought to public notice where an increased rate of duty is alleged to have been imposed under the Revised Statutes, but to make a thorough comparison in detail of all that portion of the revision relating to customs duties with the prior tariff acts of Congress, and this with no predilection in favor of the revision, but solely for the purpose of ascertaining the exact facts in the case. The result is an utter failure to find the allegations referred to, whether general or special, sustained in any particular. On the contrary, it has been found that the Revised Statutes relating to customs duties are simply the reduplication, in consolidated form, of the exact terms of the tariff acts previously in force as contained in the Statutes at Large.

It is possible that error may occur in any revision or repetition of a law, and that such error may be overlooked in a very careful examination. But that any error of moment exists in the revision of the tariff schedules would seem from the thorough investigations which have been made to be highly improbable. Of course, any errors which may at any time be found to exist in any part of the Revised Statutes can be, and doubtless will be, at once corrected by an amendatory act of Congress. This consideration should of itself dispel any attempted reflection upon the integrity of the revision.

It is also not only possible, but a circumstance hardly to be avoided in a work of the magnitude of the Revised Statutes of the United States, that some incidental omissions of law should occur. In making a comparison of the work of the revisors with the original statutes it was no part of the reviewer's duty to ascertain whether everything in the statutes was embraced in the revision, but only whether everything in the revision was, or seemed to be, justified by the statutes to which reference was made. The same remark is true as to the labor of the committee in the examination of the reviewer's report. An examination of the original statutes for the discovery of possible omissions would, in either case, have involved going over the whole ground of a new and independent revision, which was, of course, impracticable in the time allowed. The only remaining method of determining the entire accuracy of the revision was by the test of its practical operation. This was certain to bring to light all errors or discrepancies of whatever character. Then such errors or discrepancies, if found, and, as discovered, could be corrected by an act of Congress. This was the understanding and expectation of the committee and of Congress at the time of the passage of the revision. Hence it is that any inaccuracy or omission, or any supposed inaccuracy or omission, should be brought to the notice of the proper committees of either House of Congress for due examination and correction, instead of being made the basis of a superficial attack upon the general character of the work.

In respect to the literary execution of the Revised Statutes, we are free to say that this branch of the work is open to fair criticism. It was Mr. Sumner's wish that a uniform, dignified, and polished style should be adopted in the revision. The revisors did not feel authorized to incur the risk of giving an incorrect interpretation of the law by restating it in different language than that employed in the original acts, where any essential change could be avoided. They contented themselves, therefore, by striking out the more manifest phrases of surplusage where a consolidation of acts did not involve a rewriting, but preserved the general form, and, as far as practicable, the language of the original statutes, irrespective of the minor faults of syntax. In this the revisors unquestionably pursued the safe course, since correctness of the text rather than purity of style was the important object to be attained.

The sectional arrangement of the Revised Statutes, and other work of special editorial nature, might, however, have been improved. The revision bears the marks of some disjointed labor, doubtless consequent upon the employment of many different persons in its original preparation, and the apparent absence of one harmonizing head to the whole. In many of the titles there is a want of consecutiveness in the order in which the sections appear relative to the subdivisions of the subject under treatment, and in several instances sections are found in one title or chapter which would seem to more properly belong to some other title or chapter. In the latter respect a difficulty naturally occurs, since the same law frequently relates to several subjects, and it is not always easy to determine the more appropriate head under which a particular section should be placed.

Still, there are instances in the revision in which a transposition of certain sections might have been made with advantage to the clear presentation of the law.

The cross references, rendered necessary by the unavoidable distribution of sections bearing upon one subject among several special titles, are not as complete as they might have been made. It is evident that conflicting ideas as to the utility of this branch of the editorial service governed its execution. The result is that in consulting the Revised Statutes it will not always do to assume that one's attention is directed by the sectional references to all the law upon the subject under examination. Other relevant titles, if any such there are, as well as other portions of the same title, may sometimes be advantageously searched.

These are the principal defects of the revision. The grouping of sections in their subdivisional order is not sufficiently compact, nor are the cross references sufficiently numerous. It is doubtless from these facts that many errors in the revision have been presumed which do not in reality exist. The index does not wholly cure the difficulties here pointed out, for while voluminous, and as a whole far superior to the former indexes to the statutes at large, it is still quite uneven, and in some portions, especially as relating to the operations of the Treasury Department, it is not as complete as might be desired.

Among minor points of criticism to which the Revised Statutes are properly subject, may be noted some want of compliance with the rule laid down in section 10, which says that "section's" should be confined, as nearly as may be, to single propositions. A more general adherence to this rule would have contributed to the perfectibility of the revision.

There is also evidence of some want of deliberation in the annotations to sections in many portions of the work. Sometimes concise, sometimes redundant, the method of statement employed in the marginal notes lacks uniformity, while the principal subject-matter of the text is not always as clearly indicated as might have been possible. But the faults of literary and editorial execution as here alluded to do not affect the general merits of the revision, and are none of them of a serious character, while, taking the revision as a whole, it is eminently a creditable, as it is practically a most invaluable work of national and permanent importance.

The Revised Statutes of the United States are published in two volumes. The first volume, or the Revised Statutes proper, embraces the laws "of a general and permanent nature" which were in force on the first day of December, 1873. This is the volume, or part, which is distinctively entitled "The Revised Statutes of the United States," and it is to this volume that reference is uniformly made when such title is used. It is to this part, also, that the foregoing remarks are particularly applicable.

The second volume, or part, contains a revision of the laws relating exclusively to the District of Columbia, a list of post roads in the United States, and a very carefully edited compilation of the public treaties made with foreign powers from July 4, to December 1, 1873. This part was included in the work of the original cosioners, but was subsequently prepared under the direction of Mr. Durant, the work of revising the statutes relative to the District of Columbia having been chiefly performed, and the preparation of the treaties made under Mr. Durant's supervision, by Mr. J. W. Le Barnes, of Washington, who has made the laws governing the District a matter of especial study, and who had been associated with Mr. Durant in his previous work upon the general revision.

The District revision, or "The Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia," embrace all the acts of Congress of a general and permanent character in reference to the District from the period of the selection of the District as the seat of Government of the United States to December 1, 1873. This revision supplies a want long felt in legislating for the District as well as in the administration of the local laws, and it presents in a compact and perspicuous form the whole body of Congressional law existing in force at the last named date.

All the law relating to any general subject, except as otherwise embraced in the Revised Statutes proper, is here found under its particular head, while the sections in every chapter are so arranged as to follow each other in their logical order of sequence. The exact law in reference to any special matter is therefore clearly presented, and the cross references to correlative sections, both in the same work and in the general revision, are full and complete. An exhaustive index accompanies this revision.

The revision of the District laws appears to have been made with a scrupulous fidelity to the original enactments, the substance of these being preserved in the consolidated statutes with minute detail. In the volume examined a few verbal errors and one or two omissions are noted for future correction, no reprintings for this purpose having been had, the volume appearing in final form as it left the revisors hands in the first instance.

It is perhaps a matter of regret that Congress should have required the District laws, the post roads, and the public treaties to be embraced in one volume, since these several subjects have no relation to each other. The post road list can have no purpose of utility unless for the use of the Post Office Department, while the District revision is of a local nature, and should have been separately bound. The dignity of our foreign relations, as well as convenience of reference, would also make desirable a single volume of the treaties unincumbered by any other matter. The editor of the second volume, apprehending the possibility of such change of form, took the precaution to so change the several subjects by separate paging and indexing that a division of the parts can be made in future editions simply by a separate binding. No expense for rearrangement will therefore be required in order to make a separate publication hereafter.

Both volumes of the Revised Statutes as now published were prepared for the press under the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of State, whose signature, and the seal of the United States, attest their authenticity.

Each volume contains about 1440 large octavo pages, superbly printed upon paper manufactured expressly for the purpose, and substantially bound in law calf. The typographical appearance and general mechanical execution of these volumes fully authorize the Government Printing Office to lay claim to a just superiority over private establishments in the publication of works of such magnitude, while the low price at which the volumes are sold to the public attest the vast economies of associated labor under Government supervision.

That the Government Printing Office should be able to do a better quality of work, when desired, than ordinary publishing houses is not to be wondered at when it is considered that the Government can command the best obtainable material, facilities, and skill, as also the most abundant supply of either. That the Government Office should be able to do a greater amount of work in a given time than can elsewhere be performed is also easily seen for the same reasons. To any other establishment in the United States, probably to any other in the world, it would be a marvel, impossible of realization, to present the whole proceedings of a day's session of Congress, after lasting until midnight, at an early hour the following morning. Yet this is the feat regularly performed by the Government Printing Office.

In addition to a capacity for superior skillfulness, and to the means for unrivaled rapidity of execution, that the Government Printing Office should also present an example of marked economy in the performance of public work is a fact not so generally known. Indeed, strenuous efforts are systematically made, both by interested persons and for partisan purposes, to create a different and widely incorrect opinion. No arguments are equal to facts. The Revised Statutes are sold to the public through the office of the Secretary of State for three dollars and seventy-five cents per volume, which price covers the whole cost to the Government and ten per cent. additional. The uniform estimate of experienced publishers is that if printed at private establishments the retail price would be fifteen dollars. The binding alone, if done by private parties would cost as much as the complete volume now sells for. By being done at the Government Office, lawyers and other purchasers are saved the sum of eleven dollars on each volume, while the saving to the Government on the volumes required for public distribution is relatively as great.

This example does not constitute an exceptional instance of the great economy to the Government and to the purchasing public in having the public printing performed directly by the Government without the intervention of private contracts. Under the former contract with Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., of Boston, the cost to the Government of the several editions of the Statutes at Large was double the amount of their present cost as executed in handsomer form at the Government Office. The difference in the cost to the purchasing public is still greater. The regular price of the paper-covered volumes of the session laws, as published under the former arrangement, was $2.50. The same volume as now printed at the Government Office sell at from 75 cents to $1.10. The average cost to the purchaser is less than one dollar per volume, including postage, against the former price of $2.50. And yet the new volumes are printed upon paper costing one-third more than the paper previously used, and the Government edition is, besides, superior in all other respects of mechanical execution, as well as of editorial arrangement, to the former editions. With respect to the bound volume of the Statutes at Large the same rules hold good, and similar economic results are shown.

It is undoubtedly true that the saving to the Treasury on the work performed at the Government Printing Office amounts to no less than from one to two millions of dollars annually. Under a return to the system of private contracts this whole sum would be annually diverted from the Treasury into the pockets of the private employing printers, the wages paid for labor would be reduced, an inferior quality of work would be performed, and the contractors only would be benefited. The secret of the annual Democratic attacks upon the Government Printing Office, as well as the motive for making the usual fictitious charges of "corruption," "centralization," &c., is to be found in the facts here related of the public saving effected under the existing arrangement, and the private profits which might be realized if the Government Office could be broken down. Possibly the same motives have something to do with the clamor raised in certain quarters for the purpose of creating a distrust of the correctness of the Revised Statutes. If the preparation of a new edition could be ordered on the ostensible ground of its necessity for the correction of errors, and the publication be given to private firms or awarded under contract, the lawyers of the country and other purchasers would be compelled to pay the full price of $15 per volume, and several fortunes might be realized by the promoters of the scheme. Perhaps in view of all the facts, a Republican Senate will decide to let the Revised Statutes stand for the present, making any needed corrections by supplemental act, and also effectively interpose to prevent the contemplated raid upon the Treasury involved in the withdrawal of the public printing from the Government Office.

Six British frigates, now at the East Indies, will shortly leave for the Mediterranean via the Suez Canal.

CHURCH AND STATE—PRESIDENT GRANT'S AND MR BLAINE'S PROPOSED AMENDMENTS.

Among the important propositions that have been made in consequence of the active discussion now in progress over the school question is one embraced by the following letter from the Hon. James G. Blaine. Its date shows it to have been written shortly after the Ohio election, and to have been addressed to a friend in that State :

AUGUSTA, ME., October 20, 1875.

MY DEAR SIR: The public school agitation in your late campaign is liable to break out elsewhere, and, occurring first in one State and then in another, may keep the whole country in ferment for years to come. This inevitably arouses sectarian feeling, and leads to that bitterest and most deplorable of all strifes, the strife between religious denominations. It seems to me that this question ought to be settled in some definite and comprehensive way; and the only settlement that can be final is the complete victory for non-sectarian schools. I am sure this will be demanded by the American people at all hazards and at any cost. The dread of sectarian legislation in this country has been felt many times in the past. It began very early. The first amendment of the Constitution—the joint product of Jefferson and Madison, proposed in 1789—declared that “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof.” At that time, when the powers of the Federal Government were untried and undeveloped, the fear was that Congress might be a source of danger to perfect religious liberty, and hence all power was taken from it. At the same time the States were left free to do as they pleased in regard to “an establishment of religion,” for the tenth amendment, proposed by that eminent jurist, Theophilus Parsons, and adopted contemporaneously with the first, declared that “all powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.” A majority of the people in any State in this Union can, therefore, if they desire it, have an established church—under which the minority may be taxed for the erection of church edifices which they never enter, and for the support of creeds in which they do not believe. This power was actually exercised in some of the States long after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and although there may be no positive danger of its revival in the future, the possibility of it should not be permitted. The auspicious time to guard against an evil is when all unite in preventing it.

And in curing this Constitutional defect all possibility of hurtful agitation on the school question should be ended also. Just let the old Jefferson-Madison amendment be applied to the States by adding the following to the inhibitory clauses in Section 10, Article 1, of the Federal Constitution, viz :

“No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect, nor shall any money so raised ever be divided between religious sects or denominations.”

This, you will observe, does not interfere with any State having just such a school system as its citizens may prefer, subject to the single and simple restriction that the schools shall not be made the arena for sectarian controversy or theological disputation. This adjustment, it seems to me, would be comprehensive and conclusive, and would be fair alike to Protestant and Catholic, to Jew and Gentile—leaving the religious faith and the conscience of every man free and unmolested.

Very sincerely yours, J. G. BLAINE.

Mr. Blaine may have laid too much stress upon the tenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, to which he refers in connection with the first—the joint work of Jefferson and Madison. There can now be little doubt that the Supreme Court would be undivided as to the application partially made by Mr. Blaine. The prime question that necessarily enters into such a discussion must be, whether or not the establishment of any form of worship as an established State religion, by one or more of the States of this Union, would not be an act in contravention of Republican guarantees, and therefore against both the letter and spirit of the Federal Constitution, as well as directly opposed to public policy and the common weal. Much more than the letter of the Theophilus Parson amendment must of necessity enter into the argument. It involves all the historical facts, as well as intentions, connected with the foundation of the Federal Union. No student, statesman, or jurist would undertake to assert at this time that the First Congress, by whom the first twelve amendments were adopted and then submitted to the State Legislatures, intended for a moment by the tenth amendment to accord to any State the privilege of establishing that institution which they expressly prohibited the General Government, through Congress, from doing.

The contemporaneous discussion is full of interest, especially that which took place in Virginia at the time. When the Colony declared itself independent, the establishment of the Episcopal form of worship as a State Church was strongly advocated by several prominent persons. Mr. Jefferson, as well as Mr. Madison, were especially active and successful in opposing it. Mr. Jefferson, as President, did not issue proclamations for either public fasts or thanksgivings, on the ground that the State ought not to recognize any religion or religious ceremony, even of such an unsectarian a character as are those indicated. But the value of Mr. Blaine's proposition for a Constitutional amendment inhibiting any State or States from establishing a public form of worship, or of dividing the public moneys among any sect, or using the same for any sectarian purpose, is not limited by the fallacy which it would seem he has fallen into, in basing the need of such an amendment upon what he regards as a failure to directly restrict the States from doing that which the Federal Union is prohibited from doing. The argument for adopting such an amendment rests upon broader grounds.

President Grant has solemnly emphasized the position assumed in his speech at Des Moines, at the reunion of the Army of the Tennessee, by presenting to the country, in formal propositions, through his seventh annual message, the deliberate convictions he entertains. He has expressed himself quite freely since the Ohio election, and and in conversation with personal and political friends has heretofore announced his approval of an inhibitive amendment embracing, in substance at least, the latter portion of the amendment proposed in Mr. Blaine's letter. It is eminently satisfactory to find these distinguished public men agreeing so distinctly.

The argument of the President, as well as the suggestions he submits, are of a broader cast—more inclusive and comprehensive in character than the single important point presented by Mr. Blaine. The President says, with great sincerity and clearness of expression, when speaking of the dangers to which the Republic may be liable, that—“Under such a form of government it is of the greatest importance that all should be possessed of education and intelligence enough to cast a vote with a right understanding of its meaning. A large association of ignorant men cannot, for any considerable period, oppose a successful resistance to tyranny and oppression from the educated few, but will inevitably sink into acquiescence to the will of intelligence, whether directed by the demagogue or by priestcraft. Hence the education of the masses becomes of the first necessity for the preservation of our institutions. They are worth preserving, because they have secured the greatest good to the greatest proportion of the population of any form of government yet devised. All other forms of government approach it just in proportion to the general diffusion of education, and independence of thought and action. As the primary step, therefore, to our advancement in all that has marked our progress in the past century, I suggest for your earnest consideration—and most earnestly recommend it—that a constitutional amendment be submitted to the legislatures of the several States for ratification, making it the duty of each of the several States to establish and forever maintain free public schools adequate to the education of all the children in the rudimentary branches, within their respective limits, irrespective of sex, color, birth-place, or religions; forbidding the teaching in said schools of religious, atheistic, or pagan tenets; and prohibiting the granting of any school funds, or school taxes, or any part thereof, either by legislative, municipal, or other authority, for the benefit, or in aid, directly or indirectly, of any religious sect or denomination, or in aid, or for the benefit of any other object of any nature or kind whatever.

“In connection with this important question I would also call your attention to the importance of correcting an evil that, if permitted to continue, will probably lead to great trouble in our land before the close of the 19th century. It is the accumulation of vast amounts of untaxed church property.

“In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States which paid no tax, municipal or State, amounted to about $83,000,000. In 1860 the amount had doubled. In 1875 it is about $1,000,000,000. without check, it is safe to say thi will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who have to pay the taxes. In a growing country where real estate enhances so rapidly with time, as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to without taxation may lead to sequestration, without constitutional authority and through blood.

"I would suggest the taxation of all property equally, whether church or corporation, exempting only the last resting place of the dead; and possibly, with proper restrictions, church edifices."

The two distinct propositions thus embodied, in conjunction with others, are again repeated at the close of this admirable State paper—certainly the most significant and sagacious of the seven annual messages which President Grant has sent to Congress. The President says, in the following weighty words, that—

"As this will be the last annual message which I shall have the honor of transmitting to Congress before my successor is chosen, I will repeat or recapitulate the questions which I deem of vital importance which may be legislated upon and settled at this session."

He then urges that amendments, among others, shall be framed, providing—

"First, that the States shall be required to afford the opportunity of a good common school education to every child within their limits.

"Second, no sectarian tenets shall ever be taught in any school supported in whole or in part by the State, Nation, or by the proceeds of any tax levied upon any community. Make education compulsory so far as to deprive all persons who cannot read or write from becoming voters after the year 1890, disfranchising none, however, on grounds of illiteracy who may be voters at the time this amendment takes effect.

"Third, declare Church and State forever separate and distinct, but each free within their proper spheres; and that all church property shall bear its own proportion of taxation."

That the country will heartily respond to these wise suggestions there can be no doubt. Embodied in the fundamental law of the land, they will fitly and justly crown the close of our first century with a policy which will certainly make the future greater with beneficent results than even the glorious past has been of garnered deeds.

The need of setting at rest this vexatious issue cannot be denied. For the American Republic there is but one method, and that is fully stated by the President. He is sustained by the conclusion, to which all modern history points, that it is quite certain that mere abstention by a State from any direct prohibition of sectarian alliances or connections—that the mere declaration on its part of the purely secular character of its functions and policy—does not prevent interference therewith on the part of any church organization which assumes fundamentally that its duty, as well as right, is, the shaping of all human affairs, secular or otherwise, in direct accordance with its own philosophy, doctrine, and polity. The Roman Catholic Church organization is such a body. It only obeys the law of its existence in demanding control of all means of guiding the intellect and molding the conscience of mankind. The policy of abstention or total non-interference does not meet the all-pervading danger to the free and secular State, which is found to be a necessary consequence of its pervading propaganda and polity. There may be other sacerdotal organizations in the future bearing the same danger to the State, but at present the Vatican alone centralizes and embraces this antagonism—the aim under consideration. A policy so subtle—a power so mobile, yet so much in earnest—so full of zeal and so thoroughly sincere—believing so utterly in its divine right to control opinion and shape and direct all human institutions—is not to be stayed in its course by mere declarations that liberty of conscience is assured by the State. Stronger conditions must be created—safeguards so constructed as to insure that liberty of conscience is not destroyed under the broad ægis of liberty, and by means of the very declaration that is meant to insure its existence. Those safeguards are found in the practical direction indicated both by the President and Mr. Blaine. The passage of such inhibitory amendments as they purpose would set at rest the legal aspects, at least, of the subject. Such amendments ought to be accepted by men of all parties. An opportunity of testing this has been offered by the President's propositions. It cannot be doubted that he will have for the amendments proposed the undivided support of all Republicans in Congress. The same may be fairly hoped from the Democrats. At any rate they must be required to meet the issue.

It is of interest at this time to take note of the Constitutional provisions already in existence. In addition to the inhibition so distinctly embraced by the first amendment to the Federal Constitution, an examination of the several State constitutions will show that the following States have followed directly in the same line:

Alabama has the simplest and most positive provision. It declares "that no religion shall be established by law." It also provides, as do all the others, in more or less elaborate declarations, that no person shall be deprived of the right to worship "according to the dictates of his own conscience." Connecticut declares "that no preference shall be given by law to any Christian sect, or mode of worship." The italics are not in the original. Delaware emphasizes its prohibition by declaring that "no preference can be given by law to any church, sect, or mode of worship." Florida provides that "the free exercise and enjoyment of all religious profession and worship shall be allowed in this State." The following States have put into their constitutions provisions similar in intent and substance to those quoted: Alabama, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin—27 in all.

The other States—Arkansas, California, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nevada, New York, and Rhode Island, content themselves with broad declarations of the right of every citizen to liberty of conscience, and the large majority of both groups also declare that no civil rights shall be denied or abridged on account of any religious opinions. In Pennsylvania, under the old constitution there was a disqualification as to holding office against all persons who denied the existence of God or disbelieved in future rewards and punishments. It is, however, practically obsolete. A similar provision is found in the constitutions of Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Mississippi, so far as the belief in God is concerned. Much of the language used in the older constitutions apparently looks to the free exercise only of the Christian faith in some one of its forms, but the spirit of our political system, and of the general declaration of liberty of conscience which is found in all such instruments, has always governed the interpretation of other clauses.

A general uniformity would, however, be desirable, and that result could hardly be better secured than by the adoption of the amendments proposed in the seventh annual message of President Grant, which includes the qualified one contained in Mr. Blaine's letter.

EDUCATION.—The number of schools in the empire of Japan now amounts to 12,597, exclusive of those of the six ken; 7,998 of these belong to the Government or are national schools, and the rest are private. The total number of scholars amounts to 1,182,968, one-third of whom are girls. The population of Japan is estimated at 32,794,897. The United States, with an estimated population of about 45,000,000, has an enrollment of 8,099,981 in the public schools, and an average daily attendance of 4,521,564 pupils.

It is reported that after January 1, 1876, the European companies controlling the ocean cable lines propose to transmission only such messages legitimate English words. This to do away with the use of c which are often employed for secrecy, and which frequent mistake made in their transmission disputes, usually terminating law. They also propose to charge rates for words containing no letters.

EDUCATION IN VIRGINIA.

One of the most gratifying evidences of the progress of genuine reconstruction in the former slave States is presented in their several State reports on the public schools. It is true, that just as fast as the Democracy resume control of the ex-rebel States there follows a more or less deliberate attempt to impair the efficiency of the common schools, if not to destroy them entirely. . But the seed sown by the sower—Freedom—falls to the ground, takes root, grows and brings harvest in due season. All things conspire for its growth—"the winds carry afar and re-sow, and the rains and the snows nourish."

So, in despite of the opposition of its fatuous enemies, the ideal of Republican government emerges in yearly growing glory and splendor. The common school system in the South, planted by the Union, and fed from every grave of those who died to maintain it, asserts its vitality and grows to larger usefulness. Even its enemies cannot wholly destroy, nor unwise friends do more than temporarily injure. A striking evidence of this is seen in the recent report (1874-75) upon education, made by the Reverend Dr. W. H. Ruffner, the Superintendent of Public Instruction for the State of Virginia. It exhibits commendable progress. According thereto the total school population, in 1875, is as follows: Whites, 280,149; colored, 202,640; total, 482,789. The school age is between five and twenty-one years. According to the United States census of 1870 there were in the State of Virginia 441,971 persons of the same age. This shows an increase in 1875 of 40,818, or at the rate of one in three, a total of 122,454 persons on the whole population.

The number of enrolled pupils in the public schools for the year was 184,486. Of this total, 129,545 were white and 54,941 colored. This shows a percentage of about one in every two and one-twelfth of the white, and of a little less than one in three of the colored school population. It is a tolerably fair test of the extent to which accommodation is provided, and of the spirit that controls the system.

The average daily attendance falls considerably below the enrollment. It stands as follows: Whites, 74,056; colored, 29,871; total, 103,927. But meagre as are these figures in the light of the necessities, they still offer great encouragement over those of preceding periods. Dr. Ruffner gives the following figures:

	Attendance in all schools	Population.		Total.
		White.	Colored.
1850.....	51,808	894,800	526,861	1,421,661
1860.....	67,024	1,047,299	548,907	1,596,206
1870.....	58,974	*712,089	512,841	1,224,920
1875.....	207,871	†1,347,374

*West Virginia is enumerated separately. It was embraced in the figures of 1860.
†This total is estimated—122,454 being added on account of increased school population and the total increase of exhibits.

These are significant figures. The later ones are by no means equal to the measure of existing necessities. Achieved results seem to be almost munificent by the side of the beggarly tyranny that in earlier and more prosperous days robbed the working people of Virginia of all opportunity of education.

Dr. Ruffner with just pride calls attention to the remarkable growth in the total pupilage of the State, as compared with the preceding years given. The common school system provided for by the amended Constitution of 1870 went into operation in 1871. The report of the National Bureau of Education for 1874 gives the following figures, (those for 1875 were added from the State report under consideration :)

Comparative statement showing the condition of the school system for the year ended August 31, 1874, as compared with its condition for the three years which preceded.

	1871.	1872.	1873.	1874.	1875.
Whole number of public schools.....	3,047	3,695	3,696	3,902	4,185
Whole number of graded schools		107	123	155
Whole number of pupils enrolled.....	131,088	166,377	160,859	173,875	184,486
Whole number of pupils in average attendance.....	75,722	95,488	91,175	98,857	103,927
Percentage of school population enrolled.....	31.8	40.5	37.9	39.8	38.2
Percentage of school population in average attendance.....	18.8	23.2	21.5	22.6
Percentage of average attendance on enrollment.....	59.0	57.4	56.6	56.8
Number of teachers in public schools.....	3,084	3,853	3,757	3,962	4,262
Number of school-houses owned by districts..	190	504	764	1,034	*1,256
Value of public school property.....	$211,166	$389,380	$524,638	$682,500	†$757,181
Average number of months schools were taught.....	4.66	5.72	5.22	5.40	5.59
Cost of tuition per month per pupil enrolled..	$0 74	$0 70	$0 75	$0 74	‡$0 70
Average monthly salary of teachers.....	29 86	29 81	32 00	32 64
Whole cost of public education for current expenses.....	587,472	816,812	814,494	873,145	$924,118 47

*The total number of school-buildings reported is 4,561; 2,101 are built of logs; 1,617 of frame; 129 of brick, and 38 of stone.

†The value given is that of property owned by districts.

‡The whole cost of the public schools for 1875 is 89 cents per capita.

§The total cost was $1,021,396 68.

The whole number of pupils attending school, public and private, excluding colleges, and those over twenty-one, is 207,771. 1,880 (all white) attended the colleges of the State last year; and 581 over twenty-one years old attended the public schools, of whom 385 were white and 196 colored. The number of pupils supplied during the year with text-books, at public expense, was 4,025. The current expenses for the year were $924,118.47; for permanent improvements, including real estate, furniture, school apparatus, &c., $97,278.21; total, $1,021,396.68. The amount received from general taxation was $478,750.46; from local taxation $465,414.09. The balance was from the Peabody Fund, and other private sources.

Of the total number of public schools, 3,121 are for white scholars, and 1,064 for colored ones. The average number of months taught the past year was, in cities, 9.69, in country, 5.42; average in cities and country, 5.59. The number of pupils enrolled was 184,486, and of these 129,545 were white and 54,941 colored. The average daily attendance of pupils during the year was 103,927, or 74,056 white and 29,871 colored. The per centage of school population enrolled is, white, 46.2; colored, 27.1; total, 38.2. There are 3,723 white teachers, of whom 2,360 are males and 1,363 are females; 539 are colored, of whom 351 are males and 188 are females. The total number of children between five and twenty-one years of age attending private schools is, 23,285, or 19,466 white and 3,819 colored—with 1,229 white teachers and ninety colored.

The State Agricultural and Mechanical College, which receives the income from the proceeds of two-thirds of the public lands appropriated to Virginia for educational purposes, has been in operation for three years. The first year the pupils numbered 132; the second year 197; the third year, 222. A great majority of these are sons of farmers and mechanics. They represent eighty counties and cities of the State, and ten are from other States.

The Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, (for colored students,) of which General S. C. Armstrong is the founder and Principal, receives the income from the proceeds of one-third of the public lands appropriated by Congress to Virginia for education. It has been open over seven years, and during that time has had 563 pupils, of whom 342 were males and 221 females. Of the graduates 151 have engaged in teaching. 103 being males and 48 females. The last session there were 243 scholars, of whom only 152 were from Virginia, the remainder being from other States. Among the female teachers of this institute are four graduates of Vassar College.

These are all encouraging facts. They offer the best tribute to the energy and good will of the Superintendent, while they afford conclusive evidence of the difficulty which the majority of the freed people encounter in availing themselves of the advantages intended to be at their disposal. An addition of 10,611 to the school attendance, and of 238 to the number of schools, during the year past, is satisfactory evidence of progress. Dr. Ruffner says :

“As a means of educating the people, the superiority of public over private instruction is sufficiently demonstrated by the recent history of education in Virginia. Previous to 1870 the people were dependent chiefly upon private schools for primary instruction. Many poor children had their tuition paid from the Literary Fund, and there were nine counties where there were some public schools. For higher instruction the State supported two institutions.

“The largest attendance in proportion to population was in the year 1860; but how small was that in comparison with the number in 1875. Our population in 1870 was about the same as that of 1860. There has, no doubt, been some increase of population in the last five years, which should, of course, be remembered; but observe the wide contrast in school attendance: In 1860, 67,024; in 1875, 207,771. If the colored pupils be thrown out of the calculation we have, in 1860, (all white,) 67,024; white pupils, public and private, in 1875, 149,011.”

In former years the State paid the expenses of about half the children attending private schools. In 1860 the number so cared for was 31,516. In order to obtain such aid, parents had to plead their inability to pay for tuition. The same rule existed throughout the South. To obtain education free, pauperism had to be avowed. In Virginia the children so aided were known as “poor scholars;” in the majority of slave States the term was applied to the schools themselves.

Mr. Jefferson denounced this dependence upon private tuition as sure to place Virginia in a degraded condition. He was a strenuous advocate of a common school system equivalent in character to that which Republican endeavor has placed among the permanent institutions of the “Old Dominion.”

How nearly the prediction of Mr. Jefferson was fulfilled may be seen by the following statement of illiteracy in Virginia, according to the United States census of 1870 :

Total population over ten years, 890,056

Males 427,455

Females 462,601

Total population of the State..... 1,224,920

Total illiterates over ten years, 445,893

Of these, 211,330 are males, and 234,563 are females. The proportion of illiterates to the total population is 50.10 per cent. The females rate at 50.77 per cent. The proportions are not greatly altered, as yet, though it is fair to presume that the larger proportion of the 334,864 persons who were under ten years of age in 1870 have received some educational training.

That the beneficent changes now being seen in Virginia are due entirely to the great political organization which not only successfully resisted the efforts of the Southern Democracy to destroy the Union, but repaid that base endeavor by creating new conditions and institutions in the South which are sure to bring peace and prosperity in their train, may be seen from a brief examination, among others, of the Constitutional provisions affecting education.

No educational provisions whatever were introduced into the Constitution of 1776, nor in the revision of 1830, when the policy of gradual emancipation came within a very few votes of being successful.

In 1851 the following was adopted :

Article IV—Subdivision of Taxation and Finance.

SECTION 24. A capitation-tax, equal to the tax assessed on land of the value of two hundred dollars, shall be levied on every white male inhabitant who has attained the age of twenty-one years; and one equal moiety of the capitation tax upon white persons shall be applied to the purposes of education in primary and free schools; but nothing herein contained shall prevent exemptions of taxable polls in cases of bodily infirmity.

The above section was continued in the revision of 1864, made at Alexandria, in which it is numbered as § 22 of Article IV.

Under the Constitution—revised in 1868–9, in accordance with the Reconstruction policy, and amended again in 1870—the present common school system was adopted. Articles VII and VIII provide for State and local superintendents of schools, and also for the formation of schools. The first provides that—

“Each township shall be divided into so many compactly located school districts as may be deemed necessary: Provided, That no school district shall be formed containing less than one hundred inhabitants. In each school district there shall be elected or appointed annually one school trustee, who shall hold his office three years: Provided, That at the first election held under this provision there shall be three trustees elected, whose terms shall be one, two, and three years respectively.”

The political or municipal township was abandoned, but the form is maintained for school purposes, and the act of Congress, approved January 26, 1870, (the work of a Republican majority,) contains the following stipulation: “That the Constitution of Virginia shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the school rights and privileges secured by the Constitution of said State.”

Article VIII (Education) provides for a State superintendent of public instruction, to serve four years, elective by the General Assembly; also for a board of education, composed of State officers. It contains the following sections:

“§ 3. The General Assembly shall provide by law, at its first session under this Constitution, a uniform system of public free schools, and for its gradual, equal, and full introduction into all the counties of the State by the year 1876, or as much earlier as practicable.

“§ 4 The General Assembly shall have power, after a full introduction of the public free school system, to make such laws as shall not permit parents and guardians to allow their children to grow up in ignorance and vagrancy.

“§ 5. The General Assembly shall establish, as soon as practicable, normal schools, and may establish agricultural schools and such grades of schools as shall be for the public good.”

In addition to the “literary fund” of the State the proceeds of all public lands donated for school purposes by Congress of escheated property, of all waste and unappropriated lands, and the proceeds of all fines and forfeitures, are to be set apart for common school purposes. An annual tax of not less than one nor more than five mills on the dollar, shall be levied for the support of the school system. County and school districts may also levy taxes, not to exceed five mills in any one year, for the same purpose. The Constitution also requires that the system shall be in fair and equal force by the year 1876. To do so, still requires the organization of more than a thousand district schools.

Under all the conditions of antagonism, growing from prejudice and ignorance, it must be allowed that a fair degree of progress is exhibited. Had the system been administered by its friends the results would have been more satisfactory. This comment is not designed to detract from the merits of the efficient State superintendent. His work must necessarily be hindered by the local hostility that fades so slowly from the minds of a dominant class, trained to control things from an entirely different standpoint.

Republicans may fairly and honorably congratulate themselves and their party associates, in or out of office, on the multiplying proofs that are to be seen of the good results already flowing to the South from the principles they maintained at such bitter cost, and through the institutions which they demanded to be sustained as guarantees against future treason to the Union and hostility to free institutions. Chief among these is the common school system, still so bitterly denounced. It will ere long come to be regarded as the best of blessings. That it must be guarded, however, and vigilantly, too, is evident from such utterances as these, copied from a Mississippi Democratic paper two days after that party had, by a successful dragoonade, captured the State. The Meriden Mercury, November 4, says:

“The free-school system, a Yankee importation, is a monster evil. Once the superintendent of this county received $1,500; now he receives $900. If the office is continued, $100 to $200 is the outside figure he should receive. The whole system should be put in abeyance for the present.”

This demand is the natural result of Democratic triumph in such communities. It has been heard, and its effects are still felt in Virginia. But the free school is sure to win its way. The principle is right—the hope it offers is almost divine. In spite of all opposition—even because of it—assured victory attends, for it may be said, in words written in the camp, that —

Beyond the tribulation
That drapes these dreadful years of war,
We see a newer nation,
Through balmy days of greatening power
And rights of calm ascension,
Expand into the perfect flower
Of God's divine intention !

AN IMPORTANT MEASURE.

Among other important resolutions adopted by the "American Public Health Association," at its recent session in Baltimore, was the following, suggested by Professor E. B. Elliott, of the Treasury Department :

Resolved, That the Executive Committee is instructed to memorialize, in the name of this Association, the Congress of the United States in favor of such legislation as will bring about a proper co-operation between the General Government of the United States and the several State Governments for a uniform and efficient system for the registry of deaths, births, and marriages of the population.

Mr. Elliott holds that the Government of the United States, the several State Governments, and the Association by which the resolution was adopted are each interested in the proposed measure.

This association is interested in securing exact information as to the relative salubrity of localities and the distribution of disease.

The General Government is interested in ascertaining the condition, and changes in condition, of its resources, and especially with reference to its population, the most important of all its resources. To the attainment, in part, of this end, a system of decennial censuses was established from the very organization of the Government; and later, in connection with the enumeration of the population, were associated inquiries relative to the deaths which had occurred during the twelve months prior to the time the census was taken.

But these records of deaths, taken in connection with the census, are necessarily very defective, it being impossible in general for the person from whom the information is obtained to state with accuracy the number of deaths, and the circumstances under which they occurred, during the precise period of twelve months immediately preceding the date of the census.

Again, the General Government is interested in having under its control the means of obtaining full and accurate information respecting the laws of mortality which prevail, and of presenting the results in tabulated form, so as to be readily applied in determining the values of life and reversionary interests in estates, legacies, and pensions, and in showing the mean future lifetimes of the population variously classified.

The State Governments have—in addition to the points of interest specified for the General Government and for the Health Association—the further incentive of securing for their citizens permanent and accessible records of the events of birth, death, and marriage, because useful, and not unfrequently essential, as an aid in determining the descent of heritable property.

In each of several of the States a system has been established for the continuous registration of these events; but in the most accurate of these systems, the returns are defective to such an extent as to abridge their usefulness. For instance, the laws of certain States very properly require the registrar or town clerk to obtain and record the particulars respecting every case of death that occurs in their respective localities. But the bill for fees of the registrar is not unfrequently audited and paid when it is known that he has performed but a part of his duty; that is, when he has obtained and made return of the facts respecting only a portion of the deaths which have taken place in his district, thus rendering his report of little or no value to the community or the general public.

It is evident to the careful observer that the time has come, and the people are ready, for the adoption of measures which will secure a general and complete organization for procuring exhaustive returns of the facts and circumstances which illustrate the important events specified in the resolution.

LABOR IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

In a previous article, based on Dr. Young's valuable work on Labor, an attempt was made to trace the development of free labor from the earlier periods of the world down to the present time. In the present paper it is proposed to present in tabular form the rates of wages paid in Europe, and more especially in Great Britain, together with the cost of living and the habits of the people.

In a single article much of course must necessarily be omitted that would be valuable in the study of political economy. For more full details, the reader must have recourse to the volume under review.

SKILLED TRADES IN LONDON.

The following table shows the established rates of wages obtained per week in London in 1871 by members of the various trade-societies. The British pound (£) sterling is computed at $4.84, and the shilling at 24 cents:

TRADES.	Number of members.	Rate of wages.
		Summer.	Winter.
Bakers		$3 87	$5 08
Basket-makers		3 63	4 84
Boatbuilders		8 47	7 26
Bookbinders	702	7 26	7 26
Brasscock-finishers		8 47	8 47
Brass-finishers		8 47	8 47
Bricklayers	2,386	*16	*16
Brush-makers	400	(†)	(†)
Cabinet-makers	500	7 26	7 26
Cabinet-makers, deal	450	7 99	7 99
Carpenters	4,740	9 14	9 14
Carvers and gilders	50	4 84	4 84
Coachbuilders	25	9 68	9 68
Coachmakers	320	9 68	9 68
Coachsmiths	200	4 84	12 58
Coach trimmers and makers		6 05	6 05
Compositors	3,550	4 84	8 47
Corkcutters	100	7 26	7 26
Cordwainers	3,678	(†)	(†)
Curriers	1,900	8 47	8 47
Engineers	33,539	{ *16, *18	{ *16, *18
Farriers	220	9 68	12 10
French-polishers	30	7 26	7 26
Hammermen	80	5 81	5 81
Iron founders and molders	7,372	9 20	9 20
Letter-press printers		7 26	7 26
Painters, house		*14	*14
Pianoforte-makers	400	*16	*16
Plasterers		*14	*14
Plumbers		*18	*18
Pressmen, printers'	60	7 26	7 26
Skinners	225	7 26	7 26
Steam-engine makers	100	{ *16, *18	{ *16, *18
Stonemasons	17,193	9 14	7 82

* Per hour. † Piecework. ‡ Uncertain.

WOOLEN MANUFACTURE.

The following is the average earnings per week for spinning, weaving, &c., in the woolen manufactories of Dewsbury, Leeds, and Manchester. The hours of labor are sixty per week; the wages, partly piece-work and partly day-work:

OCCUPATION.	Dewsbury.	Leeds.	Manchester.
Layers on for scribblers, women	$2 90	$2 17
Card-setters or cleaners, men	4 11	$4 11
Sliver-minders, girls	2 17
Condenser-minders, girls	1 69
Card-feeders, women	3 14
Woolyers, men	3 87	4 84	4 11
Woolyers, foremen, men	5 08
Self-acting mule-minders, men	3 63	2 90
Self-acting mule-piecers, boys	1 69	1 45	1 21
Rag-grinders, men	4 84
Enginemmen and stokers	4 84
Warpers	3 63	3 38
Power-loom tuners, men	8 47
Power-loom weavers, women	3 38	2 90	3 38
Wool-sorters, men	6 05	6 05
Fulling-millers, men	5 08	5 32
Wool and piece dyers, men	5 32
Cloth-dressers, viz., raisers, cutters, pressers, tenterers, drawers	5 80	5 32	5 08
Burlers, women	2 42	1 21
Riggers and stumpers, men	5 08
Menders and stumpers, women	3 14
Oil-extracters, men	5 80
Mechanics and joiners, men	7 26
Rag-pickers, women	1 93
Hand-spinners, men	6 77

CARPET MAKING.

In Glasgow the woolen carpet makers, working sixty hours per week, receive the following average weekly wages:

OCCUPATION.	Glasgow.
Assistant dyers, men	$4 47
Assistant dyers, boys	1 53
Hand-loom weavers and beamers, men	4 96
Hand-loom weavers and beamers, boys	1 93
Mechanics	6 29
Pattern-drawers, men	6 05
Pattern-drawers, boys	2 42
Warehouse-workers, tenters, and sewers, men	5 32
Warehouse-workers, tenters, and sewers, boys	1 45
Warehouse-workers, tenters, and sewers, women	2 35
Warehouse-workers, tenters, and sewers, girls	1 69
Croppers, cutters, and cleaners, men	4 59
Croppers, cutters, and cleaners, boys	1 69
Croppers, cutters, and cleaners, women	2 17
Croppers, cutters, and cleaners, girls	1 08
Winders and reelers, women	2 17
Winders and reelers, girls	1 21

FLAX MANUFACTURE.

In Leeds the following wages are paid per week to manufacturers of flax :

OCCUPATION.	Leeds.
Overlookers	$4 84 to $9 68
Warehousemen	3 87 to 4 35
Roughers	4 84 to 6 05
Hacklers.....	1 21 to 1 57
Sorters	4 84 to 6 05
Preparers, women and girls....	1 45 to 1 75
Spinners, women and girls	1 51 to 1 75
Doffers	1 21 to 1 57
Reelers, women.....	1 93 to 2 42
Makers-up.....	4 35 to 6 05
Enginemen	4 84 to 6 05
Mechanics	4 84 to 7 28

SILK MANUFACTURE.

The average weekly earnings paid in Yorkshire and Manchester are as follows :

OCCUPATION.	Yorkshire.	Manchester.
Silk-boilers, men....	$4 35
Silk-dressers, men...	6 29
Silk-preparers, girls.	2 17
Silk-spinners, girls..	2 17	$1 93 to $2 42
Silk-doublers, girls..	2 17	1 93 to 2 42
Silk-reelers, girls....	2 17	1 93 to 2 42
Mechanics, men.....	6 29
Joiners, men.....	5 08
Engine-drivers, men	4 35
Warpers, men.....	5 80
Children, half-timers	60

BOOT AND SHOE MANUFACTURE.

In London and Leeds the following are the average weekly wages :

OCCUPATION.	Metropolis.	Leeds.
Riveters, best class.....	$7 26	$2 90 to $8 47
Riveters, second class....	4 84	2 90 to 8 47
Finishers, best class.....	9 20	5 08 to 9 68
Finishers, second class....	6 05	5 08 to 9 68
Clickers, males.....	6 05
Machinists, females.....	1 94 to 3 39
Fitters, females.....	1 69 to 2 90
Last-makers	4 84 to 7 28
Cloggers.....
Cutters.....

TOBACCO AND CIGARS—LONDON.

OCCUPATION.	Metropolis.
Cutters	$6 05 to $8 47
Dryers or pan-men.....	4 36 to 7 26
Women-strippers.....	2 90 to 3 63
Boy-strippers.....	1 69 to 4 84
Spinners	6 05 to 8 47
Packers	3 63 to 6 05

MANUFACTURE OF CLOTHING.

Average prices paid per week in London. The ordinary hours of work are from 8 A. M. to 8 P. M., but the average is less than sixty per week :

OCCUPATION.	Metropolis.
Overlookers, men	$10 17
Cutters, men.....	9 20
Basters, females, first-class.....	2 30
Basters, females, inferior.....	1 47
Machiners, females, first-class	3 41
Machiners, females, inferior	2 90
Sewers, females, first-class	2 96
Pressers, men, first-class.....	6 61
Pressers, men, inferior.....	4 24

DRESS MAKING.

The following are the average prices paid per week in London. Hours, 8 to 8 :

OCCUPATION.	Metropolis.	Remarks.
	Each.
Two managers.....	$18 55
One dressmaker.....	7 42	With board and lodging.
Two dressmakers.....	6 53	do.
One dressmaker.....	6 05	do.
One dressmaker.....	2 78	do.
One dressmaker.....	1 03	do.
One dressmaker.....	6 53	Tea only; no lodging.
One dressmaker.....	6 05	do.
Two dressmakers	5 57	do.
One dressmaker.....	4 84	do.
Three dressmakers	4 36	do.
Three dressmakers.....	4 11	do.
Seven dressmakers	3 87	do.
Three dressmakers	3 51	do.
Two dressmakers.....	3 39	do.
Two dressmakers	3 14	do.
Thirty-four dressmakers..	2 90	do.
Two dressmakers	2 66	do.
Fourteen dressmakers	2 42	do.
Five dressmakers.....	2 18	do.
Four dressmakers.....	1 94	do.
One dressmaker.....	1 69	do.
Three dressmakers	1 45	do.
One milliner.....	6 05	With board and lodging.
Two milliners	4 64	do.
One milliner.....	3 51	do.
Three milliners.....	2 34	do.
One milliner.....	2 22	do.
One milliner.....	1 85	do.
One milliner.....	1 49	do.
One milliner.....	1 39	do.

Women are paid much lower wages than men. Compare the last with preceding tables and this fact will be more apparent. While the cost of living in the cities of England is about the same as in our American centers of trade, the wages in many branches are from fifty to one hundred per cent. higher here than in England.

LETTER-PRESS PRINTING.

The following are the prices paid for jobbing and newspaper work. Average 58½ hours. Overtime, average 13 cts. per hour:

TOWNS.	Jobbing.	News.
Barnsley	$6 29	$6 29
Blackburn	6 78	6 78
Bradford	6 29	6 78
Chesterfield.....	5 81	5 81
Derby	6 29	6 29
Dewsbury	6 29	6 29
Durham	5 81	5 81
Guildford.....	5 81	6 53
Halifax	6 53	6 53
Hartlepool.....	5 81	5 81
Huddersfield.....	6 29	6 53
Hull.....	6 29	6 53
Lewes.....	7 02	7 02
Leeds.....	7 26	7 26
Manchester.....	7 26	7 50
Newcastle-on-Tyne.....	6 78	6 78
Scarborough.....	5 81	6 29
Sheffield	6 78	6 78
Sunderland.....	6 29	6 29
York	5 81	6 05

MECHANICAL AND FARM LABOR.

The following are the average rates of wages paid in Durham, England, in 1874:

MECHANICS.	Durham.
Blacksmiths	$1 30 per day.
*Bricklayers and masons.....	1 44 per day.
Cabinet-makers.....	1 32 per day.
Carpenters.....	1 32 per day.
Coopers.....	1 10 per day.
Miners.....	1 46 per day.
Mechanists.....	1 36 per day.
Painters.....	1 32 per day.
Plasterers	1 42 per day.
Shoemakers	90 per day.
Stonecutters.....	1 44 per day.
Tailors.....	1 20 per day.
Tanners.....
Tinsmiths.	1 20 per day.
Wheelwrights.....	1 32 per day.
FARM LABOR.
Experienced hands. { Summer..	84 per day.
{ Winter...	64 per day.
Ordinary hands..... { Summer..	64 per day.
{ Winter ..	40 per day.
Common laborers at other than farm-work, for six days only..	70 per day.
Female servants	4 86 per mo.
PRICE OF BOARD.
October, 1874. { For workmen....	3 40 per week
{ For workwomen	2 40 per week

* Working five days only, and for the sixth day 72 cents.

RATES OF WAGES IN SHEFFIELD.

The following are the average rates of wages paid per week to mechanics and other laborers in Sheffield, England, in 1872:

CLASS OF LABOR.	Wages.
Mechanics:
Blacksmiths.....	$6 53
Carpenters	7 26
Masons.....	7 74
Painters.....	6 53
Plasterers.....	7 02
Shoemakers	5 32
Boiler-makers.....	6 53
Wheel and mill wrights.....	7 74
Carters.....	5 08
Clerks in railway offices.....	6 05
Slaters, 7d. per hour, 53 hours per week.	7 26
Slaters' assistant, 5d. per hour, 53 hours per week.....	5 32
Table-cutlery:
Table-blade forgers.....	7 19
Table-blade grinders.....	6 69
Table-blade hafters.....	5 34
Pocket-cutlery:
Pocket-blade forgers.....	6 69
Grinders	7 26
Hafters.....	6 05
Saws:
Sawmakers	7 02
Sawgrinders.....	8 47
Handlers.....	6 78
Rubbers, women	2 18
Scissors:
Forgers.....	6 05
Grinders	8 83
Filers.....	6 41
Putting together.....	6 41
Burnishers, women.....	1 94
Edge tools:
Forgers.....	10 16
Strikers.....	7 74
Hardeners	6 78
Grinders	10 29
Engineers' tools:
Forgers.	7 87
Grinders.....	7 62
Filers.....	6 53
Hammer-makers:
Forgers.....	9 68
Strikers.....	7 26
Razors:
Forgers.....	7 26
Grinders	9 44
Hafters	6 78
Girls, assisting, putting up, etc....	1 63
Silver-plated ware:
Silversmiths.....	7 87
Chasers.....	7 87
Engravers	9 68
Burnishers { Women.....	3 03
{ Girls, 12 to 16 years...	1 82
Buffers.... { Women.....	3 39
{ Girls, 12 to 16 years....	1 82
White-metal ware:
Spinners	8 83
Putting together.....	7 02
Castors and stampers.....	7 50
Buffers.... { Men	6 41
{ Women	2 90
Women casters.....	2 42
Girls, buffers and cleaners.....	1 45
Women in warehouse.....	2 54
Burnishers, women.....	2 90
Files:
Forgers.....	13 31
Strikers.....	9 68
Grinders	12 71
Cutters.....	7 26
Steel:
Melter	12 10
Puller out.....	7 02
Cokers.....	4 86
Pot-maker	9 68
Converting furnace men.....	4 88

HAT AND CAP MAKING.

In London the weekly average of wages paid is as follows. Hours, 60 per week :

OCCUPATION.	Metropolis.
Machiners, hands.....	$3 68
Clerks.....	4 84
Boys.....	1 21
Needlewomen.....	2 42
Hat-trimmers, women and girls	2 90
Finishers, men.....	$7 26 to 9 68
Bodymen.....	7 26 to 9 68
Shapers, men.....	9 68 to 14 52
Feltmen.....
Hatters.....

LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE MAKING.

The following are average weekly wages for 57 hours work :

OCCUPATION.	Glasgow.
Fitters and finishers.....	$6 06
Turners, shapers, planers & glotters	6 06
Drillers.....	3 87
Erectors and boiler-mounters.....	6 53
Pattern-makers.....	6 77
Iron and brass moulders.....	7 00
Coppersmiths.....	6 77
Grinders.....	7 50
Boiler-makers.....	6 25
Smiths.....	6 25
Forgemen.....	8 47
Laborers.....	3 63
Hammermen.....	4 11

SHIPBUILDING AND MARINE ENGINEERING.

Weekly wages paid in Glasgow :

OCCUPATION.	Glasgow.
SHIPBUILDING-YARD :
Blacksmiths.....	$6 05
Angle-iron smiths.....	6 29
Hammermen.....	3 75
Riveters.....	$5 08 to 5 32
Platers and fitters.....	5 80 to 7 01
Calkers.....	5 32
Helpers or laborers.....	3 38
Rivet-boys.....	1 69
Carpenters and boat-builders..	6 53
Joiners.....	6 53
Blockmakers.....	5 80
Painters.....	7 32
Riggers.....	6 29
Machinists.....	5 68
Borers.....	3 98
ENGINE-WORKS :
Draughtsmen.....	8 22
Pattern-makers.....	6 41
Joiners.....	6 59
Blacksmiths.....	6 53
Hammermen.....	3 87
Fitters and finishers.....	5 86
Iron-turners.....	6 05
Machinists.....	5 50
Laborers.....	3 32
BOILER-WORKS :
Platers and fitters.....	6 47
Riveters and calkers.....	5 44
Blacksmiths.....	6 29
Hammermen.....	3 75
Holders on and laborers.....	3 44
Rivet-boys and blowers.....

CABINET MAKING AND UPHOLSTERING.

The following average wages are paid per week of 60 hours in Manchester and London :

OCCUPATION.	Manchester.	Metropolis.
Cabinet-makers....	$7 74 to 8 22	$7 26 to 10 89
Upholsterers.....	7 98	7 26 to 12 10
French polishers...	6 77	7 26
Painters.....	14cts. per hr.	8 47
Gilders.....	7 26 to 7 74	7 26 to 8 47
Upholstery sewers.	2 90	3 38
Turners.....		7 26 to 10 89
Chair-makers.....		7 26 to 12 10
Joiners.....		9 19
Carvers.....		7 26 to 12 10
Decorators.....		9 19

BUILDING TRADES.

In the London and Manchester columns the figures indicate the number of cents paid per hour for work. In the Bradford column the figures indicate the average weekly wages :

OCCUPATION.	Metropolis.	Manchester.	Bradford.
Joiners.....	16	14½	$6 61
Masons.....	16	15	7 26
Bricklayers.....	16	7 26
Plasterers.....	16
Laborers.....	9½	7½	4 84
Superior laborers and scaffolders.	10½	8½
Painters.....	15	14
Plumbers and glaziers.....	6 61
Slaters.....	6 77

With this table, in connection with those which preceded it, the reader will be in possession of information that will afford a general knowledge of the remuneration of labor in England, and it may be added in the United Kingdom, though variations occur in different localities. On the Continent the average pay of the working classes rules even lower than in England. Mechanics and laborers are paid not over 75 per cent. of the average remuneration received in England ; but provisions and clothing also rule somewhat lower in cost.

COST OF RENT, PROVISIONS, GROCERIES, ETC., IN ENGLAND.

The work is very complete in its details, showing the cost of living in England. The following condensed statement will enable the reader to judge of the general results :

BIRMINGHAM.—Rent of kitchen and two rooms above, in rear of house, 4s. a week; in front, 5s. Bread 8d. for 4-pound loaf. Meat, 1s. per pound. Cheese, good American, 7d. per pound. Rent of three rooms, about 3s. 6d. per week for back, and 4s. 6d. for front; average about 4s. House-rent in suburbs lower than in the city—4s. to 4s. 6d. for house of four rooms; 6s. for six rooms.

SHEFFIELD.—Rent of rooms, ordinary price, 4s. per week for four rooms, or about 1s. per room. Good rooms rent for more. A respectable small house may be had for 6s. a week. Meat in Sheffield is good. Workingmen buy the best, and they can afford it. Excellent beef and mutton 10½d. per pound; good at 8½d. American bacon, 7d. to 9d. Butter, from 1s. to 1s. 2d.

MANCHESTER.—Leg of veal, 9d.; best fillet, 6d. Leg of mutton, 9d. Good beef, for stewing, 7½d.; for roasting, 9d. to 9½d. Tea, very good, 2s. 4d. to 2s. 8d.; best, 3s. Good white sugar, 4d.; best 4½d.; brown, 3d. to 3½d. Flour, 2s. to 2s. 1d. per stone. Bacon, 7d. to 9d. Cheese 6d. to 8d. Dry goods, low. Rent of rooms, 4s. for four rooms. In another part of the city rents are 3s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 4s. for four rooms. Good cheese, 8d., chiefly American, which is very good, and occasionally better than English at the same price. Good tea, 2s. 8d.; best, 3s.

HALIFAX.—Four rooms in upper part of house, from £8 to £9 per year. Better houses, built by Crossleys, two rooms on a floor, larger frontage, at 10 guineas a year, and poorer at lower rates.

BRADFORD.—Rent of houses, five or six rooms, for clerks, £18 to £20 per year.

NOTTINGHAM.—Rent of three to four rooms, average 4s. per week. Some nice houses in a good street rent for the same. Within the walls of the old town four to five rooms including taxes, 4s. to 4s. 6d. Price of provisions much the same as in other western towns. About 10d. to 1s. for the best beef; 8d. to 10d. for very good; quite good at 9d. Veal 10d. by the leg; 13d. for cutlets; and much less for the poorer pieces.

HUDDERSFIELD.—Price of board, for workmen, 10s.; for workwomen, 7s. per week.

CORK. (From Mr. Derby's notes.) Prices in a provision store: Beef and mutton, 10d. to 1s. per pound; pork and bacon, 9d.; corned beef, 9d.; smoked hams, 10d. to 1s.; cabbages, 1d. each.

LONDON WHOLESALE PRICES IN 1872.

From the monthly statement of the wholesale prices of the following articles in the London markets during each month of the year 1872, the average, expressed in United States coin, has been computed, and the average pro rata price stated per pound:

	Per cwt.	Per lb.
Pork: Hams, smoked.....	$26 59	$0 23.7
Lard.....	17 03	15.2
Butter.....	29 24	26.1
Cheese	15 98	14.3
Rice.....	3 29	2.9
Coffee, Jamaica middling.....	25 84	23
Sugar, good brown.....	8 77	7.9
Molasses, West Indies.....	3 08	2.7

COST OF CLOTHING.

In the foregoing tables the cost of provisions and of house-rent per week has been given, also the price of various articles of dry goods and of boots, thus furnishing some data for computing the cost of living in the United Kingdom as compared with the United States. While the prices of the principal articles of subsistence are on the whole as high in the former as in the latter country, the rental of rooms and the price of clothing are only about one-half as much as in the United States. From a careful computation made in London, it is believed that clothing can be purchased there at 50 per cent. of the gold and 56 per cent. of the currency prices in New York. From a tailor in High Holborn, who makes more clothing for citizens of the United States than any other in London, the following prices were obtained:

Good business suits, made to order of good and fashionable material, cost from 58s. to 60s.; the lowest price of similar quality in New York, ready made, being $28 to $30. Suits of fine blue cloth, 82s. 6d., ($19.96,) which it is believed could not be obtained anywhere in the United States for $40. Fine black cloth dress vests, 10s.; dress-trousers of the best black doeskin, 30s.; frock-coats of the best black cloth that could be purchased in London, silk lined, 80s., ($19.-36;) overcoats from 50s. to 60s., the latter of good beaver-cloth, with silk-velvet collar.

CONDITION OF THE WORKING CLASSES IN GREAT BRITAIN.

The volume under review is very full in its details under this head. The following condensed statements contain only a fraction of what is said in reference to the drinking habits of the people.

In proof of the statement that the habit of drinking to excess extends to the middle and upper classes, the testimony of Dr. Anstie is presented. The following appeared in the Practitioner for 1872:

We must notice the fact that many girls of the wealthy middle and of the upper classes, especially the former, are of late years taking to consume all kinds of wine, and particularly champagne, to an extent which used never to be permitted. At many modern ball suppers champagne flows like water; and the attentive observer will soon perceive that it is not the men, by any means, who do the larger part of the consumption. These same young ladies who have so freely partaken of champagne over-night will next day at lunch take plenty of bottled beer, or a couple of glasses of sherry. Dinner comes round, and again either champagne or hock or port or sherry is drunk, not less than a couple of glasses being taken. And then the evening very often brings a party of some kind with the inevitable champagne or sherry. We are speaking of things which we have seen when we say that many girls who live among rich (especially nouveau riche) and gay society are in the habit, during six months out of the twelve, of taking (in the shape of wine, &c.) a daily average of two, two and a half, or three ounces of absolute alcohol, a quantity which, if expressed in cheap beer, would be equal to six or seven pints.

Referring to the drinking habits of the working classes the United States consul at Manchester informed the author that—

The working-classes consume an enormous quantity of intoxicating liquors, principally beer, though very many partake largely of spirits and of the cheaper wines. Intemperance seems to be on the increase, especially among the women, not only of the working-classes, but also of the middle and upper middle classes.

General Fairchild, United States consul at Liverpool, under date of November, 1873 writes :

The increase of drunkenness, and all dissipation which follow idle hours, is alarming.

The Westminster Review of January, 1874, says :

Liverpool has the unenviable notoriety of being the most drunken town in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Trench, the able and well-informed medical officer of the health department of Liverpool, remarks :

The working-classes of Liverpool are extremely intemperate, even when compared with similar sections of the community in other large towns of Great Britain.

His able official report for a previous year contains the following on the same subject

The amount which is spent in drink is astonishing. One or two instances of the worst kind, occurring in the same street, may be cited.

A man earns 27s. regularly, and spends as regularly 21s. in drink; his four children are in rags. In another instance the wages are 30s. a week regularly; the father and mother are both drunken, and three children are half starved and in rags. In another house is a copper-ore worker, earning 27s. a week, all of which is spent in drink by himself and his wife. The children are in rags and filth, and look idiotic. In the same street there are sober men, earning only 20s. and 23s. a week, who are living in comfort.

The landlord of a small public house, who had lived for years in the district, and knew intimately the habits of the people, said, "For one man who did not drink there were fifty who would take their share; they starve their wives and children, and must beg if they want a bit."

Mr. Jenkinson, the consul of the United States at Glasgow, in reference to the increase of intemperance, wrote as follows :

That drunkenness prevails to an alarming extent among the working-classes cannot be denied; that it has increased as their wages have been increased is also true. Many have, no doubt, been benefited by such increase of wages; but most, it seems, outspend their extra earnings in extra quantities of whisky.

Dr. Webster, United States consul at Sheffield, thus writes, January 22, 1874 :

From inquiry and my own observation, I believe that far the larger part of the loss of time and the reckless waste of money is the result of the drinking habits which prevail so generally. It is painful to see how the weekly wages are squandered by the thousands who throng the drinking places on Saturday, Sunday, (at certain hours,) Monday, and Tuesday, and, indeed, on all the days of the week.

There are in Sheffield 1,400 public houses, licensed places for the sale of beer and spirits. At each of these, at a low estimate, an average amount of £10 is spent weekly, making an aggregate of £14,000 of weekly expenditure for a population of 240,000.

Mr. Consul Jones, of New Castle-upon-Tyne, in his report on the moral and social condition of the working classes, says :

Many of them are very improvident and fond of drink; a feast of food and stimulants in the early part of the week, at the expense of an insufficient supply at the end, is very frequently the case among the sons of toil on the Tyne. Excessive drinking has undoubtedly increased in this district since the short hours and advanced wages have prevailed.

It was said boastingly by English statesmen that the nation had drunk itself out of the Alabama claims by the increased income from the tax on intoxicating drinks during the past year.

From these statements the condition of the working classes may be pretty clearly contemplated. Drinking is the bane of English society and the destruction of the working classes. In our own country this evil is broad and bad enough, and according to those who have investigated that subject, it is claimed that the drinking habits of the people are increasing annually the number that fall victims to the evil and fill drunkards' graves. Is there no remedy, or is the degraded condition of the working-classes in England, through intemperance, to be the fate of our own work-people, a few generations hence, through the same habit of habitual drinking? Is there no remedy? SOMEBODY IS RESPONSIBLE.

THE DEMOCRATIC HOUSE.

Ever since the elections determined that we should have a large Democratic majority in the lower house of the Forty-Fourth Congress the minds of politicians have been disturbed as to what will be the result. That camp followers from a region long starved out politically would look upon it as a mere question concerning the paltry offices in its gift was natural enough. The few intelligent leaders, while they humored this idea, shrugged their shoulders and scratched their noses, and felt that the Democratic party had drawn an elephant. The first day's proceedings in the Forty-Fourth Congress did not tend to disabuse their minds of that idea.

It has been customary for the Democrats to bewail the decadence of statesmanship. They represent the Republicans as political parvenus—men who had been lifted out of their sphere and above their capacities by the accidents of the civil war. Antiquity has always a vague and dim religious light about it. The Democratic party, having no modern virtues it cared about parading, was fain to fall back on the things of the past, which, like the age of the currier's horse, was lost in the mists of antiquity.

For the first time in eighteen years there was a change. The Democrats of to-day stood face to face with the Republicans of to-day. The latter have just come out of a struggle the greatest of ancient or modern times. They hold in their grasp a free and united Republic. They met a Democracy which scarcely knew itself, and which nobody else recognized. It is true that they have a majority in one branch of the legislature. They come in with a flourish of trumpets, and much boasting. The first day's work teaches them that they have met statesmen not unworthy of the great work they have done. Meeting them the Democracy succumbed.

The first day of this Congress illustrated what the last will illustrate, that the election that clothed the Democratic party with power in the lower house was gained by false pretenses. Before the people they denounced "dead issues." Even the glory of the war to suppress the rebellion was to be blotted out. They were enthusiasts for the "questions of to-day." No honest man will deny that these, undoubtedly, were the pacification of the country—the currency question, and the tariff. On the latter two of these questions the Democracy were not as well united as the Republicans. On the former there was a smouldering fire of hostility ready to burst forth. Their election pretensions to-day stand forth as dishonored promises. They wallow in the mire of "State Sovereignty." They fight the Government at Washington just as they did in the rebel army. They drag up the Louisiana question before the Democratic baby was fairly washed and put in clean linen.

A year ago a compromise was effected on the Louisiana matter by a temperate concession on both sides, which prevented the prompt, perhaps the bloody suppression of a civil war. We had "peace." The attempt to reopen this question exhibited bad taste and worse judgment; to fail was still more unhappy, as that indicated imbecility.

The distinguished gentleman from New York, who was a candidate for Speaker, aspires to the higher honor of being leader of the House. An early career, somewhat turbulent and checkered, has induced him to settle into that frigid respectability which, like his mustachios, appear to have frozen into a rigid hoar frost. The question as to who should marshal the cohorts of "reform" and "living issues" to victory was an undetermined political problem. The gentleman from New York is a little—just a very little—slow. He had felt the potency of the extreme Southern wing in the contest for Speaker. It is true, that it was a little late in the day—the "day after the fair"—but as it was his first opportunity he made a great bid to that prejudice by dragging up the Louisiana question. Instead of earning the gratitude of his countrymen as a "leader," he fell under ban as a "mis"-leader.

His colleague, the genial and witty, is too nice a man, and too funny, to be criticised. He, in a rash moment, might consent to sacrifice his party, or his country, but never his joke. The new Speaker persists in calling him "the gentleman from Ohio," a fearful innuendo as regards "carpet bagging," to which we desire to call the attention of the statesman from Indiana. This gentleman from New York is, pre-eminently, a scholar, a citizen of the world, and a wag. That any one should have seriously contemplated his election as Speaker seems scarcely probable. Even the large vote he got does not relieve one's mind from doubts about it. He is no admirer of his very bland colleague; still, in the attempt of the latter at leadership he followed. The result was simply the old story, "when the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

The gentleman from Mississippi occupies a somewhat different position from the other would-be Democratic leaders. Tall and handsome, dignified in his demeanor, even elegant in his manners, he loomed up in the Democratic ranks, in the eyes of an expectant country, as the coming "Admirable Crichton." The occasion of the Sumner eulogies was the occasion for magnanimous words, which the country hoped would be the prelude to magnanimous statesmanship. There was scarcely another man, North or South, who had so promising a future. The first day's proceedings in the House dispelled what the violence of Mississippi had left. He supported the motion of the gentleman from New York with eloquence and zeal; but in doing so proved to the country that he lacked patriotism and judgment. Even in the Republican ranks his failure was witnessed with profound regret.

There is a gentleman from Indiana, who is one of the most rigid of Democrats, but who did not sympathize with the performances. He was formerly, while his party was not in power, the great objector. A bill of any kind was to him what a red rag is to a bull, his tail went up and his horns down, and he made a charge at it. There used to be another gentleman on the Republican side who divided with him this inestimable responsibility. The latter, alas! has gone, and leaves the patriotic mind in a tremulous fear as to whether the gentleman from Indiana, with all his new cares, shall prove equal to the emergency.

As has been remarked, the gentleman from Indiana is a rigid Democrat. We think it likely that he would be regarded as a finished specimen of a Democrat, but for one thing. Providence, in organizing him for his sphere in the world, in a moment of absent-mindedness, gave him a rather astute judgment. Some malicious persons in his own party have suggested that this feature in his character grew out of the "I object!" experience; and it is even alleged that this has grown hereditary in his family, and will go down to latest generations, no matter what party is in power. Such an idea is unworthy of consideration. He saw the hole the Democratic party was going into, and cried, "hold!" The halt was come to in a somewhat hesitating and promiscuous manner. They did not halt all at once. It ran through several votes, but was final and moderately respectable when, on motion of the leader of the Republicans, the gentleman from Louisiana appeared and was sworn in.

Seriously speaking, the first blunder of the Democracy is not merely a mistake for lack of experience; it is an inherent and fatal defect. On the question of peace and security to the country, of tariff, of money, they have nothing to offer, and nothing on which they can unite. They carried the North by professing living issues, and acceptance of the situation. They carried the South by appeals to the rebel intelligence and power, and crushed the growing elements of Republican liberty. They are together; let them—simmer. The same thing that has occurred before will occur again. Does any man in the United States feel that he can safely trust the government of this great republic to such unstable and unreliable elements? This may be said even if you give them the benefit of all their professions.

As to the Democratic "leaders," we are sorry for them. In their first unwise rush they found plenty of enthusiastic followers, but in the end, like Jim Gunter's membership in the old Baptist church, it "petered out." The question now is, "Who are the leaders of the Democratic party?" Echo answers, "Who?" As for those who wanted to be, the curse of Reuben is on them all.

"Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel."

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

THE EXECUTIVE.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The President's Message to Congress is accepted by the press and the people as a very satisfactory State paper. It is more fully reviewed in another part of the present number of THE REPUBLIC.

The following are the closing paragraphs of the Message:

As this will be the last annual Message which I shall have the honor of transmitting to Congress before my successor is chosen, I will repeat or recapitulate the questions which I deem of vital importance which should be legislated upon and settled at this session.

First—That the States shall be required to afford the opportunity of a good common school education to every child within their limits.

Second—No sectarian tenets shall ever be taught in any school supported in whole or part by the State, nation, or by the proceeds of any tax levied upon any community. Make education compulsory so far as to deprive all persons who cannot read and write from becoming voters after the year 1890, disfranchising none, however, on grounds of illiteracy who may be voters at the time this amendment takes effect.

Third—Declare church and State forever separate and distinct, but each free within their proper spheres, and that all church property shall bear its own proportion of taxation.

Fourth—Drive out licensed immorality, such as polygamy and the importation of women for illegitimate purposes. To recur again to the centennial year, it would seem as though now as we are about to begin the second century of our national existence would be a most fitting time for these reforms.

Fifth—Enact such laws as will insure a speedy return to a sound currency, such as will command the respect of the world.

Believing that these views will commend themselves to the great majority of the right thinking and patriotic citizens of the United States, I submit the rest to Congress.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

SUMMARY OF THE ANNUAL REPORTS.

Secretary Bristow's report is lengthy and valuable, and on the whole quite satisfactory. The following quotations embrace the receipts and expenditures for 1875, and a portion of 1876, and estimates for the fiscal year 1877, together with the public debt during the fiscal year 1875:

RECEIPTS.

The moneys received and covered into the Treasury by warrants during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, were as follows:

From customs.....	$157,167,722 35
From internal revenue.....	110,007,493 58
From sales of public lands.....	1,413,640 17
From tax on circulation and deposits of national banks.....	7,268,379 16
From repayment of interest by Pacific Railway Companies.....	882,274 91
From customs' fines, penalties, &c.....	228,870 23
From labor, drayage, storage, &c.....	1,112,500 53
From sales of Indian-trust lands.....	243,071 66
From fees—consular, letters patent, and land.....	1,818,884 29
From proceeds of sales of Government property.....	1,278,693 87
From Marine Hospital tax.....	338,893 78
From steamboat fees.....	260,944 75
From profits on coinage, &c.....	452,657 40
From tax on seal-skins.....	317,494 75
From miscellaneous sources.....	1,228,649 98

Total ordinary receipts..... 284,020,771 41

Premium on sales of coin.....	3,979,279 69
Total net receipts, exclusive of loans	288,000,051 10
Balance in Treasury June 30, 1874, including deposits of coin and United States notes represented by certificates outstanding.....	150,731,694 63

Total available cash..... 438,731,745 73
EXPENDITURES.

The net expenditures by warrants during the same period were:
For civil expenses.....	$17,346,929 53
For foreign intercourse.....	1,235,418 23
For Indians.....	8,384,656 82
For pensions	29,456,216 22
For military establishment, including fortifications, river and harbor improvements, and arsenals	41,120,645 98
For naval establishment, including vessels and machinery and improvements at navy yards..	21,497,626 27
For miscellaneous civil, including public buildings, lighthouses, and collecting the revenues.....	50,528,536 22
For interest on the public debt, including interest on bonds issued to Pacific Railway companies	103,093,544 57
For payment of award to British claimants.....	1,929,819 00

Total net expenditures..... $271,623,292 84
Redemption of the public debt.. 19,405,836 48

Total net disbursements..... $291,029,329 32
Balance in Treasury June 30, 1875. 144,702,416 41

Total..... $438,731,745 73
This statement shows that the net revenues for the fiscal year were $288,000,051 10
And the ordinary expenses (including the award to British claimants, $1,929,819)..... 274,623,392 84

Leaving a surplus revenue, exclusive of provision for the Sinking Fund..... $13,376,658 26

By reference to the last annual report, page 6, it will be observed that the estimate then made was that the revenues for this fiscal year would reach the sum of $284,318,285.99, and that the expenditures would amount to $275,315,489.42.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1876.

The receipts during the first quarter were:
From customs.....	$44,233,626 25
From internal revenue.....	28,199,723 50
From sales of public lands.....	308,641 73
From tax on circulation, &c., of national banks.....	3,626,033 83
From repayment of interest by Pacific Railways.....	262,212 87
From customs' fines, &c.....	28,521 75
From consular, patent, and other fees.....	510,427 19
From proceeds of sales of Government property.....	104,273 65
From miscellaneous sources.....	1,722,408 90

Net ordinary receipts..... $78,995,869 67
Premiums on sales of coin..... 2,160,275 47

Total net ordinary receipts.. $81,156,145 14
Balance in Treasury June 30, 1865. 144,702,416 41

Total available..... $225,858,561 55

The expenditures during the same period were:

For civil and miscellaneous expenses, including public buildings, lighthouses, and collecting the revenues.....	$18,673,072 68
For Indians.....	2,660,474 38
For pensions.....	8,845,927 64
For military establishment, including fortifications, river and harbor improvements, and arsenals	11,391,476 26
For naval establishment, including vessels and machinery, and improvements at navy yards..	7,959,037 99
For interest on the public debt, including Pacific Railway bonds	34,517,554 81

Total ordinary expenditures.. $84,047,543 76
Redemption of the public debt.. 6,838,999 66
Balance in Treasury September 30, 1875 134,972,018 13 |

Total $225,858,561 55

For the remaining three quarters it is estimated that the receipts will be:

From customs.....	$112,000,000 00
From internal revenue.....	92,000,000 00
From sales of public lands.....	1,100,000 00
From tax on national banks.....	3,650,000 00
From reimbursement by Pacific Railways.....	350,000 00
From customs' fines, penalties, and forfeitures.....	100,000 00
From consular, patent, and other fees.....	1,300,000 00
From proceeds of sales of public property	600,000 00
From miscellaneous sources, including premium on coin.....	5,200,000 00

Total net receipts..... $216,300,000 00

For the same period it is estimated that the expenditures will be:

For civil miscellaneous, including public buildings.....	$49,500,000 00
For Indians.....	4,400,000 00
For pensions.....	21,000,000 00
For military establishment.....	30,000,000 00
For naval establishment.....	12,000,000 00
For interest on the public debt..	67,500,000 00

Total ordinary expenditures.. $184,400,000 00

From the foregoing statement of actual receipts and expenditures for the first quarter of the current fiscal year, and the estimates of the same for the remaining three quarters, based upon appropriations already made, and also on the assumption that Congress will not increase the expenditures by deficiency or other appropriations, it will be seen that, in the judgment of the department, the revenues will reach the sum of $297,456,145.14, and that the ordinary expenditures will amount to $268,447,543.76. This exhibit gives a surplus revenue of $29,008,601.38. Under existing laws it is estimated that $32,293,692.32 will be required to be provided for the Sinking Fund for this year. If the statement as here submitted shall prove to be approximately correct, the revenues will fall short by the amount of $3,285,090.94 of providing for the appropriations made by Congress.

ESTIMATES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1877.

It is estimated that the receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, will be:

From customs.....	$165,000,000 00
From internal revenue.....	120,000,000 00
From sales of public lands.....	1,500,000 00
From tax on circulation of national banks.....	7,200,000 00
From reimbursement of interest by Pacific Railway Companies..	500,000 00
From customs' fines, penalties, and forfeitures.....	100,000 00
From consular, letters-patent, and other fees.....	1,900,000 00
From proceeds of sales of Government property.....	800,000 00
From miscellaneous sources.....	7,000,000 00

Total ordinary receipts..... $304,000,000 00

It is estimated that the ordinary expenditures for the same period will be:

For civil expenses.....	$17,500,000 00
For foreign intercourse.....	1,353,000 00
For Indians.....	7,000,000 00
For pensions.....	29,534,000 00
For military establishment, including fortifications, river and harbor improvements, and arsenals.....	40,000,000 00
For naval establishment, including vessels and machinery and improvements at navy yards...	21,000,000 00
For civil miscellaneous, including public buildings and light-houses, collecting revenue, mail steamship service, deficiency in postal revenues, public printing, &c.....	52,000,000 00
For interest on public debt.....	97,000,000 00
For interest on Pacific Railway bonds.....	3,878,000 00

Total estimated expenditures, exclusive of the Sinking Fund account and principal of the public debt..... $269,265,000 00

It is expected that for this fiscal year the surplus revenues of the Government will amount to $34,735,000. The estimated amount to be provided for the Sinking Fund is $34,063,377 40. There is reason to hope, therefore, that the income of the Government for this year will amply provide for all its obligations, including the Sinking Fund. The estimates received from the several executive departments are as follows;

Legislative establishment.....	$2,865,378 50
Executive establishment.....	18,717,045 40
Judicial establishment.....	3,403,450 00
Foreign intercourse.....	1,352,485 00
Military establishment.....	33,697,178 50
Naval establishment.....	20,871,666 40
Indian affairs.....	5,787,795 64
Pensions.....	29,533,500 00
Public works:
Treasury Department.....	$6,152,846 86
War Department.....	19,888,238 44
Navy Department...	1,725,000 00
Interior Department.....	800,500 00
Department of Agriculture.....	21,825 00
Department of Justice.....	3,000 00

28,591,410 30

Postal service.....	9,281,602 19
Miscellaneous.....	13,881,185 79
Permanent appropriations, (including $34,033,377 40 for Sinking Fund).....	146,629,910 76

Total..... $314,612,608 48

REDUCTION OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.

By the monthly statement of the public debt, issued June 30, 1875, the reduction of the debt during the year was shown to be $14,399,514 84, viz:

Principal of the debt, July 1, 1874.....	$2,251,690,468 43
Interest due and unpaid, and accrued interest to date.....	38,939,087 47

Total debt..... $2,290,629,555 90
Cash in Treasury..... 147,541,314 74

Debt less cash in Treasury... $2,143,088,241 16

Principal of the debt July 1, 1875..	$2,232,284,531 95
Interest due and unpaid, and accrued interest to date.....	38,647,556 19

Total debt..... $2,270,932,088 14
Cash in Treasury..... 142,243,361 82

Debt, less cash in Treasury.. $2,128,688,726 32

Showing a reduction, as above stated, of..... $14,399,514 84

COMPTROLLER KNOX'S REPORT—THE CURRENCY.

A considerable portion of the report of Mr. Knox, Comptroller of the Currency, is devoted to an elaborate defense of the national banking system, which he thinks should be continued as at present organized. A number of amendments to the banking laws are suggested, embracing among others: (1) Authorizing the Comptroller to appoint receivers of national banks when insolvency becomes evident; (2) for the appointment of a receiver when the charter of a bank is determined and adjudged forfeited by a United States court; (3) providing that if the shareholders of a bank whose capital stock is impaired refuse to pay their assessments after three months' notice, the capital stock of such delinquents shall be sold to make good the deficiency; (4) prohibiting the deposit of more than 10 per cent. of the capital of a national bank with any private banker; (5) the repeal of the 2-cent stamp tax upon bank checks; (6) requiring the words "counterfeit," or "altered," or "illegal" to be stamped on all counterfeit or unauthorized issues.

Altogether the report of Mr. Knox is one of the best in completeness ever issued by the Comptroller of the Currency.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

The following quotations embrace important suggestions from Secretary Belknap's report :

A marked improvement has taken place in the morale of the service. The army is now reduced to twenty-five thousand men. Recruiting was resumed in November, 1874, for the purpose of keeping up the standard number, and under a careful system in the selection of the men the class of recruits now received is of a superior quality. The number of desertions has been largely reduced, being about two thousand one hundred less than during the previous year, while the number of re-enlistments has increased nearly three-fold. The state of contentment thus shown is due, in a great measure, to the excellent system of pay established, which is now graduated by length of service, and affords the soldier an opportunity to deposit his savings with the Government and receive interest for the same until the end of his term.

The Adjutant General, under whose immediate charge the recruiting of the army is placed, has raised to the highest standard of excellence the discipline at recruiting depots, and the recruits are now well instructed and drilled before being sent to join companies in the field.

I renew the recommendation for the enlistment of music-boys over twelve years of age, in order to furnish field-music to companies, and hope that suitable legislation may be had during the next session of Congress to supply this want.

Attention is invited to the accompanying report of the Adjutant General upon the operations of the military prison, so far as they have progressed. The controlling reason for the establishment of a military prison has been that soldiers convicted of military offenses merely should be separated from the degrading influences to which they are subjected when confined with ordinary convicts. There have been 362 prisoners received during the year, and there are now 225 in the establishment. Those prisoners have been employed in various ways on the prison building and about the post, thus saving the expense of employing labor. It is hoped that an appropriation will be made for starting workshops, for it is confidently believed that the prisoners may be made to earn sufficient for their own maintenance, and in time that no appropriation will be required to be made by Congress for their support.

The desertions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, were four thousand six hundred and six; of re-enlistments, six hundred and ninety-nine; the number of sergeants re-enlisted, one hundred and forty-nine. The desertions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, were two thousand five hundred and twenty-one; re-enlistments, one thousand nine hundred and eighty-six; sergeants re-enlisted, three hundred and forty-seven. No better evidence can be furnished of the improved condition of the service than by presentation of the foregoing figures.

The general sentiment prevailing, and the interest evinced by the great majority of those whom I met in the performance of their duties properly and well satisfy me that reflections upon the present standard of military discipline are uncalled for, but, on the contrary, that it has constantly improved during each year since the war.

EXPENDITURES.

The actual expenditures of the War Department for the year ending June 30, 1874, including river and harbor improvements, were.....	$42,326,314 71
The same for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1875, were.....	41,277,375 28

Showing a reduction of.....	$1,048,939 43
-----------------------------	----------------

The estimates for the military establishment for the ensuing fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, are..	$33,452,396 50
Those for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, were.....	32,488,969 50

Being an increase of.....	$963,427 00
---------------------------	--------------

The appropriations for that purpose for the current fiscal year were.....	$28,727,407 99
---	-----------------

Good progress has been made during the year in the preparation of the official records of the war of the rebellion, both in the Federal and Confederate branches. I have placed the general supervision of the compilation of these records in charge of the Chief Clerk of the department, who, under my direction, has organized an efficient force of assistants, selected from those clerks who are best acquainted with the arrangement of the official papers on hand, and who are well adapted to the work for the purpose by experience with department and army records. The estimates of the Superintendent of the Military Academy, which will be submitted to Congress, have been carefully revised by myself in the interest of economy, and make no demand for appropriations beyond those necessary for the maintenance of the military establishment at West Point save what is found to be necessary for the interests of the service. During the past year strenuous exertions have been made to bring the corps up to its maximum strength, but the large number of candidates failing to pass the examination has rendered this action of the department nugatory. As it is generally conceded by those conversant with the subject that the standard of examination is not too high, it seems evident, from the large number of failures each year, that some defect exists in the elementary instruction of those appointed.

The curiosities of the National Park are rapidly being destroyed. How they can be preserved is a problem, but they should be saved: and if authority were given to the War Department to make a survey of routes to, and to station one or two companies of troops in or near the park for the purpose of preventing spoliation, which will otherwise frequently occur, I have no doubt that the result will be satisfactory. Surely everything should be done that can be to protect all that is grand and beautiful in that remarkable region.

The officer designated in pursuance of the President's order of January 23, 1874, to take charge of the contribution to be made by the War Department at the International Exhibition of 1876, has labored to organize the means within the department of making a display of our war materials equal in extent and variety to any similar contribution to like exhibitions in this or foreign countries. Co-operation on the part of the several contributing bureaus has been secured through the medium of officers selected by their respective chiefs, and to whose duties has been superadded that of collecting, arranging, and disposing of the articles and materials designed to be displayed under the direction of the officer referred to. The total expense of making a full and satisfactory exhibit of our war materials has heretofore been estimated at $200,000. Congress at the last session only appropriated $133,000 of this amount, and burdened the appropriation with a pro rata share of the expense of any building that might be erected for the accommodation of the entire Government exhibit. Experience has shown that the amount thus left for the practical exhibit of the War Department is inadequate, and I recommend that Congress supplement the appropriation already made with a further one, granting sufficient to make up the sum of $200,000 for the practical exhibit of the department. This amount is set down at $89,000, which includes an item of $22,000 as reimbursement for moneys expended in the erection of the Government building at the Exhibition. I believe that the Government, in appearing as a voluntary contributor at this Exhibition, international as it is in character, should avoid the mortification of an inconsiderable or discreditable display.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S REPORT.

The Quartermaster-General, in his annual report, states that the clothing issued to the troops has proved satisfactory except the campaign hats, and measures are being taken to procure more suitable ones for adoption in their stead. Through the courtesy of Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister at Washington, 100 cork helmets, such as are worn by the British troops in hot countries, have been procured, and are being tried in Arizona. Clothing to the value of $184,041 has been issued to the National Home for Disabled Volunteers. The total cost of animals purchased during the year was $390,896, and 2,526 animals were sold, for which $70,901 was received and deposited in the Treasury. The cost of forage was much increased by the ravages of the grasshoppers and drought in certain localities, which consequently increased the expenditures on account of this class of supply.

THE SIGNAL SERVICE.

The Chief Signal Officer, in his report, states that the display of cautionary signals has been systematically made at forty-three different stations, sea and lake ports and cities. Of the total number of cautionary signals thus displayed, 76 per cent. have been afterwards reported as justified. No great storm has passed over any considerable number of the ports of the United States without preannouncement. The watch kept by the service and the prompt transmission in times of danger of a few messages have saved property amounting to more than the cost of the lines. The question of the useful preannouncement of approaching meteoric changes may be considered as determined by now five years of successful service. With each year of labor the paths for improvement open more plainly. What was conjectured became a certainty.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Secretary Robeson says of the Navy: The number of vessels of every class and description now borne on the navy register is 147, carrying 1,195 guns, and 152,492 tons measurement. Of these, many are sailing vessels of little or no value as part of the efficient force for either the cruising or fighting purposes of the present day. The steam vessels as distinguished from iron-clads and torpedo ships, number 95, of which 25 are tugs. Of the remainder, 38 are ready for use when required. Our iron-clad fleet consists of 26 vessels—21 of the monitor type, 2 torpedo-ships, and 3 never launched. All the vessels

(80) are available, including 16 iron-clads and 2 torpedo boats. Details are given of the operations of the fleet on each of the six stations. •

It is gratifying to be able to report that the navy is now in a stronger and more efficient condition than it has ever been at any time, at least since the commencement of your administration. It is not very strong in the number or classes of its ships, but what there are of them are in as good condition as it is practicable to keep such materials of war, under the various and trying conditions to which they are, in the nature of their service, constantly exposed. A far larger proportion than usual of our wooden ships are ready for service; our iron-clad fleet is efficient; our storehouses are fairly stocked with ordnance, equipments, and supplies; we have on hand a fair supply of the best material for the building and repair of ships. The service has been placed in a state of efficiency, compared to what existed a few years ago, by utilizing—except in the case of the eight sloops built under special appropriations—what could be spared from the current appropriations made during the Cuban emergency, and of applying these means practically and steadily towards putting what was worth saving of the navy, as it existed, in as permanent good condition as the state of the ships and the means at command permitted. The wisdom of this policy is, I think, illustrated by the strength of our position to-day. It would also be well, I think, if Congress would afford the means to finish at once the repairs of the five double-turreted monitors. With these added to it, our iron-clad force would, for purposes of defense, present a very substantial barrier to anything which would cross the seas and attempt to enter our ports.

THE VESSELS REFITTED FOR ACTIVE SERVICE DURING THE PAST YEAR.

According to the annual report of W. W. Wood, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering at the Navy Department, the machinery of the following vessels has been repaired and refitted for active service during the past year: Franklin, Pensacola, Plymouth, Ticonderoga, Ossipee, Tuscarora, Canonicus, Saugus, Gettysburg, Tallapoosa, Jason, Montauk, Nantucket, Palos.

Repairs to the appended are now being made: Monocacy, Comanche, Snowdrop, Benicia, Amphitrite, Monadnock, Terror, Ashuelot, Iroquois, Cohasset, Leyden, Mayflower, Race, Phlox.

Those whose machinery needs repairing are: Colorado, Wabash, Brooklyn, Canandaigua, Congress, Dictator, Lancaster, Shenandoah, Worcester, Juniata, Narragansett, Wyoming, Wachusett, Pinta, Standish, Saco.

Mr. Wood says that since his last report compound engines for the Alert, Alliance, Ranger, Adams, Essex, and Huron have been completed and successfully tried. Compound engines for the Trenton, Enterprise, and the double-turreted monitor Miantonomah are in course of construction, and are being erected on board the two former vessels. Engines for the Marion, Quinnebaugh, and Vandalia have been converted from simple to compound. He refers to his recommendations last year in regard to the discontinuance of the two bladed propellers, and says, from carefully conducted experiments the fallacy of their use on our vessels was made apparent. The four-bladed screws have been restored to several of our naval steamers, and these changes will be continued as opportunities are afforded.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

THE LAND OFFICE—THE NUMBER OF ACRES DISPOSED OF BY ORDINARY CASH SALES AND IN OTHER WAYS.

The annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the fiscal year ending July 30, 1875, makes the following exhibit:

	Acres.
Disposal of public lands by ordinary cash sales.....	745,061.30
Military bounty land warrant locations under acts of 1850, 1852, and 1855.....	137,000.00
Homestead entries.....	2,356,057.69
Timber culture entries.....	464,870.16
Agricultural College scrip locations	9,432.02
Certified to railroads.....	3,107,643.14
Land approved to States as swamp.	47,721.25
Certified for agricultural colleges..	22,321.24
Certified for common schools.....	142,388.11
Certified for universities.....	16,454.04
Internal improvement selections approved to States.....	8,614.25
Sioux half-breed scrip locations....	1,526.45
Chippewa half-breed scrip locations.....	11,181.64
Total.....	7,070,271.69
Disposals of previous year.....	9,530,872.93
Decrease in disposals.....	2,460,601.64

CASH RECEIPTS UNDER VARIOUS HEADS.

Purchase money of land sold.....	$1,382,281 52
Homestead fees.....	185,970 00
Commissions.....	159,125 80
Timber culture fees.....	36,430 00
Commissions.....	14,572 00
Agricultural College scrip fees.....	236 00
Fees for exemplifications furnished by the General Land Office.....	5,385 95

Total$1,784,001 27

PATENTS.

During the year ending the 30th ultimo, 21,489 applications for patents were filed and 14,230 patents, including reissues and designs, issued; 42 applications for extensions were made, and 81 patents extended; 3,052 caveats were filed; 2,495 patents were granted, but not issued by reason of non-payment of the final fees; 951 applications for the registration of trade-marks were received, and 993 trade-marks were registered. The number of patents issued during said year exceeded those of the preceding year by 685. The total amount received during the year from fees, etc., was $732,285.87, and the total expenditures were $708,874.35, leaving an unexpended balance of $23,411.52.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The general situation of the Indian service may be regarded as encouraging. At the important agencies of Red Cloud and Spotted Tail, in the Dakota or Sioux nation, however, one of the principal elements of success—a productive soil—is wanting. The removal of these agencies to the Missouri river, at some point or points between the mouth of the Cheyenne river and Fort Randall, to be hereafter determined upon, will result in a greater economy and convenience of supply and greater facility to restrain and coerce refractory Indians. The failure of the negotiations for the relinquishment of the Black Hills necessitates the adoption of some measures to relieve the Department of a great embarrassment.

For two years the Government has been appropriating about $1,250,000 for the subsistence of Sioux of various tribes. It is submitted, therefore, under these circumstances, for the consideration of Congress, whether it would not be justifiable and proper to make future appropriations for supplies to this people contingent on their relinquishment of the gold fields in the Black Hills, and the right of way thereto. It would be beneficial to the Indian service, in my opinion, and would promote its efficiency if the laws preventing the detail of army officers for civil service were so far modified as to allow their employment in the Indian service at the discretion of the President in case of emergency. There are still some roving bands of hostile Sioux in the Big Horn and Powder river country of Dakota and Montana which should be subjugated and compelled to cease their raids and depredations upon other tribes and upon the whites. When this is done there will be but little trouble, with a fair degree of tact, intelligence, and force, to control our entire Indian population.

PENSIONS.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that the number of pensioners on the roll continues to decrease. There has not, however, been a corresponding reduction in the annual charge to the Government on this account, for, while the roll has decreased 1,420 in number during the last fiscal year, the total annual rate is $44,733.13 in excess of that of the preceding year. On the 30th of June, 1874, the names of 236,241 pensioners were borne on the rolls, at an annual aggregate rate of $26,244,786.46. During the year next ensuing, 11,577 names were added to the roll, and 12,977 dropped therefrom for various causes, leaving the names of 234,821 persons on the roll June 30, 1875, whose pensions annually aggregate the sum of $26,289,519.59. Of the latter number 210,363 were army pensioners, 105,479 of whom were invalids, and 104,885 widows and dependent relatives; 3,420 were navy pensioners, of whom 1,636 were invalids, and 1,784 widows, etc., and 21,038 were pensioners of the War of 1812, 15,875 of whom were survivors, and 5,163 widows; a total of 234,821 pensioners. During said year the payments from the appropriations for pensions were as follows: To army invalids, $11,748,433.78; to army widows and dependent relatives, $15,525,734.30; to navy invalids, $185,675.82; to navy widows, etc., $334,672.65; to survivors of the War of 1812, $1,355,599.86, and to widows of soldiers in that war, $533,000.21; in all $29,683,116.63, which amount includes the expenses of disbursement. It is estimated that the sum of $29,535,000 will be required for the pension-service during the next fiscal year; which amount is less by $975,000 than the estimate submitted for the current fiscal year.

EDUCATION.

The demand upon the office for information upon special topics has been met, in part, by the publication of eight pamphlets, containing in all 704 octavo pages. A special report is now in course of preparation in regard to public libraries in the United States, including those of schools, colleges, societies, etc., which will furnish interesting statistics, and show their historical development, classification, management, and circulation. The Commissioner alludes to the embarrassment encountered by the promoters of education in those States wherein slavery has been more recently abolished, and recommends the adoption of appropriate relief measures by the General Government.

THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

From the report of Postmaster-General Jewell we glean that the earnings of the department for the last fiscal year fell short of its expenditures by something more than six million dollars. Of registered letters sent by mail during the year, 911 have been absolutely lost—stolen, of course—and 683 are missing, but not yet given up as lost. There have been 107 persons convicted of violating the postal laws, and 157 others await trial. The fast mail trains have worked so satisfactorily that the Postmaster-General expects a voluntary extension of that species of service by the railroads at an early date. There is a sensible recommendation that the postage on transient printed matter be reduced to the old rate, one cent for two ounces. The prepayment of newspaper postage has not been found to increase the revenue, but there has been a material saving in commissions, sufficient to prove that the change is profitable to the Department.

THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD.

The report of the Light-house Board shows that the Board has made an extensive and careful series of experiments with regard to the merits of the mineral oils of this country for the purpose of light-house illumination and an elaborate and extensive series of experiments with regard to sounds as applied to signals for warning the mariner of his approach to danger in thick or foggy weather, when all other guides become of little use. Even at this stage of the experiments success has been most gratifying, and by pursuing these inquiries the Board hopes to arrive at results not only valuable to science but of practical importance in enabling it better to contend with one of the worst elements of danger which the mariner has to meet on our extended and dangerous coast. The Board asks for $2,139,600 for the year ending June 30, 1877, as against $1,899,000 appropriated last year for its general support, and $789,926 for constructing new light-houses, light-ships, etc., as against $915,400 appropriated last year.

The Inter-Oceanic Canal.

The idea of constructing a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama has not yet been abandoned by the United States. The vast benefits which would flow from this artificial highway between the two oceans cannot be over-estimated. Our Western coast would be within easy reach of our commercial marine, and the perilous trip around the Horn would be avoided altogether by those vessels seeking the Pacific ocean. As if conscious of the immense value of this route to the civilized world, Nature presents almost insurmountable obstacles to the successful prosecution of the work. Deadly swamps; deep rivers; dense forests; mountains of flinty rock, seem to have been purposely placed on this narrow neck of land that separates two oceans. For many years the best engineering talent of the land has been trying to find some practicable route over the isthmus. Large sums of money and many lives have been sacrificed in the endeavor to master the natural difficulties which present themselves. During the past year two expeditions were sent out by the United States Government to complete the survey for the inter-oceanic canal.

One was under the command of Lieutenant Frederick Collins, who was instructed to make a careful survey of the Napipi canal route.

Swamps and morasses were encountered for the first five miles of the route. These gave place to hills and mountains as the party neared the Pacific, making the entire line extremely difficult to survey. The route followed by Lieutenant Collins is 32.2 miles long, and the estimated cost for a ship canal is \$98,000,000. By this route the proposed tunnel under the dividing ridge would be $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles long.

The other expedition was under the charge of Commander Edward P. Lull, and its line of survey was near the line of the Panama railroad. The route laid out by Commander Lull runs from the Bay of Aspinwall on the Caribbean Sea to Panama on the Pacific. The length of the line is 41.7 miles, and the estimated cost $94,911,360. Neither of these routes present any advantage over the one known as "The Nicaraguan Route," hitherto surveyed, and to those who have made the subject a study the latter route is deemed the most practicable for a ship canal. This route begins at Greytown on the Atlantic side, and strikes the Pacific a short distance north of the Rio del Brito. Each subsequent survey of new lines appears to have strengthened the claims of this one, and it is not improbable that before many years the Nicaragua Ship Canal will be one of the accomplished facts of the century.

THE SENATE.

THE HOUSE.

Republicans (marked R.), 167; Democrats (marked D.), 178; Independents (marked I.), 6. One vacancy exists in Tennessee, caused by death. The asterisk (*) indicates members of the last Congress re-elected. The C. stands for colored.

ALABAMA—3.

- | | |
|-------------------------|------------------------|
| 1 Jerry Haralson, C. R. | 5 *Jno. H. Caldwell, D |
| 2 Jere. N. Williams, D | 6 G. H. Hewitt, D. |
| 3 Paul Bradford, D. | At { B. R. Lewis, D |
| 4 *Charles Hays, R. | L. { Wm. H. Forney, D |

ARKANSAS—4.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 Lucien C. Gause, D. | 3 W. W. Wiltshire, D. |
| 2 Wm. F. Stemons, D. | 4 *Thos. M. Gunter, D |

CALIFORNIA—4.

- | | |
|-------------------|----------------------|
| 1 W. A. Piper, D. | 3 J. K. Luttrell, D. |
| 2 *H. F. Page, R. | 4 P. D. Wigginton, D |

CONNECTICUT—4.

- | | |
|-----------------------|---------------------|
| 1 Geo. M. Landers, D. | 3 H. W. Blair, R |
| 2 James Phelps, D. | 4 *W. H. Barnum, D. |

DELAWARE—1.

- 1 James Williams, D.

FLORIDA—2.

- | | |
|---------------------|-------------------------|
| 1 *Wm. J. Purman, R | 2 *Josiah T. Wall, C. R |
|---------------------|-------------------------|

GEORGIA—3.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 Julian Hartridge, D | 6 *Jas. H. Blount, D. |
| 2 Wm. E. Smith, D. | 7 Wm. H. Felton, D. |
| 3 *Philip Cook, D. | 8 *A. H. Stephens, D. |
| 4 *Hen'y R. Harris, D | 9 *Benj. H. Hill, D. |
| 5 M. H. Chandler, D. | |

ILLINOIS—12.

- | | |
|------------------------|------------------------|
| 1 B. G. Caulfield, D. | 11 Scott Wike, D. |
| 2 C. H. Harrison, D. | 12 Wm. M. Springer, D |
| 3 *Chas. B. Farwell, R | 13 A. E. Stephenson, D |
| 4 *S. A. Huribut, R. | 14 *J. G. Cannon, R. |
| 5 *H. C. Burchard, R. | 15 *John R. Euen, D. |
| 6 *T. J. Henderson, R | 16 Wm. A. J. Sparks, D |
| 7 Alex. Campbell, I. | 17 *W. R. Morrison, D. |
| 8 *G. L. Fort, R. | 18 William Hartzell, D |
| 9 Rich. H. Whiting, R | 19 Wm. B. Anderson, I. |
| 10 John C. Bagby, I. | |

INDIANA—12.

- | | |
|------------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 Benoni S. Fuller, D | 8 *M. C. Hunter, R. |
| 2 Jas. D. Williams, D. | 9 Thos. J. Cason, R. |
| 3 Michael C. Kerr, D. | 10 Wm. S. Raymond, D |
| 4 Jephtha D. New, D. | 11 Jas. E. Evans, R. |
| 5 *Wm. S. Holman, D | 12 A. H. Hamilton, D. |
| 6 M. S. Robinson, R. | 13 John H. Baker, R. |
| 7 Frankl'n Landers, D | |

IOWA—9.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 *G. W. McCrary, R. | 6 E. S. Sampson, R. |
| 2 John Q. Tufts, R. | 7 *John A. Kasson, R |
| 3 L. L. Ainsworth, D. | 8 *Jas. W. McDill, R. |
| 4 *Henry O. Pratt, R. | 9 Addison Oliver, R. |
| 5 Jas. Wilson, R. | |

KANSAS—3.

- | | |
|-----------------------|--------------------|
| 1 *Wm. A. Phillips, R | 3 Wm. R. Brown, R. |
| 2 John R. Goodin, D. | |

KENTUCKY—10.

- | | |
|----------------------|-------------------------|
| 1 A. R. Boone, D. | 6 Thos. L. Jones, D. |
| 2 *John Y. Brown, D. | 7 J. S. C. Blackburn, D |
| 3 C. W. Milliken, D. | 8 *M. J. Durham, D. |
| 4 J. P. Knott, D. | 9 John D. White, R. |
| 5 Ed. Y. Parsons, D. | 10 John B. Clark, D. |

LOUISIANA—4.

- | | |
|----------------------|----------------------|
| 1 R. L. Gibson, D. | 4 Wm. M. Levy, D. |
| 2 E. John Ellis, D. | 5 *Frank Morey, R. |
| 3 *C. B. Darrall, R. | 6 *C. E. Nash, C. R. |

MAINE—5.

- | | |
|-----------------------|----------------------|
| 1 *J. H. Burleigh, R. | 4 H. M. Plaisted, R. |
| 2 *Wm. P. Frye, R. | 5 *Eugene Hale, R. |
| 3 *Jas. G. Blaine, R. | |

MARYLAND—6.

- | | |
|------------------------|---------------------|
| 1 Phil. E. Thomas, D. | 4 Thos. Swann, D. |
| 2 Chas. B. Roberts, D. | 5 Eli J. Henkle, D. |
| 3 Wm. F. O'Brien, D. | 6 Wm. Welch, R. |

Republicans, 44; Democrats, 23; Independents, 2; total Senate, 74; Republican majority, 14.

MASSACHUSETTS—11.

- | | |
|-----------------------|----------------------|
| 1 W. W. Crapo, R. | 7 John K. Tarbox, D. |
| 2 *Benj. W. Harris, R | 8 W. W. Warrant, D. |
| 3 *Henry L. Pierce, R | 9 *Geo. F. Hoar, R, |
| 4 Rufus S. Frost, R. | 10 *J. H. Seelye, I. |
| 5 Nath'l P. Banks, I. | 11 C. W. Chapin, D. |
| 6 C. P. Thompson, D. | |

MICHIGAN—9.

- | | |
|----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 A. S. Williams, D. | 6 G. H. Durand, D. |
| 2 *Henry Waldron, R | 7 *O. D. Conger, R. |
| 3 *George Willard, R | 8 *N. H. Bradley, R. |
| 4 Allen Potter, D. | 9 *Jay A. Hubbell, R. |
| 5 W. B. Williams, R. | |

MINNESOTA—3.

- | | |
|------------------------|-------------------|
| 1 *M. H. Dunnell, R. | 3 Wm. S. King, R. |
| 2 Horace B. Strait, R. | |

MISSISSIPPI—6.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 *L. Q. C. Lamar, D. | 4 O. R. Singleton, R. |
| 2 G. W. Welles, R. | 5 Chas. E. Hooker, D. |
| 3 H. B. Money, D. | 6 *John R. Lynch, R. |

MISSOURI—13.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------|
| 1 Edward C. Kehr, D | 8 B. J. Franklin, D. |
| 2 *Erastus Wells, D. | 9 David Rea, D. |
| 3 *Wm. H. Stone, D. | 10 R. A. DeBolt, D. |
| 4 *R. A. Hatcher, D. | 11 J. B. Clark, Jr., D. |
| 5 *Rich. P. Bland, D. | 12 *John M. Glover, D |
| 6 Chas. H. Morgan, D | 13 *A. H. Beckner, D. |
| 7 John Phillips, D. | |

NEBRASKA—1.

- 1 Lorenzo Crounse, R,

NEVADA—1.

- 1 William Woodburn, R.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—3.

- | | |
|-------------------|-------------------|
| 1 Frank Jones, D. | 3 H. W. Blair, R. |
| 2 S. N. Bell, D. | |

NEW JERSEY—7.

- | | |
|------------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 C. H. Sinnickson, R. | 5 Aug. W. Cutler, D. |
| 2 *S. A. Dobbins, R. | 6 Fred'k H. Teese, D. |
| 3 Miles Ross, D. | 7 A. A. Hardenburg, D |
| 4 *Robt. Hamilton, D | |

NEW YORK—33.

- | | |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1 H. B. Metcalfe, D. | 18 Andr'w Williams, R |
| 2 *J. G. Schumaker, D | 19 *W. A. Wheeler, R. |
| 3 S. B. Chittenden, I. | 20 *H. H. Hathorn, R. |
| 4 A. M. Bliss, D. | 21 Sam'l F. Miller, R. |
| 5 Edwin R. Meade, D | 22 Geo. A. Bagley, R. |
| 6 *Samuel S. Cox, D. | 23 Scott Lord, D. |
| 7 Smith Ely, Jr., D. | 24 Wm. H. Baker, R. |
| 8 Elijah Ward, D. | 25 E. W. Leavenworth, R. |
| 9 *Fernando Wood, D | 26 *C. D. McDougall, R |
| 10 A. S. Hewitt, D. | 27 E. G. Lapham, R. |
| 11 Benj. A. Wilton, D. | 28 *Thos. C. Platt, R. |
| 12 N. Holmes Odell, D | 29 C. C. B. Walker, D. |
| 13 *J. O. Whitehouse, D | 30 John M. Davy, R. |
| 14 Geo. M. Beebe, D. | 31 *Geo. G. Hoskins, R |
| 15 J. H. Bagley, Jr., D. | 32 *Lyman K. Bass, R |
| 16 Chas. H. Adams, R. | 33 Nelson I. Norton, R |
| 17 M. I. Townsend, R. | |

NORTH CAROLINA—8.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 Jesse J. Yeats, D. | 5 Alfred M. Scales, D |
| 2 J. A. Hyman, C. R. | 6 *Thos. H. Ashe, D. |
| 3 *A. M. Waddell, D. | 7 *W. M. Robbins, D. |
| 4 Joseph J. Davis, D. | 8 *Robt. H. Vance, D |

OHIO—20.

- | | |
|-----------------------|-------------------------|
| 1 Milton Saylor, D. | 11 John L. Vance, D. |
| 2 *H. B. Bauning, D. | 12 Ansel T. Walling, D |
| 3 John S. Savage, D. | 13 *M. I. Southard, D. |
| 4 J. A. McMahon, D. | 14 John P. Cowan, D |
| 5 A. V. Rice, D. | 15 N. H. Van Vorhes, R |
| 6 Frank H. Hurd, D. | 16 *L. Danforth, R. |
| 7 *Lawr'ce T. Neal, D | 17 *L. D. Woodworth, R |
| 8 *Wm. Lawrence, R. | 18 *James Monroe, R. |
| 9 F. F. Poppleton, D. | 19 *Jas. A. Garfield, R |
| 10 *Chas. Foster, R. | 20 Henry B. Payne D. |

OREGON—1.

- 1 Lafayette Lane, D.

PENNSYLVANIA—27.

- | | |
|----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 C. Freeman, R. | 15 Joseph Powell, D. |
| 2 *Chas. O'Neill, R. | 16 *Sobieski Ross, R. |
| 3 *S. J. Randall, D. | 17 John Reilly, D. |

- | | |
|-----------------------|------------------------|
| 4 *Wm. D. Kelley, R. | 18 Wm. S. Stenger, D. |
| 5 John Robbins, D. | 19 Levi Maish, D. |
| 6 *W. Townsend, R. | 20 Levi A. Mackay, D. |
| 7 Alan Wood, Jr., R. | 21 Jacob Turner, D. |
| 8 *Heister Clymer, D. | 22 Jas. H. Hopkins, D. |
| 9 *A. Herr Smith, R. | 23 Alex. G. Cochran, D |
| 10 Wm. Mutchler, D. | 24 John W. Wallace, R |
| 11 F. D. Collins, D. | 25 Geo. A. Jenks, D. |
| 12 W. W. Ketcham, R. | 26 Jas. Sheakley, D. |
| 13 Jas. R. Reilly, D. | 27 Albert G. Egbert, D |
| 14 *John B. Packer, R | |

RHODE ISLAND—2.

- | | |
|-----------------------|--------------------|
| 1 *Benj. T. Eames, R. | 2 L. W. Ballou, R. |
|-----------------------|--------------------|

SOUTH CAROLINA—5.

- | | |
|------------------------|----------------------|
| 1 *J. H. Rainey, C. R. | 4 *A. S. Wallace, R. |
| 2 E. W. M. Mackey, D | 5 R. Smalls, C. R. |
| 3 Solom'n L. Hoge, R | |

TENNESSEE—10.

- | | |
|------------------------|------------------------|
| 1 Wm. McFarland, D | 6 John F. House, D. |
| 2 *J. M. Thornburgh, R | 7 *W. C. Whitthorne, D |
| 3 Geo. G. Dibrell, D. | 8 *J. D. C. Atkins, D. |
| 4 Vacancy. | 9 Wm. P. Caldwell, D |
| 5 *John M. Bright, D | 10 H. Casey Young, D. |

TEXAS—6.

- | | |
|--------------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 John H. Reagan, D. | 4 *Roger Q. Mills, D. |
| 2 D. B. Culberson, D. | 5 *John Hancock, D. |
| 3 J. W. Throckmorton, D. | 6 Gus. Schleicher, D. |

VERMONT—3.

- | | |
|----------------------|----------------------|
| 1 Chas. H. Joyce, R. | 3 *Geo. W. Hendee, R |
| 2 D. C. Denison, R. | |

VIRGINIA—9.

- | | |
|------------------------|-----------------------|
| 1 B. B. Douglas, D. | 6 John R. Tucker, D. |
| 2 *John Goode, Jr., D | 7 *John T. Harris, D. |
| 3 Gilbert C. Walker, D | 8 *Eppa Hunton, D. |
| 4 *W. H. H. Stowell, R | 9 *William Terry, D. |
| 5 Geo. C. Cabell, D. | |

WEST VIRGINIA—3.

- | | |
|----------------------|----------------------|
| 1 Benj. Wilson, D. | 3 *Frank Hereford, D |
| 2 C. G. Faulkner, D. | |

WISCONSIN—8.

- | | |
|-----------------------|----------------------|
| 1 *C. G. Williams, R. | 5 S. D. Burchard, D. |
| 2 L. B. Caswell, R. | 6 A. M. Kimball, R. |
| 3 H. S. Magoon, R. | 7 *J. M. Rusk, R. |
| 4 W. Pitt Lynde, D. | 8 Geo. W. Cate, D. |

TERRITORIAL DELEGATES.

- Arizona—Hiram S. Stephens, I.
 Colorado—Thomas M. Patterson, D.
 Dakota—Jefferson P. Kidder, R.
 Idaho—Thomas W. Bennett, R.
 Montana—*Martin Maginnis, D.
 New Mexico—Stephen B. Elkins, R.
 Utah—*George Q. Cannon, I.
 Washington—Orange Jacobs, R.
 Wyoming—*William R. Steele, D.

CONTESTED SEATS IN THE HOUSE.

- | State. | Seat. | Contested by |
|------------------|-----------------|----------------------|
| Alabama | Haralson, R. | F. G. Bromberg, D |
| Alabama | Williams, D. | J. T. Rapier, C. R. |
| Alabama | Hays, R. | Jas. T. Jones, D. |
| Florida | Purman, R. | J. A. Henderson, D |
| Florida | Walls, col. R. | Jesse J. Finley, D |
| Georgia | Hartridge, D. | Jno. E. Bryant R. |
| Georgia | Smith, D. | R. H. Whiteley, R |
| Illinois | Farwell, R. | J. V. Le Moyne, D |
| Illinois | Whiting, R. | Leon'd F. Ross, D |
| Indiana | Hunter, R. | Harris'n J. Rice, D |
| Indiana | Baker, R. | Freem'n Kelley, D |
| Kentucky | White, R. | H. Cockrill, D. |
| Louisiana | Morey, R. | W. B. Spencer, D. |
| Maryland | Walsh, D. | Lloyd Lowndes, D |
| Massachusetts | Frost, R. | J. G. Abbott, D. |
| Minnesota | Strait, R. | E. St. Julien Cox, D |
| Pennsylvania. | Freeman, R. | T. B. Florence, D. |
| Pennsylvania. | Egbert, D. | C. B. Curtis, R. |
| S. Carolina | Hoge, R. | B. H. McGowan, D |
| S. Carolina | Wallace, R. | J. B. Kershaw, D. |
| Virginia | Goode, D. | J. H. Platt, Jr., R. |
| New Mexico .. | S. B. Elkins, R | Pedro Valdez, D. |

“FAIRLY WITHOUT A RIVAL.”—Congregationalist.

THE MOST EMINENT AUTHORS of the day, such as Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Max Muller, Prof. Maxley, Dr. W. H. Carpenter, Prof. Tyndall, Richard A. Proctor, Edward A. Freeman, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, James Anthony Freudo, Alfred Russell Wallace, Mrs. Mulock, Mrs. Oliphant, Miss Thackeray, Jean Ingelow, Geo. MacDonald, Wm. Black, Anthony Trollope, R. D. Blackmore, Julia Kavanaugh, Mrs. Parr, Henry Kingsley, Mrs. Macquoid, Francis W. Newman, Thomas Carlyle, Erckman-Chatriau, W. W. Story, Robert Buchanan, Tennyson, Browning, and many others, are represented in the pages of

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

In 1876, THE LIVING AGE enters upon its thirty-third year. Having absorbed its younger competitor, “EVERY SATURDAY,” it is now without a rival in its special field. Originally commended by President Adams, Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, historians Sparks, Prescott, Bancroft, Ticknor, and many others, it has never failed to receive the warmest support of the best men and journals of the country, and has met with constantly increasing success.

A weekly magazine, of sixty-four pages, THE LIVING AGE gives more than THREE AND A QUARTER THOU double-column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly, forming four large volumes. In inexpensive form, considering its great amount of matter, with freshness, owing to and with a satisfactory completeness attempted by no other publication, the best Essayists, Tale, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature.

During the coming year, the Serial and Short Stories of

THE LEADING FOREIGN LITERATURE will be given, together with an amount, unapproached by any other periodical in the two valuable Literary and Scientific matter of the day from the pens of the above-named foremost Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers, and Editors, representing ever Knowledge and Progress.

In short, THE LIVING AGE is invaluable as a time, labor, and money-saving publication the only satisfactorily fresh and COMPLETE compilation of a literature that is American readers, — indispensable because it embraces the productions of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS in all branches of Literature, Science, Art, and Politics. Attention is invited to the following recent Opinions of The Living Age.

“Ought to find a place in every American Home.” — N. Y. Times.

“In no other single publication can there be found so much of sterling literary excellence.” — N. Y. Evening Post.

“Through its pages alone it is possible to be as thoroughly well informed in current literature as by the perusal of a long list of monthlies. . . . It reproduces the best thoughts of the best minds of the civilized world, upon all topics of living interest.” — Philadelphia Inquirer.

“Simply indispensable to any one who desires to keep abreast of the thought of the age in any department of science or literature.” — Boston Journal.

“A more attractive periodical cannot be found in the United States. Wherever there is culture and breadth of view it is appreciated, and the more it is appreciated the higher will rise the tone of American literature and the taste of American readers.” — Chicago Inter-Ocean.

“The best of all our eclectic publications.” — The Nation, N. Y.

“And the cheapest. A monthly that comes every week.” — The Advance, Chicago.

“Incomparable in the richness, variety, and sterling worth of its articles, and equal to several ordinary magazines in the amount of matter presented.” — The Standard, Chicago.

“Grows richer and richer the longer it lives. There is no other known way of getting so much good reading for so little money.” — Christian Register, Boston.

“It is a thorough compilation of what is best in the literature of the day, with the relating to history, biography, fiction, poetry, wit, science, politics, theology, criticism, or art.” — Hartford Daily Courant.

“A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction.” — Hon. Robert C. Winthrop.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY at $6.00 a year, free of postage. An extra copy sent gratis to any one getting up a club of five new subscribers.

CLUB PRICES FOR THE BEST HOME AND FOREIGN LITERATURE.

[“Possessed of ‘LITTELL'S LIVING AGE’ and of one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation.” — Philadelphia Eve'ng Bulletin.]

For $10.50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the four-dollar monthly Magazines (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar, or Appleton's Journal, weekly) will be sent for a year, with postage prepaid on both; or, for $9.50, THE LIVING AGE and Scribner's St. Nicholas.

ADDRESS

Y, 17 Bromfield St., Boston.

1876.

Vol. 6.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,,

A Complete Set—Three Volumes—of the Republic,

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,

A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING

THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,

BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE FIFTH VOLUME,

Which closes with the December number of 1875, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

JA
3
R419

SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. V.—No. 6.

DECEMBER, 1875.

Whole No. 34.

Contents:

	PAGE
Close of the Fifth Volume of the Republic.....	337
The Ohio Election.....	338
The Political Campaign of 1875.....	346
Navigation Laws. Chapters III and IV. (To be continued).....	353
Political Defamation.....	362
European Armies.....	371
Southern Democratic Reaction—State Rights' Assumption.....	372
Labor in Europe and America.....	375
The Third House.....	384
The Department of the Interior.....	386
Internal Reforms of Prussia.....	390
The Free South.....	391
Savings Banks of Great Britain.....	395
Southern Fatuity.....	396
"Imperiled Mississippi".....	398
The United States, Spain, and Cuba.....	403
Review of the Month.....	406
Executive and Department Doings—The Bureau Reports.....	410

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

1876.

Vol. 6.

PROSPECTUS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its sixth volume with the Centennial year, January, 1876.

It has grown in public favor, and has received substantial encouragement from every State and Territory in the Union.

Its promises have been made good. Its pages have been filled with political information, with the suggestions of wisdom growing out of experience, with facts and figures fully arranged, making a fund of knowledge, of itself, a valuable text-book to be used in Governmental affairs.

In view of the Presidential election, which takes place in 1876, the REPUBLIC desires to extend its field of usefulness by adding to its list of subscribers. It already numbers among its readers many of the most thoughtful and intelligent citizens of the country. The deep interest expressed by them in the work, is to the publishers, evidence of an appreciation which thousands of others would entertain of the REPUBLIC, could it be brought to their notice.

Will not our friends take upon themselves the slight labor of inviting others to add their names and their influence to a magazine that is published in the interest of public morality and good government.

In the future, as in the past, the REPUBLIC will advocate an honest administration of government, whether municipal, State or National.

It will favor loyalty, honesty, economy, and personal ability as pre-requisites for office. It will give credit where credit is due; and impartial criticism whenever required.

It will seek to hold up intelligence as the safeguard to National safety, and will defend the public school system as essential to its preservation.

It will advocate improvements, that experience may commend, in the education of the young; but will oppose all efforts to divide the public-school funds, or to introduce into the schools sectarian influences.

It will advocate the perpetuation of the Republican party as the best, if not the only means to secure the preservation of the Union, and the impartial execution of the laws.

It will labor earnestly to bring about such reforms as the spirit of progress may demand, and in all things seek to present those methods of administration, which the wisdom and experience of a century have confirmed.

It will give to its readers a clear insight into the various branches of Government, by a faithful record of their doings.

These are among the leading features of the work to which the REPUBLIC is devoted. It pledges anew its best energies to make the Centennial volumes worthy the Nation it serves, and the year it enters upon.

To the Republican press of the country, co-laborers in the grand mission of preserving good government, the REPUBLIC sends greeting and thanks. If increased activity can merit a continuation of the good will expressed, our brethren of the press will still extend their hands in generous welcome. The Presidential campaign will bring upon all, increased responsibilities and new demands. The REPUBLIC will bear its share and perform its duty without fear or favor, keeping ever in view, that the highest reward that patriotism can win, is the consciousness that its efforts have advanced civilization and contributed to the cause of good government.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. V. WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER, 1875. No. 6.

CLOSE OF THE FIFTH VOLUME OF "THE REPUBLIC."

With this number THE REPUBLIC closes its fifth volume. For the substantial encouragement received, the publishers return their thanks. They have endeavored to make good their early pledges, and the earnest recognition which has greeted their efforts, leads them to believe that they have exceeded, rather than fallen short, of the measure promised.

The Centennial year will be one of the most important in our history. It will be crowded with incidents worthy of historic preservation, and will give birth to events which will rekindle the loyalty and patriotism of every section. To faithfully record the leading events of the year, to give direction, by wise counsel and earnest suggestions, to the patriotic impulses of the people, to keep in view the best methods of administering government, developed by the experience of a century, and to hold up intelligence as the safeguard essential to the future safety of the nation, will be among the leading features of the work to be accomplished.

THE REPUBLIC will continue to advocate those principles which secure to the citizen the largest degree of personal freedom consistent with the public good.

It will advocate the election and appointment to office, whether Municipal, State or National, of men whose record for honesty, loyalty and ability is above suspicion, believing that these traits are absolutely essential to the public safety.

While it will favor any improvement that wisdom and experience may commend in our Free School System, it will, nevertheless, oppose any change that has for its object the division of the public school funds, or the introduction into the schools of sectarian influences.

It will at all times give credit, where credit is due, and friendly criticism whenever or wherever deserved. The welfare of the Nation shall ever be kept in view, and the opinions of individuals, and the policy of parties, will be sustained or condemned according to the influence they exert for good or evil.

It will endeavor to present with each number a faithful record of current political events, departmental doings, legislative proceedings, both State and National, when bearing upon questions of public interest, and such other items as may be worthy of preservation.

The approaching struggle for the Presidency will be one of the most important in our history. The forces of disloyalty, ignorance and partizan malice, will be combined to overthrow the Republican party and the glorious work it has performed. To defeat this combination, the press must be watchful and active, enlightening the people, keeping before them the true issues, furnishing facts and figures that will repel attack, and form the basis of a correct judgment as to the merits of the party assailed.

In this work, THE REPUBLIC will endeavor to show increased activity, devoting its energies to secure the perpetuity of the Republican party, as the best, if not the only means, to ensure an honest and economical administration of government, and an impartial execution of the laws.

THE OHIO ELECTION.

The result of the recent Ohio election presents features worthy of careful study. Casually glancing at a comparative table of majorities, it is difficult to account for the remarkable differences that are seen. A county will be noticed as giving an increased Republican vote and majority. Another, lying contiguous, foots up a Democratic gain. Possibly this county has been Republican, while the other one has been known as disaffected, or even Democratic, for two or three years past. But closer examination solves many of the difficulties. It will be observed that the Republican gains are almost entirely in the old party strongholds, as on the Western Reserve, along all the principal lines of railroad, and in the large cities and towns of the State. Wherever the population is readily accessible; wherever it was easily reached by the open messengers and avenues of intelligence, as the press or political forum, there will be found notable gains for Governor Hayes and the Republican policy of greenback appreciation and financial integrity.

On the other hand, there are many counties in Ohio which show increased Democratic gains. There are Belmont, Hardin, Highland, Mahoning, and Washington, which reversed their former positions, and supported Allen in the recent struggle, as against their vote for Noyes, in 1873. A glance at the accompanying map of Ohio, will show that Belmont, Mahoning and Washington are on the border of West Virginia, and that Highland is but one county removed from the Ohio river, bordering on Kentucky. Hardin is agricultural, and in the west and center of the State. In the counties bordering on Indiana, and on those near West Virginia, there seems increase in pecially the contiguous ustain that ed from the flationists in surmised — nties are, in the main, Democratic, and are also open from the south to Kentucky reinforcements, as well as to those from Indiana.

The counties thus indicated as giving an increased Democratic vote, foot up more than one-third of the total increase claimed for the inflation policy. The larger proportion of the farmers in these counties are "dyed in the wool" Democrats, being, in the main, descendants of settlers from Virginia and Kentucky. They are, in part, carved out of the old Virginia and United States Military Reservations.

Turning to the southeastern part of the State, and several counties projecting westward into the center and it will be found that the Democracy there, also, show increased majorities. The counties from which they come border on West Virginia, and their industries are largely iron-working and coal-mining. It will be seen, too, that Republican counties adjacent to the river, and also controlled by the same industries, return, in most instances, decreased majorities, when compared with the vote of 1873, or, more distinctly still, with that of 1872.

A portion of the remarkable Democratic increase shown to have occurred in the iron and coal counties bordering on West Virginia, is due to the depression of business, and consequent dissatisfaction; much more is due, however, to proximity to neighboring States whence colonization was easy. But the history of the canvass will also show another thing, and that is, that it was just in these counties that the Republican fight against inflation was most feebly conducted. It is to be observed also that the Republican victory is due to an increased vote in the central parts of the State, and in the more populous counties of Hamilton and Cuyahoga, where the depression of business had been, and still is, most severely felt; but where that fact has led to closer investigation of the causes thereof, and consequently to a more intelligent acceptance and understanding of the principles controlling the situation.

The following official statement of the vote for Governor is valuable for comparison and reference:

Adams
Allen
Ashlan
Ashtab
Athens
Augla
Belmoi
Brown
Butler
Carroll
Champ
Clarke
Clerm
Clinton
Colum
Coshoc
Crawfo
Cuyah
Darke
Defian
Delaw
Erie
Fairfie
Fayett
Frankl
Fulton
Gallia
Geauga
Greene
Guern
Hamil
Hanco
Hardin
Harris
Henry
Highla
Hockli
Holme
Huron
Jackso
Jeffers
Knox
Lake
Lawre
Lickin
Logan
Lorain
Lucas
Madiso
Mahon
Marion
Medin
Meigs
Mercer
Miami
Monro
Montg
Morga
Morro Muski Noble
Ottawa
Pauldi
Perry
Pickaw
Pike
Portag
Preble
Putnam
Richia
Ross
Sandus
Scioto
Seneca
Shelby
Stark
Summit
Trumb
Tuscar
Union
Van W Vinton
Warre
Washt
Wayne
Willis
Wood
Wyand

Major

To exhibit the extraordinary character of the contest, it will only be necessary to state the total votes for several years past, and thus give at a glance the remarkable increase shown in October last:

Total vote of 1872	519,755
" " " 1873	448,878
" " " 1874	467,425
" " " 1875	592,668

These figures show

An increase in 1875 over 1872 of.....	72,913
" " 1875 over 1873 of	143,790
" " 1875 over 1874 of.....	125,243

The vote for 1872, given above, is that for Secretary of State, cast in October of that year. The Presidential vote is a little larger:

Vote of 1875	592,668
Presidential vote in Ohio, 1872.....	526,173
Increase in 1875	66,495

According to the United States census of 1870, the population of Ohio was 2,665,260. The Presidential vote of 1872, may be regarded, from the nature of the issues involved, as the fairest possible test of the voting strength of that State, and of the proportion the voters bear to the whole population. According to that vote, the proportion of voters was within a small fraction of one in four and seven-eighths of all the inhabitants. This is a very remarkable percentage, and shows how very nearly the entire vote of the State must have been cast. Under such a condition it is not probable that there were over fifteen thousand stay-at-home voters. But allowing that the total vote of Ohio in 1872, polled and unpolled, was 542,668. The vote in 1875, being 592,668, would show an increase of 50,000 voters. This is certainly an astounding fact, if it is legitimate, and shows that the increase of population has been much beyond the usual average. The following table of population and the increase at each decade, will illustrate this even more forcibly. The figures given are from the United States census, up to 1870:

YEAR.
1830.....
1840.....
1850.....
1860.....
1870.....
1875, (estimate

The estimate for 1875, is based on the proportion of one vote in four and seven-eighths of the whole population, as already shown by the Presidential vote of 1872. If we take this remarkable increase for the first five years of the current decade, as legitimate and use it as an estimate for the population of Ohio in 1880, we shall have the following result :

Total increase on the basis given up to 1875..... 580,482

Total population..... 3,245,742

If, however, the fractions are left out and put the proportions at one in five, which the general conditions establish as a fair basis for estimating both the total and electoral populations, the following will be the result :

Total population in 1870..... 2,665,260
Total vote reported in 1875..... 592,668
Estimated population in 1875,
(one in five)..... 2,963,340
Alleged increase for five years..... 308,080
For the decade at that rate..... 616,160

It will thus be seen that the gain would be larger than for the ten years between 1830 and 1840, when Ohio was the "Far West" and attention was turned in that direction. The increase of votes is however not an honest one, for it is impossible that there has been anything like such a growth. Closer examination of the counties in which this remarkable increase is most evident, will exhibit the truth of this opinion. Nearly three years of the five that have passed since the last census was taken, have been years of business depression. According to Democratic and inflation oratory, they have been years of great disaster. It is certain that emigration has decreased. It is also certain that Ohio increases, year by year, the proportion of enterprising persons, who go from her midst to seek fortune and position in other States. Most persons would suppose, with no more than cursory examination, that there was nothing whatever in the material situation of Ohio to warrant a belief that she had grown more rapidly than has been the case in the most prosperous of preceding decades. Further analysis will testify to the correctness of this view. How, then, can the large increase of votes be accounted for? Simply enough, when we trace the localities in which it is mostly found.

The counties bordering on Indiana are, to a large extent, agricultural in character. In the second tier east, there are a number of small manufacturing centers. Taking the counties north from Hamilton, and it will be found that of the nine on the Indiana line, five are Democratic; the others, including Hamilton, are now Republican. The next tier east, excluding Clermont, are nine in number, of which six are Democratic. With the exception of Mercer and Putnam in this tier, the other nine Democratic counties of Allen, Anglaize, Butler, Darke, Defiance, Henry, Mercer, Montgomery, Shelby and Van Wert, show a remarkable increase in population, if the gain in the Democratic majorities is any indication.

It is not necessary to tabulate the population in detail. A careful summary of the total will be sufficient. The nine counties indicated had, in 1870, according to the U. S. census of that date, a population of 246,178 persons, or nearly one-eleventh of the whole. Their full vote in 1872 was 49,251. This gives a small fraction within one voter in every five persons.

At the last October election, the total vote was 56,563, an increase of 7,312; showing, at the rate of one voter to every five persons, an additional population in these counties of not less than 36,560. The party gain on either side on the last of the two votes given was as follows :

Democratic October vote 1875..... 32,640
" " " 1872..... 28,072

Gain..... 4,578
The Republican vote was as follows :
October 1875..... 23,923
" 1872..... 21,179

Gain..... 2,744

The Republican increase on the vote is largest in the second tier of counties from Indiana; the Democratic increase is largest in those bordering on that State. The deduction is an obvious one. As to the increase in population there must remain many doubts.

Moving South to the Ohio River, and leaving Hamilton county for separate consideration, there is a group of Democratic counties worth examining, because of their continuity to Kentucky. They are Clermont, Brown, Adams, Pike and Highland—the last named being a loss to the Republicans, who have heretofore carried it. Adams and Clermont present an increased majority. Brown shows a small loss to the Democracy on the basis of Allen's former contest in 1873, the Democratic majority then being 1,851 against 1,261 in 1875. Pike and Highland, however, give an increased Democratic vote.

According to the census of 1870, the population of these five counties was 140,400—being a little more than one-nineteenth of the whole.

The total vote of 1872 (October) was 24,980, and that of 1875, 26,288—an increase of 1,308 votes, indicating an additional population of 6,967—being on the basis of one voter in every five and one-third persons. The total Democratic vote in 1872 was 12,105, and in 1875 it was 15,104, showing an increase of 5,001. The total voting gain was 1,308. The Republican vote in 1872 was 12,875, and in 1875 it was 11,184, showing a decrease of 1,691. The Democrats increased their total vote to the difference between the votes of 1872-'75—3,310. It is a convenient thing in a sharp contest to have obliging neighbors.

Proceeding further east, and a group of Republican counties will be seen in the Ohio Valley, also convenient to Kentucky and West Virginia, and affected by the depression of business, especially as to coal and iron working. These are the counties of Athens, Gallia, Jackson, Lawrence, Meigs, Morgan and Washington, the last named giving a Democratic majority at the last election. These seven counties contained, according to the census of 1870, one-thirteenth of the whole, or—

A population of.....	194,889
According to the vote of 1875 there were of voters.....	47,594
Ditto that of October 1872.....	32,697
A voting increase of.....	14,897

This is quite remarkable. It establishes a light vote in 1872 when the voter was as one in about six and two-sevenths of the population, or a very remarkable increase in 1875, when it had suddenly grown to the extent of one in four and one-tenth of the whole number of inhabitants. Neither hypothesis is quite correct. Estimating the total vote on the basis of one in five, and in 1872, it would have been 38,978. This last estimate shows an increase of voters in 1875, three years after, to the number of 8,616, or an addition to the population of at least 43,000 persons. As these are among the older settled counties in the State, and as the industries thereof have been severely depressed, it is not at all probable that they would honestly indicate any such sudden growth as these figures imply. But the fact that the group of counties usually give a large Republican majority, and of their contiguity to Democratic States, is proof of the source of the sudden accession to their voting population. The parties were divided as follows:

	Rep.	Dem.	Maj.
In 1872.....	20,159	12,538	7,621 R.
In 1875.....	22,114	25,480	3,366 D.

According to the above figures, there has been an increase and change of votes to the number of 11,087. Compare that total with the suspicious growth of the vote in its relation to the whole population, and then notice the continuity of Kentucky and West Virginia, and the problem is solved. Going still further east and north, and we come to a group of counties directly under inflation influences. Above Washington, we find Belmont, (a Republican county gained by the Democracy), Munroe, Jefferson, Harrison, (Republican,) and Noble (a county lost in 1873, and now recovered by the Republicans). These counties are iron-working and mining. Business has been, and still is, depressed therein. The total population of the five in 1870, was 133,492, or about one-twentieth of the State total:

The number of votes cast in October, 1872, was.....	25,324
In 1875 it was.....	28,398
Showing an increase of.....	3,074

The total Republican majority, in 1872, (excluding Munroe) was 2,608; in Munroe, the Democratic majority was 1,747; reducing the Republican majority in the group to 861.

In 1875, the Republican majority in Harrison, Jefferson, and Noble, was 962; the Democratic majority in Belmont and Munroe (the first named being a direct loss to the Republicans), was 2,470, leaving them in the group, a majority of 1,508, or a total change of 2,369 votes. According to the vote of 1872, the proportion of voters on the enumeration of 1870, was as one in five and one-fourth of the whole ; and in 1875, as one in four and four-sixths. The increase of voters, counting them as one in five, would give an increased population for the five counties of 15,370—a more moderate showing than in the adjoining counties, where there is a more decided Republican vote to overcome, and, as a consequence, neighborly sympathy was in demand on the part of Kentucky Democrats.

From these figures it will be seen that everywhere on the border of Democratic States, or counties thereof, that, allowing for a normal increase of population, for the extraordinary interest always felt in such a financial discussion, as results from a business panic or depression, and from the changes produced by the partial cessation of leading industries, and it will still be seen that the percentage of voters, especially on the Democratic side, is suspiciously large. In some localities, the percentage runs down to about one in three and a half, and in none of those counties does it run much above one in four. Yet these, taken as illustration, are among the older and more stationary counties.

On the other hand, let us look at a group of the most distinctive Republican counties in the State—those that make up the Western reserve, or are contiguous thereto. These are the counties of Ashtabula, Cuyahoga, Geauga, Huron, Lake, Lorain, Medina, Portage, Summit, Trumbull and Columbiana. They show a total population, according to the last census, of 409,800, about one-sixth of the whole. The votes on which this analysis is based, stands as follows :

State vote of 1872.
Republican.....	52,261
Democratic	32,645
Republican majority	19,616
State vote of 1875.
Republican.....	58,891
Democratic.....	35,193
Republican majority	23,698

Total vote 1875.....	94,084
“ “ 1872.....	84,906
Increase in 1875.....	9,178
Increase of Republican vote in 1875	6,630
“ “ Democratic.....	2,548

Of the Republican increase, nearly one-half was cast in Cuyahoga county, where the majority stood, in 1872, at 3,603 ; and in October last, at 6,364. Lorain, Summit and Portage, in which counties the iron interests are strong, gave an increased majority. The Granger element is strong throughout the Reserve ; yet the Democratic calculations on that score were confounded. Columbiana, sandwiched in between Mahoning, and other disaffected counties, decreased its majority somewhat, it being 1,132 in 1872, and 966 in 1875. The Republican vote was increased about 300, and the Democratic over 700. Taking the population of 1870 as the basis, and the vote of 1872 showed the percentage of voters to be very nearly one in four and two-sevenths persons. The vote of 1875, on the same population, would give one voter to every four and one-tenth persons. This establishes, beyond question, the normal character of the increase, for it exhibits the fact that no suspicious looking or sudden accessions to population is shown. In this respect, it contrasts with facts previously made plain.

Proceeding still further, and taking a number of Democratic counties in the interior of the State, with a nearly equivalent population, and it will be at once evident, that there has not been in Ohio, any such rapid increase of population as the large vote would indicate. The counties of Crawford, Coshocton, Fairfield, Franklin, Knox, Licking, Holmes, Muskingum, Ottawa, Perry, Pickaway, Sandusky, Wayne and Wyandott, are all Democratic, and contained, according to the last census, a population of 408,139, or over one-sixth of the total. There are several large towns therein, and the principal lines of communication traverse most of them. The canvass was, as a rule, vigorously managed on both sides. The following figures show the position :

Vote on State ticket, 1872.
Democratic	48,601
Republican	36,451
<hr/>
Democratic majority	12,150
Vote on State ticket, 1875.
Democratic	57,149
Republican	41,353
<hr/>
Democratic majority	15,796
Total vote in 1875	98,502
“ “ “ 1872	84,952
<hr/>
Increase in 1875	13,550
Increase of Democratic vote in 1875	8,548
“ “ Republican “ “	4,902

On a population of 1,601, less than that of the Republican counties named, the vote of these Democratic counties shows 4,418 polls more than do the others first named. Taking the enumeration of 1870, and it will be found that in 1872, the voters were as one in every four and four-tenths persons, and in 1875 as one in every four and one-sixth persons. In these counties, the Republican vote was largely increased in all the larger places—as Columbus, Zanesville, Circleville, Dayton, etc. But the large increase remains unaccounted for, unless the fact that all the machinery of the election and returns being in Democratic hands, accounts for it.

In continuation of this comparison, it will be of service to group together the border and river Democratic counties, from Defiance in the northwest, to Washington, Mercer and Belmont, in the southeast. There are eleven of them, having in 1870, a population of 312,908, a little more than one-eighth of the whole. In 1872, the total vote was 52,142, or one voter in every six persons. At that date the counties of Van Wert, Belmont and Washington, were Republican. The Democrats had a majority of 2,460 in the group. In 1875, the total vote was 68,754, an increase of 16,612, making, at the rate of one in six, an increase of population to the number of 99,672, or according to the percentage of the vote of 1875 on the population of 1870 (one in about every five) an addition of 83,860 persons. Going back to the estimate made at the commencement of this article of the additional population that the large vote of October last, will show, it can be seen that these eleven counties show, at the first estimate, one-third of the total presumed growth; and at the last named figures, a little more than two-sevenths of the whole.

To be more accurate, the counties which in 1870 contained only about one-eighth of the whole population of Ohio, are found in 1875, to have gained so enormously in population as to show, by the vote of October last, that they must have increased their inhabitants to one-third and one-seventh of the total growth which the very large vote of that date shows to have been so remarkable—always providing that the vote was, itself, an honest one. There are only two horns to the Democratic dilemma in the counties indicated, and they are, either the neighborly character of their party friends in adjacent States, or the unexampled pro-creative fecundity of the population in the several counties indicated. There is another notable fact.

The total Democratic vote of October, 1875, was	292,264
That of October, 1872, was	251,780
<hr/>
An increase of	40,484

According to the figures already given, the border counties named, show an increased vote of 16,612, or more than two-fifths of the whole.

If the reader will turn back to the group of interior Democratic counties which show, by the enumeration of 1870, a population of 408,139, and an increased vote in 1875, over that in 1872, of 13,554, he will have a still more vivid illustration of the remarkable manner in which Democratic majorities can be increased where the territory lie convenient to Democratic States. By the enumeration of 1870, the interior counties contain about one-sixth of the population, against the border counties selected, with about one-eighth of the total. Taking the basis, one in five, and it will be found that the more densely populated counties have increased their population to the number of 67,770—large enough, but still small—as contrasted with those counties that contained, in 1870, 95,231 less persons. These latter have absorbed one-third and one-seventh, according to the vote, of the total.

290,241, while the interior Democratic counties have gained, in comparison, only about four and one-fourth of that total. When compared with Republican counties, the alleged increase in both will be found to be wholly abnormal and fraudulent. But for the purpose of this writing, it is sufficient to contrast the two Democratic groups with each other. The more populous counties show a gain equal only to two-sixths of the whole increase on the vote of 1875 over that of 1872, against the less populous ones of the same faith, which runs up to over two-fifths of the whole.

With one more comparison, this review will be closed. According to the vote of 1872, the Republicans (casting a total poll of 265,930) then represented a population of 1,329,650, estimating it on the basis of one voter in five. According to the same basis, the Democratic vote would have represented 1,258,900 persons, and the Prohibitionists 10,225, leaving unrepresented 65,505 persons, or 13,100 absentee voters. Now, according to the census of 1870, the Democratic counties in 1872 contained a population of 1,354,058, leaving the counties carried by the Republicans, a population of but 1,311,202. The latter carried 47, and the Democrats carried 41 counties. By the vote of 1875, the Democracy carried 45 counties, with a population of 1,252,859; being 58,343 less than in 1872. The Republicans carried 43 counties, with a population of (1870) 1,402,401—a gain of 91,199. This is a remarkable fact, because it shows that the total Democratic increase of votes is nearly equal to its loss of representative population. This is worth re-stating: The Democratic poll of 1875 shows an increase of 40,484 votes; yet it practically represents 58,343 less persons. The Republican poll increased 31,883, while the counties carried by the party shows a population of 91,199 more than the counties carried by it in 1872.

No one accustomed to deal with social statistics, can for a moment believe that the huge increase of the vote of Ohio in October last is an honest one. The conditions are all against such a conclusion. There is no reason whatever for believing that the State has been blessed with any sudden and enormous growth. Yet if the vote was an honest one, the increase of population it implies, would necessarily lead to such a conviction. It may be worth while to see what the normal increase has really been. The decade from 1850 to 1860, shows an addition of 359,182 persons to the total population. There is a decrease of 23,431, in the ratio of increase, during the next decade, which may be fairly attributed to the war and its effects, though the preceding decade shows a much larger falling off from that in 1840 to 1850—not less in fact than 100,680. But the increase shown by the census of 1860, may be taken as the basis for the present one. One half of that, will be 179,591. This total will be 110,650 less than the estimate that has already been made, based upon the increased vote of October last, as compared with that of October, 1872. Taking, therefore, the increase of population in Ohio for the past five years, at 179,591, and estimating the voters as one in five, and the result will be an increase of 35.91 polls. This must be regarded as a fairly liberal basis.

The estimate of increase being made on that of 1850–60, would give Ohio in 1875, a total population of 2,844,851. Though these figures are more or less hypothetical, still there can be no doubt whatever, that they offer an approximately correct estimate. What then is the voting population? Taking our general basis—one in five—and there will be a total of 568,970 polls.

To recapitulate, then. Taking the increase from 1850 to 1860 as the basis for 1870–80, and the total population of Ohio will be

In 1875	2,844,851
The increase for five years being	179,591
The number of polls (estimated at one in five)	568,970
Votes actually returned in October, 1875	592,668
An increase over the above basis of	23,698

This leaves no margin for those electors, who, from sickness or otherwise, did not vote. The total was certainly one-half as great as in 1872, when the estimate was about 13,000. To say, then, that the recent vote in Ohio exceeded any legitimate and honest increase of the electoral population by at least twenty-five thousand polls, is a fair and reasonable conclusion. The enormous increase in the border and river counties of the total vote, as well as of the Democratic majorities therein, is conclusive evidence of the sources from which it came. The total increase on the Democratic vote of 1875 over that of 1872, is over 40,000. The unparalleled efforts made to get out a full vote, might fairly have increased their vote of 1872 by 10,000, but that increase could not have been honestly quadrupled—nor was it.

The lesson to be learned from this examination, is an obvious one. It proves conclusively that a canvass on the part of the Republican organization must always be conducted, to be successful, on the basis of intelligence, honesty, education and courage. It will be found that just in the degree that the Ohio canvass was bold and thorough, upon the main issues—finance and unsectarian schools—just in that degree did the Republican candidates win votes. In Hamilton and Cuyahoga, in Franklin and other leading and central counties, throughout the Western Reserve, in Lucas county (Toledo) and in the central belt of Democratic counties, the Republican organization pushed its canvass to the utmost. It will be seen clearly that this course won votes. The increase in the Western Reserve has already been shown. Lucas county shows a majority of 1,384 against one of 704 in 1872, with an increased vote of 1,648. Cuyahoga county, (Cleveland,) shows a vote in 1872, of 23,521, with a Republican majority of 3,603. The vote of 1875 aggregates 28,083, an increase of 4,562, with a Republican majority of 6,052, a gain of 2,449. Franklin county, in which the State Capital, Columbus, is located, has always been Democratic. In 1872 the full vote was 11,979; the Democratic majority 2,083; in 1875, the full vote was 14,793; the Democratic majority 1,109, a Republican increase of 1,894 votes. The Democratic vote only increased 920. Hamilton county gave in 1872 a total vote of 42,373 and an Opposition majority of 5,653. In 1875 the total vote was 48,537, an increase of 6,164 polls, giving a Republican majority of 1,295, and a total increase for that party of 6,556 polls. It will be found on comparison that the Republicans polled their full vote, throughout the Democratic central portion of the State; that their aggregate vote is increased therein; that the full vote was polled in the sections they usually carry; and that allowing for the depression and disaffection in the iron-working counties which were lost—especially Mahoning, Belmont, and Washington—the full extent of the so-called Democratic gains therein, that there was polled or returned against Governor Hayes, and in favor of Governor Allen, not less than 25,000 imported or manufactured votes.

Let us take the three counties just named, captured by the Democracy on the inflation issue, without doubt. In 1872 their full vote was 20,921, divided into 11,173 Republican, and 9,748 Democratic, giving the former a majority of 1,425. In 1875, their full vote was 25,611, divided into 13,165 Democratic and 12,446 Republican, giving the former a majority of 719. The Democratic gain over 1872 was 3,417; the Republicans increased their vote by 1,273. The total Democratic increase, therefore, is 4,690. Allowing this to be an honest increase—and it requires considerable faith to do so—it will still be seen there is at least an illegitimate increase of 25,000 to be accounted for. The Republican State Committee conducted their campaign upon the expectation that Kentucky, Indiana, and W. Virginia, would colonize at least 20,000 Democratic votes.

The foregoing fully establishes the correctness of their judgment. It also proves the strength of the Republican cause, and the wisdom of a bold canvass, where questions affecting the honesty of administration and the integrity of free institution are involved. To educate is the highest function of a party devoted to progress and ordered liberty. In spite of the close calculations of the Democratic managers, it will be seen that they failed to estimate at its full strength, the sterling integrity of a free people, when directly appealed too, to sustain honesty in finance, and stability in administration of Republican government. The legitimate majority for Rutherford B. Hayes would most certainly have been not less than 25,000, if so many of the accommodating Democrats residing in adjacent States had not temporarily migrated into Ohio. There is a lesson and warning in the foregoing facts and estimates, which it will be well to heed.

THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN OF 1875.

The "Long Roll" of the recent campaign was first sounded in Kentucky. At this writing, its reverberations are dying away in Alabama. The struggle has been a vigorous one. Marches and countermarches have followed each other rapidly. The opening assaults were severe and well-contested, resulting in varied fortune. The Democracy appeared in force, and carried, as at Shiloh, the outposts. Our lines were driven in disastrously in California, the camp being divided against itself. The fight waged with fluctuations in Maine, showing an apparent decrease of fighting strength on our part; while in Iowa and Nebraska, there was assured and confident "forward movements." Then came a stroke of "grand strategy," worthy of Sherman himself—only it was as the attack on Johnston's center, at Kenesaw—a failure, which, unlike "Tecumseh," the enemy were unable to rally from by any flanking effort. The defeat in Ohio—their center—was the key to the situation. All that remained to be done, thereafter, was to mass the forces and move all along the lines against the enemy's works. When the electoral campaign for 1875 opened, there was a long list of positions, temporarily lost, to be re-carried. It is worth while seeing how far success has attended Republican efforts. In 1874 the State elections resulted as follows:

VOTE OF 1874.

STATES.	Republican.	Democratic.	Total vote.	Republican loss.	Democratic gain.	Republican majority	Democratic majority.	Increase over vote of 1872	Decrease from vote of 1872.
Indiana.....	164,955	182,053	347,008	21,192	18,421	17,098	2,771
Illinois.....	164,842	197,013	361,855	77,102	12,075	32,171	65,025
Iowa.....	107,256	79,054	186,310	24,310	7,85	28,202	16,452
Maine.....	53,131	41,734	94,865	8,291	12,647	11,397	4,356
Maryland.....	53,385	67,520	120,905	13,375	†167	14,135	13,512
Massachusetts.....	89,344	93,376	182,720	44,128	34,116	4,032	10,012
Michigan.....	111,353	105,710	217,063	27,102	27,355	5,643	253
New Jersey.....	84,050	97,283	181,333	7,606	13,233	13,233	13,221
New York.....	366,079	416,370	782,449	74,657	29,039	50,291	45,568
Ohio.....	221,204	238,406	467,425	60,648	†5,935	17,202	52,748
Pennsylvania.....	272,436	277,195	549,631	77,153	63,154	4,759	11,909
South Carolina.....	80,531	68,864	149,395	*8,241	46,161	11,667	54,402
Virginia.....	76,565	93,685	170,250	16,903	2,031	17,120	14,872
Totals.....	1,845,131	1,948,264	3,793,395	552,467	268,140	56,909	170,041	71,979	232,989

* Republican gain

† Democratic loss.

Special elections were held in the following States and for the purposes indicated:
California, Oct. 20, Election of Supt. of Public Instruction.
Alabama, Sept. 20, Delegates to a Constitutional Convention.
Alabama, Nov. 16, Ratification of Constitution.
North Carolina, Aug. 10, Delegates to Convention.
North Carolina, — Ratification of Constitution.
Nebraska, Sept. 12, Ratification of Constitution.

Oregon, Nov. 2, Election of Representative.
Tennessee,* — Elections of Representative.
Missouri, Oct. 30, Ratification of New Constitution.
Texas, Sept. Delegates to Constitutional Convention.
Texas, Dec. 7, Ratification of Constitution.
New Jersey, Oct. 22, Ratification of Constitutional, Amendment.
Colorado, Oct. 25, Election of Convention Delegates.

* Date is not known.

At the regular State elections during the year past, the following States have voted :

STATES.	Date of Election.	No. of Congressmen elected.	State Ticket and Legislature.	Partial State Ticket.	Legislature.	U. S. Senators to be elected.
Kentucky	Aug. 1.	1	1
California	Sept. 1.	4	2
Maine	Sept. 13.	1†	3	2
Iowa	Oct. 12.	4	3
Ohio	Oct. 12.	5
Nebraska	Oct. 12.	6
Massachusetts	Nov. 2.	1†	7
Maryland	Nov. 2.	8
Minnesota	Nov. 2.	9
Mississippi	Nov. 2.	6	...	1	1	4
Kansas	Nov. 2.	2	...
New Jersey	Nov. 2.	3	...
New York	Nov. 2.	1†	...	2	4	...
Pennsylvania	Nov. 2.	10
Virginia	Nov. 2.	3	5	...
Texas *	Dec. 7.	11	5
New Mexico	Oct. 20†	1

* The election in Texas was postponed to the date named by the Constitutional Convention.

† To fill vacancies.

‡ Election of a delegate.

The following states voted at the elections indicated on amendments to the State Constitutions: In Minnesota there were four amendments submitted and ratified. The first changes section 4 of article VI. and provides for the formation of judicial district composed of contiguous territory, and the election of judges for a term of seven years, and also provides that every district judge shall reside within the district at the time of his election and during his continuance in office. The second amendment says the Legislature may provide by law that any woman 21 years of age and upward may vote at any election for school officers, or upon any measure relating to schools, and may also be eligible to hold any office pertaining solely to the management of schools. The third amendment directs the Legislature to provide for the safe investment of the principal and interest of all funds arising from the sale of certain lands in United States bonds, or the bonds of Minnesota or other States, issued after the year 1860. The fourth proposition so amends section 3 of article X. as to make stockholders in any corporation (except those for carrying on a manufacturing or mechanical business) liable only for all unpaid installments on stock owned by them or transferred for the purpose of defrauding creditors.

Kansas voted upon three amendments, which are intended to secure biennial sessions of the Legislature. The first provides that section 25 of article 2, shall be amended so as to read as follows: "All sessions of the Legislature shall be held at the State capital, and beginning with the session of 1877, all regular sessions shall be held once in two years, commencing on the second Tuesday of January of each alternate year thereafter." The second so amends section 3 of article XI., as to provide that at each regular session the Legislature shall make provision for raising sufficient revenue to defray the current expenses of the State for two years. The third to constitute section 29 of article II., reads as follows: "At the general election held in 1876, and thereafter, members of the House of Representatives shall be elected for two years, and members of the Senate shall be elected for four years."

In Mississippi, three amendments were submitted. The first is in the form of an addition of Section 5 of Article XII, and prohibits the payment of what is known as the "Union bank, or Planter's bank bonds." The second is in relation to fines, forfeitures, etc., in support of the public schools, and the third relates to a division of the States into a convenient number of chancery districts. The first is known to have been adopted. The fate of the other two has not been distinctly ascertained.

The result of the late elections has an important bearing. The Presidential election of next year—that of the Centennial—has a significance as deep as that which was felt attended the first election of Abraham Lincoln. As the first table presented shows, the year begun with an apparent reaction—so triumphant as to leave the Democracy in possession of the National House of Representatives, by a majority of over eighty members. The carefully nurtured disaffection within the ranks of the Republican party itself, presented to the opposition, two grounds for expecting further success. The first was a belief that the "Liberals," called so from their remarkably illiberal way of dealing with all opposed to their puny efforts, held the balance of power, and could dictate reason to the Democracy, while depleting the Republican organization. The second was the hope that the well-pushed charge of administrative corruption was so far impressed upon the mind of the Republican masses as to be an effectual means of disintegration. Last year's returns almost justified these hopes, but those who analyzed closer, saw more clearly that indifference, even more than dissatisfaction, was the cause of the default. It was not a Democratic gain so much as a Republican abstention, that brought about the untoward result.

This year changes the scene almost entirely, as the following summary will show :

STATES.	General Elections.		Special Elections.
	Rep.	Dem.	Rep.	Dem.
Kentucky	1
California (Sept)	2
California (Oct.)	1
Arkansas	3
Maine	2	4
Iowa	3	5
Ohio	4
Massachusetts	5
Minnesota	6
Mississippi	6*
Kansas	7
Nebraska	8	1a
Missouri	1a
Alabama	2a
North Carolina	2†
Oregon	9
New Jersey	10	3b
New York	7†
Pennsylvania	11
Texas	3a
Virginia	8
Colorado	4
New Mexico	12

* In this State, three of the six Congressmen are Republican. (a) States so marked, have had two special elections during the year, to elect delegates and to vote on the Constitutions framed by them; (b) refers to the special election for action on the Constitutional Amendments. Oregon is not quite settled, but the official count, as far as heard from, gives it to the Republican nominee. † New York is practically Republican, the Legislature having been carried by a large majority and the Democratic vote greatly reduced. ‡ The popular majority was Republican in this State.

In Kentucky there was decided gain in the Republican party, General

Harlan, its candidate, making a vigorous personal canvass, while his ability and eloquence put his opponent at so great a disadvantage, as to compel the Democratic leaders to make appeals for support on the ground of party necessities. There was a fine illustration of reciprocity in this election—the first of the campaign. Covington, Newport, and other river towns increased their votes quite largely. The Ohio Democrats, in the counties opposite, had their reward for this neighborly attention. California showed the disadvantage of divided councils. The intense individuality and ambition of Senator Booth and his friends, resulted in a temporary disruption of the Republican party, and permitted the Democracy to carry the State. At the later election, into which, as seems inevitable, the school question entered, the Republican candidate was elected by ten thousand majority. California is a Republican State on a direct issue. All parties here, and in Kentucky, were opposed to inflation. The Arkansas contest had no bearing on the general conflict. As to Maine, it will be found that the Republican victory, though accompanied by a reduced majority, augurs nothing as to the Presidential contest. There is a small Democratic gain, but it is only in the larger towns, and proves that the evils of civic abstention do not accompany the party that secures the dangerous classes and gathers in the ignorant and prejudiced. Maine will give her full majority next year. Both parties in this State opposed inflation. As to the other New England State that voted this fall—Massachusetts—the result is satisfactory, and shows that with the interest sure to be aroused in the Centennial Presidential canvass, the Bay State will give a majority of thirty thousand for the Republican nominee. A remarkable fact is exhibited by the recent State census, in connection with the exercise of the suffrage. The voting population of Massachusetts is stated, by the census of 1875, to be 351,066.

The vote cast for President in 1872 was	192,732	LESS	158,334
For Governor 1874 it was	186,810		164,256
" " 1875 " "	172,809		178,257

In New York the vote fell off largely from that of last year, which was 23,177 less than in 1872. The official count has not been received at this writing, but the vote will probably be forty thousand less than last year, and sixty thousand less than in 1872. In Pennsylvania it is reported to be over eighty thousand less than at the election of 1872. Massachusetts opposed inflation by the votes of both parties.

Turning to the West, and what is to be seen? An increase of confidence on the part of the Republican masses, and a large gain over last year, wherever a thorough and honest canvass has been made. Iowa gave Governor Kirkwood a majority of over thirty-two thousand, while the average majority on the State ticket was over twenty-nine thousand. The Republicans opposed inflation and urged the policy of appreciation. Ohio has been treated elsewhere at great length. The proven facts justify a claim for an honest majority of twenty-five thousand for the Republican ticket. The Democracy made a bold attack on the whole line, advocating inflation, but were hindered by the allied Catholic attack on the public schools. The Republican party leaders took a moderate position, looking to the careful and honest appreciation of the "greenback" and maintained it steadily; resisting with great vigor towards the close of the campaign, the claim made that inflation of the currency was a remedy for the hard times produced by speculative expansion in other directions. The results in Minnesota and Kansas, like Iowa, must be regarded as offering the most cheering proof of the assured hold had by the national party upon the loyal masses therein. As to Wisconsin, two things are to be deduced. One is, that the lack of an efficient canvass in the sense of completeness, will always tell against the Republican organization. With the materials of which it is largely composed, it is evident that, to paraphrase a well-worn expression, "Eternal vigilance is the price of" political success, as well as "liberty." The other is, that in the "Badger States," the fight made, to break up the Republican party by a movement from within, (compounded of personal motives and some new policies striving to assert themselves, as per the cheap transportation discussion), has, on a severe test, failed of success. The Legislative majority is increased. Wisconsin may, with every reason, be counted for the Republican nominee in 1876, with a fair majority. Nebraska gave about eleven thousand majority for the Republican ticket. Like the States of Wisconsin, Kansas, and Minnesota, Nebraska planted itself squarely in opposition to inflation.

The result in New Jersey is especially gratifying, reversing, as it does, in regard to the legislature, the vote of last year. The Democratic majority of that election, in both Senate and House, and on joint ballot, is exactly transformed. In the local elections, the honors were fairly divided—the Republicans, however, carrying the larger counties. Pennsylvania is a solid victory—Hartman having about 12,000 majority over Pershing. The prohibition vote was about 11,000. Philadelphia illustrates, at this election, the growth of the absentee evil. There are 160,000 registered voters in the city, but only 113,889 ballots were cast, a loss of over 46,000. In 1868, the poll was 121,333; in 1872, 119,118. The Keystone State showed, by its recent vote, that it, too, could be counted against inflation.

The election in New York, while giving the opposition State ticket a majority of 15,239, really resulted in a Republican and reform victory. The Legislature is Republican by an increased majority. In the city and county of New York, Tammany Hall and the rule of the "Boss" or "one man power" has been effectually broken. The figures will show this:

The majority for Tilden in 1874 was 42,156
That for Bigelow (Democrat) in 1875 is but..... 28,156

Mr. Seward, the Republican nominee for Secretary of State, had 4,465 more votes than Governor Dix.

The total vote was..... 126,902
Divided as follows: Bigelow..... 77,529
Seward..... 49,372

The Democratic vote on a total poll of 126,344, decreased 1,077. The Republican vote increased 4,465, making a total of 5,542—the difference between the vote of 1874 and 1875. The opposition to Tammany combined the Democracy opposed thereto and the Republicans. The result is worth noting :

Anti-Tammany	Tammany
Phelps (Rep)... 75,733	Olney..... 50,853
Hacket (Dem). 75,755	Smythe... 50,314
The majority was—Hacket (D)..... 25,441
	Phelps (R)..... 24,880

The answer of Tammany through the mouths of John Kelly and Abraham S. Hewitt, was two-fold. Mr. Kelly declared it to be due entirely to the disaffection produced among the corporation laborers, at the reduction of their wages. This was both confession and avoidance. The confession being the fact, that the "boss" or "personal government" plan involves the placating of the laboring masses, by their employment on civic improvements or as armies in older States. The object is corrupt, in both a political and personal sense. It enriches contractors and ring officials, and drills masses of men to support corruption by their votes. It is the system of the Plebiscite in another form. Louis Napoleon and Baron Haussaman—the former the French John Kelly and the latter more akin to Tweed in all probability—played their game for nearly twenty years. They improved Paris, assisted France to railroads and canals, obtained overwhelming endorsements at the polls by the process known to the manipulators of such things, whether in France or Democratic New York, and ended in exile and defeat. The result was—Sedan, the loss of Alsace and Lorraine, and—The Commune. Mr. Hewitt, a man of acute intellect and trained intelligence, also fulminated. He cannot see, as a Democrat, any hope for municipal self-government, as applied to large cities, without the intervention of some such agency as that of the Tammany Society. Like all the modern Democratic leaders, he makes open confession of the failure of Democracy—as they understand it. The Procrustean bed on which they lay Government and its methods, is a failure in the face of the complex and multiform aspects of modern society. Inevitably the Democrat turns to the Dictator. The chief of Tammany appeals to the Plebiscite, and whether in City or State, enthrones personal government by the aid of masses deliberately corrupted or kept unenlightened, and finally creates a Cæsar—be the same Emperor or "Boss." The Republican sees, on the other hand, that the co-operative government or party "of the people, by the people, for the people"—seeking to translate the average demands into law, while it aims to lift those demands on to the highest plane of which they are capable—that this government or party must have capacity for infinite modification, mobility and adaptation, without once losing its steadfast hold on the underlying, primordial idea—that of government for all, by all, and in the interest of all. It cannot be led by chieftians, as is that of Democracy, pure and simple. The Republic is under the direction of representatives—attorneys—trustees, if you will—empowered to act for the people. But this is aside from the general question, though still germane to the issue.

From the further West, Colorado, New Mexico, and Oregon wheel into line, and as before stated, California returns home. There seems little reason to doubt the election of a Republican member of Congress from Oregon, though the official count must finally decide. Colorado elected her last Delegate, and also a Republican majority in the Constitutional Convention authorized by the enabling act. New Mexico returns her efficient Delegate, Mr. Elkin. From the South, superficial conditions do not appear as hopeful, yet close observation will satisfy the thoughtful person that there is ground for encouragement. Alabama and North Carolina have both made manifest the existence of a live and vigorous Republican party. The popular majority against holding a Convention to revise the Constitution, was 9,245. The arrangement of the districts was such that a minority secured within one of a majority, and the election of that doubtful one to the presidency of the Convention, secured them control thereof. But the work of reorganization is well begun. In Alabama, the Republicans, at a late day, rallied to resist the ratification of the new Constitution, framed by the Democrats, and showed that they were not so demoralized as their opponents supposed. Alabama will probably head the Republican column next year, while North Carolina is almost beyond peradventure on that side. Texas will be for the Democratic candidate—whoever that may be. The Democracy elected their Convention, framed a new Constitution, and will ratify it, as well as elect State officers thereunder, early in the current month. Missouri has also changed its Constitution, the vote on the ratification being very light, and generally affirmative. The total vote of that State in 1872 was 273,629, while on the new Constitution it was not over one of that total.

The most significant sign in the former Slave States, is the clearage already evident in the border States. It was apparent during the Kentucky canvass, and it was more than distinct in Virginia, recently. The Maryland vote shows clearly that the Bourbon leaders are losing their hold on the Southern whites. There is no doubt that Maryland was honestly carried by the Reform movement, of which the Republicans formed so important a constituent. The total vote was 158,127, with a majority for the Democrats of 12,821. Outside of Baltimore city, the Reformers carried 12 counties with a population of 329,989; the Democrats carried 10 counties, with a population of 193,351. Baltimore city, with a population of 267,354, (making a population represented by Democrats of 460,705) gave a majority sufficient to secure Carroll's election, though but a short time before, it gave 14,000 majority for Gen. Latrobe, the Reform Mayor. The Democratic vote in the city was 36,958, and its majority was very conveniently just 14,995. The total vote shows the ratio of polls to be one in five of the whole population. It shows, however, that the city vote falls one-half per cent. below that ratio. The increase there of Democratic polls, over preceding elections is nearly equal to their majority in the State. The difference between the Reform vote—21,293, in Baltimore on the 2d ult, and the Republican vote cast in 1872, 13,647, is 7,646. Adding these, as being Reform Democrats to the total Democratic vote in the city, and the present total will be 50,605, making an increase over the party vote of 1874, (the highest), that being 29,862, of 20,743. This shows how Mr. Carroll's majority was obtained, for there has been no such normal increase as is indicated. The ratio already given would show an increase of 100,000 to the population. The majority outside of Baltimore for the Reform ticket was 2,181. The official vote was, for Carroll (Dem.), 50,690; for Harris, (Rep.), 48,509. The municipal election indicated that the Reformers had a majority in the city itself. All these things are slowly disintegrating the Southern Democracy, by opening the eyes of that portion of their voters, that gravitated to them originally, because they could not sustain the policy of restricting slavery, or of proclaiming emancipation. They were not Democrats, anyhow, and begin at last to understand this.

The result in Mississippi is not unexpected. It proves the danger of personal politics, and strongly testifies to the need there is of direct action and courageous conduct, on the part of those who have won the confidence of the new citizens. The loss of Mississippi is not a permanent one. It is impossible for the minority to hold the electoral majority for a great while in abject subjection, and the campaign of Seventy-Six will prove this, beyond doubt. What has been won in fraud and violence will surely end in discomfiture and disgrace.

"The mills of the Gods grind very slow,
But they grind very fine."

Looking over the entire field and the Republican party may well feel encouraged. There is no place for complete assurance of triumph, but there is room for confidence in success, if the work to be done is well done; if the standard is lifted high; if the motives are honest and patriotic, and the principles proclaimed are exalted in character.

Three points become prominent in a survey of the field. These are:

1st. The recent struggle was not in reality over hard or soft money per se, for or against administrative reform, but in reality for the disintegration and destruction of the Republican organization. The people vetoed that design.

2d. It is evident that the majority of the voters are not prepared to trust the Democratic party with national power once more.

As a matter of political philosophy—a legitimate opposition being a necessary, even essential, condition of representative government—it would be well for the politicians who belong to a different school from the Republican party, to insist upon the disbandment of an organization on which the taint of treason and decadence rests, and the re-forming of the opposition under some other name.

3d. It is evident that, as during the days of pro-slavery rule, while the civil war created thereby was in progress, and since, during the perilous days of reconstruction, the Democratic party has always been ready to strike hands with any dangerous movement or voting force, that offers a chance of aiding its recovery of the power it so unworthily used. It allied itself with slavery. It blew hot and cold during the Slave-holders' Rebellion. It has supported the Ku-Klux and endorsed the White League murders. In New York city, it organized plunder on a gigantic scale. During the recent canvass, it has shown itself ready to join with those who, in pursuance of their policy of sacerdotalism, strike at the unsectarian public schools, and in Ohio and Pennsylvania, it has been ready to destroy the public credit, in order to arouse demagogue's appeal, the passions of the poor, the unfortunate, and the unemployed.

New dangers threaten at every turn from the existence of this virulent party. The intelligent American citizen perceives the danger that follows its every step towards a renewal of power, and when the prize appears to be in their grasp, the ballot of the patriot strikes them down as assuredly as their bullets did the Southern wing—that is, the Confederate armies,—during the Rebellion. Republicans! to the front. Close up the ranks. Amend the discipline. Increase your vigilance. Prepare earnestly for a forward movement, and the Centennial year will see another tried and trusted Republican elected to the Presidency.

WISE POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY.—No one who has studied the career of M. Leon Gambetta, the parliamentary and popular leader of the French Republicans, can for one moment, deny to him the wisdom that is chastened by experience, and the courage that is tempered by the knowledge that brings discretion. He comprehends clearly that the Republican idea is master of the situation, and that it is the old order and not the new conditions, that conspire against order, social and political. In a letter addressed to the Republicans of Lyons, bearing date Oct. 27, M. Gambetta says:

"What victorious majorities, of whatever nature, have especially to fear, is to seek to obtain everything at once at the risk of confounding and compromising everything. The example of these last few years should always be before our eyes. The politics of our days are bound, like all the sciences, to march gradually from the simple to the complex; but more than all other sciences, it requires the spirit of circumspection, prudence, temperament. Politics are not a geometry, all the constructions of which are traced in perfect lines, all the problems of which necessarily receive exact solutions. They ought, beyond doubt, to be inspired by fixed and certain principles, but they are carried on with men and for men, across interests and passions which throng together, in the face of traditions which resist. They ought, therefore, to know how to arrange with necessity, and never to risk the fate of an idea, or a people, for the honor of a hopeless theory. We have had predecessors, we shall have successors; we shall only bequeath them a very imperfect patrimony; for all the conquests we shall have been able to realize will only give the measure of the progress even of political morals, still, alas! much in arrear. Arrived at public life, at the most difficult period of this century, we have but one duty—to maintain, augment, and transmit the heritage to better prepared and more fortunate generations. It is necessary, then, to measure and regulate the march, in order to avoid falls."

Two luminous statements in the foregoing are worthy American attention. Gambetta condensed a volume, when he wrote that, "The politics of our days are bound, like all the sciences, to march gradually from the simple to the complex." Again: "Politics are not a geometry, all the constructions of which are traced in perfect lines * * they are carried on with men and for men, across interests and passions which throng together in the face of traditions which resist." Democracy is simple; Republicanism is complex. Modern life is the most complex of all things, and growing more so daily. Politics are not pure morals. They are not necessarily immoral, because expediences have rightful place. The basis is ethical, and must always be. The practice may often, and most wisely, too, be a compromise.

NAVIGATION LAWS.

CHAPTER III.

LORD CASTLEREAGH—WHAT IS A GENERAL TREATY OF COMMERCE? RECIPROCITY—MONOPOLY—INTERCOURSE DURING THE PERIOD WHEN THE PORTS WERE CLOSED—MR. CLAY, MR. GALLATIN, MR. CANNING—MR. CLAY'S PROPOSITION—ANOTHER ORDER IN COUNCIL—LORD DUDLEY—REGULATION OF THE COLONIAL TRADE BY PARLIAMENT—DUKE OF WELLINGTON—LORD ABERDEEN—BRITISH GOVERNMENT DID NOT CONTEMPLATE ANY REGULATION—VIEWS OF MR. RUSH—A DIFFERENT POLICY—MR. VAN BUREN AND MR. McLANE—A NEW PROPOSITION—AMERICAN PORTS OPENED BY THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

When Lord Castlereagh asked Mr. Rush, the American Minister, what was to be understood by a general treaty of commerce? Mr. Rush replied: "A treaty that would open, not a temporary or precarious, but permanent intercourse with the British West Indies and the Colonies in North America, to the shipping of the United States. And to negotiate such a treaty, he was present in London." It appears that the British Government were willing to enter upon such a negotiation, but unwilling to alter the existing Colonial system, which excluded trade. They professed, too, to have an earnest desire to see the commercial intercourse between the two countries placed upon the best footing at all points; the stake to each being alike important. What the United States desired was, that in the trade between the two countries, the United States should have its equal share as carriers, and that the charge upon the vessels of each should be equal. This is RECIPROCITY, the Republican idea. Mr. Rush says that this is all that the United States ask. And the United States hold it out in a permanent statute as the basis of its code of navigation. But the monarchical idea was MONOPOLY, and to that idea Great Britain clung with a persistence worthy of a better cause.

It must never, therefore, be overlooked, that in all the propositions of this country to Great Britain, simple reciprocity was sought; and reciprocity here means justice. After the closing of the ports and the virtual cessation of trade, Mr. Clay, in a letter of the 11th of October, 1826, expressed the views of America in words that lay down the principles which throughout had actuated American statesmen. He said: "The Government of the United States has always been anxious that the trade between them and the British Colonies should be placed upon a liberal and equitable basis. There has not been a moment since the adoption of the present Constitution, when they were not willing to apply to it the principles of fair reciprocity and equal competition. There has not been a time during the same period when they have understood the British Government to be prepared to adopt that principle. * * * The struggle on the side of Great Britain was to maintain her monopoly, and on that of the United States to secure an equal participation in the trade and intercourse between them and the British Colonies."

The subject of the foreign trade of the United States was therefore again relegated to the hands of diplomacy; but there was not actual non-intercourse between the United States and the British Colonies, as a mutual exchange of their respective products was carried on. Commodities destined for the use of the British Colonies, but which they could not receive directly, they received indirectly through the neutral islands of St. Thomas and St. Bartholomew, each of which became a sort of entrepot for American commerce and that of the British Colonies. The Colonial consumer, of course, defrayed the transient charges through those islands; but the trade was not unprofitable, and it found employment for American vessels.

On the 11th of April, 1827, Mr. Clay, then Secretary of State, addressed instructions to Mr. Albert Gallatin, American Minister in London, desiring him to remove from the mind of the English Secretary of Foreign Affairs any misapprehensions he might have upon the subject. The despatch was exceedingly temperate in tone, and one calculated to foster amity between the two nations. Mr. Canning had expressed himself as disinclined to be drawn again into the discussion of topics already more than sufficiently debated. If this view had been accepted, the door of remonstrance might have been closed, on the ground that it was impossible to renew the consideration of the matter without traversing former arguments. Mr. Clay held that a full and candid explanation should be given to the British Government; and, until this was done, he would not be satisfied that all had been done that was necessary. Accordingly, he concurred in the general proposition laid down by Mr. Canning, that there is a right in a mother country to interdict to foreign nations a trade with her Colonies. This proposition was universally admitted among nations, and had never been controverted by the Government of the United States. But that was a very different proposition from the question which had been under discussion between the two Governments. That question was, whether, when the parent country, relaxing its Colonial monopoly, chooses to open the trade of its Colonies to foreign nations, those nations have not a right to examine for themselves the terms on which it is so opened, and to treat of such modifications of them as would secure reciprocity in the mutual intercourse. The Order in Council, closing the British Colonial ports, had been made pending negotiation, to which the Government of the United States had been invited. And, moreover, Mr. Vaughan, the British Minister at Washington, had received a note from Mr. Canning, written in anticipation of the course adopted in closing the ports of America to British vessels, to be delivered to the Secretary of State, but which he did not deliver. It had been the intention of this Government to frame a convention with articles providing for reciprocal intercourse by the vessels of each power; but Mr. Clay learned that the British Government had decided to regulate the trade by law. Mr. Gallatin was therefore directed to communicate to that Government that the President acquiesced in that decision, and to ascertain the disposition of that Government to open the trade by separate acts of the two Governments. The proposition of Mr. Clay was that a recommendation should be made by the President to Congress, at its next session, 1st. To suspend, as to the British Government, the alien duties on vessel and cargo, and to allow the entry into ports of the United States of British vessels, laden with the same kinds of British produce, or British Colonial produce, as American vessels can lawfully import; the British vessel paying no higher charges of any kind than American vessels are, under the same circumstances, bound to pay; and, secondly, to abolish the restriction contained in the act of the 1st of March, 1823, confining the trade to a direct intercourse between the Colonies and the United States; the effect of which will be to leave Great Britain in the exclusive possession of the circuitous trade between the United Kingdom and the United States, through the British Colonies. Mr. Gallatin was also instructed to inquire whether, if Congress should pass a law to the above effect, the Order in Council of July, 1826, would be revoked; the discriminating duties operating to the disadvantage of American vessels in the British Colonial ports would be abolished; and vessels of the United States be suffered to enjoy the privileges of trade and intercourse, according to the enactments of the Act of Parliament, of the 5th July, 1825?

On the 16th July, 1827, another British Order in Council was issued, embracing the regulation of the Colonial trade of Great Britain with all nations, reciting the passage of an Act of Parliament by which it was declared that one year from the passing of the Act of July, 1825, should be the period in which an acceptance of its provisions by foreign nations should be valid; declaring what nations had accepted those provisions, and closing their ports against all those that had not; among which the United States were included. The terms of such an Order in Council were strangely inconsistent with the communication to the British Government, made by Mr. Gallatin on June 4th, that the President was willing to recommend to Congress the passage of a law to regulate commercial intercourse of a very liberal character. To that no answer was received; and it was understood that Mr. Canning had no intention to make one. Mr. Canning died, and a similar communication was transmitted to Lord Dudley, Mr. Canning's successor. The note of Lord Dudley, in reply to Mr. Gallatin, reviewed the grounds upon which the United States justified themselves in omitting to accept the terms of the Act of Parliament of July, 1825, and stated that Lord Dudley declined to commit the British Government as to their course in the event of the United States adopting the measures proposed, for the following reasons, viz:—

1st, That much must of necessity depend upon the details of the Act which Congress might pass; 2d, More in the condition of the country at the time of the passage, and the views which the British Government might then have of their interest in the matter; and, 3d, That any stipulations on the subject would be a virtual departure from the ground taken by his Government to regulate the trade by law, and to decline all further negotiation concerning it. At a conference with Mr. Huskisson, that gentleman informed Mr. Gallatin that Great Britain considered the Colonial intercourse as exclusively under her control, and that whatever terms might be granted to foreigners would be considered as an indulgence; that he was not prepared to say whether, in any way, or, if at all, on what terms, it would be open to the United States, in case of their repealing their restrictive Acts. In the month of January, 1829, the Government of the United States heard from Mr. Barbour, in London, the last information on the subject. The Duke of Wellington was present during a communication which Mr. Barbour held with Lord Aberdeen, who had become Secretary in consequence of changes in the British Cabinet. Lord Aberdeen expressed his desire to have the Colonial trade question judiciously adjusted, and his opinion that the interdict was injurious to the Colonies without a proportionate benefit to any other section of the Empire. But from subsequent conversation with his Lordship, and from information derived from other sources, Mr. Barbour was induced to believe that the British Government did not contemplate any relaxation of the Colonial system in favor of the United States; that the late tariff, together with a strong conviction of the incapacity of Great Britain to compete upon equal terms with American navigation, contributed to that disposition; and that the British Government would willingly withdraw the privileges of trading with its Colonies, which it had granted to other nations, if that could conveniently be done.

Perhaps an extract from the published memoranda, by Mr. Rush, of his residence at the Court of London, may help to explain why England stood out so long against the offers of reciprocity by the United States. Mr. Rush says: Britain, on her part, alleged that she had the right to regulate the trade between her Colonies and the rest of the world, in all respects, as she saw fit. This she declared it was proper that she should do, not only as regarded commodities entering into the trade, but the vessels carrying them. She said, that to assent to the basis of reciprocity in her trade between these islands—the English West Indies—and the United States, would give to the latter inherent advantages, owing to their proximity to the islands. That she maintained the islands at great expense for their civil Governments and military establishments, and that on these grounds, as well as that of her general sovereignty over them, not only has she the right, but she held it necessary to her just interests to employ, chiefly, if not exclusively, her own vessels in the trade, whenever opened, no matter to what extent, or on what inducements. This was the British doctrine of monopoly; which may be supplemented by a remark of Lord Castlereagh's, that there were "too many interests hung upon their Colonial dominion in the quarter mentioned, (the West Indies)—it would operate like a revolution in their commercial system," to relax their practice.

And now occurred a transaction which presents one of the strangest features of American history. When the inconveniences of the suspension of direct intercourse between the United States and the British ate op-ment us-the to tes ads ro-im-her els ind ret of ect

the
to es-the es, tin • if ore 26, ies can uld ted of en-the ish the eat age dethe in by ng
ns, hat
tes

but Mr. Clay learned that the British Government had decided to regulate the trade by law. Mr. Gallatin was therefore directed to communicate to that Government that the President acquiesced in that decision, and desired to ascertain the disposition of that were included. The terms of such an Order in Council were strangely inconsistent with the communication to the British Government, made by Mr. Gallatin on June 4th, that the President was willing to recommend to Congress the passage of a law to regulate commercial intercourse of a very liberal character. To that no answer was received; and it was understood that Mr. Canning had no intention to make one. Mr. Canning died, and a similar communication was transmitted to Lord Dudley, Mr. Canning's successor. The note of Lord Dudley, in reply to Mr. Gallatin, reviewed the grounds upon which the United States justified themselves in omitting to accept the terms of the Act of Parliament of July, 1825, and stated that Lord Dudley declined to commit the British Government as to their course in the event of the United States adopting the measures proposed, for the following reasons, viz:—

- 1st, That much must of necessity depend upon the details of the Act which Congress might pass;
- 2d, More in the condition of the country at the time of the passage, and the views which the British Government might then have of their interest in the matter; and,
- 3d, That any stipulations on the subject would be a virtual departure from the ground taken by his Government to regulate the trade by law, and to decline all further negotiation concerning it.

At a conference with Mr. Huskisson, that gentleman informed Mr. Gallatin that Great Britain considered the Colonial intercourse as exclusively under her control, and that whatever terms might be granted to foreigners would be considered as an indulgence; that he was not prepared to say whether, in any way, or, if at all, on what terms, it would be open to the United States, in case of their repealing their restrictive Acts. In the month of January, 1829, the Government of the United States heard from Mr. Barbour, in London, the last information on the subject. The Duke of Wellington was present during a communication which Mr. Barbour held with Lord Aberdeen, who had become Secretary in consequence of changes in the British Cabinet. Lord Aberdeen expressed his desire to have the Colonial trade question judiciously adjusted, and his opinion that the interdiction was injurious to the Colonies without a proportionate benefit to any other section of the Empire. But from subsequent conversation with his Lordship, and from information derived from other sources, Mr. Barbour was induced to believe that the British Government did not contemplate any relaxation of the Colonial system in favor of the United States; that the late tariff, together with a strong conviction of the incapacity of Great Britain to compete upon equal terms with American navigation, contributed to that disposition; and that the British Government would willingly withdraw the privileges of trading with its Colonies, which it had granted to other nations, if that could conveniently be done.

Perhaps an extract from the published memoranda, by Mr. Rush, of his residence at the Court of London, may help to explain why England stood out so long against the offers of reciprocity by the United States. Mr. Rush says: Britain, on her part, alleged that she had the right to regulate the trade between her Colonies and the rest of the world, in all respects, as she saw fit. This she declared it was proper that she should do, not only as regarded commodities entering into the trade, but the vessels carrying them. She said, that to assent to the basis of reciprocity in her trade between these islands—the English West Indies—and the United States, would give to the latter inherent advantages, owing to their proximity to the islands. That she maintained the islands at great expense for their civil Governments and military establishments, and that on these grounds, as well as that of her general sovereignty over them, not only has she the right, but she held it necessary to her just interests to employ, chiefly, if not exclusively, her own vessels in the trade, whenever opened, no matter to what extent, or on what inducements. This was the British doctrine of monopoly; which may be supplemented by a remark of Lord Castlereagh's, that there were "too many interests hung upon their Colonial dominion in the quarter mentioned, (the West Indies)—it would operate like a revolution in their commercial system."

And now it presents one American history of the suspension between the U

Colonies were alone felt, and the far greater evils of the trade open for the benefit of England to our exclusion, were forgotten, the Government of the United States, says Mr. Caleb Cushing, saw fit to depart from, and change the policy which it had pursued from the beginning of the Government, and to concede to Great Britain, the greater part of the questions in dispute. Under date of the 20th July, 1829, Mr. Van Buren instructed Mr. McLane to negotiate an arrangement with Great Britain, in relation to trade with her colonies. In reviewing the events as recorded above, Mr. Van Buren considered them as having contributed more or less to the result, which he much regretted; and he named three grounds upon which he thought this country assailable: 1st, In its too long and too tenaciously resisting the right of Great Britain to impose protecting duties in her Colonies; 2d, In not relieving her vessels from the restriction of returning direct from the United States to the Colonies, after permission had been given by Great Britain to our vessels to clear out from the Colonies to any other British port; and 3d, In omitting to accept the terms offered by the act of Parliament of July, 1825, after the subject had been brought before Congress, and deliberately acted upon by our Government. It is, without doubt, said Mr. Van Buren, to the combined operation of these causes, that the United States are to attribute the British interdict. The trade, although not wholly suppressed, had changed in its character. Instead of being direct, active and profitable, it was circuitous and profitless. The export trade had been more considerable, though greatly reduced. The decrees of nature, by which the British West Indies are made dependent on the United States for a great portion of their necessary supplies, though erroneously resisted, had not been wholly frustrated by the retaliatory and improvident legislation of the two countries. It was the anxious wish of the President, to put an end to a state of things so injurious to all parties. He was willing to regulate the trade in question upon terms of reciprocal advantage, and to adopt for that purpose, those which Great Britain had herself elected, and which were prescribed by the act of Parliament of the 5th July, 1825, as it was understood by the United States. Mr. McLane was directed to make a full and frank exposition of the views and wishes of the President in that respect, as early as he could, and in such a manner as was best calculated to accomplish them, and to put it in his power to communicate the result of the overture to Great Britain to Congress, at the opening of the next session. The President was convinced of the inutility of protracted discussions upon a subject which had been over and over again debated; and Mr. McLane was authorized to say to the British Government, on the part of the United States, that they would open their ports to British vessels coming from the British Colonies, laden with such Colonial productions as could be imported in American vessels, and upon terms, in all respects equally favorable; and that they would also abolish the restriction contained in the act of Congress of 1823, confining the trade to a direct intercourse, upon conditions that Great Britain would allow American vessels the privileges of trade and intercourse, which were offered by the act of the 5th July, 1825. Following this offer of Mr. Van Buren's to the British Government, Congress volunteered to pass a law, says Mr. Cushing, for opening our ports without having any previous assurance that England would open hers; and the act in question is that of the 20th May, 1830. Great Britain proceeded then in such form and to such an extent as she pleased, to open certain of her Colonial ports to the United States by a mere Order in Council, revocable at will. In the same way, an act of Congress is revocable at the will of Congress. It was on both sides—at any rate, on the part of the United States—an experiment, which they saw fit to try, without entering into any stipulations on the subject, obligatory, either in their nature or in time. The act of May 29, 1830, provides that whenever the President of the United States shall receive satisfactory evidence that the Government of Great Britain will open the ports in its Colonial possessions in the West Indies, on the continent of South America, the Bahama Islands, the Cairos, and the Bermuda or Somer Islands, to the vessels of the United States, for an indefinite or for a limited time, that the vessels of the United States and their cargoes, on entering the Colonial ports aforesaid, shall not be subject to other or higher duties of tonnage or import, or charges of any other description, than would be imposed on British vessels or their cargoes, arriving in said Colonial possessions from the United States; that the vessels of the United States may import into the said Colonial possessions, from the United States, any article or articles which could be imported in a British vessel into such possessions, from the United States; and that the vessels of the United States may export from the British colonies mentioned, to any country whatever, other than the dominions of Great Britain, any article or articles that can be exported therefrom in a British vessel, to any country, other than the British dominions or possessions; leaving the commercial intercourse of the United States with all other ports of the British dominions or possessions, on a footing not less favorable to the United States than it now is; that when such evidence was received, the President was authorized to issue a proclamation, at any time before the next session of Congress, declaring the fact, and proclaiming the conditions of the trade in the vessels of the two countries. On the 5th October, 1830, the President issued his proclamation declaring that he had received satisfactory evidence that, whenever he should give effect to the Act of May 29th, the Government of Great Britain would open, for an indefinite period, the ports of its Colonial possessions in the West Indies, &c., to the vessels of the United States and their cargoes, upon the terms and according to the requisitions of the above Act of Congress; that by that Act the ports of the United States were, from the date of the proclamation, open to British vessels coming from those British possessions, and their cargoes, upon the terms set forth; that the acts concerning navigation and commercial intercourse of 1818, 1820 and 1823, were absolutely repealed; and that British vessels and their cargoes, were admitted to an entry in the ports of the United States, from the islands, provinces, and Colonies of Great Britain, on or near the American continent, and north or east of the United States.

CHAPTER IV.

INJURIOUS OPERATION OF COMMERCIAL ARRANGEMENTS—WHAT THE ARRANGEMENTS WERE—RECIPROCITY PROVIDED FOR—NAPOLEON—BRITISH TONNAGE INCREASED NEARLY FIVE HUNDRED PER CENT.—AMERICAN TONNAGE INCREASED ONLY ABOUT FIFTY PER CENT.—VALUE OF EXPORTS AND IMPORTS—NUMBER OF BRITISH VESSELS ENGAGED—NUMBER OF AMERICAN VESSELS—BRITISH COMMERCIAL TREATIES WITH THE UNITED STATES ALONE PROFITABLE, HER COMMERCE WITH EUROPE HAVING DECLINED—ALL AMERICAN PORTS OPEN TO BRITISH VESSELS—ONLY SOME BRITISH PORTS OPEN TO AMERICAN—DISADVANTAGES—MONOPOLY—NATURALIZED GOODS—EXCLUSION OF AMERICAN VESSELS—INEQUALITIES—COST OF SHIP BUILDING—MAIL STEAMERS—RECIPROCITY NOT OBTAINED—CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE—PROPOSITIONS.

The arrangements under the Act of May, 1830, and the President's Proclamation of October continued for several years to regulate the commercial intercourse between this country and the Colonial possessions of Great Britain in the West Indies and on the continent of America. The subject, however, was brought before Congress and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives. That committee made a thorough investigation; and the report, drawn by Mr. Cushing, showed how those arrangements in their operation affected the interests of the United States. The report was based upon a petition to Congress of certain citizens of the State of Maine, who complained of the arrangements in question. They represented, that in their operation, those amendments were injurious to this country, and that they had not been executed in good faith by Great Britain. The committee examined the case of the petitioners, and then scrutinized the arrangements themselves, thus formulated: By the Convention concluded in London on the 3d of July, 1815, to regulate commerce between the territories of the United States and Great Britain, it is provided—

1. As to the commerce between the territories of the United States and the British territories in Europe, there is to be reciprocal liberty of commerce. The inhabitants of the two countries have liberty to enter with their ships and cargoes all the places to which other foreigners were admitted, and to remain and transact business there in complete security. No higher or other duties are to be imposed in the United States on the importation of any articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the British territories in Europe, and no higher or other duties, in the British territories in Europe, on the importation of any articles, the growth, produce, or the manufacture of the United States, than are payable on the like articles of any other foreign country; nor are any higher or other duties to be imposed in either country, on the exportation of any articles to the other, than such as are payable on the exportation of such articles to any other foreign country; and any prohibition by either shall extend equally to all other nations. And no higher or other duties were to be paid by United States vessels in British ports, or British vessels in United States ports, than were paid by the vessels of each country in their own ports.

2. As to the British possessions in the African or East Indian seas: Vessels of the United States are admitted to trade with the ports of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and Prince of Wales Island, and to import and export all articles to or from those territories which were not prohibited; and on the vessels and their cargoes no other or higher duties were to be charged than were payable in like case by the most favored European nations. American vessels were required to take their cargoes to the United States; and were prohibited from carrying on the coasting trade in the East Indies; but might proceed with their original cargo or part of it to another British settlement in India. United States vessels engaged in the East India trade, or in trade with China, might, in the course of the voyage to or from the English territories in India, touch for refreshment at the Cape of Good Hope, St. Helena, etc., but not for the purposes of commerce. An amendment was subsequently made as to St. Helena, as it was the place of confinement of Napoleon.

The committee found, by a comparison of successive periods of time, that since the conclusion of the arrangement proclaimed by the President under the Act of May, 1830, there had occurred an extraordinary augmentation of the relative amount of British tonnage entered and cleared in the ports of the United States. The statement presented embraced the several years from 1828 to 1838, inclusive, in all the ports of the United States, and it was seen that in the ten years from 1829 to 1838, the British tonnage in American ports had increased from 86,377 tons to 484,702 tons; while the American tonnage had only increased from 872,949 tons to 1,302,974. Thus, the British tonnage increased nearly in the ratio of from 8 to 48, the American in the ratio only of about 8 to 13. In other words, the American tonnage had increased but 50 per cent., while the British tonnage had increased more than 500 per cent. Official tables had been prepared showing the trade between the British North American Colonies and the Districts of Passamaquoddy, Portland, Boston and New York, during the years 1828 and 1837. It appears that the aggregate value of imports for the year 1828, in American vessels, was $190,207; in foreign vessels, nil; but the aggregate value of imports for the year 1837 gave $311,754 in American vessels, and $318,288 in foreign vessels—total, $630,042. The aggregate value of exports from the same districts for the year 1828 was, of foreign produce $67,927 in American vessels; in foreign vessels, nil; of domestic produce in American vessels, $621,319; in foreign vessels, nil; total of foreign and domestic produce, $689,146. The aggregate value of foreign produce exported in 1837 in American vessels was $18,606, and in foreign vessels $54,769; total, $73,373. The value of exports of domestic produce in American vessels, was $195,557; and in for-sign vessels $359,316 ; total, $549,873 ; total of foreign and domestic produce, $623,249. Of the vessels engaged in this commerce, it appears that in the year 1828, the aggregate tonnage of American vessels, which entered at the ports of these districts, was 31,439 tons ; and 39,125 tons cleared. Of British tonnage, only 5,878 cleared in that period. The tables, in stating the aggregate tonnage for the year 1837, give also the number of American vessels which entered, as 382, tonnage, 55,048 tons ; 293 American vessels cleared, whose tonnage was 50,696. The aggregate number of British vessels which entered in that year, was 1,804, with a tonnage of 123,675 tons ; and 1,873 British vessels cleared, with a tonnage of 144,769 tons. The figures in these tables were confirmed by Parliamentary documents ; and discussion in England concerning the arrangements between Great Britain and the other countries of Christendom, led to the conclusion that while under those arrangements, the commerce of Great Britain with all Europe had declined, its commerce with the United States had increased, and that in her relations with the United States alone, had her commercial treaties proved beneficial to Great Britain. From 1802 to 1836, the trade of Great Britain with all Europe had declined from 65 to 48 per cent., while the trade of Great Britain, during the same period, with her Colonies in America, had increased from 18 to 26 per cent., and with the United States from 18 to 27 per cent., showing a remarkable identity in the increase of the trade of Great Britain with her American Colonies, and with the United States respectively. And Mr. Cushing thought that these tables indicated that there was some inequality in the commercial arrangements, or that from some other cause, those arrangements fostered and promoted the navigation of Great Britain, without being in any way beneficial to that of the United States. Indeed, in the memorial referred to the committee, specific allegations were made of such inequality. It was alleged that, while the Act of Congress of May, 1830, and the proclamation of the President thereon, opened to the vessels of Great Britain all the ports of the United States, without exception, yet only selected ports in the British Colonies were open to the commerce of the United States. This allegation was substantiated by the Act of Parliament applicable to the subject. That Act provided that no goods should be imported into, nor any goods, except the produce of the fisheries, in British ships, be exported from, any of the British possessions in America, by sea, from or to any place other than the United Kingdom, or some other of such possessions, except into or from a certain small number of ports enumerated in the Act called "free ports," and such other ports not enumerated, as might be added to the list by Orders in Council. Another allegation was, that by reason of the particular locality of some of the selected free ports, peculiar advantages were secured to British vessels which were not enjoyed by vessels of the United States. Thus, as regards the extensive trade in gypsum, grindstones, and wool, which constituted the larger part of the trade between the United States and the Bay of Fundy, those articles were not shipped directly at any of the free ports, to which alone the vessels of the United States were admitted. Those articles were obtained from the banks of rivers and inlets, into which British vessels could penetrate, but American vessels could not, and therefore British vessels had the monopoly. Another allegation was, that although the Act of Congress made the condition that American vessels and their cargoes in British Colonial ports, should not be subject to other or higher rates of tonnage, or imposts, or charges of any other description, than were imposed upon British vessels and their cargoes, discriminating duties were levied on American vessels in some of the Colonies. For instance, coal was largely exported to the United States from Nova Scotia, but when coal was exported in American vessels, an export duty of four shillings sterling per ton was exacted, while the same coal was exported free in British vessels. It was alleged that articles produced in the United States, by being naturalized in the British North American provinces, were conveyed thence in British bottoms, and entered in the United Kingdom or in the West Indies, so as not to be subject there to the foreign import duty; and that as American vessels were not allowed to perform that voyage, our carrying trade was gradually transferred to the British. The transaction was thus shown: Articles produced in the United States were shipped in British vessels to the British provinces to points where American vessels could obtain no cargoes. These British vessels touched at a free port, and without unloading their cargoes, obtained a certificate that they had been landed and naturalized; they then proceeded to a British port in Europe or the West Indies, so as to avoid the foreign import duty there. The trade was profitable; but American vessels could not participate in it. Other articles, such as flour, were introduced into the British provinces in large quantities, and our vessels could not transport our own products. Great Britain was charged with having imposed heavy or prohibitory duties for the express purpose of securing those advantages, when our own products were imported into the West Indies directly from the United States; but when they were imported circuitously through the North American Provinces, the duty was comparatively low. English vessels were said to have come directly to our ports with British Colonial productions, to sell them there, purchase a return cargo, proceed to the British West Indies, and there sell it, and take in a return cargo of molasses, sugar or coffee, and proceed home to the North American Colonies, or to Europe. It was alleged that most important interests in the United States were injuriously affected by the fact that sundry articles, such as gunpowder, arms, ammunition or utensils of war, tea, fish, dried or salted, oil, blubber, furs or skins, the produce of creatures living in the sea, wood, potatoes, &c., &c., were forbidden to be imported into the British Colonies from the United States, though similar articles were received by the United States from the Colonies, by which means they competed with Americans in American markets, while Americans could not compete with the British Colonies in British markets. These were some of the inequalities in the arrangements for the commerce between the United States and the British American Colonies, by which the enormous comparative increase of British tonnage in the ports of the United States since the passage of the Act of Congress of 1830 was produced. In addition, the cost of ship-building in the colonies was less than in the United States, which enabled British vessels to compete with American vessels in American ports, to the disadvantage of the United States, as American vessels were absolutely precluded from competing with British vessels on equal terms. It was further observed that the arrangements complained of afforded peculiar advantages to Great Britain in regard to a description of navigation and of business which did not exist at the time when those arrangements were made, and the existence of which was not anticipated, namely, the transportation of mails, passengers and merchandise by ocean steamers. The line of mail steamers running between Great Britain and the United States consisted of British vessels; and as they came by Halifax, Nova Scotia, they enjoyed the advantage of the circuitous voyage from which American steamers were excluded. The British mail steamers to the West Indies, after landing their mails and passengers in the West Indies, proceeded to the Southern ports of the United States, by the circuitous voyage, from which American mail steamers were excluded, because they could not touch at any port in the West Indies and carry freight from there to Europe. A branch of business, therefore, of great importance in a commercial point of view, and of the greatest possible importance in military and other government relations was wholly engrossed and monopolized by Great Britain. And more, through the enjoyment of the circuitous voyage by the British, steps had been taken not only to secure to British vessels exclusively the steamboat navigation between Great Britain and the United States, but to sweep along the entire coast of the United States, touching at all the principal seaports, collecting the correspondence, foreign and domestic, as well as passengers, to be transported from port to port in the United States. The committee, with all the facts before them, could not help arriving at the conclusion that the arrangements in relation to the commercial intercourse between the United States and the British Colonies of North America, were prejudicial to the United States, by reason of their inequality, and their want of that just reciprocity, and that mutual participation of advantages which every independent State is entitled to demand in its intercourse with all other independent States. And the committee reported the following propositions as the result at which they had arrived :

1. That it is the policy and the desire of the United States to observe in the regulation of the commercial intercourse between the United States and other countries, principles of equity, reciprocity, fair competition, and mutual advantages to both parties.

2. That the existing arrangements regulating the commerce between the United States and the British colonies in the West Indies and on the continent of America, are unequal, unjust, and injurious to the interests of the United States.

3. That so long as Great Britain persists in applying to the vessels and productions of the United States in the ports of the British Colonies in America, peculiar regulations of commerce, other than such as regulate the commerce between the United States and the British territories in Europe, it is the right of the United States, and the necessary consequence, to apply peculiar regulations of commerce to British vessels and their cargoes in the ports of the United States, entered from or proceeding to the British Colonies in America.

4. That the continued imposition by Great Britain of discriminating duties upon the productions of the United States, imported into the British Colonies in America, in vessels of the United States, will justify the imposition by the United States of discriminating duties upon the productions of the British Colonies in America imported into the United States in vessels of Great Britain or her Colonies.

5. That the continued prohibition to the vessels of the United States by Great Britain of the indirect voyage between the United States, the British Colonies in America, and the British territories in Europe, or between the United States and one and another British Colony in America, will justify the prohibition by the United States of such voyage to the vessels of Great Britain or her colonies in America.

6. That if Great Britain see fit to adopt and pursue a system of prohibitions and restrictions against the United States, it behooves the United States to protect her citizens, their commerce and navigation, by counter prohibitions, duties and regulations, and to decline to give free commerce and navigation in exchange for restrictions and vexations.

7. But before having recourse to measures of legislative restriction, as the certain means of effectually guarding and securing the rights of the United States in our commerce with British Colonies, it is due to national comity to recur, for that purpose, to friendly negotiation with Great Britain.

These propositions, the result of a long and laborious examination by the committee, show the practical character of the enquiry, and a determination to lay bare the abuses which prevailed. Can it be that men who believe in monopoly are unable to interpret fairly the principles of reciprocity, even when under obligation to do so? Great Britain, however, derived advantage from the practice, and of that we complained. We desired simply to secure a mutual benefit, an equal participation in whatever was enjoyed by British vessels. To this we were entitled by every principle of right. Justice was denied, if British vessels were allowed to trade with Colonial ports, under regulations or charges which discriminated in their favor. And it is not only claimed that our complaints were just, but they are proved to rest upon a foundation that could not be impeached. It was then necessary to communicate the facts to the British government, and to convince it that we had a good cause. So, treating the propositions as the conclusions reached by investigation, the committee, in conformity therewith, submitted the following resolution, the adoption of which they recommended to the House :

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, requested to enter into negotiations with the British Government, for the purpose of effecting a permanent, equitable, and just conventional arrangement of the commerce between the United States and the British Colonies in America.

POLITICAL DEFAMATION.

The spirit of defamation seems inherent in human nature. It has continued since the day that the man blamed the woman, and the woman blamed the serpent. Those who imagine either that slander and vilification are peculiar to our times, or that those who receive abuse in the current censorship, are of baser material than their predecessors, can know but little of the fashions of this world, and still less of the treatment of the prominent men of our country, from the foundation of our Government.

It is, indeed, always an ungracious task to exhibit human infirmities, whether old or new—whether of the blamed or of the blaming. The theme is not flattering, the retrospect not brilliant, as we draw aside the curtain of our political annals to point a moral, which, in the popular excitement and confusion, is too likely to be overlooked. On assuming such a task, our chief inducement is the lesson of profit to be drawn from a comparison of the past with the present, concerning the measure and kind of license indulged through successive periods of our history—the license of assault upon private and public character, which runs through all the phases of our political experience. •

The memory of the great deeds of the Fathers of the Republic must cast around them a spell of veneration, ever increasing with the lapse of time, while the breath of calumny that once beclouded and annoyed them, shall grow fainter and feebler, until its last vestige is dissipated in the full effulgence of their honors.

WASHINGTON.

Going back, then, to the days of our first President, we might trace the course of his public and patriotic services through nearly a quarter of a century, in which the birth of the Republic transpired, and we should find him the most conspicuous figure in that eventful time. A man who alone gained the title of “father of his country,” and has been eulogized as “first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen!” yet, no man, living or dead, was ever more cruelly maligned, or more outrageously de-famed than George Washington. The most vituperative attacks were made upon him—and these attacks grew more violent and persistent towards the close of his public service. From a perusal of his life and times it is easy to conceive that the high-handed and unscrupulous abuse of a hostile press, inspired, as it appeared to be, by a party of dissembling friends, was among the prime causes of his final withdrawal from public life. To confirm this belief, we adduce but a fragment or two from the mass of scurrility that was heaped upon him. He was denounced as “a traitor” for his proclamation of April, 1793, declaring amity with the belligerent powers of Europe, and warning citizens of the United States against all movements inconsistent with neutrality. For this plain act of duty, under his oath, he was held up to public scorn—he was accused of hostility to France, and of secret favor to England—and as one of the results of this denunciation, at the opening of the Third Congress in the ensuing December, the Administration candidate for Speaker was defeated by an emphatic majority. The Aurora of that day said: “If ever a Nation was debauched by a man, the American Nation has been debauched by Washington. If ever a Nation was deceived by a man, the American Nation has been deceived by Washington. Let his conduct, then, be an example to future ages. Let it serve as a warning that no man may become an idol. Let the history of the Federal Government instruct mankind, that the mask of patriotism may be worn to conceal the foulest designs against the liberties of the people.” In a letter to Henry Lee, under date of July 2nd, 1793, Washington spoke of the violence with which his policy had been assailed. “But in what,” says he, “will this abuse terminate? For the result, as it respects myself, I care not—for I have a consolation within that no earthly efforts can deprive me of—and that is, that neither ambition nor interested motives have influenced my conduct—and the arrows of malevolence, therefore, however barbed and well-pointed, never can reach the most vulnerable part of me.”

though, while I am up as a mark, they will be continually aimed. The publications in Freeman's and Buck's papers are outrages on common decency."

When, on one occasion, as Jefferson tells us, Knox made some allusion to recent libels uttered by the press, Washington became very much excited—"got into one of those passions when he cannot command himself—dwelt much on the personal abuse which had been bestowed upon him; defied any man on earth to produce one single act of his, since he had been in the Government, which had not been done with the purest motives. He had never repented but once the having slipped the moment of resigning his office—and that was every moment since—and, by God, he had rather be in his grave than in his present situation. He had rather be on his farm than to be made Emperor of the world—and yet they were charging him with wanting to be a King. That rascal Freeman sent him three of his papers every day, as if he would become the distributor of them—an act in which he could see nothing but an impudent design to insult him."

On the second day after Washington's retirement from the Presidential chair, the following appeared in the The Aurora: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation," was the pious ejaculation of a man who beheld a flood of happiness rushing in upon mankind. If ever there was a time which would license the reiteration of this exclamation, that time is now arrived; for the man who is the source of all the misfortunes of our country is this day reduced to the level with his fellow-citizens, and is no longer possessed of power to multiply evils upon the United States. If ever there was a period for rejoicing, this is the moment. Every heart in unison with the freedom and happiness of the people ought to beat high with exultation, that the name of Washington, from this day, ceases to give a currency to political iniquity and to legalized corruption. A new era is now opening upon us—an era which promises much to the people, for public measures must now stand upon their own merits, and nefarious projects can no longer be supported by a name. When a retrospect is taken of the Washingtonian administration for eight years, it is a subject of the greatest astonishment that a single individual should have conquered the principles of Republicanism in an enlightened people just emerged from the gulf of despotism, and should have carried his designs against the public liberty so far as to have put in jeopardy its very existence. Such, however, are the facts, and, with these staring us in the face, this day ought to be a jubilee in the United States."—Hildreth's History of the United States. Vol. 2, p. 14.

Such diatribes against the foremost man of the Nation, must have been regarded as insolent and provoking in the extreme—and it creates little surprise to learn that the editor of The Aurora, a few days after the appearance of this article, underwent a sound drubbing from the irate son of a naval contractor.

JOHN ADAMS.

The second President did not escape the most violent aspersions. The measures of his administration were assailed with the utmost fury. He himself was covered with obloquy, not only by his open enemies, but by many also of those who were once his pretended friends. He was accused of bending all his energies to secure a re-election. He was charged with having "a vanity without bounds," "a jealousy capable of discolored every object," "disgusting egotism," and "ungovernable indiscretion." The storm of malediction became so great as to drive him into retirement at the close of a single term. He left the White House a broken man, without even pausing to witness the inauguration of his successor. For many years after, his life was embittered by a treatment which, to his proud and sensitive spirit, was like a tormenting flame. He, too, was denounced as a "traitor," although, perhaps, more than any other, he had sounded the tocsin of Independence, and in the stormy discussions of that trying period, he had won the title of "the colossus of the convention." His private life was never challenged—even the tongue of calumny could not justly assail it.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The third President was a man of a far different stamp. He was highly successful in his political aspirations, and became the acknowledged head of a great party, whose principles and policy prevailed in the government of the country for many years. But he was never free from the shafts of criticism, whether through gross suspicions of his private character, or by the boldest arraignment of his public life. Scarcely a tithe of the calumnies in regard to him, then floating in the air, are now remembered—and yet enough remains to show how violent must have been the bitterness of partisans on the one side and the other, and how fearfully the tempest lighted on the head of the famous author of the Declaration. We do not seek to determine the measure of truth or falsity in accusations which, with their subject, have long since passed away. But it may serve the present age to point out some of the allegations which Jefferson had to encounter, and which must, no doubt, so long as justice remains, be held as ground of reproach to the times in which he lived. His personal vices were held up as notorious. His ambition, his duplicity, his chicanery, are among the mildest charges brought against him. During Washington's second term, Jefferson is said to have been intriguing with an opposition paper—The Aurora—and stimulating its editor, one Callendor, to do all in his power to belittle and disparage "the father of his country." Under Adams' administration, Callendor was convicted, fined and imprisoned under the alien and sedition law. At the time of Jefferson's accession, Callendor's term of imprisonment had expired, and, by the aid of friends, he had also paid the fine imposed. Jefferson remitted this fine by a doubtful exercise of authority, but Callendor wanted something more, and imperiously demanded to be made Postmaster at Richmond. Jefferson sent him fifty dollars and a civil refusal. Callendor was highly indignant, and, becoming the editor of the Richmond Recorder, through the columns of that sheet commenced the exposure of his relations with Jefferson in the management of The Aurora. He also showed that Jefferson was complicated with him in the production of the pamphlet for which he had been tried and punished—and circulated other tales of the most damaging character. No one can say what might have been the result of these terrible assaults had their author been permitted to press them forward. His death, by accidental drowning, gave Jefferson a respite, but it was only a respite, and brief at that. The stories were revived, with many aggravations. During the canvass for President, an opposition paper had the following statement: "All who wish to see the horrors of the French Revolution in America, the guillotine set up in our streets, and a Robespierre in the chair of State, will vote for Thomas Jefferson, the infidel, the leveller, the agrarian, the calumniator of Washington, the crack-brained enthusiast." In 1804, Adams charged him "with a want of sincerity," "and an inordinate ambition," and "a mean thirst of popularity." And subsequently, John Randolph, in a speech in Congress, characterized "the second term of Jefferson's administration as resembling the seven lean kine of Egypt, in swallowing up all the fatness of the first."

JAMES MADISON.

The accession of Madison to the Presidency, though a foregone conclusion, from the relations of political parties and aspirants for office, was still attended with not a little exasperation and the opprobrium of censure. The political elements were still in a ferment, ready for explosion. Madison's estimate, by his political adversaries, was that of being a second-place man crowded above his level, for the time being, so that the office had been lowered by the advancement of the man. He was charged with the most outrageous demagogism, for being a peace-man at heart, and a war-man for the sake of popularity at home; for being at first a Federalist and then a Jeffersonian Republican; for being a trimmer on all sides, to secure his re-election. During his administration, the most violent party spirit prevailed. Fierce riots occurred in Baltimore. Men were shot down in the streets, and hot tallow poured into their eyes, to show if they were dead, while the diabolical perpetrators, in all the frenzy of political delirium, ran back and forth, shouting and huzzaing for Jefferson and Madison!

Speeches were made in the Senate against the war-policy of Madison. Proposals were made to mortgage the public domain to secure the payment of the expenses of the war, under the pretext that the people had no confidence in the ability or honesty of the Government. It was said "Madison has begot war, war begets debt, debt begets taxes, taxes beget bankruptcy!" In addition to this, the "Embargo Act" called forth severe maledictions from the sailors, and the tar-barrels inverted over the top-masts to save the rigging of unused vessels, were styled "Madison's night-caps." While the first anniversary of the Act was celebrated by the tolling of bells, flags at half-mast, and processions with muffled drums, it is recorded that an old citizen of these days gave utterance to the wish that "hell could be boiled down to a half-pint, and Madison made to drink it."

JAMES MONROE.

Monroe attained the Presidency in what was known as "the New Era," or "the Era of Good Feeling." The war with England had resulted with credit to ourselves, and all effort was directed to the enhancement of National interests; yet he soon fell under the ban of public criticism. Nothing could shield him from the tongue of censure; although, by the moderation of his counsels, peace abroad and tranquility at home were secured and maintained; large and valuable acquisitions of territory were made; the foundations of National prosperity and greatness were more broadly laid; and the American Union was advancing, with the vigor and stride of a giant, to permanent glory and power. Yet, those who had been his political friends charged him with obliterating party lines for private purposes, and inveighed against the measures he favored, particularly the proposition for an increase of the Army, to which the term "conscription" was opprobriously applied. It is singular to note how men's opinions change with changing circumstances. Jackson wrote Monroe, advising no proscription of political opponents in office. Monroe replied, that he knew the Republican party to be the party of the country, and he chose to rely on his political friends, rather than temporize with his political enemies—a lesson on which Jackson himself subsequently acted to the letter. The treaty which ceded Florida was violently condemned. Hard times, and the Missouri Compromise, produced wide discontent, and Monroe was held responsible. In regard to "the Compromise," it was then predicted that it would breed trouble in the future, and out of it would come a time in which "the father would be arrayed against the son, and brother draw the bloody sword from the bosom of brother!" The Seminole war proved a constant spring of complaint on the part of the opposition. Jackson, in command of the forces employed in that war, had decoyed into his power some Indian chiefs and traders, whom he immediately put to death. This created intense excitement throughout the country—some ascribing to Jackson the most patriotic motives; others denouncing him as guilty of the most diabolical conduct. Meanwhile, Monroe was openly charged with advising certain public and governmental plans, and issuing secret orders to Jackson, in conflict with his political professions, and moral rectitude. John Randolph styled the Missouri Compromise "a dirty bargain," and the Northern Representatives who supported it, "dough-faces," a term which still keeps force and usage in the political parlance of the country. Notice appears in the famous diary of John Quincy Adams, of "a scandal in relation to the appropriation for furnishing the President's house, when the President furnished a memorandum upon the subject. This memorandum," says Mr. Adams, "furnishes details of a very humiliating character, which ought never to have been, or to be required of him. There appears to be nothing censurable in all these transactions. There arises from all this, an exposure of domestic and household concerns, almost as incongruous to the station of a President of the United States, as it would be to a blooming virgin to exhibit herself, naked, before a multitude. The malignity of political opposition has no feeling of delicacy." In this era of good feeling, there were Kitchen Cabinets, and, on one occasion, Adams fears that "the French Legation has access to the President's ear, through another whispering gallery. Such is the way of the world. There are winding stairs in every direction."

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

The election of Mr. Adams was attributed to the treachery of Henry Clay; while others said it was due to the defeat of Crawford, his formidable competitor, on account of his age and feebleness. To say the least, Adams' elevation was a singular contingency, and, by the complications growing out of it, subjected him to the most cruel insinuations, as well as to open charges of flagrant and unblushing coalitions. Probably, no man ever feared and dreaded opposition more than he. While careful in organizing his Cabinet—which was very able—yet, the fact that he made Clay his Secretary of State, furnished ground for one of the principal allegations against him, of which the most was made by his political adversaries. A stormy effort was put forth to withdraw from him the Executive patronage, and every measure was adopted to lower him in the estimation of Congress and the people. "The Memoirs of Adams," lately published by his son Charles Francis, reveal the treatment of this illustrious man, by the opposition press, during his Presidency. In the diary of that period, we find a notice which gives the substance, as follows: "We have," says he, "the City Gazette, under the management of clerks in the Treasury," its editor an Englishman, "having no character of his —metal to receive treatment, now, of like one of the ring the late war, uck over that of rely effacing it." is a prouder his- telligence, which, Sir Charles Gran- pers. Yet we find subjection to both ason of the power f the House, held nd which he used ada, and a sop for a." Calhoun was anxious to have an "independent newspaper." Mr. Adams remarks: "The editor who would establish such a journal, in Washington, must have a heart of oak, nerves of iron, and a soul of adamant, to carry it through. His first attempt would bring a hornet's nest about his head, and if they should not sting him to death or blindness, he would have to pursue his march, with them continually swarming over him, and beset on all sides with slander and obloquy, and probably assassination." In another entry, Adams complains of the National Advocate, of New York, the Boston Statesman, and Portland Argus, and the Democratic press of Philadelphia, as controlled by "principles alike selfish and sordid." The City Gazette is, on another occasion, "infamously scurrilous and abusive, not only of Mr. Calhoun, but of his mother-in-law." Again, it prints "three columns of brevier type of the foulest abuse." There is a picture of an editor named John B. Colvin, "a base and despicable character," who "attempted to fawn himself into my favor, by eulogizing me in the newspapers." This editor Mr. Adams appointed to his department, but was compelled to dismiss him for his intemperance; and the effect of his attacks upon the writer, are shown in this sentence: "No man in America has made his way through showers of ribaldry and invective, of this character, more frequently than I have breasted it." Still later, we have Gales & Seaton, the time-honored editors of the Intelligencer, quietly dismissed, in a sentence, as "trimmers for the printing of Congress." A private Secretary of Mr. Monroe, on another occasion, speaks to Mr. Adams "in terms of great severity of Ritchie, the editor of the Richmond Enquirer, and said he was the most unprincipled fellow upon earth." We find the Boston Galaxy described as "a paper, for years advertised for sale to the highest bidder, of the Presidential candidates."

To cap the whole, there is indubitable proof, that John Quincy Adams, like his father before him, retired from the White House sick at heart, and breasting a storm of obloquy that had driven him out of office, by the most unscrupulous and determined opposition. It must have seemed a humiliation, that the father and son were, up to that time, the only one-term Presidents. But then, on the other hand, they furnish the only instance of a family succession in that high office.

ANDREW JACKSON.

We find, in the accession of Andrew Jackson to office, a striking example of the proverb, that "circumstances alter cases." He who had written Madison, advising against political discrimination in office, now boldly proclaimed the maxim, "to the victors belong the spoils!" and he proceeded to clean out the Departments of all political adversaries, to make room for his own party friends. He changed the entire policy of former administrations, in this respect. Under Washington, there were nine removals, of which one was for defalcation; under John Adams, there were ten removals, one being for defalcation; under Jefferson, there were thirty-nine removals; under Madison, there were but five removals, three for defalcation; under Monroe, there were nine removals, of which six were for cause, other than political affinity; under J. Q. Adams, there were two removals, both of which were for cause. The total removals, by the predecessors of Jackson, were seventy-four. After he became President, during the first recess of the Senate, he turned out of office no less than one hundred and seventy-six persons, most of whom were political adversaries. Of course, this wholesale decapitation, with the extensive Executive patronage which he assumed and exercised, caused widespread excitement, and Mr. Adams was called upon for a report upon the subject of the use of this privilege by former Presidents, which report made the following exhibit:

Appointments by Washington, ten; by John Adams, thirteen; by Jefferson, twenty-five; by Madison, twenty-nine; by Monroe, thirty-five; by J. Q. Adams, five. During Jackson's first three months, he appointed twelve! He was charged with many inconsistencies. In the matter of Haynes' speech on the Foote resolutions, he wrote to Hayne, endorsing his position, that nullification is a power inherent in a State, which she is privileged to exercise, irrespective of the pleasure or will of the General Government; and adding, that "he would have his speech printed on satin, and hung up in his chamber!" Ritchie's Richmond Enquirer belabored Jackson, in regard to his treatment of prisoners, in the following fashion: "Thus has an American officer destroyed the lives of two of his fellow-creatures, without any rightful power, without any adequate motive, and with such indecent precipitancy as hardly to give time for prayers, in the interval between judgment and death. Humanity blushes at the recital, and national pride sinks in the American heart, oppressed with the load of shame and grief. He has abrogated the known laws of nations, and promulgated a new code of his own, conceived in madness or folly, and written in blood. He has, in fine, violated all laws, human and divine, and violated them with impunity!" Jackson was the first President whose personal and official character was violently and openly assailed on the floor of Congress. His conduct was there canvassed, in language more forcible than chaste. A biographer of Jackson says, "if he were asked his opinion of Jackson, from investigation of his career, he should say he had found him 'a patriot and a traitor!' 'one of the greatest generals, yet wholly ignorant of the art of war!' 'a writer, elegant, eloquent and brilliant, yet unable to compose a grammatical sentence, or correctly spell words of four syllables!' 'the first of statesmen, he yet never devised nor framed a measure!' 'he was the most candid of men, yet capable of the profoundest dissimulation; a most law-defying, law-obeying citizen; a stickler for discipline, he never hesitated to disobey his superior; a Democratic autocrat; an urbane savage an atrocious saint, deified and vilified!'"

We can scarcely name any vice or crime, in the catalogue of turpitude, which was not, at one time or another, ascribed to him.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

"Little Van" encountered a storm, on the threshold of his administration. In 1831, a newspaper was established in Boston, by Mr. Lloyd Garrison, for the purpose of advocating immediate emancipation. The legislature of Georgia offered five thousand dollars for the abduction and delivery in that State, of the editor of the said paper. A grand jury, in Alabama, found an indictment against the Emancipator, a paper published in New York; and the Governor of that State made a requisition on Governor Marcy for the delivery of the publisher, to be tried as an offender against the laws of Alabama, regarding slavery. But the Governor of New York declined to comply with this mandate. A vigilance committee, of Louisiana, offered a reward of fifty thousand dollars for the rendition of Lewis Tappan, a noted Abolitionist, of the city of New York. A public meeting, in Petersburg, Virginia, drafted a memorial to Postmaster General Amos Kendall, praying him to interdict the transmission of anti-slavery papers through the mails of the United States. Kendall replied, expressing regret that he could not accede to their request, but expressing the belief that postmasters could decline shipping "incendiary documents." At this time, Van Buren was Vice President; but while shielded, in a measure, from active responsibility in anything beyond the functions of his office, he was still calculated upon as an ally by both of the contending parties. For a time, however, this emeute was smothered, by the breaking out of what was known as "the Patriot War"—an incursion of American patriots into Canada, to produce a reform in the Canadian Government. Van Buren issued a proclamation, warning Americans not to participate in those movements; but he was immediately accused of duplicity and really favoring the success of the revolutionists. He sought a re-election, but was met, on every hand, by opposition. His administration was held up before the people as a reproach. His extravagant expenditures of public money, and the loss sustained by the country through the default of officers appointed by him, were topics of free animadversion. Added to this, was a pamphlet published by William Lyon McKenzie, in which a huge private correspondence was divulged, demonstrating the insincerity of Van Buren, and his fox-like qualities. His dodging issues presented to him by the slave oligarchy, finally incurred their displeasure, while the anti-slavery people feared to trust him. Striving to ride two horses, he fell between them; and although he did not cease struggling for the Presidency, after his retirement, he never attained much importance, even as a candidate. The English tongue was exhausted by the press and the orators of the country, in disparagement of "the used-up man;" and he was victimized by the merciless storm of criticism which fell upon him. He was spoken of, as "the Northern man with Southern principles."

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON.

This gentleman, in his letter of acceptance, promised that, "if elected, he would not seek, or accept, a re-nomination." His promise was fulfilled in a most startling way. In a single month after his inauguration, death put the seal of truth upon his promise—the first President dying in office. Yet the virulence of the attacks upon him, during the canvass which resulted in his election, knew no bounds. From the cry that was raised by the opposition, one might have supposed him to have been a monster, without the instincts belonging to the lowest of the human species. The Globe said of him, in March, 1840: "Let them (the South) beware how they place confidence in the versatility or subserviency of a weak, vain old man, in the dotage of expiring ambition. The combination of weakness and vanity with three-score and ten, is not to be easily controlled. Let Mr. Tyler mount his old, weather-beaten pony, (Harrison,) in the expectation of guiding him at will—a weak old gentleman, whose vanity, always his leading characteristic, is every day pampered with flatteries, and whose obstinacy is only increased by the imbecility of age."

The next day, the same paper said: "Grandma Harrison, a gossiping old lady and an imbecile, who lives on a sinecure clerkship in a city, but is pretended to be a farmer living in a log cabin, and drinking hard cider—the Whigs are making great exertions for the old granny, but all to no effect!" Such was the style of dignity and decorum with which the political contest was then carried on.

JOHN TYLER.

John Tyler then came to the front, the first "accidental President" of the Republic. He, "of course, was immediately assailed. The National Advertiser" of New York, said:

“It is Mr. Tyler’s ambition to rise upon the ruins of prostrate selfishness;” and charged him with “increasing the public debt ten and a half millions of dollars.” Charges of inconsistency were likewise heaped upon him. He was accused of supporting Crawford, and praising Clay for befriending Adams—of then becoming a follower of Jackson, and of turning against Jackson in his contest with the nullifiers. After this he was charged with professing to favor the nomination of Clay by the Whigs, while working to secure his own nomination for the second place on the ticket with Harrison, declaring himself to be an uncompromising Whig, when he acceded to power by the death of Harrison. The suspicions of those who had elevated him to office were soon aroused, and Mr. Tyler was deeply censured for abandoning the policy of the dominant party in his veto of a bill which had received the support of all the Whigs in Congress. It was a measure for the repeal of the sub-Treasury legislation, and its failure through this veto stirred up a political acrimony which was loud and long. Nor can it be disguised that Tyler did betray the party, who had so generously adopted and honored him. He gave them ground to say that he had violated his most sacred pledges and had betrayed the principles enunciated by those who had invested him with power, in order to ingratiate himself in the eyes of those who were found in deadly hostility to the doctrines of the Whig party. His conduct was no doubt perfidious, when, after failing in his attempt to secure a re-nomination from the Democrats, he favored the election of Polk over Henry Clay, and thus became justly obnoxious to the complaints of those whom he had so remorselessly betrayed.

JAMES K. POLK.

This gentleman acceded to the Presidency in “breezy times.” The atmosphere was heavily freighted with charges of corruption respecting him. The convention in which he received his nomination was opened with prayer and praise. The scripture that was read on the occasion, was the 101st Psalm. “He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within My house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in My sight.” Mr. Polk was charged with complicity with one of the proteges of Van Buren. Mr. B. F. Butler, of New York, in Custom-House frauds and defalcations, and of association with him in other questionable transactions. Having pledged himself, at Baltimore, to stand for the whole of Oregon and subsequently offered England to deduct five and a half degrees of latitude. He was assailed for losing eight millions of the nation’s surplus fund to electioneering Bank Directors, and again, for his alleged sympathy with England, and it was explained that the fast time made by vessels over the Atlantic during his administration was due to the fact that the shores of the two countries were approaching each other! The Mexican war relieved Polk from animadversion for a time, but at its close, the pent-up waters of contumely broke forth afresh, and Polk retired at the end of four years with the unanimous consent of his party and the opposition, and with anything but complimentary allusions from all quarters.

ZACHARY TAYLOR.

This old hero lived but sixteen months after his inauguration, but while a candidate for the Presidency and during his official life, he was far from being wholly exempt from the current fate of men who aspired to the Chief Magistracy of the Republic. He was charged with acquiring his military reputation through the energy and sagacity of his subordinates, with ignorance of social and civic life, with a perverse and irascible disposition. But all harsh criticism was buried with him in his grave, the whole nation mourning his demise.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

This “second accidental President” was not long in drawing down upon his head the severest denunciations. His term was full of storm. The great measure which carried in it the bitter and bloody future was the compromise of 1850, which received his sanction. Both the great parties sought by this measure to steer the vessel of state safely, between the Scylla and Charybdis of political strife, and both proclaimed the compromise and finality of the question. The finality proved only the beginning of a train of events, for which Fillmore was held in a large degree responsible, and he retired from office with a load of censure for his failure to stand firm in a crisis of the country which involved so much! He was the last Whig President. The days of compromise were ended.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

President Pierce was accounted "the most accomplished gentleman" who ever occupied the Presidential chair. By this is meant, not profound learning, education or statesmanship, but a pleasing temperament, urbane manners and an easy, genial, social disposition; and though he was elected by an overwhelming vote, yet his term was a time of turbulence. Many important events transpired. The Kansas-Nebraska bill was adopted—senator Sumner was brutally assaulted in the Senate hall by a member of the House, and a reign of "terrorism" prevailed both in and out of Congress. The President was the center and "but" (a word he was reported to have taught his father to spell) of ridicule and censure. The newspapers were loaded with excoriation, and daily menace, which was not well calculated to inspire regard for him in others, or satisfaction in his own breast. He left the Presidential chair with the regrets of neither party. He was held responsible for the financial distress and the suffering condition of the general interests of the country. His own friends refused him a re-nomination, and he was turned aside for another man.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

This man must be set down as the most abject tool that ever sat in the Presidential chair, whatever charity there may be for human weakness, none is broad enough to cover the weakness he exhibited, with his eyes open, upon the plunging ship of State, he sat down, weeping vain tears, wringing his hands, and saying, "I have been the last President of the United States!" He retired from his office amid the maledictions of the people.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

No man was ever more deeply maligned by press and politicians than Mr. Lincoln. He was stigmatized as "ignorant," "a laborer" "a vulgar rail splitter." He was held up to public contempt, and to the universal scorn of mankind—and was finally assassinated by a representative of the intolerant malignants who had hounded him from the hour of his first nomination. His devotion to his country cost him his life. He was the last soldier to fall in the war of the rebellion, and found his grave in the patriot hearts of a loyal people! His monument is in the affections of every lover of freedom and of his free institution.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

This man, so recently deceased, was the last, and the worst of "the accidental Presidents." When inaugurated, as Vice President, he was in a maudlin state of intoxication, the fitting prelude of a disgraceful end. Language was impoverished by writers and speakers in setting forth the infamy of his conduct, while, doubtless, much of the abuse meted out to his predecessors was undeserved and unwarranted. Andrew Johnson was the only man in the succession ever arraigned for impeachment, and he retired from office with scarcely one apologist!

U. S. GRANT.

This brings us to the present incumbent. But it is not our purpose to recount the measure and quality of the criticism bestowed on him. These things are of yesterday, and quite familiar to the general public. But when his name passes into history, the people whom he assisted Lincoln in redeeming, and the citizens of the Republic which he fought so valiantly to perpetuate, will revive his memory, while those who misrepresent and defame him will perish from the remembrance of men. Henceforth, the American trio will be Washington, Lincoln and Grant. Some "Of the few, the immortal names

That were not born to die."

CONCLUSION.

The main object of these historical reminiscences, as intimated in the outset, is to show how regularly, from the very beginning, the employment of censure running through every stage and phase of representation, has marked the course of political partisanship. It seems incidental to the nature of free Government, where the offices are elective, and the functionaries are dependent upon the people for authority. Accordingly there is no country where the science of free speech is being so profoundly studied as in our own. At first it would seem that such license of the tongue, of the pen, and of the press, would utterly ruin public men and even the Nation itself. But a different result seems to be shown by experience. The intelligence of the people has come to understand that wanton calumny and personal vituperation are not the weapons which destroy real merit, and that those who indulge in such methods of warfare are themselves reckoned beyond the pale of the ordinary decencies of civil life. The New York Tribune, a journal that first and last has been as full of abuse of public men, whether just or unjust, as any newspaper ever published in this country, sums up the result of its experience in this line in the following words:

"There never was a time, in our opinion, when responsible newspapers watched their utterances with so much care, or when the people themselves, so far from seizing and accepting every scandal within their reach, were so slow to be convinced. There are always, of course, readers and newspapers who revel in horrors, but they soon find their level in society. The great, decent public comes to see before long that only those purvey filth who like to handle it, and such journals decrease in influence as they increase in circulation. So far from a newspaper attack being necessarily fatal to the prospects of a public man, there is nothing that so nearly approaches a blank cartridge, if its only foundation is in malice. When the great man himself furnishes the ammunition, that is quite a different thing. He cannot complain if his own words and acts are used to riddle him. His enemies may be awakened to fresh activity by baseless attacks, but such assaults simply strengthen him with his friends and the unbiased public. Indeed, the American people cling to their ideals with a rare tenacity, and with a devotion that nothing short of damning proof can overturn."

We are of opinion that this statement is more fully borne out by the facts at this time, than at any former period of the country's history. It is well understood that newspaper abuse has been brought down to a trade, an occupation—a venal and unscrupulous occupation—"all hire and salary"—as well as for malice or revenge. It is the sewerage and safety-valve of the corrupt and unprincipled, and the daily concoctions of calumny and abuse are no longer accepted by the intelligent, virtuous and honest portions of the community. Men turn away from them with a sense of nausea, as from the feter of a slaughter-house; and we do not hesitate to express the belief that the day will come when both the censor and the censured will be placed upon a just ground, and an impartial public will discriminate between them; and it will one day become as infamous to assail a man's character unjustly, as it now is to be guilty of conduct which deserves reprobation.

IN compliance with a law passed by the National Assembly, the territorial army of France will immediately be reorganized. It is to consist of 1,200,000, all born between December, 1835, and December, 1846, and will comprise troops of all arms. At first, however, the Government will devote its attention to the formation of 156 infantry regiments. The military establishment of the French Republic exceeds $100,000,000 per annum. The expenditure of England, for home and colonial service, is $72,500,000; of the Anglo-Indian Empire, $80,000,000, and of Germany, $80,012,500. There are 1,200,000 soldiers for France, with a population of 36,000,000, which makes one soldier to every thirty inhabitants; 1,337,698 soldiers for 44,000,000 in Germany, or one soldier to every forty inhabitants; 242,600 soldiers (regulars and militia) for a population of 32,000,000, in Great Britain or Ireland, or one soldier for every 132 of the population; and 187,700 soldiers, British and native, in British India, for 300,000,000 inhabitants, being one soldier to every 1,641 inhabitants. In contrast with these numbers and costs, the United States army consists of 30,000 men, and the estimated expenses for such an establishment is $38,000,000, for a present population estimated at 42,000,000 souls. Thus, compared with the great European powers, the regular army of the United States is comparatively the costliest of all, besides the expense of militia and volunteers. But the army of the United States is better paid, fed, clothed and quartered than any army in the world, and when comparisons are made, these facts should be taken into consideration. The difference of cost is all in favor of the soldiers.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATIC REACTION—STATE RIGHTS ASSUMPTION.

No one who was loyal to the Union during the past fifteen years, will deny, for one moment, the propositions now to be stated. Many such persons may doubt the wisdom of the acts, or some of them, heretofore performed, to maintain the powers established by the Constitution, but any serious attack on the rights, personal and political, secured by the war and Reconstruction amendments, will rally all of those who are embraced by the opening reference, to their defence.

Every citizen must feel the need of maintaining the colored man, enfranchised by the clearly-expressed will of the Nation, in the possession of those franchises, and in the unmolested exercise thereof. In spite of coldness and indifference, as well as of a national reaction, the past is too fresh in its lessons to be forgotten and thrown aside.

Several things are supposed to have been settled by the civil war. Among these, may be placed:

1st. That the allegiance of every State and every citizen is due principally to the Union—the National Government and its authority.

2d. That every State is entitled to a Republican form of government, which it has been settled includes equal rights, privileges and duties to all citizens, without regard “to race, color, or previous condition of servitude.”

3d. That such equality means the franchise, access to the jury box, freedom in, and protection by, the courts, and the maintenance of an equal system of free public schools.

Since 1871, when Reconstruction had guaranteed, by new State Constitutions, all of these things in the Southern States, and amendments for the same end to the Federal Constitution had been imbedded therein, the States (formerly slaveholding and Democratic) of Virginia, Tennessee, Arkansas, Texas, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, West Virginia and Missouri, have passed from Republican to Democratic control. By sounding resolutions, often reiterated, that party has declared its adhesion to the results of the war, including equal citizenship to the man of color, formerly held as a slave. Somehow, a good many people have come to believe in these promises. It is so much easier to believe what one wishes, and which is agreeable also, than it is to search and find the reverse to be true.

NATIONAL OR STATE ALLEGIANCE.

The question, then, as to accepting a settlement of the question of allegiance—is, as to whether the Union is a nation or a compact. Several Southern States have been able, under the progress of Democratic reconstruction, to effect important changes, or entirely revise their Constitutions. The value of declarations is seen in subsequent facts. “The proof of the pudding is in the eating.”

ARKANSAS.

The Constitution, framed under the Reconstruction Laws, and adopted February 11, 1868, declared in its first section that * *

“the paramount allegiance of every citizen is due to the Federal Government, in the exercise of all its Constitutional power, as the same may have been or may be defined by the Supreme Court of the United States; and no power exists in the people of this or any other State of the Federal Union to dissolve their connection therewith, or perform any act tending to impair, subvert or resist the supreme authority of the United States. The Constitution of the United States confers full powers on the Federal Government to maintain and perpetuate its existence, and whensoever any portion of the States, or the people thereof, attempt to recede from the Federal Union, or forcibly resist the execution of its laws, the Federal Government may, by warrant of the Constitution, employ armed force in compelling obedience to its authority.”

This is Republican doctrine. To maintain it to a successful issue, the General Government summoned over two millions of men to arms, and waged war for four years. And this the Nation is ready to do again, if the dire necessity ever arises. The Southern Democracy—that term and “rebels” is convertible, a rebel is a Democrat, even if it be true that not all Democrats were rebels, and only some of them now are—maintain a different view.

In 1874, the State of Arkansas passed into the hands of the Democratic party. It is not necessary, at this writing, to enquire how. The fact is enough. Its first work was to convene a Constitutional Convention. A new Constitution was framed by it, and ratified, it is claimed, at the general election in November, 1874.

That instrument contains no allusion, however remote, to the relations of the State to the Federal Union. Every word of the Constitution of 1868, which is quoted heretofore, is now expunged.

The Arkansas Democrats declare, by this action, that the doctrine of allegiance is still a disputed question.

WEST VIRGINIA.

This State was admitted, as such, to the Union, June, 1863. The Constitution framed in 1861, after the civil war began, contained the following as its first section:

The State of West Virginia shall be and remain one of the United States of America. The Constitution of the United States, and the laws and treaties made in pursuance thereof, shall be the supreme law of the land.

In 1871, the Democracy re-obtained control, and among their first acts was the convening of a Constitutional Convention. That body framed a new Constitution. It became operative in 1872. Its first section is the same as the one just quoted. But those that follow are to be carefully scanned.

§2. The Government of the United States is a government of enumerated powers, and all powers not delegated to it, nor inhibited to the States, are reserved to the States, or to the people thereof. Among the powers so reserved by the States is the exclusive regulation of their own internal government and policy; and it is the right and solemn duty of the several departments of Government created by this Constitution, to guard and protect the people of this State from all encroachments upon the rights so reserved.

§3. The provisions of the Constitutions of the United States and of this State are alike operative in a period of war as in time of peace, and any departure therefrom, or violation thereof, under the peace of necessity or any other peace, is subversive of good government and tends to anarchy and despotism.

The third section of the "Bill of Rights," Article III., lets in further light on these declarations, as history has proven their meaning to be understood in the light of State Rights Democracy.

§3. Government is instituted for the common benefit, protection and security of the people, nation or community. Of all its various forms that is the best which is capable of producing the greatest degree of happiness and safety, and is most effectually secured against the danger of mal-administration; and when any government shall be found inadequate or contrary to these purposes, a majority of the community has an indubitable, inalienable and indefeasible right to reform, alter or abolish it in such a manner as shall be judged most conducive to the public weal.

It must be borne in mind, that the Convention by which the foregoing declarations were framed, was largely composed of and influenced by the able men, who, under the strained interpretation of similar declarations, which by sixty years of State sovereignty discussion filtered through every means of forming political intelligence, had, in 1861, precipitated the State of Virginia into armed rebellion, and thereafter to the end associated themselves and their fortunes to those of the slaveholders' Confederacy. The loyal men of West Virginia, reading the interior meanings of such assumptions by the red light of civil war, contented themselves with a simple and stately declaration of the perpetual unity of the new State with the Union, and of the supremacy of the National Constitution and laws in their States, as well as in all others. The Democratic quibblers of 1871, resuming power after a losing struggle, incorporated provisions, such as those under which their theories had theretofore always befogged the Southern people, and undermined the duty they owed to "the Government of the people, by the people, for the people"—that of the Federal Union.

TENNESSEE.

In 1863, the loyal citizens of this State, so amended their Constitution, as to repeal the ordinances and provisions relative to secession, slavery, etc. In the amendments adopted were provisions which required the taking of an oath by all electors and officeholders, declaring nullification and secession unlawful, and also affirming that supreme allegiance was due only to the United States.

In 1870, a new convention assembled, and the Constitution was again revised; the State being under Democratic control. All reference to national allegiance and authority was expunged, and the following seems to have been substituted, as a renewed justification of "war between the States," wherever it might be deemed advisable.

§2. That Government being instituted for the common benefit, the doctrine of non-resistance against arbitrary power and oppression is absurd, slavish, and destructive of the good and happiness of mankind.

This is another illustration of the result obtained by Democratic acceptance of "the situation." But more recently, a convention in Missouri, called under Democratic auspices, has submitted a new Constitution to the people of that State. It is in many respects an exceptionally good instrument. Hence it would be unjust to suppose that neglect or indifference has had to do with the important changes about to be indicated.

The Union men of Missouri framed a Constitution in 1865. It was ratified the same year. In 1870, important amendments were made. In 1875, the Democrats convened, as has been stated, a new body. The instrument it framed is still pending, under Republican rule, in 1865, there was no uncertain sound. Sections 6 and 7 of the Declaration of Rights, embodied in the Constitution, states:

"That this State shall ever remain a member of the American Union; that the people thereof are part of the American Nation; and that all attempts, from whatever source, or upon whatever pretext, to dissolve said Union, or to sever said Nation, ought to be resisted with the whole power of the State.

"That every citizen of this State owes paramount allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States, and that no law or ordinance of this State, in contravention or subversion thereof, can have any binding force."

The Democratic majority now in power, offer the following juggle of words, for the above plain language:

"That Missouri is a free and independent State, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, and as the preservation of the States and the maintenance of their governments are necessary to an indestructible union, and were intended to co-exist with it, the legislature is not authorized to adopt, nor will the people of this State ever assent to any amendment or change of the Constitution of the United States which may in any wise impair the right of local self-government belonging to the people of this State.

"That constitutional government is intended to promote the general welfare of the people; that all persons have a natural right to life, liberty, and the enjoyment of the gains of their own industry; that to give the security to these things, is the principal office of government, and that when government does not confer this security, it fails of its chief design."

The new Constitution omits all reference to slavery, or equal rights. This, again, is Democratic acceptance of "the results of the war."

Georgia and Virginia, which passed under Democratic control, in 1869 and 1872, have not yet changed the Constitutions adopted under the reconstruction laws. So there still remain in them provisions requiring primary allegiance to the Federal authority. The Democrats therein have found out other ways of whipping the (to them) devil of National Authority around the States Rights stump. But a majority have ranged themselves, positively, against any recognition of the primary and positive allegiance due to the Union.

PENDING CHANGES IN ALABAMA, TEXAS AND NORTH CAROLINA.

At the date of this writing, the States above-named are in the throes of the reaction herein outlined.

The Alabama Convention has offered the first gleam of light, by declaring that, in its opinion, the question of secession is a dead issue. North Carolina and Texas have formed their new constitutions, and the same animus is everywhere apparent. In North Carolina, the franchise. In Alabama, the schools are injured, and the permanent fund decreased. In Texas, the Convention is claimed and exercised general legislative powers, with the view of controlling the next Senatorship, and more firmly fastening the present rule on that State. The whole tendency is backward. The spirit of Democracy is everywhere destructive.

LABOR IN EUROPE AND AMERICA. *

The work before us, in eight hundred and sixty pages, is, in itself, a forcible illustration of the power of mental and physical effort. It is a compact history of the development of labor from the earliest period of the world to the present time; a statistical exhibition of the condition of contemporaneous labor and cost of subsistence in Europe; and a full and remarkably complete tabulated statement of labor, wages, and cost of living in America. It is, unquestionably, the most exhaustive historical and statistical work on the world's industries, ever presented to the public, and one which will not be duplicated or exceeded in value, by another attempt of the kind, for many years to come. Dr. Young has given, at least, two year's labor to this work. He has, personally, gone over much of the ground, visiting the industrial hives, both in America and Europe, extending his researches as far as Russia. In addition to this he has, as the prefatory pages of the book indicate, been generously aided in his researches and labors, by a numerous staff of assistants, among whom are, Hon. Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State; our ministers and consuls abroad, and the ministers of Germany and Belgium in Washington; A. T. Stewart and other influential merchants in New York; and by Mr. E. T. Peters, Librarian of the Statistical Bureau. Through these aids and his own incessant toil, he has achieved success in his enterprise, and given to the reading public a work that cannot fail of commanding general and absorbing attention in Europe and America, and of doing much to advance the interests of the working classes in both hemispheres.

It is not the purpose of the writer to review this work. It may not be without defects; but of its merits, there can be but one opinion. As remarked, it is historical and statistical in character. From each of these divisions it is proposed here to cull a few facts, in illustration of the character, and in confirmation of the value of this addition to the literature of labor.

HISTORICAL NOTES.

Following a few pages of pertinent prefatory remarks, the work opens with the truthful statement that, "Since the day when our primal progenitor was expelled from Eden, and the doom pronounced, 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,' the subject of labor has been one of absorbing interest." Not by way of criticism, for none is required, it may be proper to remark, en passant, that there is nothing in divine revelation to warrant the too common impression that labor is the result of man's disobedience. Work was as much a part of the original plan of creation, as any other portion of that wonderful conception of infinite wisdom. Creation itself was a work, succeeded by rest. Man worked before the fall: "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it," was the divine command. By the fall, man's employment was changed from unalloyed pleasure and easy care, to embittered toil, physical weariness, and waste of body. Nothing more. But there was attached to labor the grand insignia of honor and health, of which no false phases of society can deprive the hand of industry.

"Cheer'd with the view, man went to till the ground
From whence he rose; sentenc'd, indeed, to toil,
As to a punishment; yet (e'en in wrath
So merciful in heaven) this toil became
The solace of his woes, the sweet employ
Of many livelong hours, and surest guard Against disease and death."

Labor—mental and physical—constantly applied to legitimate objects, stands at the top of the enumerated list of earthly blessings. Like other good things, excesses should be avoided, as these are not justifiable, and are without or beyond the pale of the law of rewards. On the other hand, idleness is productive of a large proportion of the wretchedness embraced in the catalogue of mental and physical disease to which life, by the fall, is heir. And more: Idleness is one of the most prolific sources of vice, crime and ignominy, in all their degrading forms and wretched phases.

* Labor in Europe and America: A special report on the rates of wages, the cost of subsistence, and the condition of the working classes in Great Britain, Germany, France, Belgium, and other countries of Europe; also, in the United States and British America. By Edward Young, Ph. D., Chief of the United States Bureau of Statistics. Washington: Government Printing Office. 1875.

ANTIQUITY OF SLAVE LABOR.

But to the book. Dr. Young, in his historical researches, in which he was ably assisted by Mr. Peters, finds that a very large proportion of the manual labor performed during the earlier stages of the world was the product of slavery in its various forms. "Among the nations of antiquity, the most polished as well as rudest," he says, "slavery was universal; and it is only within a comparatively recent period that it has disappeared even from the most enlightened nations of modern times." Our own country and Russia are cited, as among the last to liberate the slave and ameliorate the condition of the serf; while "the Spanish Republic, falling in with the spirit of the age, has done what the Spanish Monarchy so long refused to do, by adopting legislation looking to the abolition of slavery in the Antilles;" and in Brazil, the work of emancipation, inaugurated by law in 1871, will not be completed for many years. Slavery to-day exists in some form in most, if not all, of the native governments of Asia; it flourishes under the Khedive in Egypt, while on certain portions of the African coast, and on the islands of Polynesia, "some of the most revolting features of the slave-trade appear to have been recently revived."

It is this condition of servile toil that has, more than anything else, tended to pull down free labor from its high pinnacle of dignity and honor, debased society and impeded civilization; but humanity and philanthropy will prevail, and the tendency is now, through commerce, education and Christianity, to universal free labor. This itself is a work of labor, and when it is achieved, the result will be due to persistent effort.

"Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie,
Which we ascribe to heaven. The sacred sky
Gives us free scope; only doth backward pull
Our slow designs, when we ourselves are dull."

LABOR IN EGYPT.

Following the order of the historical portion of Dr. Young's work, Egypt here claims attention. Both free and slave labor were employed. The author, after describing the skill of the Egyptians, and pointing out the divisions in society, says, "these divisions have no relation to the distinction between freemen and slaves," and adds:

From a remark of Herodotus, that "the Egyptians did not confine the exercise of trades to slaves, as the Spartans did," it may be inferred that persons of this class were employed, to some extent, in the various common occupations, but not exclusively in any. It is probable, however, that slaves were chiefly held by members of the privileged classes, who would be most likely to have the means of purchasing them. It will be recollected that it was a member of the upper class, Potiphar, a captain of the king's guard, who purchased Joseph from the Midianite merchants who carried him into Egypt. It may be remarked here, that this transaction affords incidental evidence, that at the time when it occurred (about 1800 B. C.) Egypt was known to traders as a market in which slaves were in regular demand. In successful military expeditions, immense numbers of captives were often brought back and reduced to slavery; and there are indications in the sculptures of Thebes, that slaves sometimes formed a part of the annual tribute paid by conquered nations to the Egyptian kings. The slaves taken in war, and probably also those received as tribute, were sometimes employed in large numbers on the public works; but it is likely that a considerable number of the former class were distributed among the soldiers and military commanders, and that a portion of them were also assigned to the priests, while others were sold under the authority of the government to any private individuals who chose to purchase them. The slaves acquired in these various ways were, of course, of many nationalities, and the representations of them on Egyptian bas-reliefs show that persons of the negro type were included among them. Besides the above mentioned, there was another class of involuntary laborers, composed of criminals, a term which probably embraced many who, by political or other offenses, had incurred the displeasure of the monarch or of the local authorities. The origin of the custom of employing this class upon public works is attributed to Sabacus, the Ethiopian, who invaded Egypt about the middle of the eighth century before Christ. "While he retained his authority," says Herodotus, "he made it a rule not to punish any crime with death, but, according to the magnitude of the offense, he condemned the criminal to raise the ground near the place to which he belonged, by which means the situation of the different cities became more and more elevated." The employment of captives by Sesostris in digging the canals, has already been referred to. The labor exacted by the taskmasters of the Government, in the execution of public works, appears, usually, to have been very severe, the laborers being treated as mere beasts of burden. Those condemned to work in the mines, are said to have been driven with blows to continue their labors, until they sometimes fell lifeless from exhaustion. The practice of inflicting corporal punishment to hasten the performance of work, appears to have prevailed under the Pharaohs, for we are told (Exodus v, 14) that "the officers of the children of Israel, which Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, and demanded, 'Wherefore have ye not fulfilled your task in making brick, both yesterday and to-day, as heretofore?'" It is not difficult to conceive the hardships to which laborers were sometimes subjected by taskmasters eager to win the favor of a monarch, whose vanity and ambition demanded the early completion of a temple, a pyramid, or some other great work, by which he sought to transmit his fame to posterity.

The various mechanical and agricultural industries of Egypt, and the vast amount of labor involved in the erection of the pyramids, are described in detail as they were developed under the different dynasties, through a long period of years. And in conclusion the author remarks that, it was not alone in the erection of such colossal structures as the pyramids that vast amounts of labor were expended. One hundred and twenty thousand men are said to have been employed in hewing the obelisks of Thebes; and Herodotus mentions an edifice formed out of a single immense stone, which appears to have been used as the portico of a temple, the transportation of which from Elephantine to Sais employed two thousand men for three years. Yet this was only one out of many similar works executed by a single king; and there was scarcely a monarch of any note who did not leave numerous monuments of his ambition to perpetuate his fame, or his solicitude to obtain the favor of the gods by erecting costly temples for their worship.

Thus the industrial servitude of the people resulted, in a great measure, from that absolute political subjection, which enabled a monarch to tax them at his own pleasure, or to command their labor in the service of the most grotesque ambition, the most reckless extravagance, or the wildest caprice. Scarcely anything in history could give one a more exalted conception of the economic value of political liberty to the working-classes of modern times, than is conveyed by the spectacle of the hardships to which the working-people of Egypt were subjected, in consequence of the irresponsible power possessed by their rulers.

LABOR AMONG THE JEWS.

The reader is presumed to be pretty well informed in Jewish history, and the author's remarks on the customs of that people are less elaborate than his observations on the habits of some other nationalities. "In respect to slavery," he says, "the Jews presented no exception to the general practice of the age." It is shown, however, that there were redeeming features in Jewish slavery, not practiced in other nations. There were excellent provisions favoring and protecting the poorer classes, enjoined by God and promulgated through his vicegerent and faithful servant, Moses; but these laws were not always regarded by that fickle people, as the following quotation from the work, based on scripture testimony, will show:

The following injunctions from the twenty-third and twenty-fourth chapters of Deuteronomy, are in keeping with many others that may be found in the laws of Moses and in other portions of the Old Testament: "Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother (i. e., to a Hebrew.) * * * Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury." * * * "When thou dost lend thy brother anything, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge. Thou shalt stand abroad (outside), and the man to whom thou dost lend shall bring out the pledge abroad unto thee; and if the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge. In any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down." * * * "Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger, nor of the fatherless, nor take a widow's raiment to pledge." * * * "When thou cuttest down thine harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow." * * * "When thou beatest thine olive tree, thou shalt not go over the boughs again." * * * "When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean it afterward; it shall be for the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow." That these and other humane laws were frequently disregarded, and even flagrantly disobeyed, is evident from the repeated denunciations of the prophets against usury and other oppressive practices. In Nehemiah we read that "there was a great cry of the people, and of their wives, against their brethren, the Jews." Some are represented as saying, "We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, because of the dearth." Others complained that they had borrowed money upon their lands and vineyards for the king's tribute. "And, lo, we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants," said they, "and some of our daughters are brought into bondage already; neither is it in our power to redeem them, for other men have our lands and vineyards." Thereupon Nehemiah rebukes "the nobles and the rulers," saying, "Ye exact usury every one of his brother," and calls upon them to restore to their impoverished brethren "their lands, their vineyards, their olive yards, and their houses," as well as "the hundredth part of the money and of the corn, the wine and the oil" that they have exacted from them. To this they consent, and he calls the priests to witness their oath that they will do "according to this promise." This appears to have occurred subsequent to 445 B. C., when Nehemiah had obtained authority from Artaxerxes to proceed to Judea and rebuild Jerusalem. The captivity of the Jews in Babylon, and the domination of the Persians, Syrians, and Romans must have interfered to a considerable extent with the operation of their own laws; and the oppressive tribute to which they were at times subjected, as well the frequent wars between greater powers, in which they were more or less involved, must have reduced them, at times, to a condition of severe suffering.

It is a remarkable and significant result of disobedience that this peculiarly favored people are to-day without a nationality, and though scattered over the face of the habitable globe, preserve their separation and distinction, by non-intermarriage with those of other nationalities.

LABOR IN CHALDEA AND ASSYRIA.

It is shown that in these ancient empires, the former occupying the lower, and the latter the upper portion of the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris, there existed great cities and other results of an industry that involved mechanical skill of no mean order. The ruins of palaces and temples, the inscriptions and sculptures found, indicate the colossal scale and elaborate ornamentation of their works. "Each king appears," says the author, "to have endeavored to eclipse his predecessors in the number, extent, and magnificence of the architectural works executed during his reign; and many of these works apparently had no other use than to gratify the ambition and vanity of the monarchs."

In the construction of such works, the Assyrians were accustomed to employ the labor of captives taken in war. Among these, the skilled workmen were in request to assist in the ornamentation of shrines and palaces, while the great mass of the unskilled were employed in quarrying stone, raising mounds, making bricks, and similar occupations. It has already been stated that Sennacherib brought back to Assyria upwards of six hundred thousand prisoners in three campaigns, and the number of captives made in other successful expeditions, was probably on the same scale. In the inscription on the Bellino cylinder, this king states that he employed Chaldeans, Aramæans, Armenians, Cilicians, and Quhn (Coans) in the construction of his great works; and to these may probably be added Egyptians, Ethiopians, Elamites, and Jews. Their work consisted, among other things, in raising the vast mounds upon which important edifices were to be erected, in the transport and elevation of colossal bulls, in the molding of bricks, the quarrying of stone, the erection of walls, the excavation of canals, and the construction of embankments. They worked in gangs, each gang having a costume peculiar to it, which probably marked the nationality of its members. Over each of these gangs was placed a number of task-masters, armed with staves, who urged on the work with blows, and severely punished any neglect or remissness. Assyrian foremen had the general supervision of the works, and were intrusted with such portions as required great skill or judgment. The captives often worked in fetters, which were sometimes supported by a bar fastened to the waist, while sometimes they consisted merely of shackles.

Nearly all the labor, in the prosecution of the arts and agriculture, was carried on by slaves, and under their tyrant rulers, the condition of the working classes, says the writer, must have been one of extreme wretchedness.

LABOR IN GREECE.

The development of the arts advanced to great perfection in this early centre of solid progress; and the author justly claims that

“to no other nation of antiquity has the modern world been indebted for intellectual treasures of such extent and value, as those bequeathed to it by ancient Greece.” Eighteen pages of the work are devoted to an exhibition of the literature, handicraft, agriculture and customs of that people. The result is, that with the exception of the absence of labor-saving machinery, with which the world is now so well supplied, they were not far behind the present age and the most advanced countries in education, law, art and agriculture. Nor did the modes of manufacture differ, at least in many respects, from those of our own time. Even in the smithy, “there were the anvil mounted on a high block; the bellows, formed of thin boards, connected by flaps of cowhide, and expelling the air through an iron nozzle; the hammer, the tongs, the vise, and other familiar implements.” The manufacture of furniture, musical implements, pottery, glass, &c., were carried to great perfection, evincing consummate skill and refined taste. They were familiar with the processes of blowing, cutting, engraving and staining glass. In the latter process, they could imitate the colors and the brilliancy of the most precious gems, from the ruby and the amethyst, to the turquoise and the beryl.

Of this material, it is said, they also fashioned “jars, bowls, and vases, exhibiting all the various hues of the peacock’s train, which, like shot silks and the breast of the dove, displayed fresh tints in every different light, fading, quivering, and melting into each other as the eye changed its point of view.”

In the quality of their textile fabrics, the Greeks, as well as various other nations of antiquity, appear to have been nearly equal to the manufacturers of modern times; but owing to the absence of labor-saving machinery, these fabrics, especially the finer ones, could only be produced in comparatively insignificant quantities, and the changes of clothing worn by the masses of the people, was not to be compared with that which they are able to wear at the present day.

Dr. Young reproduces an alphabetical enumeration of occupations, which is given by Fosbroke in his “Treaties on the Arts, Manufactures, Manners, and Institutions of the Greeks and Romans.” Omitting a few unimportant details, the list is as follows:

Bottle-makers; (or makers of leathern bottles;) bankers; (money changers or usurers;) barbers, some of them females, and barber-surgeons; basket-makers, blacksmiths and brasiers, butchers, of whom there appear to have been none at the time of the Trojan war, since the heroes of Homer are represented as cutting up their own meat; capon cutters, carpenters, and cooks—the latter being men, who were sometimes hired by the day, at a high price; copper-smiths, cotton manufacturers and dealers in cotton goods, couriers, dyers, enamelers, factors, farmers, felt-makers, fishermen, fishmongers, flax-dressers, founders, fresco-painters, fullers, gilders, glass-manufacturers and globe-makers, the globes being made of glass; glue-makers, goldsmiths and gardners, the latter understanding the art of grafting; grooms, hair-cloth manufacturers, horse-breakers, joiners, market-clerks, (who attended to the weights, measures, and qualities of the goods,) midwives, mountebanks, oilmen, painters, paper and parchment-makers, pastry-cooks, perfumers, pilots (a profession held in high esteem), porters, potters, poulterers, prison-keepers, quack doctors, readers (whose office was to read to their masters during dinner, at night when they could not sleep, and at other times,) shepherds, tanners, tutors, watchmen upon towers, wax-chandlers, and weavers.

Wages of mechanics ranged in the vicinity of 13 cents a day; the pay of a soldier (infantry) was 2 to 3 oboli, or $6\frac{1}{2}$ to $9\frac{3}{4}$ cents; but Theopompus says that “with a daily pay of 2 oboli a soldier could maintain a wife, and that with 4 oboli his fortune was complete,” by which he evidently means so much pay, independent of the allowance for subsistence. In Solon’s time, a bushel and a half of grain cost about 19 cents. Other necessities of life were equally low. An ox, in his time, sold for $97\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and a sheep for $19\frac{1}{2}$ cents; wine was worth $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents per gallon. But prices varied in different periods, and generally ranged above those indicated.

The number of wage-laborers in Greece was comparatively small, a great majority of the working people being in the condition of slaves or serfs. In war, the life of the prisoner was considered as forfeited, and if the captor spared him it was usually to devote him to a life of servitude, a fate which often befell persons who, in their own country, had occupied stations of honor and influence. Many persons were also sold into slavery by kidnappers, who practiced their nefarious trade along the shores of the Mediterranean, as similar miscreants in modern times have done on certain portions of the African coast. As luxury increased among the Greeks, the demand for slaves was such that a regular commerce in these unfortunate beings was kept up, the enterprise of the slave traders leading them to distant parts, particularly to the southern shores of the Black Sea, where slaves could be had in great numbers. The first Greeks who engaged in this trade are said to have been the Chians, who also pursued the infamous business of making eunuchs for the eastern market. A just retribution ultimately fell upon them, when Mithridates of Cappadocia, having conquered the island, delivered them up to their own slaves, to be carried away captive into Colchis.

In Sparta, the Helots outnumbered the citizens by about five to one, and Bœck estimates the ratio of slaves to citizens, in Attica, at very nearly four to one.

Slave labor and the condition of slaves, in the different cities and sections of Greece, are fully explained in the chapter under consideration, to which, for want of space here, the reader is referred for the interesting details on this and other important information relating to that ancient commonwealth.

LABOR IN ROME.

Twenty pages of the work are occupied in an exposition of labor in Rome, with full remarks on the systems of slavery, free labor, the Roman trades-unions, and the condition of the peasantry. The author remarks, that "What has been said as to the condition of the industrial arts in Greece, will apply, in the main, to their condition in Italy, during the history of ancient Rome." The condition of the plebeians is vividly depicted. The history of their struggle for a humane law of debtor and creditor, for a fair division of the public lands, and for the prerogatives of citizenship, is virtually the history of the early struggles of the working people of Rome for the rights of men. The plebeians, descendants of the conquered tribes who had inhabited Rome and vicinity, were, under the early kings, admitted to no share in public affairs, or in the social and religious rights which belonged to the patricians, or the privileged order; but were distinguished from the slaves by the exercise of their freedom. Subsequently, civic rights were accorded to them. Their poverty, however, often compelled them to borrow from their patrician superiors, whose incomes were largely increased by usury. "The creditor had the power to enslave, imprison, scourge, starve, or even take the life of the debtor who failed to meet his obligations; and if there were several creditors of one person, they could, if they chose, divide his body among them. Instances of extreme cruelty, such as beating, imprisonment in loathsome dungeons, and slow starvation, were not infrequent, while many unfortunate debtors were sold into slavery or reduced to servitude under their creditors. The harshness of the law, and of the manner in which it was enforced, seemed all the more outrageous in view of the fact that the inability of the debtor to meet his engagements often arose from his having to neglect his own affairs while performing military service for the State in the wars which the patricians had provoked."

This being the treatment of the plebeians, the reader will readily conclude that the slave population was, if possible, in a worse condition. Their numbers were large, at some periods and in certain portions of Italy, embracing half the entire population. They were worked sometimes in chains, guarded by armed retainers. A rigorous celibacy was imposed, because it was cheaper to conquer, import and buy adults than to raise slaves from infancy. In the latter days of the Empire, under the then feeble influence of Christianity, their condition was somewhat ameliorated.

Free labor was quite limited, and was mainly confined to the agricultural districts. The wages of free labor were nearly the same as in Greece, an agricultural laborer being paid about 12½ cents a day, a stone mason 25 cents, a worker in marble 30 cents, &c. Provisions averaged about one-third their cost now, in our cities.

Trades-unions existed to some considerable extent, but they were in close relations to the State, and were utilized in executing its public works and in collecting its revenues. They were of two kinds, industrial and commercial, and bore the name of corporations.

The peasantry were of two classes — those belonging absolutely to the proprietor, who could sell or exchange them as he would his cattle; and those appertaining to the land, who could only be sold or exchanged with it. The former class were held to be inferior even to the slaves in the cities and were on the same level as the domestic animals. A peasant attached to the soil "might own the tatters in which he was clad, and the animals which formed a part of his family." The other class could possess absolutely nothing.

LABOR IN EUROPE, UNDER THE FEUDAL SYSTEM.

The overthrow of the Roman power introduced a new order of society. The condition of the laboring classes was, however, but slightly improved. The barbarian conquerors divided the landed property among themselves and the former proprietors. The peasantry were compelled to labor for their new masters as they had done for their predecessors. Slavery had been the practice among the conquerors, as with the conquered. The poorer proprietors were soon despoiled of their property, through the avarice of the bishops and abbess and their patrons, without respect to law or statute. Thus stripped, they were reduced to the condition of serfs, and compelled to work for their robbers. The bishops and their agents could cause peasants, guilty of any misdemeanor, to be punished without trial, and the number of blows inflicted was regulated at their pleasure. "All the serfs were considered as belonging to the soil, from which they could not be detached except by the will of the proprietor." The children of serfs, when the parents lived on separate estates, could be divided between the two masters, without the consent of parents or offspring.

During the tenth and eleventh centuries, the serfs made some progress toward personal liberty. The feudal proprietors conceded lands to the peasantry, on certain restrictions, but the exactions of the lords and the church were still intolerable. From the eleventh to the fourteenth century, terrible insurrections broke out in France, the peasantry taking up arms against the nobles, to the extent of hundreds of thousands, to whom new recruits were daily added. Thus, for two hundred years, the country presented the worst features of anarchy, plunder and murder. The peasantry were finally overcome and disarmed, when their chief was crowned with a red-hot tripod of iron, and beheaded, and seven thousand of the peasants were slaughtered near Meaux. In his closing observations, the author remarks, that —

What has been thus far said in regard to labor under the feudal system, refers chiefly to France, and is confined to the labors of the peasantry, but, as has already been pointed out, the finer industrial arts were almost unknown at the period under consideration; the town and city populations were very limited, and the work performed on the rural estates really comprised the great bulk of all the work for which, in that rude age, there was any occasion or demand. The condition of the serfs and peasants on the rural estates was therefore, at that time, the condition of the vast majority of the laboring population.

THE FEUDAL PERIOD IN ENGLAND.

During the period of Saxon supremacy, two-thirds of the people are represented as having been slaves or in a condition of bondage approaching slavery; nor did the Norman invasion materially alter the condition of the masses. In the reign of Henry II., slaves were exported to Ireland, till the market was overstocked; and from William I. to the reign of John, "there was scarcely a cottage in Scotland but possessed an English slave." The first check to the system was due to Christianity, the influence of which led to the disuse of the ancient practice of reducing prisoners of war to bondage; but the final extinction of slavery in England was reached only after centuries of slow progress. An attempt to extinguish it in 1526, was unsuccessful; and Dr. Young says "Cromwell did not scruple to send Scottish prisoners, taken at Dunbar, in 1650, to the West India colonies, as slaves." Under Charles II. the system was abolished by statute; but as late as 1775. Scottish colliers were bought and sold with the estates to which they were attached.

During the lawless period which resulted in the development of feudalism, there was little security for industry or commerce. But, with the establishment of feudalism, there gradually arose a demand for the products of various industries. This tended to attract population to centres and create towns, and so bring about a gradual change from servile to free labor. Still, the products of industry were subject to severe taxes, and laborers to other onerous exactions and restrictions by their feudal lords. The English laborer lived in a very rude and primitive style; his dwelling was built of mud or clay; glass was unknown even in the better class of houses, and was used only in churches; even the evening light must have been scanty, as it required the price of a day's work to purchase a pound of tallow candles. The household furniture and cooking utensils of a family usually consisted of a brass pot and a bed, the latter valued at three to six shillings (75 cents to $1.50). With provisions they may have been pretty well provided, though it appears that they were accustomed to eat the flesh of animals that had died from disease. Wages were so low that the earnings of a year would now be considered, in the United States, poor pay for a week's work. In 1444 the wages of agricultural labor were limited by Parliament to the following rates: a bailiff in husbandry, per annum, £1 3s. 4d. ($5.75) with food and drink, and 5s. ($1.25) for clothing; a chief carter or chief shepherd, £1 a year, with food and drink, and 4s. for clothing; a farm servant, 15s. a year, and 3s. and 4d. for clothing; a woman servant, 10s. a year, and 4s. for clothing; a mower, 4d. a day, with food and drink, or 6d. without; a reaper, 3d. a day, with food and drink, or 5d. without; a woman or other servant, 2½d. a day, with food and drink, or 4d. without.

The same statute fixed the prices to be paid mechanics, which ranged from 2d. to 4d. a day, with diet, and 3d. to 5½d. without diet.

From these wretchedly meagre earnings, in England and on the continent, wages have slowly advanced through four or five centuries, to their present rates, of about an average of one half that is paid for corresponding work in the United States, as will be shown in a subsequent article, in which some of the more important tables, giving the rates of wages and cost of living, in Europe and in the United States, will be condensed published. But the work itself should be carefully read by every intelligent citizen in the United States.

From the facts presented in this brief notice of the work, the reader cannot fail to be impressed with the improved condition of the working classes in our day, as compared with their pay and impoverished state at all former periods. Not only were the toilers for thousands of years absolute slaves, but down to the sixteenth century, the treatment of the free working classes was little better than that accorded to slaves, when servile labor was universal.

It is worthy of remark that one of the most potent agencies, not only in wiping out slavery, but in elevating the condition of the industrial classes, was the power of Christianity, operating upon the moral sentiment, alike of patrician and plebeian, citizen and serf, lord and slave, by denouncing oppression and claiming freedom and political rights alike to all. Nor has it been less potent in emancipating the female sex from that servile bondage and social degradation under which they have been held in all ages and under every phase of society, where Christianity has not penetrated to break the bonds of tyranny and lift them up to an equality with their exacting lords.

The use of labor-saving machinery has had much to do in revolutionizing the systems of modern labor. Its introduction was generally opposed by the working classes, on the ground that its tendency would be to lessen the demand for manual labor. Experience, however, has practically demonstrated an opposite result. The demand for labor has been increased, and is increasing, and at better remuneration than ever before. The invention of the steam engine increased the demand for machinists and experienced workers in wood and iron; the steam engine gave us the railway and the steamboat, with cheaper travel and transportation, and an increased instead of diminished demand for manual and horse labor. The cotton gin multiplied the acres under cotton cultivation, and the number of field operatives, spinners and weavers, and gave to the world cheaper cotton fabrics; the planing machine reduces the cost of houses, increases the demand for masons, bricklayers, plasterers, painters, stair-builders, carpenters, and laborers, and enables mechanics to become the owners instead of tenants of their homes and lots; the machine mower, the reaper, the cultivator, and the harvester, enabled the farmer to enlarge his area under cultivation, employ more help, and give to the world a greater abundance and cheaper bread; the rotary steam printing press takes the place of the hand-press, and multiplies a thousand fold those messengers of intelligence and educational agencies—the newspapers—and increases the demand for practical printers; the sewing-machine furnishes the race with better made and cheaper garments, lightens the toil, secures a greater variety of work, and increases the demand for female labor at increased remuneration.

But labor-saving machinery has not yet fulfilled its grand and ultimate mission of practically reducing the hours of toil per diem. Until this is accomplished, it fails of its destiny. The economic and sanitary idea of eight hours out of every twenty-four for labor is logically sound; and the increasing use of labor-saving appliances will enable society to reduce the eight-hour theory to practice whenever avarice is made to yield to the claims of humanity and justice.

This will not come through "strikes" and labor combinations against capital. The tendency of these is rather to drive capital out of the usual legitimate channels of enterprise and investment, and thus diminish the demand for labor. The power of the laboring classes—using the term in its broadest sense—lies in securing a greater degree of practical knowledge and skill in workmanship, in a closer application to duty or business during business hours, and in a prudent economy in personal and household expenditures. The mechanical industries of Europe and America are now in keen competition for a higher type of skilled workmanship, and the artisans, mechanics, and laborers who are most in demand, are those who are best skilled in their respective branches of industry. The industrial fields are overcrowded with untaught, untrained, slovenly and careless workmen, who are unable to earn a full day's wages, even by twelve or fifteen hours labor. Their waste of materials, destruction of tools and machinery, and slovenly workmanship render them unprofitable to their employers at any price. On the other hand, skilled, neat, active workmen are comparatively scarce, and always in demand. They invariably command the highest wages, always give good satisfaction, and can earn a third or a half more in eight hours, than an unskilled workman will receive for twelve hours labor on the same work. The inference, therefore, is plain, that the eight hour system is to be reached through the application of labor-saving machinery, supplimented by skilled industry; and whenever this combination is practically reached, the daily working hours in the factory, the mines, the workshop, and approximately on the farm and in the household, may, and should, be reduced to and scrupulously confined within eight hours. By giving another equal portion of time to rest and repose, there will remain eight hours for physical exercise, mental cultivation and pleasurable recreation. This condition of society, as compared with that depicted in the earlier portion of this article, will indicate the advance from servile toil to the grandest type of free and educated labor, and which is easily within the reach of the present generation.

HERE is a queer election item. In Clinton county, Iowa, reside two brothers named Lillie. While both were on a visit to Ohio during the late campaign in Iowa, one of them was nominated for County Superintendent by the Democrats. By an error of the committee, in ordering the tickets, the other brother's initials were used, and, coming to vote, the wrong member of the family was elected. But the funniest part of all is that the man elected differs from his brother and the party which has given him an office, in that he is a staunch Republican.

WHERE is the disintegration of the Republican party that the political prophets have been predicting for the past year? Where, too, are the brigade of disintegration journals which were so faint-hearted a year ago?

THE THIRD HOUSE.

Of late, it has become fashionable to air virtue by abusing "the lobby." The "lobby," or, as it has been termed, the "Third House," unlike the other two, falls back for its support solely on its brains, its character, or its impudence. It is fortified by no certificate of election. It cannot, in its weakness, lean back on a fascis with a gilt eagle perched on top of it, nor has it a sergeant to parade such potential mace, and has not, in all its ways and works, the adventitious aid of a single pillar or cornice to frown down the audacity of criticism.

Still, this "Third House" is an ancient and honorable body, quite as old as the other two. There have been lobbies since parliamentary bodies began to evolve themselves out of the chaos of protests and petitions. We have records of people who persisted in advising them ever since there was any to advise, and who advised them, whether they wanted it or not. This persistent, enterprising class of people, when there was any legislation that they wanted, went to work to try and get it. In their efforts, they have often been snubbed. They have been reminded, time and again, of their own utter worthlessness and insufficiency. They have been told that this is the one sin that prevents legislation from approaching a blissful period, similar to the nic han of the Buddhists, and that "lobbies" are like the itch, or other cutaneous diseases, and will only be ultimately cured by sulphur. The virtuous and callow representative sees the lobby in his dreams, and believes it a hideous demon. He exclaims, like another tempted individual "lauk, sir, you will destroy my wartue." He rushes into the house and fires off a resolution against it, and then, if he is pious, goes on his knees and prays that "the lobby" be hung, drawn and quartered, and the head and limbs stuck on the tallest lightning rods over each department of this virtuous Government.

Now, this "Third House" has sometimes performed its duties honorably, and, like the other two, sometimes not. Let us, therefore, in a candid spirit, inquire into this "lobby." To see what it is, and why it is. To ascertain whether it must be, if it should be abolished, or remain just as it is, a scape-goat, to be sent every year to the wilderness bearing the sins of the other two houses on its shoulders.

A history of the rise and progress of parliamentary bodies has not yet been written. Our modern conception of the idea is not very old, still, for aught we know, such bodies may have existed and voted on the building of the ark, and wrangled in committee over the estimates for the tower of Babel. At the time of the European discovery of America, Spain was the only country in Europe that possessed a parliamentary body worthy of the name. The French Assembly of that day cut but a sorry figure, for the king was in the habit of taxing the people without even consulting them. The Parliament of England was only a little better. In point of fact, this representative power in Western Europe grew up in this wise. The Kings had often occasion to be jealous of the powerful nobles, and, in order to get a counterpoise against them, claimed to be the special champions of the people. They fished up the first germs of representative bodies, from the vasty deep of undetermined political powers. Once started on the Darwinian theory, they wiggled themselves into consequence. From assemblages to petition, they grew into assemblages to rule, and from hesitating protest, shaped themselves into clearly-defined powers. They fortified themselves by precedent, and began themselves with what they called constitutions. They were hatched to assail nobles and grew to assail kings.

Meanwhile, where was "the lobby?" The lobby was always there. It never forgot its interests or its functions. Sometimes it assailed a refractory parliament with petitions, and sometimes with brickbats, but persistently attempted to make an impression on them in some way.

It is with the lobby of the present day we have to do. And here it may be asserted that in modern legislation, the "lobby" a legitimate and honorable function. For instance, a man wants an extension of his patent, on the plea that it took all the time he had, and all his money to bring his invention into notice. He may or may not be entitled to it ; but he certainly has a right to make his case. He has a right to do this by himself, or any one he chooses to employ. Everything being done honorably, and no corrupt means used to control legislation, we cannot see but what this function is just as honorable as that of the legislator. The law-maker has a different task. He is the master of his own time. He need not listen unless he chooses, but he should listen as far as his other duties give him opportunity. He is the servant of the people, and acts for them. It is his duty, with all the lights he can get before him, to act, if he can, wisely and conscientiously.

Let us put another case. Let us imagine a committee on ways and means. In all probability, several of them do not know bromine from borax. How they must be puzzled by the funny, outlandish names given to things importable and taxable. They are in agony over jutes and jute-butts. The multitudinous combinations and concoctions for dyeing, make them almost wish they had died before they came on the committee.

Before them comes an importer or manufacturer. He may or may not have his attorney with him. He may want something that is proper, or something that is improper. He may not want to pay all honest taxes himself and yet want to see that his business rivals do ; that there shall be no evasion of tax in new names. He can give the committee information they can get in no other way. It is true, he may attempt to mislead them ; that is their business. Under such circumstances the drawers of the committee-room resemble a miniature apothecary shop. Small bottles and small packages startle the astonished vision, and shock the parliamentary nose. Indeed, there are so many samples and "spirits of things," that the only thing that seems to be lacking is the "Spirit of God."

After all it is the ignorant, and not the experienced legislator, who is afraid of the lobby. The former knows little himself, and is afraid to trust any one who does. Many persons are deeply interested in the legislation of Congress and of legislatures. The press advises and abuses them. Constituents insist on having something to say. Parties interested in legislation wish to present a case. Above all, if there is a person who has a just cause to prosecute, or an honorable interest to defend, who supposes that he can stay at home and leave some philanthropic Congressman to fish up his case from the depths of his own unaided consciousness, and push it through all the formulas and obstacles which lie between the presentation of a bill and final legislation, he is a fearfully deluded individual.

There is, therefore, a legitimate lobby, but there is an illegitimate one. The latter blackmails. A man comes to Washington with a good, honest case. He is waited on by jackalls who insist on "helping" him, or, if he refuses, who fight him. In the latter case, being repulsed by the claimant, they rush to some verdant Congressman, denounce the affair as "a swindle," backed by a "big lobby." The virtuous Congressman, who has been apprehensive that his virtue was not sufficiently appreciated, rises in his place, makes a speech against the measure ; probably defeats what was honest and just, and falls back in his seat with an extreme odor of sanctity and honesty, having, probably, been the dupe of the worst lobby jackalls in Washington.

Now it is time there was an end of all this nonsense. Every case has a right to be judged by its merits. No man ought to be denounced because some other man has done a wrong thing. Congressmen cannot escape the aroma of Pacific Mail, or Credit Mobiliers by turning up their nose at "the lobby." The lobby may be a good lobby or a bad lobby. It may be dishonest, and it may be stupid. It may seek to consume more time than the hard-working public servant can give. It may insist in dragging cases under the consideration of Congress which have no business there, although meritorious in themselves, but still the lobby is one of our institutions, and since no parliamentary body is without it, treat it decently and see that it behaves itself.

Nor can such propositions as were introduced last winter, to make the business purely professional, and limit it to a certain class of lawyers, be looked on with favor. This would not only have a tendency to throw much of the business into the hands of the most objectionable class, but would be an interference with that right of petition which may not be abridged. The dignity and honor of Congress will never be maintained by holding its nose aloof from other men's sins. We question if its investigations are worth the time they cost, and no one will think any more of a member, or of the house, for vapid declamations against the lobby.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

The appointment of the Hon. Zachariah Chandler, ex-United States Senator from Michigan, to succeed Mr. Delano as Secretary of the Interior, re-animates the discussion which has, for several years, attended the various mutations in that Department. Before judging of the fitness of the new incumbent for this important portfolio, some inquiry may appropriately be made, as to the Department itself, and the nature of the functions with which it is charged. Preliminary thereto, it may be acknowledged that ever since its original organization, under the Secretaryship of the Hon. Thomas Ewing, Sen., this Department has been under a cloud, and subject to more or less severe animadversion and criticism by Congress and the press. Those from the latter source, have increased in severity of late years, not because, it must be borne in mind, that the Departmental service has grown more corrupt or feeble, but really because the press has, itself, become more active and influential. A natural consequence of its newly recognized power, is an inordinate desire on the part of those who have control thereof, to make themselves felt. Critics, as well as envy, like a shining mark.

The Interior Department has been open to criticism, apparently because the Department itself has, from the very beginning of its existence, been more or less, tentative in the duties and powers intrusted to it. It has grown experimentally from comparative insignificance into a place of great importance in the administrative affairs of this Republic.

This fact can be readily appreciated by a glance at the various Bureaus, which are gathered within the white walls of the Patent Office building. The fact that the Interior Department, as such, has never had a distinct habitation and local abiding place, as have the Treasury, State, War, Navy, and the other branches of the Executive office, is a proof of the peculiar position it occupies. The building in which it is sheltered, is always considered to be the Patent Office. Sometime, it will be devoted entirely to the duties of that important bureau, which now almost forms a department within a department, of itself—the Commissioner being nominally subject to the Secretary of the Interior, but in reality, largely independent of his control.

The Patent Office is, then, the first and most important of the several bureaus, grouped together as the Department of the Interior. Its duties are widely known, and fairly understood by the general public.

Next in importance is the General Land Office, the Commissioner of which has supervision of our vast public domain, with its multifarious legal questions and interests, complicated at every turn, by the Spanish, French, and Mexican systems which, at different points, interfere with and make complex the admirably clear and simple one, adopted by the early statesmen of the Republic. The very name of this bureau is sufficient to show how widely its duties differ from those of the Patent Office. Then comes the Department's skeleton—the ghost that rises at every Secretary's festive board—that is—the Indian Bureau. The Commissioner is charged with the supervision, nay, the Government of about 375,000 Indians, widely scattered over a vast area, and in various stages of development—the best being poor enough, and the worst, affording a degree of trouble and expense, utterly out of all proportion to the value of their aboriginal persons or belongings. We have inherited and cherished a mixed mode of dealing with them, which, in itself, renders anything like a straightforward and direct mode of administration, almost an impossibility. The recognition of a quasi-sovereignty as existing within the smallest band that maintains its tribal character, has been, through all time, the source of some corruption and real maladministration. The Commissioners have, perforce, seldom been men of wide knowledge of their wards, and when they were, the chances have been against their being uncorrupted by the peculiar influences, that circumstances and opportunities, and not persons, or parties merely, have generated.

To the Indian Office proper have, within late years, been added a three-fold system of inspection: 1st, By the Board of Indian Peace Commissioners, who are in the Department, and yet, cannot be said to be part of it; 2d, The Inspectors, provided for by Act of Congress, who, while they are officers of the Bureau, are largely independent thereof; and 3d, The organized church and missionary influences, which have been formed exterior to the Government, and yet are allowed to powerfully influence the whole administration of Indian affairs.

The Commissionership of Pensions, with its wide-spread duties—its great responsibilities, is an office which enters into the necessities of many thousand households, needy or otherwise. The wise or unwise administration of its duties, to say nothing whatever of its honesty, affects a larger circle of persons than any other of those that are now controlled by Secretary Chandler.

Then follow the Census Bureau, that of Education, and a variety of offices which have been added, one by one, as the needs of the public service required. The Interior Department is in charge of the Pacific Railroads, so far as their interests and those of the Government are united. It organizes and supervises the various geological and other surveys, which, under Professor Hayden, Major Powell, and others, have, of late years, so widely extended our knowledge of the vast Cordilleras of the West. It has charge of a number of institutions and local interests, connected with the District of Columbia, such as the Metropolitan police, the Insane and Deaf-mute Asylums, the Columbia Hospital, &c. The distribution of public documents, as well as their publication, after authorization by Congress, is largely under its direction.

Imperfect and feeble as is this outline of the duties imposed on the Secretary of the Interior, the reader can readily apprehend from it, how difficult and diverse are the functions appertaining to the office. What is not so readily understood is, however, the fact that such widely extended systems and duties, as well as the persons charged therewith being scattered over so large an area, and obliged to deal with all sorts of acute persons, anxious to make for their own pockets, as large a profit as possible, out of the Government, and its necessary transactions in surveying the public domain, feeding and caring for the Indians, paying to the pensioners the bounty of the nation—must afford wide and often-open occasion for blundering, and quite often too, for frauds, not to be remedied, perhaps, until exposures have let light on "ways that are dark."

Allowing a large margin for the truth of what is charged in late years, and yet, it cannot be asserted with assurance that the administration of the Department of the Interior, is as liable to reproach to-day, or at any time during Grant's occupation of the Executive Office, as it was during the halcyon days of Democratic misrule and robbery, when Buchanan's Secretary of the Interior plundered the Indian trust funds, in order to advance the interest of a firm of Government contractors, who had been politically useful to the pro-slavery propaganda, by their employment and use of Border Ruffians to drive Free State settlers out of Kansas.

The Republican party received the Interior Department, not only depleted and plundered, as the others were, but crowded full with enemies, as well as with the tolerably well-cloaked plundering cabals and rings, which everywhere honeycombed the Indian and Land-services. It received it, too, under conditions which practically prohibited, at the time, any thorough and reforming overhauling. The whole strength of the nation was turned to saving the life of the Republic. It was, therefore, under a cloud when Abraham Lincoln entered his first Presidential term. It remained in that condition, to a considerable extent, until his death, when all the conditions grew worse. At the same time, the work of the Department expanded in every direction. The Pension Bureau disbursed annually before the Slave-holders' Rebellion swelled the sum total to so sad an aggregate, less than eleven hundred thousand dollars. In 1864, it had increased to over four-and-a-half millions, and in 1866, it was over thirteen-and-a-quarter millions. In 1870, it was nearly twenty-eight millions, and at the present date, it has swelled to about thirty-one million dollars. The machinery used for disbursing one, has been expanded to handle an additional thirty millions. Agents had to be created; experts to be trained; new modes of book-keeping adopted; a whole detective system to be devised; clerks to be made competent; in fact, a series of experiments have had to be inaugurated—some of which could not, in the nature of things, fail to be extravagant, while it was impossible that every one of the many persons employed should prove competent, or even honest. But, careful investigation will establish the fact that this bureau has been, on the whole, both honestly and economically managed, even when compared with the general conduct of large, private corporations, whose business may be, or has been, more or less, tentative in details.

Take the Land Office, as another example. Under the sagacious administration of the Land Commissioner, appointed by Mr. Lincoln—an officer who declined a Cabinet portfolio and resigned the office he was then holding, rather than sustain Mr. Johnson's policy; under his administration the Land Office possessed a large surplus, by means of which the Department was enabled to complete the publication of the eighth census. The Land Office passed then under the control of one, now deceased, who, though able as a Chief Clerk, and remarkable as a student, was practically incompetent as a responsible administrator. The business of this Office will be found to have grown greatly from 1864, on to the present date. The land-grant policy, as well as the demand for surveys in the west, owing to the large increase of population there, in consequence of the rapid development of the railroad system, stands sponsor for this increase. Though very much of the work thrown on the Bureau was new in character, and has been rapidly affected at times by changes in the laws relating thereto, the General Land Office has performed its many and important duties to the satisfaction of the country.

But it is the Indian Bureau on which public attention has been most fully directed. That all its dark places should be made visible, is quite reasonable, when one remembers how the lenses of the press have been concentrating attention thereon. At the time the Republican party assumed control of the Government, only a comparatively small proportion of the American people knew anything about Indian affairs. If any desire to convince themselves of that fact, let them turn over the files of the leading New York dailies, from 1850 to 1860, and then compare the same papers and the information they contain on this subject, say from 1865 to 1875. Rapid intercommunication is as the sunlight; noisome places are exposed in its gairish light. As a rule, these things were no more known to the Government than to the public, in the past. There were officials who knew and thrived on their knowledge, without doubt, but if their superiors suspected the illegitimate character of their gains, a larger subscription than usual to the next Democratic election fund, was a sufficient reply. In those days, contractors were regularly assessed for the benefit of the Democratic party. The next contract was expected to cover the amount, and it certainly did so. The loss of eighty thousand lives in the suppression of Indian wars, before 1860, and the expenditure of many score million dollars, will be seldom found subject of journalistic criticism in the "good old" ante bellum days. During the progress of the Rebellion (or after its first year closed), the Government was compelled to keep on the Western frontier, from the Indian Territory to the British line, a force so large that it outnumbered the old regular army. All sorts of expenditures were created by new conditions, so arising. During the administration of Mr. Johnson, the corruption of the Interior Department was known and flagrant.

Since President Grant has been in office, the Indian service has cost more, it is true, but much more has also been accomplished. One source of constant trouble has been entirely removed. In 1868, the area from the 97th to the 113th degrees west longitude, and lying between the 37th and 43d parallels of latitude, embracing Western Kansas and Nebraska, the Territories of Wyoming, Colorado, and Utah, was open, and subject to constant Indian forays, incursions and wars, with all the horrors that attend them among a thinly populated and comparatively defenceless border population. The Northern Sioux, the Southern Comanche, the warlike Cheyenne, and the treacherous Kiowa, Apache, and Ute, made these regions their hunting grounds—laying lordly claims to ownership and control. There were at least 30,000 of these nomads. Where are they now? The region referred to has been cleared of their presence. It has cost less, too, of either money, blood, or injustice, than any similar operation in the history of our Indian relations. These tribes have been concentrated to the North and South—leaving the axial line of Continental development open to the free movement of the American people. They have not only been concentrated, but so located as to be permanently brought under control. They are also in the line of certain, if slow, progress—tribal and personal. The policy under which this has been accomplished, has been in a large degree experimental. There have been mistakes, errors, or worse, without doubt; but, considering the uncertainty of the problem, when first cast—the nature of the obstacles encountered, and the results achieved, that there has been so little of blundering or mal-administration, is a genuine subject of congratulation. The policy inaugurated by the President has not confined its beneficial operations to the area indicated. The turbulent Dacotah Nation of the Northwest, and the murderous Apaches of the extreme Southwest, have alike been brought under tolerable control, and are now being so environed and hedged in as to make serious outbreaks in the future an impossibility. In fact, the President's policy is solving the Indian problem. The interest aroused in the experiment has placed the whole matter as in a calcium light before the country. Hence the severe, and often slanderous, criticism which has attended every step. The "independent press" often seems to have no other purpose than to create a sensation, make a point, no matter whether just or not, and exalt their own horn, at the expense of all other public functions in the land.

Now, what may be fairly and properly said of the new incumbent of the Interior Secretaryship? No just critic, knowing the conditions as they exist in the Department itself, will deny that the nomination of Mr. Chandler is one of the best made by the President. The Secretary has a wide experience, fully befitting him for the duties to which he is called. Not even his most virulent critics deny to him the possession of unblemished personal and public integrity; nor that of great energy, capacity for labor, clear-sighted sagacity, and a wide and comprehensive knowledge of public affairs, in just the relations which make a practical man best acquainted with the workings of this Government, political and administrative, that which is experimental in character, or bureaucratic and settled in method. A merchant on the Northwest frontier, with extensive knowledge of Indian and Land Office affairs; a successful political organizer, lifting up and leading the banner of a new and regenerative party; administering with credit the municipal affairs of the city of his home; going each year, for twenty years and more, face to face with the people of his own and other States to plead for the ideas of Liberty and the principles and policy of National Unity; standing for eighteen years a prominent member of the United States Senate, one whom Charles Sumner characterized, not more than five years since, as among the "most useful, intelligent and patriotic" of his Senatorial colleagues, the only objection that is really urged against him is, that after a long life of services and earnest fighting against the gravest of national and political evils, is one that shows the character of the objectors—their own want of faith or political sincerity. Mr. Chandler is a sincere and earnest Republican, a strong and faithful partizan. No one will deny this impeachment, soft or otherwise, as it may be regarded. But no one can with truthful assurance assert that this partizanship has not been of a large and liberal type, aimed and directed to promote patriotic interests; nor do these critics pretend for a moment to believe it will be used in any other way, while his new duties are being performed. It may, then, be fairly considered that Secretary Chandler will be found to be pre-eminently "the right man in the right place."

Right here, in closing this hasty review of the Interior Department and the difficulties which surround its administration, it may be said that all the various stories put forward by the sensation-mongers of the "leading dailies," stationed at the National Capital, are wholly without foundation in fact.

Among the reports most persistently repeated is that as to the Secretaryship having been refused by a number of gentlemen, before being offered to and accepted by the former Senator for Michigan. This, it can be truthfully stated, has no other foundation in fact than that the appointment was offered by the President to one other gentleman, known to the country as a friend of General Grant, and a prominent citizen of Illinois, who has already been honored by an important diplomatic position. Mr. C. is the only other person to whom the vacant portfolio was tendered.

Then, as to the ill-will felt by members of the Cabinet toward their new colleague, a little exercise of common sense is sufficient to show the untenable character of the rumor. But it can be asserted, without fear of contradiction, that on the contrary, the appointment of Mr. Chandler is more than satisfactory to every member of the Cabinet. His ability and fitness is fully recognized; his long service and high integrity make him the peer of the proudest of those who sit at that

Council Board. So, too, with all the stories that prevail about changes in the department itself, the removal of General Cowan, for instance, all of them are mere falsehoods, blown upon the idle winds by idle journalists, who, in the lack of real news, illustrate the mischief that "Satan finds for idle hands (and pens) to do."

The country will be fully satisfied with Mr. Chandler's administration of his important duties, though his work therein will not be without a continuation of the annoyances to which his short acceptance of the Secretaryship has already been subjected.

A recent Berlin letter says:

"The internal reforms of Prussia was Stein's great achievement. In reading the royal orders which gave effect to his plans, in reflecting on the mind which could embrace so many subjects, in comparing the Prussia of to-day with the Prussia of the last century, one is almost appalled. With the single exception of representative parliaments—which were indeed in his plan—there is almost nothing distinguishing modern from medieval Prussia which does not owe itself to Stein. He elevated the middle classes to political rights. He made citizens out of the peasant serfs. He established general rules regarding property, which were the same for peasant, artisan, and noble. He introduced a complete and liberal system of municipal government. He reformed the administration of the provinces and counties. He proclaimed the right of every man to learn and follow any trade he pleased. He emancipated the Jews, and obtained for them the doubtful privilege of military service. He reorganized the political machinery of the Government, defined more clearly the functions of each Minister, and the duties of subordinate bureaus. He likewise restored order to the confused finances of the kingdom. While doing all this, he was organizing leagues among the officers and nobles, which were intended to prepare Prussia for a renewal of the efforts to throw off the yoke of the French master."

As Gen. Wade Hampton has urged upon friends of the "Lost Cause" the example of Prussia, in resisting the first Napoleon, and in reorganizing the kingdom and people thereof, after that warrior had almost destroyed both, as one worthy to be followed by the South, it is an act of benevolence to point out what it is the ex-Confederate General desires his friends to follow and imitate. Von Stein was the first organizing statesman of the new Prussia. We fail to find any evidence, however, that Wade Hampton or any of his friends propose to repeat the illustrious example above outlined.

THE FREE SOUTH.

A famous English economist wrote—that whoever owned the land of a State, controlled its political affairs. Great Britain, and the former slave States of this Union, are in proof of the wisdom of this declaration. An examination of the condition prevailing before the emancipation of the slaves, will show, within the States that, in 1851, attempted rebellion, and were not defeated until 1865, as marked a tendency, area and conditions being considered, to the absorption of the land by a limited class of persons, as has, for more than a century, been the especial bane of Great Britain. Slavery grew apparently stronger with every year's increase of this monopoly. The United States census for several decades before the civil war, will show, also, that slavery grew, relatively, weaker in the States, or portions of States where there was exhibited a marked tendency to the subdivision of the land. In several States, some interesting facts may be gleaned. Take South Carolina, for example, and it could be established that the non-slaveholding whites, or those who owned but very few slaves, had gradually been pressed back from the fertile middle belt of counties in that State, into the more mountainous and sterile portions. The men who fought under Marion and Sumpter came of this stock, while the wealthier planters and larger slave-owners living nearer the coast, were neutral or Tory, to a considerable extent. Not, of course, entirely so, for there were men of heroic mould among them. But the descendants of those who made up the rank and file of the South Carolinian patriot force, are to be chiefly found among the "poor whites," as they have long been contemptuously called. In Georgia, similar conditions prevailed, and all through the rich valley of the Tennessee, in that named State, and in Alabama, too, may be found the evidence, as you ride over the larger plantations, of earlier settlement and smaller farms.

No well-informed reader or observer will, at this period of the world's progress, deny for a moment, that the most prosperous countries are those in which the soil is secured by, and divided among, the largest number of persons. The vast recuperative powers of France are, in great part, due to the one magnificent result of her great revolution, which, sweeping away the feudal system, left her a nation of freeholders—a State founded on the most conservative elements to be found in human civilization—a free people living in free homesteads. Pauperism is a trivial evil in France, as compared with the growing curse under which Great Britain labors. The land monopoly and continued absorption existing there, is a fruitful source and principal cause of the necessities which make the poor rates so grievous a burden. Nearly sixty million dollars annually, is what the British people pay for the support of their paupers. Germany has grown strong with every year's growth of the system of peasant proprietorship, inaugurated in Prussia by Baron Stein and Count von Hardenburg, after the First Napoleon proved to the German statesmen, as he did to others, that the iniquities of the feudal system could not sustain great States. Italy is growing stronger. She has been able to maintain her aspirations for national unity, largely because of the material strength found in the fact that she possessed ten million peasant-farmers and land-owners. The troubles of European Turkey are, in the main, the result of land monopoly. When the Osmanlis broke up the Greek Empire and the Dacian Kingdom, they found themselves a war-like minority, obliged to make terms with the Slave and Rumelian possessors of the land. The process was sharp and direct. The land-owners became Moslems, and the feudal system was strengthened, contrary to the traditionary ideas of the Turks, who are themselves a branch of a stock that maintain, more or less distinctly, the common ownership of the soil. Where the Slave Moslems are not found, the Turkish Government controls the land-renting, or selling the use, under liberal conditions. All the leading disturbances in Turkey, of late years, grow out of the practical serfdom of the landless "Raqahs," or Christian peasants. Russia is an example of how a vast change in conditions can be effected without great social disorders. The emancipation of twenty million of serfs in that empire has been effected with less disorder and cost than did the abolition of our system of slavery. This result is largely due to the underlying condition of the Russian peasant. He was ad scripta gleba—or, as they themselves expressed it—“we belong to the proprietor, but the land belongs to us.” The common ownership of the land in the village commune is the one great and radical distinction between the Russian slave and that of the working masses in other portions of the civilized world. The Imperial Government, as a matter of State policy, has been, for ten years past, actively engaged in establishing the same system in the Polish provinces of Russia, thus separating the peasantry from the upper classes, and thereby making a wide breach in the anti-Russian sentiments of that people. The condition of British India has been largely affected by past efforts, made in ignorance, on the part of Anglo-Indian officials, to break up the system of village or common ownership of the land. Since the Sepoy rebellion, however, attention has been called to native and race institutions and ideas, and the British rulers of the hundred million of people who inhabit the Hindoo peninsular, have found it to their interest to preserve the village communes against the rapacity of the higher caste natives, land-owners and usurers. It is probable that the many century-crowned stability of Japan and China, is due in large degree to their land systems.

Attention has been called to these facts, simply to illustrate the growth of free labor and its concomitant advantages, where the ownership of the soil is easily accessible to those who must work on it. The old Southern idea was the reverse of this. There are not wanting those who still hope and struggle for the maintainance of a baronial or land-owning class. But the forces of free labor are at work, in spite of all the efforts made by the land-owning minority. The United States census of 1870 establishes this quite conclusively. The following table is in illustration of the change that had taken place in the five years or so, following the surrender of the Confederate armies :

FARM AREA IN THE EX-REBEL STATES.
Total Improved and Unimproved Lands, Number of Farms, small and large, (per U. S. Census 1860 and 1870.)

STATES.	TOTAL ACRES IN FARMS.				Total number of farms.		Under three acres	From three and under fifty acres.		Fifty and under one hundred acres.		One hundred and under five hundred acres.		Five hundred acres and over.		Average size of farms in acres.
	Improved.		Unimproved.		1870	1860		1870	1860	1870	1860	1870	1860	1870	1860	1870	1860
	1870.	1860	1870.	1860
Alabama.....	5,062,204	6,885,724	9,898,974	12,718,821	67,382	53,128	40,160	21,837	14,003	12,060	11,719	13,455	1,455	2,712	222	346
Arkansas.....	1,859,821	1,983,313	5,737,475	7,590,393	49,424	39,004	33,153	21,626	7,640	6,957	3,465	4,231	166	876	154	245
Florida.....	736,172	654,213	1,637,369	2,266,015	10,241	6,568	7,069	3,514	1,355	1,162	1,570	1,432	247	288	232	444
Georgia.....	6,831,856	8,062,758	16,816,085	18,587,732	69,956	62,003	32,170	17,353	18,371	14,129	17,490	18,821	1,925	3,504	338	480
Louisiana.....	2,045,640	2,707,108	4,980,177	6,591,468	28,481	17,328	68.	19,363	7,730	3,838	3,064	3,753	4,955	792	1,532	247	536
Mississippi.....	4,209,146	5,065,755	8,911,967	10,773,929	68,023	42,840	46,032	19,879	11,967	9,204	8,938	11,408	1,086	2,349	193	370
North Carolina.....	5,268,742	6,519,284	11,576,668	17,215,685	93,565	75,203	293	55,281	27,811	22,167	18,493	13,819	19,220	1,005	1,495	212	316
South Carolina.....	3,010,539	4,572,060	9,094,741	11,623,859	51,859	33,171	188	35,847	8,266	8,48	6,930	7,112	11,369	594	1,811	233	488
Tennessee.....	6,843,287	6,795,337	12,737,935	13,873,828	118,141	82,368	170	70,925	31,930	27,778	22,829	18,803	21,903	462	1,079	166	261
Texas.....	2,964,833	2,650,781	15,431,687	22,693,247	61,125	42,891	717	42,873	22,120	10,890	7,857	6,268	6,831	377	555	301	591
Virginia.....	8,165,040	11,437,821	9,980,871	19,679,215	73,849	92,605	137	27,683	27,500	17,203	21,145	26,636	34,300	2,125	3,523	246	324
	46,937,283	56,332,254	119,803,950	142,644,192	692,076	549,109	2,190	416,556	269,565	143,415	123,883	119,636	147,925	10,234	19,344	281	394
Average size of farms in these States (fractions omitted),

Average size of farms in these States (fractions omitted), 281 | 394

It will be seen that the census of 1870 shows one subdivision which is not found in that of 1860. This is that of farms under three acres—without doubt, market gardens, in the main located near the seaports and large towns of the South, and devoted to the raising of vegetables and fruits. It will also be observed that the largest increase of farms is in the smaller divisions, there being a total of 114,574, under twenty acres in extent, against the 92,416 additional farms, between twenty and fifty acres in extent. Again, there is a total increase of 206,990 farms, under fifty acres each, against an increase of but 14,532, of those between fifty and one hundred acres each. And it is more than probable that a considerable number of all the additional farms, between forty and one hundred acres in extent, are obtained from the Public Lands of the South, through the settlements made under the amended homestead act of 1866. The smaller farms are generally owned by the freed people.

It will also be observed that, while there is a large increase in farms under one hundred acres in extent, by the census of 1870, there is as marked a decrease in the number of the larger farms. The following summary will establish this:

SMALL FARMS.	Total No. Farms.
	1860	1870
Under three acres		2,190
From 3 and under 50 acres	209,566	416,556
From 50 and under 100	123,883	143,415
	333,449	562,161

Increase in 1870 of farms under 100 acres.. 228,712

LARGE FARMS.	Total number of farms.
	1860.	1870.
100 and under 500 acres...	147,925	119,636
500 and under 1,000 acres	10,344	10,243
	167,269	129,870

Decrease of large farms in 1870..... 37,399

The annexed table still further illustrates the changes in this direction, giving, as it does, the number of farms between three and fifty acres:

† A decrease.

* Total increase.

The foregoing will bear further examination. It will be observed that in the smallest division the largest increase is to be found in those States where the freed people are most numerous, as in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina. Arkansas also shows a large increase, principally along the Mississippi, in the southeast counties of the State. The States named show a total increase of farms, less than ten acres in extent, of 38,579 in number. The next division, of from 10 to under 20 acres, show, in the same States, excepting Arkansas, a total in such farms, to the number of 30,081. Herein, the States with the largest white population have a majority, Texas, Tennessee, and North Carolina, alone having 29,558. In the last and largest division (up to fifty acres) the States of Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas, show a total of 53,077 such farms.

Taking the total increase, and it will be found that the five States in which the colored people are in excess of the whites, show an increase in such farms to the number of 87,254, or over two-fifths of the total. Taking population into consideration, and the result is far more favorable. The following summary will show this :

	No. of Farms from 3 to 50 acres.	Total Pop.
Ex-Rébel States having an excess of whites.	119,739	6,039,103
Do. of colored	87,254	3,455,253

The foregoing figures will give one of the small farms indicated to each thirty-nine and one-half persons, in the States containing a minority of the white population, while in the other six States the proportion is as one farm to about each fifty and two-fifths persons.

It will be seen that there is a decrease exhibited by the census of 1870, in the farm area of these States, as compared with the census of 1860. A similar decrease is exhibited in the cereal productions. Cotton, however, had not decreased. The total farm area was—in 1860, 198,976,446 acres; in 1870, 166,491,233 acres, a decrease in area of 32,185,213 acres.

Examination, however, will show an area of improved land as large in proportion to the whole area, within the farm boundaries, at the census of 1870, as was the case in 1860. At the latter date the area under cultivation was not quite three and one-third acres to the total farm area. In 1870 it maintained the same relative ratio. This proportionate equality of cultivation is due, doubtless, to the remarkable increase of small farms, which these tables show to have taken place.

The results thus exhibited were a consequence of but five or six years of free labor, under conditions not at all advantageous. The five years that have elapsed since the last general census was taken, have not been retroactive in this direction, in spite of the period of business disasters which have been a part of them. The reports of various boards of trade, &c., at New Orleans, Galveston, Mobile, Savannah, Wilmington, Charleston, Richmond, and Norfolk, all speak of the remarkable increase of small "truck farms," and the growth of a new business to large dimensions, in the shipment to Northern markets of early vegetables and small fruits. The Southern papers teem with paragraphs, showing that the colored people are eager to become land-owners, and that in a large degree their laudable ambition is being realized. A partial exhibit for 1874-5, in the State of Georgia, shows, in 48 of the more populous counties out of the 138 in that State, that the changes indicated as sure to result from free labor, are becoming rapidly manifest. The following summary is interesting :

Acres in corn, 659,996; wheat, 125,537; clover, 2,370; cotton, 549,396; tobacco, 542; gardens, 5,124; total, 1,342,965 acres.

These figures are from data collected by the State Department of Agriculture, and show, it is stated, a very large increase in the land under cultivation, especially for cereals. The number of hired hands is stated at 12,926, evidently showing that there is a considerable number of white persons belonging to the land-owning class, who work on the soil—a habit heretofore considered unbecoming them. The number of acres of rented land is given at 21,110, and of the hands working on shares, 19,024—making a total working force of wage and share laborers, in the counties embraced, of 31,950.

At this point, the following figures, from the census of 1870, are of value. In the census of 1860, or those preceding, no figures are given as to wages paid for farm labor; but it may be safely assumed that the total for 1860, in the first division, did not exceed in the States under consideration, one-fifth of the amount reported for 1870, or about $19,200,675, as much the largest portion of all agricultural labor was performed by slaves. The ninety-six millions, stated to have been, in 1870, in the ex-rebel States, will not cover, by any means, the total amount, as it does not include the amount earned by the laborers working on shares, who form a very large proportion of Southern farm labor.

RECONSTRUCTED STATES.

	Total amount of farm wages paid during 1870, including board.
Alabama.....	$11,851,870
Arkansas	4,061,952
Florida	1,537,060
Georgia.....	19,787,086
Louisiana.....	11,012,789
Mississippi.....	10,326,794
North Carolina.....	8,342,856
South Carolina.....	7,404,297
Tennessee.....	7,118,003
Texas.....	4,777,638
Virginia.....	9,753,041
	<hr/> $96,003,386

BORDER STATES.

	Total amount of wages paid during 1870, including board.
Delaware.....	$1,696,571
Maryland	8,560,367
West Virginia.....	1,903,788
Kentucky.....	10,709,382
Missouri	8,797,487
	<hr/> $31,667,595

Now, accepting the sums above named, and what do they prove, in conjunction with the large increase of land ownership? Beyond question, the fact that, in spite of all obstacles, the new order of society is winning its reforming and regenerating place.

Wendell Phillips once used a remarkable illustration, in regard to the problem of the South. It has been alluded to before, but will bear restatement. The Southern problem, he said, in substance, was like that the New England town-meeting proposed to accomplish. A new jail was needed, and the town-meeting, therefore, resolved:

1st, That we will build a new jail.

2d, That we will use the old jail while building the new.

3d, That we will build the new jail on the old site.

4th, That we will use the materials of the old jail in the construction of the new one.

Exactly this, is what the nation, under Republican Government, has been compelled to attempt, in the former slave States. A new temple is being constructed. The old one must still be, in large part, used. The old materials form a most important part of those necessary for the greater edifice, whose walls rise very slowly, but whose foundations are being, it is shown, surely and securely laid, and imbedded on the granite itself. The new materials are there, visible to all men. Hardly used, it is true, but becoming more shapely and comely, year by year. The stone rejected by the original builders, is to be the corner and crowning-stone of the nobler structure. Let the work press forward, as it surely will, until in all fair and stately beauty, the Free South stands before us, symmetrical, noble and massive—a fit abode for a free people, redeemed, regenerated, disenthralled.

THE private or trustee savings banks of Great Britain report annually to the Government. At the close of the year ending Nov. 20, 1874, there were 474 of these banks, being seven less than for the preceding year. The number of open accounts was 1,463,560, and the amount due depositors was £41,467,171, or about $207,335,855. The increase in accounts was 18,071, and in deposits, £941,320, or about $4,706,600. The average deposit was about six dollars, and the number of receipts, 1,835,763. The number of withdrawal payments was 983,608, the payments averaging $42 each. The trustee savings banks do not show any decrease in the total deposited, though the Government or Post-Office banks, have increased their receipts from $25,000,000, in 1864, to $115,000,000, in 1874.

SOUTHERN FATUITY.

Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, ex-Lieutenant-General in the defunct Confederate army, is a gentleman of far more than ordinary natural ability and force of character; a man of culture, too, and a citizen of whom it may well be supposed, that, according to his lights, he desires the well-doing of the community in which he lives. He is, however, an admirable illustration of what is not so admirable in itself—the man whose prejudices make him fatuous; whose usefulness is destroyed by illusions, and whose civic outlook is controlled by what has been, not animated and aroused by what is to be done, or ought to, or may be achieved. He is one of the foremost leaders of the "Southern Historical Society," and pleads for the "Lost Cause" with the robust vigor of a soldier passionately attached to what he defended.

The men who "marched to the music of the Union" are not inclined to decry or deride this spirit; the people who sustained in the field and worked and suffered to help on the final victory, will not throw stones at the manly Confederate who pleads for the dignity of his sacrifices. But all of us, as citizens, have another duty to perform. That duty is to see that the great issues which animated the armed strife are not lost to view, either by the corroding indifference of prosperity, or the sentimental halo which Time throws around great deeds of courage, the clash of arms, the shock of contending armies.

It must not be forgotten that organized injustice made a "Lost Cause" for Southern eloquence to "spoon" over. Without slavery, and the organized attempt to nation-ate Sovereignty" secession," would nity even of an respectable party. ne of provincial-narrowness that, n of government, on of speculative ng out of our de-ntal unification, have forever excluded it from the domain of practical affairs. Slavery alone, by its control of fifteen States, its monopoly of valuable staples, and its wealth-making quality, lent to these doctrines a force not otherwise available.

The leaders of the "Lost Cause," cannot avoid the infamy attaching to their endeavors to create a vast confederacy, the corner stone of which was to be African Slavery. They would be very willing to draw the veil on that fact, and confine the discussion to the differing theories of sovereignty and government, which is, as then, and is now, assumed to be justification for all that was done, or, in fact, what may hereafter be attempted.

Just as in 1861, and the preparatory years that preceded it, "State Sovereignty" and the "Right of Secession" were put forth to unite a people who, though apparently profiting by slavery, could not have been induced to plunge into revolution on its behalf alone; so now there is a studied and well-directed effort to revive the doctrine of "State Sovereignty" as a vindication of the South and its "Lost Cause,"—the real object being to re-assert in law, government, and its administration, the doctrine of human inequality before the law, and thereby achieve the overthrow in fact, if not in form, of all the safeguards established by Republican policy for the vindication and maintenance of its cardinal doctrines.

None are so blind as they who will not see. General Hampton presents a capital example of this. In an elaborate address, delivered at the organization of the Southern Historical Society, he appealed fervently to Southern "patriotism" (!) to preserve the memories of the rebellion. He set forth that—"As it was the duty of every man to devote himself to the service of his country in the great struggle which has just ended so disastrously, not only to the South, but to the cause of Constitutional government under Republican institutions in the new world; so now, when that country is prostrate in the dust, weeping for her dead who died in vain to save her liberties, every pa-patriotic impulse should urge her surviving children to vindicate the great principles for which she fought. * * * These are the imperative duties imposed upon us of the South ; and the chief peril of the times is, that, in our despair at the evil that has fallen on us, we forget those obligations to the eternal principles for which we fought ; to the martyred dead who gave up their lives for their principles ; * * * and to our children who should be taught to cling to them with unswerving fidelity. If those who are to come after us, and to whose hands the destinies of our country are soon to be committed, are properly instructed in the theory and practice of Republican institutions ; if they are made to comprehend the origin, progress and culmination of that great controversy between the antagonistic sections of this continent, which began in the convention of 1787, and ended, for the time being, at Appomattox in 1865, they cannot fail to see that truth, right, justice were on the side of their fathers, and they will surely strive to bring back to the Republic those cardinal principles upon which it was founded, and on which alone it can exist. * * *

"Our care should be to bring her (the Republic) back to her old and safe anchorage." * * *

Having made these plain avowals, Gen. Hampton illustrates his ideas of devotion by citing examples from other histories than that of his own section. He is unfortunate in this ; especially where he launches forth in vigorous praise of Prussia. He appealed to the South not to lose heart, but to "cherish the spirit of freedom" and to remember that there is always "hope for a people who will not tamely give up their rights, and who, amid the changes of time, the trials of adversity, remain steadfast to their convictions that liberty is their birthright."

To illustrate this, Wade Hampton added :

"When Napoleon, in that wonderful campaign of Jena, struck down in a few weeks the whole military strength of Prussia, destroying that army with which the great Frederick had held at bay the combined forces of Europe, and crushed out, apparently forever, the liberties, seemingly the very existence of the great State, but one hope of her disenthralment and regeneration was left her—the unconquered and unconquerable patriotism of her sons. As far as human foresight could penetrate the future this hope appeared but a vain and delusive one ; yet only a few years passed before her troops turned the scale to victory at Waterloo, and the treaty of Paris atoned in part for the mortification of that of Tilsit."

The fatuous spirit of the foregoing is apparent when it is borne in mind that it was not for liberty but slavery that the South struck its heaviest blow, that the Confederacy was the aggressor, and not the Union ; that the Nation has never oppressed, but enfranchised ; that it never invaded but to defend its own ; that the victorious cause in our war, was not like that of Napoleon, the cause of a foreign invader, reaping the success of his own ambition, but the resistance of a people "slow to anger," who had been roused by a treacherous attempt to create within their own borders and out of a common territory, a foreign nationality and power.

But it is not alone in the differences of fact which exist as to the rebellion itself, that the fatuity of this Prussian illustration is most apparent. Its incongruous appropriation by Wade Hampton can be made most strikingly evident by using the words by which he himself describes the means of its regeneration :

* * * "She educated her children by a system which made them good citizens in peace and formidable soldiers in war ; she kindled and kept alive the sacred fire of patriotism ; she woke the slumbering spirit of the Fatherland ; and what has been the result of this self devotion of a whole people for half a century ?"

Of course he recalls, as such, the recent defeat of France by Germany under the leadership of Prussia.

Yet every step by which Prussia trained her people to the great end now achieved, is the opposite of that which Wade Hampton and his confreres have recognized, supported, or do now maintain.

Under the lead of Baron Von Stein and Count Von Hardenburg, as ministers, in 1810,—the period of Prussian humiliation by Napoleon—the King did, what ? Let a recognized authority, compacting history into brief space, reply : "But during this riod" (the six years following Jena) "the statesmen of Prussia laid the foundations of its subsequent greatness by unfettering labor and commerce, by granting municipal self-government, and basing the military power of the State on the people."—Appleton's Cyclopaedia, vol. xii, Prussia. In other words: the monarchy of Prussia, in resisting foreign invasion and oppression, which she herself had not provoked, threw itself almost unrestrained into the arms of the whole people,—abolishing serfdom; bringing about the destruction of the federal system; a great subdivision of the land, which is still in progress,—the free and compulsory system of public education, open to every child in the land, from the elementary school to the highest university; the equalization of taxation, and many other reforms.

Not one of these, or its equivalents, lies within the purview of Wade Hampton, or his associates, of the "Southern Historical Society." He and his waged war to perpetuate, not abolish, serfdom. He and his are opposed to the establishment and maintenance, at the public cost, of an equal system of free schools. He and his do not recognize one-third of the entire population of their section as part of the people to be appealed to for the cherishing of sacred memories, the defence of liberty, or to be trained into civic usefulness and capacity. At the best, they only admit their right, not to legislate, or represent themselves, but to be legislated for, and represented by others, to wit: the superior race, who fought for slavery, and now defend it as a "lost cause."

There is not a single fact in the history of Prussian regeneration and greatness, which sustains a single one of Wade Hampton's fallacies and assumptions. If any one has the right to draw encouragement from the example of Prussia, it is the soldiers and statesmen of the Union—the men who fought for its integrity, and those who have moulded its victories into imperishable institutions. It is they, who, trusting the people, the whole people, Wade Hampton, as well as Beverley Nash—his one-time body-servant and slave—the Union soldier and the Confederate, also; the freeman and the freed-man, have sought—by impartial citizenship, equal educational opportunities, laws so equitable that all should acknowledge the fact—to build broad and high an enduring popular Government; a perpetual Union; a perfectly free Nationality; against which, even the wrath of the Southern Historical Society may not prevail.

"IMPERILED MISSISSIPPI."

Such is the significant caption of an article appearing in the Memphis Appeal a few days before the recent election in the State named. An apology is due to truth for so terming such a flagrant falsehood as occurred there on the 2d of November. An election, in the true sense, did not take place; but, by means of a systematic and organized plan of judicious murder and well applied violence, on the part of an armed minority, the majority were rendered powerless. "The South" watched that process with strained attention, and the Democratic party everywhere welcomed with plaudits the atrocious policy. In the North, a small knot of jaundiced politicians and journalists, who make their "cake and ale," by shouting lustily "none of it for us—we are independent"—have exerted themselves to encourage, after the manner of vicious boys, the malignants who were engaged in harrying the poor and defenceless.

The State of Mississippi has a legitimate Republican majority of at least 25,000. Yet the minority have carried the State Treasurer, Legislature, and three out of six Congressmen. Fuller advices are necessary before making a careful annalysis of the whole affair. But enough is known to justify the statement that the whole proceeding was one of the vilest character.

The circumstances are phenomenal, not so much because of the acts done in Mississippi, as of the manner in which the results have been received by the country. Unfortunately, in such communities as make up the Mississippi Democracy, it is a fact, that peace, order, fair elections, and the lack of organized murder and outrage on the part of one class against another, would be so different from what is usual, as to be truly looked upon as a matter of wonder. No misrepresentation of Republicanism, in or out of office, is too vile for Pro-Southern use. No terrorism, it is evident, is too great to be exercised, if it can be done in any reasonableness of security, by those who run the White League and are determined to bring every Southern State under subjection. These are no Cassandra-croakings — the facts, as regards Mississippi, are too self-evident.

But the manner in which the situation is being misrepresented, needs to be exposed. Organized violence and oppression in the State itself; systematic denunciation and falsification, with regard to Republican and Northern-born loyalists, are the roads by which the White Leaguers travel to their end. Even the Southern Democracy have found out that an active public sentiment at the North is a power to be dreaded. The passage of the Ku-Klux legislation of 1871, and the overwhelming defeat of Mr. Greeley in the following year, were proofs to their leaders of the potent power of this corrective. Since then they have shrewdly, and with great skill, shifted their ground. The campaign since then, so far as the North is concerned, has been one of cunning defamation, aided in this by a malignant and sensation press, who have the capacity to make the worse appear the better cause, and catching, too, a reflex tide in the currents of opinion, a large degree of success has been achieved in the work of defamation. Up to a certain point, Mississippi Republicans have escaped, not the infliction of organized terror, but that of systematic slander.

During the past year, and especially in the campaign now closing or closed, all the ingenuity of the most skillful of political managers in and out of the press, has been devoted to destroying public confidence at the North in the honesty of the State and local Republican officials of Mississippi. One week preceding the election, the Memphis Appeal, in an editorial under the caption borrowed for this article, so vigorously expressed the Democratic spirit and policy, that it is worth while quoting some few sentences. It is declared that—"The liberty, the prosperity, the peace, the tranquility, the property, the very existence of the people are jeopardized, and they are working with the energy of despair. With anything like a fair election, the tax-payers will triumph over the tax-eaters."

Tennessee Democrats are then advised that they must aid—mark the euphony—"not by the importation of voters, but by thwarting the attempt to inject fraudulent votes at the precincts contiguous to the Tennessee line." The italics are not the original. It proceeds to declare that the colored "repeaters" are to be imported by the Republicans—the accusation being made to cover the large Democratic increase, which will surely be observed in the returns from counties adjacent to Tennessee and Alabama. After urging the appointment of committees from Memphis to visit the Mississippi polling places, it proceeds to declare that "The fight which the tax-payers of Mississippi are making for that peace and quietude which pervades Arkansas, Texas, Alabama, Georgia, Virginia and Tennessee since their deliverance from carpet-bag rule, commands the sympathy and admiration of the whole South. We have an abiding faith in the success of the tax-paying people. The suffering masses understand the vital issues involved, and they are aroused, determined to triumph."

Governor Ames and "his corrupt place-men" were denounced, and then the writer adds that the struggle is one "between corrupt, prostituted power on one side, and the tax-paying people on the other. It is to decide whether carpet-bag domination shall be perpetuated, or whether its shameful reign shall give place to law, order, economy, honesty and reform. It is to decide whether the prostrated industry of Mississippi, occasioned by a hostility of races and high taxes, shall continue to languish, or whether it shall be quickened and fostered by rigid economy, wholesome legislation, and harmonious relations between the whites and blacks, whose interests are identical. The long continued extravagance and reckless abuse of power of the Radicals, their success in arraying the blacks against the whites, have been the fountains of all the evils that beset Mississippi. The honest masses, white and black, see that there can be no healthy energy and prosperity so long as the State is rent by hatreds, antagonisms, the prolific sources of riots and outlawry."

It is declared that Republican rule has "been one long steal since the carpet-baggers assumed control of Mississippi. They have never sought to rebuild the land ruined by the war. That would have been their ruin."

These be grave allegations. If true, they would justify the bitterest denunciation, the most energetic action the law and the potential ballot could justify. But in spirit, and as to the letter, in the main, they are wholly false. It is part of the Southern Democratic campaign. It is part of the stock-in-trade of certain newspapers of the Northern cities. As to the material prosperity of Mississippi, it is far better than there was fair reason to hope for, so soon after a desolating war. As to the administration of the public trusts entrusted to them, the Republicans of Mississippi may point with pride to their record as contrasted with that of their Democratic predecessors.

"Comparisons are odious" of course. Two wrongs can never make one right—try as one may to achieve the impossible. Hence, there is no justification for Republican dishonesty, in proving that Democrats have been more corrupt. But if the cry of "thief" comes from thieves, whose acts necessitated the summoning of a national posse comitus for their suppression, it will be just as well to look into the facts they are now distorting. Here is a table of disbursements, in Mississippi. The last two years are those of the military reconstruction government; the others were made under Democratic control:

1858	$614,659.52
1859	707,015.00
1860	663,536.55
1861	1,824,161.75
1862	6,819,894.54
1863	2,210,794.23
1864	5,446,732.06
1865	1,410,250.13
1866	1,860,809.89
1867	625,817.29
1868	525,678.80
1869	463,219.71
	$23,271,569.47

Subtracting the last two years, $988,898.51, from the above total, and there is left $22,282,670.96, or an annual average expenditure for the preceeding ten years of $2,228,267. Of course these disbursements include the rebel expenditures during the war, but deducting, say, one-half of the seventeen millions and more they spent during those years, and it will be seen that even the so-called "ordinary" expenditures were very large and must have been profligate in character.

The Republican expenditures have been small compared to these figures, especially when it is remembered that a large degree of reconstruction, such as the rebuilding and refurnishing of public edifices, &c., has had to be done, and the whole machinery of government has necessarily had to be enlarged to meet the demands of the large increase of citizens, which emancipation and enfranchisement added to the body politic.

During the first official year, (1870), under Republican rule, the State of Mississippi spent $1,061,249.90, of which total it is claimed that $444,608.22 was paid out for interest on funds, "stolen" by the Democrats and to pay for repairs &c., to the State edifices. Compared with 1858, this sum is $66,444.69 less than expenditures of that year, and $157,800.17 less than those of 1859.

The average expenditures of the twelve years, from 1858 to 1869, estimating the political community to be governed according to the census of 1860, was $62.95 for each individual, and for every year $5.24 for each person. The gross expenditures even in a depreciated currency (greenbacks) of the first year of Republican rule for "ordinary" and "extraordinary" purposes, was but $1.28 for each individual of the political community, estimating the population by the census of 1870. If the taxes were paid by white people alone, it would be only $2.78 per capita. The amount for only "ordinary" purposes, reducing it to gold, if the whole amount were paid by whites alone, would be only $1.44 to each individual, but for both races, constituting the constituent political community, now governed and protected by the laws, it was only 66 cents each.

The charge is made that the State debt of Mississippi is over $4,000,000. The funded and floating indebtedness is, by the State Treasurer, shown to be as follows :

Bonds due in 1876.....	$100,000
Bonds due in 1876.....	150,000
Bonds due in 1877.....	65,000
Bonds due in 1877.....	250,000
Bonds due in 1878.....	107,250
Bonds due in 1879.....	65,000

$737,850

University trust bonds to be de- ducted.....	$230,000
---	-----------

Bonded debt.....	$507,000
Certificates of indebtedness.	194,000
State warrants in circulation July 1, 1875.	374,000

Large payments have been made recently and the probable present indebtedness of the State is about $500,000. The repudiation by the Democracy of the State debt of $24,000,000, or thereabouts, which they themselves had recklessly contracted, is not a matter to be forgotten by Americans jealous of the People's good name.

But it is not alone in repudiation and rebellion that the Democracy of the ante bellum days, (whose leaders are still in command of the party there,) exhibited the worst reasons for not trusting them, but in their ability to perpetuate the grossest corruption and still hold possession of the State.

Look for a moment at the records. The General Government, that is, the representatives of the whole people—the Union—donated to the State of Mississippi not less than 5,630,882 acres of land for the purpose of aiding internal improvement, this total being prior to the rebellion of 1861. In addition thereto, every sixteenth section of the public land in the State was given for the endowment of common or public schools. Mississippi, before reconstruction, and under Democratic rule, only succeeded in insulting the primary instincts of American life by establishing, as an apology for a free school system, a poor or pauper school in each of the several counties. But the school land was all frittered or stolen away. At one time $2,000,000, from this source, was invested in the Planters' Bank, by order of a Democratic Legislature, and entirely lost. The chief managers were Democratic politicians. The schools have lost the income. A most instructive history of Southern Democratic misrule would be found in the system of spoliation carried on against the common schools land. In Mississippi the fund arising from their sale was lost as stated. In Arkansas it is well known that the State was swindled out of the proceeds by a combination or ring, of which United States Senators Sebastian and Johnson, rebel Democrats, were the recognized leaders. In Alabama the result is as bad, though the details are not so flagrant. The land was under the control of the township trustees, and the charge has been recently re-made, that the larger part of the proceeds passed into their pockets, and were often used to educate their own sons at universities at home and abroad. Many townships were owned by a very few planters, who divided the school fund—the negroes being of course excluded, and the "poor whites" being either absent or few in numbers. These illustrations will serve to show the facts existing elsewhere in the Southern "Land States." The entire amount of land donated by the General Government to Mississippi is equal to one-sixth of its whole area. The Democratic party had the control of the State of Mississippi, continuously for thirty-five years. It had the management of its property, and the result is seen in the squandering of the whole, accompanied, too, with the destruction of its credit. The annexed figures are taken from the State reports, made to the Legislature by Governor McNutt, and the State Auditor, Mr. Saunders. They show the gross amount of which the State was plundered :

Value of Lands donated by the Federal Government.....	$16,000,000
Two and three per cent. fund..	1,000,000
Sinking Fund.....	500,000
Borrowed from capitalists abroad.....	7,000,000
Interest due on same.....	15,000,000

Total..... $40,500,000

Nor is this all. The State records teem with proofs of corruption. Here are some items : In 1848 $70,000 was appropriated for he purchase of slaves to work on railroads being built by subsidized corporations. In 1839 the office of State Engineer was created at a salary of $5,000 per annum—a sinecure. In the session of 1835, only fourteen general acts were passed, against seventy-four acts also of incorporation, and fifty-five of a private character. From 1835 to 1840, all the State employees and workmen were paid in currency depreciated to forty cents and less on the dollar. So one might go on indefinitely.

The following table of receipts and disbursements will serve to show, as specimens, how admirably Democracy managed the State finances during ante bellum days. How does it look in the suit of tax-payers vs. tax-eaters of which the Memphis Appeal talks so pointedly?

Year	Receipts	Expenditures	Excess of Latter
1839-'40.....	$161,161 79	$491,632 15	$330,470 36
1841.....	161,811 28	539,457 75	377,606 47
1856.....	736 531 18	825,562 53	89,031 37
1858-'59.....	624,236 16	756 500 19	132 264 03
1860-'61.....	163,760 00	498 570 10	332,210 10
1862-'63.....	9,270,449 81	8 126,055 55	*

* Excess of Receipts $1,144,394.26.

In 1866-7, there was an excess of receipts over expenditures to the amount of $52,462.38. Nobody seems to know what became of that sum, and it never appears to have been transferred.

But the period immediately preceeding reconstruction is filled with striking examples of the spirit of Democracy. The "Johnson" Legislature of Mississippi, in common with that of other States similarly situated, passed a code of most infamous laws designed to nullify emancipation. But let that pass, as a topic sure to divert us from the logical conclusions to which these statements point. The fiscal legislation of those three years was as corrupt as the laws relating to the colored people were inhuman and infamous. The land tax was designedly made a mere bagatelle, and so arranged that a new valuation should not be effected for several years. But every occupation, of whatever character, was subjected to onerous burdens. The number of such taxes were counted by the hundreds. A tax of one dollar was also laid on every bale of cotton. The rate for general taxes was five mills on a dollar. When the Republicans assumed control, the rate was reduced to four mills, the cotton tax and a large majority of the other special taxes on industry and occupations were repealed; all others being reduced. It is because the land has properly been made to bear a fair share of the burden, that the outcry has been so vigorous.

Two other illustrations of Democratic honesty and economy may be mentioned, and a contrast afforded by Gov. Alcorn's action while Republican Executive. In 1857, Gov. McRea employed a prominent Democrat as State agent to proceed to Washington and collect certain moneys due the State by the National Government. Here is the itemized return:

Due the State.....	$107,000.00
Deposited by the Agent as received by him.....	97,000.00
Charged for collecting the same	15,709.85
Actually received by the State	$81,290.15
Total cost and loss to the State	$25,709.85

In 1870, Gov. Alcorn (Republican) was authorized by the Legislature to proceed to Washington and receive from the General Government Agricultural College scrip for $221,000 acres. An appropriation of $500, was made for his expenses. The Governor went, received the scrip, proceeded to New York, sold it for $180,000, returned to his State within ten days, deposited the money in the Treasury, returning also a portion of the $500 appropriated for his expenses.

During the same period ('65-7,) members of the Legislature were paid $8, per diem, officers and pages $8, $6, and $3 per diem. Mileage was 40 cents per mile. Now it is 20 cents, and the per diem is $7 for members. Tax collectors were allowed 5 and 3 per cent on collections. Sixty thousand dollars were appropriated for destitute confederate soldiers. Twenty thousand dollars were appropriated for the benefit of Jefferson Davis, and twelve hundred dollars for the payment of a commission to visit Washington and ask for his release.

These facts gathered from the records of past Democratic misrule in the State of Mississippi, are a sufficient reply to the claim that party makes of purity par-excellence in public affairs, and by contrast, they show how false are the charges made against the Republican State administration. The truth is, that these charges are as much a part of the system, as the denunciation of "carpet baggers," the murder of Republican leaders, and the terrorizing of the hardworking and inoffensive negro loyalists. It is one side of the campaign. Another is seen in the Memphis Appeal's adroit use of the phrases "tax-payers" and "tax-eaters." As if on one side there were none but persons of property, and on the other, none but the idle and dissolute poor. This latter assertion is as false as is that of corruption. The Northern men who have settled in Mississippi are, in proportion to their numbers, large property-holders and tax-payers. The Southern whites who have associated themselves with the Republican party are, like Governor Alcorn and Flournoy, men of large means. Considering their opportunities, the negroes will show as many tax-payers as the laboring or "poor white" class will do. The census of 1870 shows that in Mississippi there had been an increase in small farms as follows :

Over three and under fifty acres.....	26,153
Over fifty and under one hundred acres.....	2,763
Making a total of.....	28,916

This fact is sufficient to prove that the growth of the freed class has been rapid, for it is among them that the ownership of these farms will chiefly be found. The constant reiteration of the assertion that the Democratic "whites" of such States as Mississippi are the property holders in a special sense, and that no one else can lay claim to such a title, is not only disproved by such facts as that given in relation to the increase of small farms, but it is also shown by the figures of the census in other respects. In the State of Mississippi, according to the numeration of 1860, the number of white inhabitants was 353,899; of slaveholders, but 30,943; and of landowners, (outside the towns,) only 42,840. The large majority of the whites were landless, non-slaveholding, poor, and illiterate. They are all these to-day, and it is that fact, with the bitter jealousy aroused by seeing the real progress made by the freed class, that intensifies their anger and makes these people—the poorer whites—ready tools for the designs of the Democratic leaders. Mississippi is, indeed, "imperiled," and those who have done the deed will surely be the greatest losers.

THE UNITED STATES, SPAIN, AND CUBA.

Discussion over the "Cuban Question" is the order of the day. The situation, it must be confessed, presents dramatic features. There is Don Carlos in Spain offering to unite forces with Don Alfonso for the defense of the "Ever Faithful Isle" against an insurgent people and a rapacious enemy. The London Times in its most startling basso profundo swells the shrill chorus raised by the American press, and declares that the Government of this Republic either means war against Spain or uses the words of a bully as only a coward would do. Home critics assert with great gravity and detailed incident, that the President of the United States is designedly fomenting the causes of war for the purpose of gratifying his own lust of power and the ambition of party friends. Within sight almost of our Southern shores lies Cuba. The flames of her burning plantations and the blood of her people—bond and free—patriot and Spanish —mingle together as fearful evidences of the desolation and ruin that daily extends.

Let us examine the situation then as it relates to the United States, Cuba, and Spain, with a view to ascertaining, if possible, the attitude of the administration and the country, as represented by its policy, towards this matter. These things appear :

1. That the United States and the Kingdom of Spain are still in a friendly and peaceful attitude towards each other. They are old and faithful allies. Nothing has been done by this Government, since it has been under the control of the Republican party, to change these relations. There are unsettled questions, however, which require adjustment. They are both general and special.

2. Our treaty relations with Spain require more careful enforcement and prudent readjustment. The important treaty—in fact, the only one to be so considered—is that which was framed and ratified in 1795. The following articles are, in part, those which must be considered in this connection:

Article VII.—And it is agreed that the subjects or citizens of each of the contracting parties, their vessels or effects, shall not be liable to any embargo or detention on the part of the other for any military expedition or other public or private purposes whatever. And in all cases of seizure, detention or arrest for debts contracted, or offences committed by any citizen or subject of the one party within the jurisdiction of the other, the same shall be made and prosecuted by order and authority of law only, and according to the regular course of proceedings usual in such cases. The citizens and subjects of both parties shall be allowed to employ such advocates, solicitors, notaries, agents and factors as they may judge proper, in all their affairs and in all their trials at law, in which they may be concerned, before the tribunals of the other party; and such agents shall have free access to be present at the proceedings in such causes, and at the taking of all examinations and evidence which may be exhibited in the said trials.

Article XI.—The citizens and subjects of each party shall have power to dispose of their personal goods within the jurisdiction of the other by testament, donation or otherwise, and their representatives, being subjects or citizens of the other party, shall succeed to their said personal goods, whether by testament or ab intestato, and they may take possession thereof, either by themselves or others acting for them, and dispose of the same at their will, paying such dues only as the inhabitants of the country wherein the goods are shall be subject to pay in like cases. And in case of the absence of the representative, such care shall be taken of the goods as of a native in like case until the lawful owner may take measures for receiving them; and if questions shall arise among several claimants to which of them the said goods belong, the same shall be decided finally by the laws and judges of the land wherein the said goods are; and where, on the death of any person holding real estate within the territories of the one party, such real estate would, by the laws of the land, descend on a citizen or subject of the other, were he not disqualified by being an alien, such subjects shall be allowed a reasonable time to sell the same, and to withdraw the proceeds without molestation, and exempt from all rights of detraction on the part of the Government of the respective States.

Careful perusal of the above will satisfy any layman, as well as the best read of diplomatists, that the conditions existing in Cuba during the past six years have resulted in bringing about many and serious violations of the rights of American citizens, as guaranteed under the foregoing provisions. A joint commission is now in session for the settlement of the claims so arising, as well as of others not connected therewith.

But it is the more rigid and vigorous enforcement of these claims and of the rights of our citizens, exposed to infringement by forces that are practically uncontrollable by the Spanish authorities, either in Madrid, or Havana, on which hangs one point of the present discussion.

The other is found in the re-adjustment that it is more than probable our diplomacy is seeking, in the character or construction of the 7th and 18th articles of the treaty of 1795. The same provisions are found in the Netherlands treaty, made by Mr. Adams in 1785, and in the French treaty of 1788, but they have since been abrogated. They contain phrases under which the right of search has been claimed, when either party to the treaty shall be a belligerent, authorizing, it is asserted, its ships of war to stop merchant ships of the other party, visit them and inspect their papers, if they are found "either sailing along the coasts or on the high seas." Under them, Spain, it is claimed, could search our merchant vessels, if this Republic accorded belligerent rights to the Republic of Cuba. Such a claim is on general grounds, and in the advance of maritime and international law, wholly inadmissible in practice and could not be submitted to. Out of the effort of Minister Cushing to negotiate a re-adjustment of this provision, and some others over which there is a difference of construction, has grown all the current talk about a possible war with Spain.

The last, and the all pervading fact, is the existence of such a terrible state of affairs as now prevails in Cuba. The Madrid Government has tried for six years to suppress the rebellion and is now further from doing so than ever. The facts prove this and will not be seriously controverted. Nor can it be denied that the sympathies of our people are avowedly with the patriots, and that many naturalized Cuban-Americans are involved with their former countrymen, actively and passively. Yet the United States has always been and still is struggling to preserve the peace, as between herself and the parties engaged in the struggle. The Government of this Republic has acted with stern impartiality, leaning if at all to the side of Spain, not however from approval of her course, but from a clear and distinct desire to fulfil every international obligation.

This policy has been so far successful in preserving the peace. It has seemed to some—nay, many citizens—as if at times it had been so at the cost of national honor. Yet, a great people can afford to be generous towards one that is struggling through a period of terrible transitions. Cuba is, however, a matter of gravest concern to us, as well as to Spain. The condition of affairs there is a stench in the nostrils of civilization. It is a nuisance under our eyes, growing more rank every day. The wholesale devastation; the ruin of all industries; the increasing blood-thirstiness that prevails, combined with the daily growing desperation of the Spaniards, accustomed so long to rule therein and seeing their sway departing, make the task of a peaceable solution, so far as our position is concerned, more and more fraught with increasing difficulties. The annexation of Santo Domingo, which President Grant urged, was rejected with scorn by the same influences that first denounced him for efforts to keep the peace, and then deride and mock at him as seeking to precipitate conflict and war for the unholy purpose of gratifying his personal ambitions. Yet it can now be seen that the policy it would have inaugurated must have largely accelerated a right solution of the Cuban problem.

It may be said with authority, that there is nothing whatever to justify these reckless assertions—these shameless and scandalous criticisms. The President has neither promoted or favored any scheme calculated to advance personal or party ambitions.

There is nothing in the Cuban situation more alarming than what has always been existing. The recognition of Cuban belligerency is a policy that might lead to a war with Spain—especially, under Spanish interpretation of the eighteenth article of the Treaty of 1795.

It is a matter, therefore, to be judged by the light of prudent reason and the facts in the case—facts that affect us as well as Cuba and Spain—and not by the natural sympathy and sentiment for Cuba we all feel so keenly—the President and his Cabinet equally with the most modest citizen. One thing the country may rest assured of, and that is, that the Administration of President Grant has no desire for war, with either Spain or Mexico, as some have asserted. Every effort is being made, and will continue to be, with due regard to national character and circumstances, to maintain honest peace with all the world—and with our Continental neighbors especially.

The men who led and the men who fought on the Union side during the four bloody years of civil strife that followed Rebellion are not the men who, for ambitious purposes alone, personal or national, desire or endeavor to plunge this generation into another war—even though it be against Spain, and to aid the Cuban Patriots. The policy of President Grant is still found in the celebrated phrase with which he accepted the first Republican nomination for the Presidency—“LET US HAVE PEACE.”

NEW YORK 33D CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.—Hon. Nelson J. Norton, the new Republican member just elected to fill the vacancy in the Thirty-third District of New York—caused by the death of Mr. Allen, Democrat—is a farmer, and a resident of Hinsdale, Cattaraugus county. He was an old Whig, and has been an earnest active Republican ever since the organization of that party. Mr. Norton is not a politician, and has held but one office, we believe, that of member of the lower house of the Legislature of New York, some years ago. Last year Mr. Sessions (Republican,) was defeated by some 2,500 votes, and when the vacancy occurred, the Republicans of Cattaraugus claimed the member, and Mr. Norton was nominated, although he did not seek the place. He is elected by some 1,500 majority, notwithstanding, as the Johnstown Journal says, some opposition from Republicans who were defeated in convention. This election gives a majority in the New York delegation in Congress, and secures the State in case the election of President is thrown into the House of Representatives.

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

NATIONAL.

.....The recent elections have been treated at length elsewhere in the present number of THE REPUBLIC. This remains to be said: that the general tone of the opposition press shows the moral effect to be greater than the actual results achieved. There is a considerable amount of graveyard courage, whose manifestation is exhibited by reckless talking and loud whistling, as the nervous Democrat hurries through the "God's acre!" in which he finds himself belated. But it would be very easy to change the sound to a shriek of fear or a wail of despair. The practical results of the elections held during the year past, can be seen in the following list of Governors, or the other leading State officials chosen:

States.	Office.	Name.	Rep.	Dem.
Kentucky	Governor	Jas. McCreary		1.
California	"	Wm. Irving		2.
Maine	"	S. H. Conner	1.
Iowa	"	S. J. Kirkwood	2.
Ohio	"	R. B. Hayes	3.
Massachusetts	"	A. H. Rice	4.
Maryland	"	J. S. Carroll		5.
Minnesota	"	J. S. Pillsberry.	5.
Pennsylvania	"	J. F. Hartranft	6.
Wisconsin	"	H. Luddington	7.
New-York	Sec. of State	J. Bigelow		4.
Cal.*	Supt. Pub. Inst'	— Carr	8.
Nebraska	Chief Justice	G. D. Ladd	9.
Mississippi	Treasurer	W. L. Hemingray	5.

*California held two State elections.

Kentucky, New York, New Jersey, Kansas, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Ohio, Massachusetts, Virginia, Maryland, Nebraska, and Iowa all show an increased Republican majority in their State Legislatures—the gain, in nearly every instance, being quite large, and in all worthy of note. In the next number of THE REPUBLIC an effort will be made to tabulate the official results in each State, so that it may become a matter of reference.

CONGRESS.

.....The organization of the Forty-Fourth Congress, especially of the House of Representatives, has been a more fruitful theme of discussion during the past month than even the recent elections. There is considerable excitement among the opposition politicians to the Speakership, but so far as the Republicans are concerned, they may properly use an expressive, if not dignified phrase, and declare that it is "none of their funeral." The Republican minority will undoubtedly cast their votes for James G. Blaine, their recognized parliamentary leader at this time. So far as we can judge, the prospects are in favor of the Democratic caucus settling finally upon the Hon. Samuel Randall as their choice for Speaker. Mr. Randall is a fair compromise. He is not very offensive in his devotion to the South, and he is not a "doctrinaire," in his devotion to anything else. On the money question, his election must be regarded as an inflation victory; chiefly so, because the Tilden clique, force the most extreme representative of the free trade and hard money school forward as their representative. The Hon. M. C. Kerr—a suggestive alliterativeness of sound not justified by the personality of the gentleman, is Mr. Randall's most formidable opponent. Both are able men, in spite of their very bad politics and the associations it entails. All other candidates are merely names. Mr. Walker of Virginia, and Messrs. Cox and Wood of New York, are without much real strength, though it is asserted that ex-Governor Walker is likely to develop considerable force as a compromise between Randall and Kerr. He may be named "Mr. Facing-both-ways," as he accepts both views of the financial question, according to the company he is in. He is a fine specimen of the Democratic "carpet-bagger." There is an under-current worthy notice, and that is the quiet prevailing over the other appointments. When the smoke clears away, it will be found that the Southern Democrats have secured the lion's share of the patronage for their section. As they constitute the principal portion of the party, it is but fair they should be rewarded all the more, that a majority of those sent to the House strenuously sought to prevent such rewards from ever being realized, by their persistent efforts to destroy the Union. The Democratic majority has been increased six votes—three each from California and Mississippi. The Republicans will have an additional vote from Oregon, though losing five from Mississippi and California. There will be thirteen contests in the States, and one from the Territory of New Mexico. There are nine Republican seats contested, two by gentlemen of the same party, and four Democratic seats disputed. The House will contain two "Independents," General Banks and Prof. Seelye of Massachusetts, and three "Liberals," Willis, New York; Banning, Ohio, and Goodin, Kansas. These unfortunates can take an unlimited number of the paper "founded by Horace Greeley," and console themselves with their party's misfortunes. The session will prove of great interest, and the proceedings will be watched with grave attention.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT.

..... The alarm aroused by the recent danger of Mr. Wilson has subsided. The Vice-President has had at least one experience altogether pleasant, though it is to be trusted the occasion may not soon arise for a similar manifestation. We refer to the general alarm and sympathy felt everywhere at his danger. Mr. Wilson's life has made up so large a share of the political and patriotic history of the past thirty years, that every one felt his threatened demise as a personal sorrow and national loss. His dangerous sickness gave rise to a very interesting discussion, that, in the event of a vacancy occurring before Congress, as to who would fill his place. The Constitution provides for this, or any other emergency, in the following terms:

ARTICLE I. (5) In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation or inability, both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The only law upon this important subject, is that of March 1, 1792, which declares that the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act, or, if there be none, the Speaker of the House, shall assume the Chief Executive functions. It also provides that, in case both offices become vacant, the Secretary of State shall order an election, except when the vacancy expires within two months of the first Wednesday in the December preceding the close of that Presidential term. The election or appointment of Presidential Electors, when vacancies occur, is to be not less than thirty-four days before the first Wednesday in December of the same year, provided the vacancy occurred at least two months before that date. If it do not so occur, the election shall be for the same date in the next year.

The mooted question was, whether or not the Senate had a President pro tempore. The House is of course still unorganized, and it lies within the possibilities that it may remain so for some time to come. There could be but one answer to the first question. Senator Ferry, of Michigan, is, at this writing, the duly selected presiding officer of the Senate, in Mr. Wilson's absence. If he should be unable to attend the Senate on the 2d inst., Mr. Ferry will take the chair and call that body to order. Had Mr. Wilson died, Mr. Ferry, by law framed in pursuance of the Constitution, would have become acting Vice-President. The Senate is a permanent body, though it is its custom to select its committees at every session, and its officers whenever it has deemed it proper to do so. It may well be considered, however, whether or not there is not a serious possibility involved in the loss we have so gladly escaped.

A contingency might arise some day in the history of the Republic, whose results would be momentous. Suppose for a moment that both a President and Vice-President should be stricken down by death, or otherwise be incapacitated from performing their duties, and the Senate had failed to provide a President pro tempore, or he, too, was dead, the House being also unorganized and without a Speaker, how then would the temporary occupation of the Executive office be provided for?

..... In the list of Vice-Presidents already elected, six vacancies have occurred—three by death and three by reason of the death of the contemporaneous Presidents and the occupation of that office by the Vice-Presidents. The three deaths in office were George Clinton, of New York, who was elected with Mr. Jefferson, for his second term, and re-elected with Mr. Madison. He died at the Capital, during the session of Congress, in April, 1812. He succeeded Aaron Burr, and served from March, 1805. Senator Wm. H. Crawford, of Georgia, filled the balance of his term, which expired March 30, 1813. Elbridge Gerry, of Massachusetts, was elected to succeed Mr. Clinton, and died suddenly, at Washington, Nov. 23, 1814, having served less than 21 months. Senator John Galliard, of South Carolina, being President pro tempore, assumed the Vice-Presidency and served out the term. William R. King, of Alabama, was elected Vice-President with President Pierce, in 1852. Before the day of inauguration his failing health compelled him to visit Cuba, and the oath of office was administered at Havana, by the Consul then resident there, acting under a special act passed for that purpose. Mr. King never assumed the parliamentary duties of the office, and died at his home, April 17, 1853, the day following his arrival there. Mr. King had served as President pro tempore, and was succeeded in the Vice-Presidency by David R. Atchison, the Missouri Senator, who was a leader of the Border Ruffians in the forays against the Free State citizens of Kansas. He was a participant in the sacking of Lawrence, May 21, 1856, and himself fired the first shot at the Free State Hotel. Atchison became very dissipated, went to Texas during the rebellion, returned after its collapse, and died, a few years since, at his home, in Platte county, Mo. At the time of Mr. King's death the Senate was without a presiding officer, and by consent, when it assembled, the Secretary, Asbury Dickens, called the chamber to order and put all the preliminary questions. Mr. Atchison had previously served as presiding officer through the term of Vice-President Dallas.

.....The other three vacancies were John H. Tyler, of Tennessee, who became President by the death of Gen. Harrison, April 4, 1841. Mr. Tyler took the oath April 6th. Senator Southard was elected President pro tempore, and became therefore acting Vice-President until his Senatorial term expired. He was succeeded by Senator Mangum, who filled the chair until the Presidential term expired. On the death of General Taylor, July 9th, 1850, Vice President Fillmore assumed the Presidency. Senator William R. King was then President pro tem., and remained as the acting Vice-President. His ill-health compelled the Senate to elect a temporary President, in the person of Mr. Atchison, December 1852. Mr. King was, as before stated, elected Vice-President with General Pierce as President, and died within two years, Mr. Atchison exercising the functions and finally assuming the office. The assassination of Mr. Lincoln, April 14, 1865, placed Vice President Johnson in the White House, and made Mr. Foster, United States Senator, from Connecticut, the President pro tempore, acting Vice President, until his Senatorial term expired, when General Benjamin F. Wade was elected to the position. This, probably, had an important bearing on the impeachment of President Johnson, as there was considerable opposition on the part of Mr. Fessenden's friends to Mr. Wade.

The contingency herein suggested, is possible, and should be provided against by law. It is a little singular that the mortality in both these high offices, since the Government was first organized, should thus balance each other.

Of those who have held the office of Vice President, Hannibal Hamlin, Schuyler Colfax and Henry Wilson alone survive. Of those who have held office as Vice President, Messrs. Burr, Calhoun, Van Buren, R. M. Johnson, Tyler, Dallas, King, Hamlin, Andrew Johnson and Henry Wilson had served previously in the Senate; Gerry, Tomkins, Fillmore, Breckenridge and Colfax had served in the House; and Calhoun, Richard M. Johnson, King, Hamlin and Andrew Johnson had served in both Houses. John Adams, Jefferson and Gerry were signers of the Declaration of Independence. Six have also held the office of President, through the decease of the incumbents, and the others—John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, and Martin Van Buren—by election. One—John C. Calhoun—resigned before completing his term. We sincerely trust, and in this know that we express the voice of the American People of all parties, that the present honored incumbent will live out not only his full official term, but that his days may "be long in the land" he loves so well and has served so faithfully.

As THE REPUBLIC goes to press the death of Mr. WILSON is announced. "After life's fitful fever" he is at rest, peacefully and honorably, in the completeness of his honors, crowned with the enduring love of his countrymen, the sincere respect of those who opposed, and the confidence of all who sustained him. The life of HENRY WILSON is one typical of the best endeavors known to American history. Born in the very dregs of poverty, weighted in all his earlier years with untoward conditions that hindered progress to education, culture, position, the Vice President became in their despite—perhaps because of them—one of our foremost statesmen, a vigorous orator, a ripe and scholarly publicist, whose enduring fame will be preserved by the important contributions he has made to our historical literature. It may truthfully be said of him, he lived his life—not dreamed it. Few have been more honored and esteemed; none more useful in his forty years of public activity, than HENRY WILSON, the eighteenth Vice President of the United States. The Union has lost a worthy servant, the country a patriot of true and sterling integrity, and the Republican party one of its most trusted and sagacious leaders. It may be said, slightly paraphrasing Pope, that his was—

"A firm, yet cautious mind;
Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resigned;
Honor unchanged, a principle profest;
Fix'd to one side, yet moderate to the rest.
An honest partisan, yet patriot, too,
Just to his foe, and to his country true;
Fill'd with the sense of age, the fire of youth,
A scorn of wrangling, yet a zeal for truth;
A generous faith, from superstition free;
A love to peace, and hate of slavery:
Such this man was; who now from earth removed,
At length enjoys the liberty he loved."

In the January REPUBLIC a review of Mr. WILSON's life and services, as well as that of Senator O. S. FERRY, of Conn., whose demise is also announced, will be given.

THANKSGIVING.

.....The songs of a people are said to be one means of swaying their opinions.

Without doubt, there is truth in this, as witness the effect of "Old John Brown," or of a people are also typical, indicating, as "We'll rally round the Flag Boys," "The Bonnie Blue Flag," or better still, "The Star Spangled Banner." But the holidays we trace back their origin, the sentiments or influences that have been most enduring. The Puritan "Thanksgiving" is a remarkable illustration of the deep hold a genuine inspiration possesses. Its continued and general observance justifies a claim that has been made, and that is, that the American character is one deeply imbued with religious reverence. Perhaps not with a marked love of worshipful forms, or the love of the creeds, but better still, bearing the deeper underlying spirit of worship that accepts unquestioningly the presence of the Divine in man and society, as well as in nature and her laws. The literature of "Thanksgiving Day" is often notable, and worthy preservation. We have seen nothing more quaintly simple and eloquent than the following from Governor Bagley's scholarly pen:

In the Name and by the Authority of the State of Michigan—Thanksgiving Proclamation.

In 1636 it was enacted by Plymouth Colony, that it be in the power of the Governor to order days of Thanksgiving as occasion might offer.

This expression of the reverent gratitude of our fathers has woven THANKSGIVING-DAY into our national life.

In compliance with this hallowed custom, I, JOHN J. BAGLEY, Governor of the State of Michigan, do recommend to the People of this State, the observance of THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 25th, as a day of THANKSGIVING and Praise. On that day let us put behind us the labor and toil of the year, and in our respective places of worship, and by our hearth-stones, reverently acknowledge our dependence upon our Heavenly Father. Let our gratitude be shown by a broad charity for our neighbor, full and free, remembering, "that only the foolish ask, is this one of us, or an outside person? To the noble, the whole world is a family."

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be applied the Great Seal of the State of Michigan. Done at the city of Lansing, this sixth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five, of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundredth.

By the Governor:

[L. S.]

JOHN J. BAGLEY.

E. G. D. HOLDEN,
Secretary of State.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

THE EXECUTIVE.

NATIONAL THANKSGIVING.

In accordance with a practice at once wise and beautiful, we have been accustomed, as the year is drawing to a close, to devote an occasion to an humble expression of thanks to Almighty God for ceaseless and distinguished benefits bestowed upon us as a nation, and for His mercies and protection during the coming year. Amid the rich and free enjoyment of all our advantages, we should not forget the source from which they are derived, and extend our obligations to the Father of All Mercies. We have full reason to renew our thanks to Almighty God for favors bestowed upon us during the past year. By His continuing mercy, civil and religious liberty have been maintained; peace has reigned within our borders; labor and enterprise have produced their merited rewards, and to His watchful providence we are indebted for security from pestilence and other national calamities. Apart from the other national blessings, each individual among us has occasion to thoughtfully recall and devoutly recognize the favors and protection which he has enjoyed.

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do recommend that, on Thursday, the 25th day of November, the people of the United States, from their accustomed vocations, do assemble in their respective places of worship, and in such form as may seem most appropriate in their own hearts, offer to Almighty God their acknowledgments and thanks for all His mercies, and their humble prayers for the continuance of His divine favor. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 27th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1875, and of the independence of the United States, the one hundredth.

U. S. GRANT, President.

HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

THE ANNUAL REPORTS—INTERNAL REVENUE—
REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER FOR THE YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1875.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue exhibits tables showing the receipts from each specific source of revenue, and the amounts refunded in each collection district, State and Territory of the United States for the fiscal year; also the number and value of internal revenue stamps ordered monthly by the Commissioner, the receipts from the sale of stamps and the commissions allowed thereon; also the number and value of stamps for special taxes, tobacco, cigars, snuff, distilled spirits and fermented liquors issued monthly to collectors during the fiscal year; also showing the territorial distribution of internal revenue from various sources in the United States for each fiscal year from June 30, 1864, to June 30, 1875, inclusive; also the aggregate receipts from each collection district, State and Territory for the fiscal year from June 30, 1863, to 1875, inclusive, and the total collections from each specific source of revenue for the same fiscal years; the receipts from special taxes under the act of June 6, 1872, in each collection district, State and Territory for the special tax year ended April 30, 1875; abstracts of reports of the District Attorneys concerning suits and prosecutions under the internal revenue laws during the fiscal year, and an abstract of seizures of property for violation of the internal revenue laws for the year. The Commissioner goes into an extensive history of the internal revenue system of the United States and the British excise system, noting the identity of subjects of taxation in Great Britain with those of this country before the internal revenue system of the United States had been reduced to its present limits, and exhibiting statements showing the amount of revenue collected, excise and stamps in the United States during the year ended March 31, 1875, expressed in pounds sterling and in United States money, from which, the Commissioner says, it may be some consolation to know that, grievous as are our burdens laid upon such of our population of 42,000,000 or more, as consume the articles taxed by our internal revenue laws, the British public, numbering less by one-fourth than our people, paid under their excise laws during the year ending March 31, 1875, taxes, measured gold of the United States, to the amount of $183,962,756.56, against $110,545,154.23 paid in currency by the people of this country during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1875. This comparison, if it does not reconcile such as find fault with our system as oppressive and vexatious, should modify their complaints, since it is apparent that a given amount of taxes from some source must, under all circumstances, be raised to defray the necessary expenses of the Government to discharge its obligations and maintain the public credit. At best it is a show of means, and all reasonable men will agree that in laying taxation, articles of luxury should be preferred to articles of necessity, and that the tax should be placed upon the product in the hands of the manufacturers or producers, so that, as in case of customs duties, it is left a matter of choice who shall reimburse the manufacturer or importer the taxes he has paid.

THE RECEIPTS FOR THREE YEARS.

The report shows that the actual amount of receipts into the Treasury from all sources from and after June 30, 1861, to June 30, 1874, exclusive of loans and Treasury notes, was as follows:

Customs.....	$1,973,710.367.91
Internal revenue.....	1,956,323,725.30
Direct tax.....	14,810,189.37
Public lands.....	22,151,918.02
Miscellaneous.....	236,084,982.94
Premium on loans and sales of gold coin.....	192,557,117.46
Total.....	$4,395,638,311.00

Beginning with the year 1866, there has been a continuous repeal, gaining on year by year, of such internal taxes as were most oppressive, or at least as gave rise to most complaint, until at present, but few subjects of taxation remain. The taxes are now levied upon distilled spirits, fermented liquors, manufactured tobacco, snuff and cigars, upon articles embraced in schedule, upon such occupations, upon banks, checks, deposits, circulations and capital of banks. In a table exhibiting the sums collected during the several fiscal years ranging from 1867 to 1875 inclusive, it appears that the collections during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, were $102,644,746.98, while the collections for the year ending June 30, 1875, were $110,545,154.23, the collections for the former year having been, in consequence of the duties repealed from year to year, less than any single year since the system went into operation, except the first—1863—when the collections were $41,003,192.93. The increase during the last fiscal year is owing, in part, to the increase of duties laid by the act of March 3, 1875, upon distilled spirits, manufactured tobacco, cigars and cigarettes, and in part to the taxes collected under the laws repealed, extraordinary efforts having been put forth by the Internal Revenue Office to collect the delinquent taxes due from banks and bankers, railroads, and other corporations, and taxes due on incomes, legacies and successions. A statement is given, showing the receipts under the act of March 3, 1875, up to, and inclusive of June 30, 1875, from the different articles subject to an increased tax, which were distilled spirits, cigars, cigarettes, and manufactured tobacco, showing a total tax returned of $3,203,818.85. The tax returned upon distilled spirits was $1,779,799.85, and the Commissioners says that it will, doubtless, be a matter of surprise, that the increased amount realized from distilled spirits during that period—March 3, 1875, to June 30, 1875—was so small. The explanation, however, is found in the fact that it became generally known through the proceedings in Congress that an increase in the rate of the tax would probably be made, and distillers, in order to realize the benefit of the increase, withdrew from bonded warehouses, upon payment of the taxes at seventy cents a gallon, 5,430,021 gallons in the month of January, 1874, and the enormous quantity of 11,504,356 gallons in February following, leaving still in the bonded warehouses, over 7,000,000 gallons of spirits on March 3, 1875, the day when the increase of the tax from seventy to ninety cents per gallon was made by Congress. By law these spirits were allowed, after a bond was given, to remain in the distillery warehouse, one year before withdrawal, and these spirits have been, and still continue to be, placed on the market, subject only to the former duty of seventy cents per gallon. Had these spirits been subjected, like those manufactured after March 3, 1875, to a tax of ninety cents per gallon, the difference in the two rates would have yielded to the Treasury after the entire withdrawal from bond at least $1,400,000.

THE RECEIPTS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR.

The net amount of receipts from all sources of internal revenue during the last fiscal year, in the several States, is given as follows:

Alabama...	$111,816.41	Missouri...	4,591,856.77
Arizona....	10,233.03	Montana...:	23,666.10
Arkansas...	71,823.39	Nebraska...	292,472.30
California...	2,983,595.19	Nevada.....	53,147.30
Colorado...	70,531.87	N. Hamp...	293,812.80
Conn.....	622,225.53	N. Jersey..	2,362,478.29
Dakota....	10,040.18	N. Mexico..	21,965.52
Delaware..	360,331.03	New York..	15,260,898.34
Dis. of Col.	111,027.97	N. Carolina	1,629,994.37
Florida....	184,547.31	Ohio.....	14,656,995.30
Georgia...	387,154.12	Oregon.....	47,939.64
Idaho.....	19,136.00	Pennsylva..	6,149,954.40
Illinois....	17,627,668.55	R. Island..	231,767.50
Indiana...	4,650,883.13	S. Carolina	120,818.00
Iowa.....	1,010,064.15	Tennessee..	858,910.50
Kansas....	133,535.94	Texas.....	257,448.37
Kentucky...	9,022,633.66	Utah.....	31,515.57
Louisiana...	583,151.85	Vermont...	53,251.85
Maine.....	107,261.90	Virginia....	7,659,639.97
Maryland...	2,755,845.41	Washington	21,146.60
Mass.....	2,670,491.15	W. Virginia	598,684.38
Michigan..	1,930,506.05	Wisconsin..	2,720,868.14
Minnesota	228,362.45	Wyoming...	11,942.11
Mississippi	96,085.38

The results thus shown do not indicate that the States paying the largest amounts of internal revenue pay in proportion to their relative population or wealth, nor that the consumption of their tax paid commodities within their limits is in proportion to the amount produced, nor that they excel in general manufacturing enterprise. On the contrary, they rather show that whiskey is distilled in larger degree in the corn-growing districts; brandies in the fruit districts; that fermented liquors are brewed in sections of the country where barley abounds, or in centres where that portion of our foreign population, who prefer them as a beverage, are found in largest numbers, and that to bacco, cigars, &c., are manufactured principally in, or near the tobacco-growing regions. Large cities, fortunate in their location, as accessible from all parts of the country by water and rail, constitute an exception to the general rule, since the manufacture of the raw materials is carried on largely there without much reference to the localities where those materials are produced, unless, indeed, the cost of transportation on bulky articles, entering into the manufacture, prove a hindrance to successful competition with the rural districts. New York is a notable example, yielding last year $15,000,000 of revenue. It is neither a great corn nor tobacco-growing State. The city of New York is the point where most of the excisable commodities are produced, except whiskey. This is not made, to any extent, on account of the cost of bringing corn from the West, and the difficulty of successful competition with Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago and Milwaukee, in the manufacture of that article. The number of distilleries registered during the year ending June 30, 1875, was 4,736, and the number operated, 4,608. Of the number operated, 656 were grain distilleries, seven were molasses distilleries, and 3,945 were fruit distilleries.

WHISKEY FRAUDS.

Public attention has been often called within the past few months, to extensive frauds committed in certain localities upon the revenue by distilleries and rectifiers of distilled spirits. The Commissioner says: "I propose, briefly as I can, to give an account: first, of the checks, guards and protections against frauds established by law; second, of the manner in which whiskey frauds, so-called, lately exposed, were perpetrated upon the Government; third, the extent of these frauds; fourth, the checks recently established to prevent a recurrence of the same; fifth, to suggest the legislation which, in my opinion, is necessary to insure a fuller collection in the future of taxes upon distilled spirits.

First.—The system of surveillance now in force at all distilleries to insure that none of the product may escape taxation, is based upon the presumption that all local officers are honest, and where such is the case, it works admirably, and does insure the collection of tax upon every gallon of spirits produced by the distiller. It could hardly be expected, however, that among every twenty-three hundred storekeepers and gaugers, some would not prove dishonest, especially since there is always near them, in the person of the distiller, if he happen to be an unscrupulous man, a tempter to move them by bribes. In order, therefore, to effectually prevent fraud, it is necessary to establish a system that shall surely detect it, and that shall be followed by certain and severe penalties. With the distiller it is a matter of dollars and cents, so that if the risk in committing fraud is made so great that it does not pay, he will not only be honest himself, but will inform on others as a matter of self-protection.

THE PRESENT GAUGING SYSTEM.

The present system may be described briefly as follows: A storekeeper is assigned to every distillery, whose duty it is to record the time of the filling and of the emptying of every mash tub, to weigh every pound of grain that is used in the mash, and to see that the law is strictly complied with. The cistern-room, where the spirits are received, is placed in charge of a gauger, who determines the exact quantity produced and the gauge of each barrel into which the spirits are drawn. The pipes from the still to the cistern-room are continuous, so that the distiller has no access to the spirits until after they are gauged and the quantity determined. Each barrel filled in the cistern-room must be serially numbered, beginning with No. 1, and running consecutively without duplication. A warehouse stamp must then be affixed to the barrel, which stamp has also a serial number never duplicated, and shows the number of barrel, contents in proof and wine gallons, name of gauger and date of affixing. The barrel so marked is then placed in a warehouse on the distillery premises, where it can remain not to exceed one month without a warehousing bond, or not to exceed one year when such a bond is given. When the package is to be withdrawn, the Collector furnishes, on application and after payment of the tax, a tax-paid stamp, which is filled in with the same number of the package, proof and wine gallons as appears on the warehouse stamp, and has itself another distinctive serial number which is never duplicated. The package of spirits is now ready for market, and is so marked and branded as to enable any revenue officer to identify it wherever found, since no other package can exist legally with the same numbers, marks and brands. The distiller is required to keep a book in which he records a full description of each package, specifying all the marks and brands above specified, and the name of the party to whom each package is sold. The purchaser is required to keep a book which records a like description of the package, and states both from whom it was purchased and to whom he sells it. A complete record is thus kept of the whereabouts of each package of spirits until it is dumped for rectification or reaches the consumer.

THE SYSTEM OF CHECKS.

The system of checks as applied to rectifiers is as follows: A rectifier is permitted to rectify spirits bought by him and place the same upon the market under a rectifier's stamp. When he purchases the spirits and is ready to dump for rectification he makes out a full description of the packages, giving all serial numbers, date of original gauge and name of the distiller producing the spirits, and sends a notice of intention to rectify the same to the Collector, who at once details a gauger to examine and regauge the spirits. It is this gauger's duty also to see the packages emptied and the stamps destroyed, and to certify the fact on the face of the rectifier's notice. An account is opened with each rectifier, in which he is credited with the total proof gallons of spirits so dumped and charged with the total proof gallons covered by rectifiers' stamps placed on spirits gauged out of his establishment. The Collector is not allowed to issue rectifiers' stamps for a number of proof gallons in excess of the number reported as dumped by the rectifier and gauger, as above indicated. It is thus apparent that if all the officers were honest, the above described checks would effectually prevent any spirits being sold in the market that had not paid the proper tax. To perpetrate fraud, the distiller must first obtain the consent of the storekeeper, to use more grain than his survey calls for. It has been proven by experience that a fermentation that will produce the largest yield of spirits from grain, cannot be made in less than forty-eight hours. The regulations, therefore, allow this time for fermentation, and forbid more than one filling of the tubs in seventy-two hours, thus requiring the tubs to remain empty for twenty-four hours. If, however, the distiller will prepare what is known as "quick yeast," he is enabled to complete a fermentation in twenty-four hours or less time, though with a loss of yield in spirits. This he can well afford if he can sell half of his production without tax. Having gained the consent of the storekeeper, who keeps his books as if the law were being complied with, the distiller makes two fermentations where one is allowed, and then has nearly double the quantity of spirits that the books show produced. The distiller who has this illicit product on hand does not dare place it upon the market in the only way possible—that is, by the re-use of stamps, since the detection of a single package so duplicated would subject him to the severe penalties of the law. He must, therefore, call to his assistance the rectifier, who, even if detected, is dealt with much more leniently by the law, while the difficulties incurred in detecting him are much greater than in the case of the distiller. To make the transfer of illicit spirits, from the distillery to the rectifying-house, the gauger in charge of the cistern-room must either permit barrels to be filled and surreptitiously removed without stamps, or he must affix stamps which have once been used. If the spirits were removed to the rectifying house without stamps, no notice of rectification describing the same could be sent to the Collector, and therefore no credit could be had by which to obtain rectifiers' stamps.

TWO REMEDIES FOR THE DIFFICULTY.

Two methods of surmounting this difficulty have been in vogue. The first was made possible by the fact that rectifier's stamps have heretofore been so prepared that each stamp could protect any number of gallons which the gauger chose to fill in. This character of fraud will be best indicated by an illustration: A certain rectifier buys from a distiller, say one hundred packages of tax paid spirits, containing, say forty proof gallons each. He files with the Collector the descriptive notice above mentioned, and asks for an issue of rectifiers' stamps to cover 4,000 gallons of spirits after rectification. A gauger is detailed to gauge these spirits out of the rectifying tubs, carrying with him a book of blank stamps to be filled up according to the contents of each package. The gauger reports on a prescribed form that the rectifier has placed the 4,000 gallons in, say 100 packages, containing ten gallons each, and returns the stubs of the stamps, filled up in accordance with this statement. The packages so represented are afterwards found to contain, say twenty gallons each, and the stamps thereon are filled up in accordance therewith, so that in fact only fifty of the stamps were used to cover the "straight spirits," and under cover of the remaining 350 stamps 28,000 gallons of illicit spirits are placed upon the market. This case is by no means an extreme one, but is a fair sample of what was the constant practice in the specified. Second.—The second method of placing illicit spirits on the market is illustrated thus: The distilling house a number of spirits, upon which the tax has already been paid. The descriptive notice is filed, and a gauger details the stamps destroyed; while the stamps are not actually canceled are returned to the distiller, either the packages, with the stamps canceled, are returned to the distiller, or removed and placed by the distiller, on other barrels of spirits, upon which no tax has been paid. The notice is sent to the rectifier, and by some distant market with record of the transaction on the books. A modification of this consists in the rectifier's fictitious notice containing a description of spirits which he has never received and emptying in place thereof an equal quantity of illicit spirits. In one of the two ways above described all frauds recently discovered have been committed, and the Government has lost thereby at least $4,000,000 in the last two years. The frauds have mainly been carried on at four places, namely, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Chicago and Evansville, and all at distilleries producing what is known as "highwines." This class of spirits does not require ageing, as does the fine sour mash whiskey made for drinking purposes. It consequently does not excite suspicion to find highwines on the market to-day that were produced yesterday. This rapid transfer from the distillery to the market affords facilities for the re-use of stamps which is scarcely feasible with the whiskeys that require a year's warehousing before being ready for market, since it would be prima facie evidence of fraud if a distiller of fine whiskeys would not take advantage of the year which the Government allows his spirits to remain in warehouse without payment of tax. If once in warehouse the Government is sure of its tax, hence the comparatively small amount of fraud discovered in places producing fine whiskeys. As a further reason why fraud in these whiskeys cannot be perpetrated, it may be stated that as a rule they do not require rectification, and the frauds above indicated cannot be committed without the aid of the rectifier.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

THE ANNUAL REPORTS—THE LAND OFFICE— COMMISSIONER BURDETTE'S REPORT.

The report of Commissioner Burdette, of the General Land Office, contains the following statement of the business of his bureau, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875:

Disposals of public lands by ordinary	Acres.
.....	745,061
Locations	137,000
.....	2,358,057
.....	454,770
.....	9,432
.....	3,107,613
.....	47,721
.....	2,321
.....	142,384
.....	16,451
.....	8,614
.....	11,181
.....	7,070,271
.....	9,530,872
.....	2,480,601
as herds	$1,784,001 27
Perito-	1,834,724,856
.....	26,077,532
.....	654,175,562
.....	680,233,094
.....	1,154,471,762

The falling off, as compared with the year immediately preceding, in entries, as evidenced by appropriations of public lands, under the Homestead and Timber Culture laws, is found to be $1,501,880 26. This result may be attributed, in a large degree, to the devastations of grasshoppers, accompanied, in some places, by unusual drought in localities most inviting to homestead and timber culture settlements, to which causes must be added the falling off of immigration and the general business depression.

In the judgment of the Commissioner there will be a steady diminution in the future in this class of entries, because, in the locations most desirable for such settlement, on account of the fertility of the soil and character of climate, the lands have largely passed to private ownership. The building of railroads has induced settlement to the full, and perhaps beyond, profitable marketing of products. The purchase of this land in private ownership will thus be stimulated by the lack of desirable land for settlement which is now owned by the Government.

The report discusses the problem of the management of the mountain timber lands, and points out many difficulties and many ends to be attained, without presenting a definite method of solution. This land is not surveyed and sold under existing laws, and settlers and miners who need timber are necessarily trespassers on the domain of the United States. No attention is paid to the preservation of a proper proportion of the timber, which is necessary to prevent the too rapid melting of snows which supply the mountain streams, which, in their natural condition, are gradually fed throughout the summer. Timber on the western mountains is slow of growth, and when once cut off may never be renewed. The destruction of the mountain forests will greatly disturb the conditions of the water supply to settlements along the streams on the plains below. One suggestion is that the Government shall retain the title to these lands and sell the timber under certain regulations and restrictions. This plan is dismissed as impracticable, because it would be impossible to enforce the necessary conditions. The sale of the lands outright to the miners and settlers near is suggested as better policy, because these people would be interested in protecting themselves in their methods of using the timber and cutting it away. The Commissioner recommends a change in the Homestead laws, because of the new conditions under which the law operates west of the one hundredth meridian. The legislation heretofore has been controlled and referred to the conditions of the arable belt of the continent. West of the one hundredth meridian to the Cascade Range the country presents very different conditions for settlements. The geological, climatic, and physical conditions are all different. Agriculture, as understood in the valley of the Mississippi, has no existence. Irrigation is necessary to production. Only in limited areas can crops be secured without artificial methods of watering the soil under a system which would justify large expenditures and insure the utilization of all the water reaching the Valley from the mountain streams, and but a mere fraction of the whole area can be made fit for tillage. Homestead lands cannot be honestly acquired except in the inundated valleys of a few mountain streams. That cultivation and improvement required, which stand in the place of price, are impossible, and if attempted, are without result. For the vast area of land arable by irrigation, sales should be authorized in accordance with the necessities of the situation. Especially is this desirable along the large streams, where association of capital is necessary for profitable tillage.

Much larger portions of this vast region are unfit for pasturage. The conditions are here also different from the fertile belt. The quantity of land required for the pasturage of any given number of cattle is very greatly in excess of the amount required in the fertile region of the continent. The excellence of the pasturage consists in the fact that the grasses, which are slow growth and thin, retain their nutritive qualities throughout the year, and the range is limited only by the possibility of reaching suitable wintering places. The system which restricts the sales to quarter sections, in fact, withholds from sale the largest remaining class of public lands. Here, too, as in the case of the mountain timber lands, the herders are compelled to trespass on the public domain, and conflicting claims of rights to ranges will arise which will hereafter prove very troublesome.

The Commissioner gives this question a full discussion, and concludes that both private and public interests demand that the body of surveyed land within the "Central Plateau," so called, not embraced in the first bottom of the streams, and commonly known in the region where situated as the mesa lands, be offered at the earliest possible date for cash purchase, and hereafter that portion remaining unsold be made subject to private entry at $1 25 per acre. The recommendation of the Commissioner is empathetic that the policy be adopted of resuming the public offering of land west of the 100th meridian, embraced in the mesa or table and pasturage lands. The report will contain an important resume of the history of the grants of public lands to railroad corporations, and will be accompanied by rain charts and tables for the desert portion of the continent. In this report, for the first time in a public document, Commissioner Burdett gives as intelligent discussion of the new problems of national development in the western half of the Continent.

THE INDIAN BUREAU—REPORT OF COMMISSIONER SMITH.

The dealings of the Government with the Sioux, made prominent by the Red Cloud investigation and the gold discoveries in the Black Hills, will receive special discussion. The Commissioner will recommend that, in order to avoid any possibility or suspicion of fraudulent transactions in the administration of Indian affairs, and that the bureau may be made more of an educational and civilizing instrument, as much business as possible be taken away from it. He will recommend the abolition of the contract system, and that all purchases be made by the War Department; that the purchases of clothing, tents, farming and household utensils, cattle and horses, be made by the Quartermaster's Department, and be transported under the direction of that department to the post; there inspected by officers of the Army appointed for the purpose, and delivered into the agent's hands, whose duty shall be simply to attend to their distribution; that the food be distributed in the same way, after purchase through the Commissary Department. His reasons for these recommendations are that the relations between the Indians and the agents, under the present system, are such that it makes the agent seem responsible for the quality of the food, and the Indians are so prone to complain and find fault that the agent loses his moral influence over them.

The Black Hills are treated of at length. The Commissioner relates the history of the visit of the Sioux Indians here last spring, and the failure of the commission appointed to treat with them for the relinquishment of the Black Hills. He refers to the fact that there are 1,000 or more miners already in the Sioux country, or on their way there, even in the face of the most stringent prohibitory orders from the military authorities, and a number of miners are organized into an association for mutual protection, and have adopted laws and regulations; have staked out and reserved claims, in the rights in which they expect hereafter to be protected by the Government. In this complication the Commissioner thinks there is only one alternative for the Government: either to increase the military force so as to compel a strict observance of the rights of the Sioux, or to put such restrictions upon the exercise of the large bounty now granted to them by the Government, as to procure their assent to the cession of the Black Hills country.

Commissioner Smith thinks the experience of last summer proves the utter impracticability of keeping American citizens out of a country where gold exists. The occupation of the Hills by the white man is inevitable, but no reason exists for making this an occasion of wrong to the Sioux. If the Sioux were independent and self-supporting, able to demand that hereafter the United States Government should leave them alone in the possession of their own country, and until 1898 of such annuities as the treaty of 1868 guarantees them, there would be a show of wrong, which is not now so clear, in persistently asking for a portion of their country. As the original proprietors of the land, and occupants in perpetuum by formal contract on the part of the United States, the Sioux would be entitled to be let alone, but the facts are otherwise. They are not capable of self-support, and the withdrawal of the Government rations for a single season would reduce them to starvation or to live by marauding. While the Government continues to appropriate for the maintenance of the Sioux Indians a sum of one and a quarter millions of dollars annually, in excess of all amounts stipulated by treaty, the Sioux are not in a condition to ask to be let alone. If the Government is obliged, by considerations of humanity and for the protection of the frontier, to supply the necessities of the Indians, they may properly be asked that the Government shall have an equivalent in gold fields. Cession produced in this manner, Commissioner Smith thinks, would be preferable to a continuation of the present disturbed condition of affairs. The Commissioner will recommend that legislation be sought from Congress, offering a full equivalent for the country lying between the north and south forks of the Cheyenne river, in Dakota, and for the relinquishment of whatever rights the Sioux may have to the Big Horn Mountains, in Wyoming, and on the condition that the bounty of the Government in food to these Indians, be part of the consideration; and that they be made fully aware that any further receipt of rations by them would be held by the Government to be an acceptance of the terms offered.

The Commissioner will recommend strongly the expulsion of all those persons known as "squaw men"—the white husbands of squaws—from the Indian reservations, and the removal of the Spotted Tail and Red Cloud Agencies to the Missouri river. He will also recommend that the Indians be compelled to labor in return for the rations given them by the Government. To obtain these results three things must be done, and Commissioner Smith recommends: First—To increase appropriations for the next two years in order to pay expenses of removal. These appropriations, after two years, the Commissioner thinks, may be steadily lessened until they cease altogether. Second—The Commissioner thinks that, to secure these objects, there must be a hearty co-operation of the War Department. Third—In order to afford a suitable location for the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, the removal of the Ponca Indians from their present reservation, which is in the Sioux country, will be necessary. The Poncas can be consolidated with the Omahas, a kindred tribe on the reservation of the latter, in Nebraska, and they have already consented to the removal.

The reports of the agents on the river that have been received at the office, indicate that it is possible to civilize the Sioux, provided a suitable country can be found for their occupation, and the Government and its agents can be patient. At the Cheyenne agency, bands of Indians, which, three years ago, were as intractable and impatient of labor as Spotted Tail and his immediate followers now are, have been induced to erect log houses and open farms, to such an extent that the agent is able to report a large number of Indian families living in houses like civilized people, a large number of male Indians who are laboring at civilized pursuits with their own hands, and a large proportion of the Indian children in schools.

The Commissioner will recommend that all Indians living within the limits of the organized States be transferred to the care of those States, and the bureau be relieved of them. He gives the following reasons for this recommendation: These Indians are becoming civilized to a great degree, and will soon make attempts to become citizens. They cannot be classified with the wild Indians, and the same system of government and treatment does not apply to both. He thinks the States can care for them with less expense and with greater benefit to the Indians than if they remained under the care of the General Government.

There are in New York, in round numbers, 6,000 Indians on reservations forty miles long and from one to five miles wide; in Wisconsin, about 7,000 Indians on vast reservations; in Michigan, 8,000; in Minnesota, 6,000. In each of these States Indians own property enough, which, if judiciously managed, would educate them all, and would leave them farms, town sites, &c.

It is probably not generally known that Pius IX.—now in his eighty-fourth year—has already buried more than a hundred cardinals, part of them created by his predecessors, and the rest named by himself since he came into office.

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

VOLUME V. From June to December, 1875.

PUBLISHED BY
THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

INDEX TO VOLUME V.

A	Page.	D.	Page.
Alabama Under Democracy.....	318	Duties vs. Rights.....	32
A Manufacturing South.....	209	Duties—the, of Young Men.....	85
A Sensible Conclusion.....	221	Duty, Fidelity to—as Republicans.....	40
Alabama's Abandonment of Secession— How Interpreted.....	313	Democracy.....	31
A Glorious Record.....	46	Democratic Reconstruction.....	109
Agricultural Warnings.....	42	Doings, Executive and Department.....	61, 121, 189, 269, 332
Accidents—Mining.....	174	Davis, Governor—of Minnesota.....	93
Alabama, Education in.....	152	Democratic Party, the—Can the Nation Trust?.....	129
A Nation, The People & The Union Per- petual.....	193	Democratic Party, the—and the Working- Men.....	173
Abandonment of Secession by Alabama— How Interpreted.....	313	Democratic Rule in Georgia.....	205
Army, The French.....	371	Democracy, What it Has Cost the South... Democracy—Texas.....	217 224
Assumption, State Rights—Southern Dem- ocratic Reaction.....	372	Democratic Dodge—the Latest.....	311
America, Labor in, and in Europe.....	375	Democracy, Alabama Under.....	318
		Democratic Constitutional Convention of Texas.....	323
B.		Des Moines—the President's Speech at.... Democratic Party—the—Anxious.....	324 324
Bourbon Reconstruction.....	165	Defamation, Political.....	362
Basis of the Union, The—The Blue and the Gray.....	103	Department of the Interior.....	386
Ballot-box—Preserve the Purity of.....	39	Democratic Reaction in the South—State Rights Assumption.....	372
Buford, General.....	28
By Companies. Forward.....	33	E.
Bankruptcy, National.....	44	Elections, the—Primary Measures.....	46
Blue and the Gray. The.....	103	Executive and Department Doings.....	61, 121, 189, 269, 332
Banks, National—Taxes Paid by.....	167	Elections—the Fall.....	97
Bristow, Mr.—His Views on the War and Its Results.....	49	Education in Alabama.....	152
Bristow, Secretary—Pursuing Revenue De- frauders.....	14	Elements of Strength in the Republican Party.....	158
Banks, Savings, of Great Britain.....	395	Exclusive Education.....	174
		Education—Exclusive.....	174
C.		Enemies of Free Government.....	175
Centennial Celebration—The.....	1	Elements of National Unity.....	237
Catholic Church—the, and the Public Schools.....	48	Education—Popular.....	314
California Republican Platform.....	51	Election, Ohio—Meaning of the Victory.... Enemy, the—On the Run.....	321 323
Condition of the United States Treasury... Currency—the Inflation of, Injurious.....	52 80	Engines—Fireless, on Tramways.....	44
Congress—Forty-fourth, United States Senate.....	118	Effects of High and Low Tariffs.....	228
Can the Nation Trust the Democratic Party Census, Taking a—In what States, &c.....	129 145	Emancipation—Ordeal of: the Free South. Europe, Labor in, and in America.....	245 375
Constitutions—New State.....	155	Election, The, in Ohio.....	338
Carpet-baggers.....	19	Executive and Department Doings.....
Consistency a Jewel.....	163
Census—The Louisiana.....	172	F.
Churches and Schools.....	174	Free Labor in the South.....	29
Constitutional Conventions—Southern.....	214	Forward! By Companies.....	33
Carpet baggers—North and South—White and Colored.....	225	Fidelity to Duty as Republicans.....	40
Census—First and Last—1790 and 1870.....	234	Frauds—The Whisky.....	43
Congressional Roll Call Dissected.....	261	Fireless Engines on Tramways.....	44
Constitutional Convention, Democratic, of Texas.....	323	French Republic, the—Its New Constitu- tion and the Guarantees.....	77
Currency Value of Gold, and Gold Value of Currency, 1862 to 1875.....	331	Fall Election, the.....	97
Convention—State Prohibition, at Harris- burg, Pa.....	50	Forty-fourth Congress—United States Sen- ate.....	118
Contest—The Recent, in New Hampshire... Common Schools of the United States— Papal Assault on.....	50 219	Free Government—Enemies of.....	175
Carl Schurz—What Democrats Think of Him Now.....	320	Finance and Politics.....	222
Census—Industrial in Massachusetts.....	145	First and Last Census—1790 and 1870.....	234
Close of the Fifth Volume of "The Repub- lic".....	337	Free South, the—Ordeal of Emancipation. Free School System—Our.....	241 309
Campaign of 1875, The Political.....	346	Forty-fourth Congress—Political Classifica- tion of.....	315
		Faith. Punic.....	161
		Fifth Volume of "The Republic," Close of French Army, the.....	337 371
		Free South, the.....	391
		Fatuity, Southern.....	76

G.

Government of the U. S.—Historical Incidents in the Organization of	9
Grant, but not Ambitious—President Grant	54
Grant, President—Grant, but not Ambitious	34
Glorious Record, A	46
Growth of the Nation Under Republicanism	85
Georgia, Democratic Rule in	205
Georgia Panic, the—Its Cause	285
Gold, Currency Value of 1862 to 1873	281
Gold, Greenbacks and Silver the Mutual Relation of	15
Germany—Vaticanism in	17
Great Britain, Savings Banks of	303

H.

Historical incidents in the Organization of the U. S. Government	9
Honesty the Best Policy—Mr. Lincoln	53
How did the South Accept the Situation?	41
How the Wants of the South May be Supplied	55
History—the Truth of	87
Heresy—the States Rights	112
High and Low Tariffs and their Effects	228
How Adams's Abandonment of Secession is Interpreted	312
House, The Third	384

I.

Incidents—Historical in the Organization of the U. S. Government	9
Inflation of the Currency Injurious	89
Independent Tickets—Political Morality	95
In What States—Taking a Census	145
Its Mission not Ended—the Republican Party	181
"I Was Always a Democrat"	168
Its Cause—the Georgia Panic	285
Illiteracy North and South	239
Industrial Census in Massachusetts	145
Interior Department, The	3-8
"Imperiled Mississippi"	284

L.

Labor, Free—in the South	29
Lincoln—Honesty the Best Policy	53
Life Saving Service and the Revenue Marine	61
Louisiana Census—the	179
Life—the New National	177
Laws—Navigation	272
Latest Democratic Dodge—the	311
Laws, Navigation	268
Labor in Europe and America	373

M.

Mutual Relation of Gold, Greenbacks and Silver	15
Men, Young—the Duties of	23
Measures, Primary—The Elections	46
Mr. Bristow's Views on the War and its Results	49
Marine, Revenue—and the Life-Saving Service	51
Morality, Political—Independent Tickets	95
Month—Review of the	285

Noble Sentiments of Mr. Lincoln	175
National Life—the New	177
New Publications	187, 267
Nation—The People and the Union Perpetual	198
Navigation Laws	272
Nebraska—its Past, Present and Future	284
National Unity—Elements of	287
Navigation Laws	288

O.

Organization of the U. S. Government—Historical Incidents in	9
Ohio Republican Nominations	37
Ordeal of Emancipation—The Free South	241
"Order Reigns in Warren"	297
Our Free School System	309
Ohio Election—The Meaning of the Victory	231
Ohio, The Election in	288

P.

Preserve the Parity of the Ballot-box	29
Political and Religious National Unity	45
Primary Measures—The Elections	46
Public Schools, the—and the Catholic Church	49
Platform—California Republican	51
President Grant—Great, but Not Ambitious	54
Political Morality—Independent Tickets	95
Pending Election—The Senate	110
Party, the Republican—its Mission not Ended	181
Prospects—Republican	189
Public Faith	161
Patriotism	179
Publications—New	187, 267
Papal Assault on the Common Schools of the United States	219
Politics—Finance and	232
Panic, The Georgia—its Cause	285
Popular Education	214
Political Classification of the XLIVth Congress	315
President Grant's Speech at Des Moines	376
Political Campaign of 1875	285
Political Defamation	293

R.

Republican Record	13
Record, Republican	15
Relation, the Mutual, of Gold, Greenbacks and Silver	15
Rights, Duties vs.	32
Republican Nominations in Ohio	37
Republicans—Fidelity to Duty as	99
Reconstruction—Secession vs.	47
Results of the War—Mr. Bristow's views on	49
Republican Platform—California	51
Review of the Month	56, 112, 180, 282, 285
Republicanism—Growth of the Nation under	65
Republic—the French—its New Constitution and the Guarantees	77
Revenue Marine—the—and the Life-Saving Service	51
Reconstruction and the Revival of Industry in the South	91
Revival of Industry in the South, The—and Reconstruction	91
Republican Recruit	94
Recruits, Republican	94
Reconstruction, Democratic	109
Republican Party, The—its Mission not Ended	181
Republican Prospects	189
Republican Party Elements of strength in	190
Reconstruction, Bourbon	105
Rule, Democratic—in Georgia	205
Reinvigoration of the Republican Party	209
Republican Party, The—Reinvigoration of	209
Railway System, The—Relations of the State to	282
Republic, The, Close of the Fifth Volume of	287
Review of the Month	285

INDEX.

III

Reaction, Southern Democratic, State Rights Assumption.....	372
S.
South, The—Free Labor in	29
South, The—How did it Accept the Situation?.....	41
Secession vs Reconstruction.....	47
Schools, Public, and the Catholic Church..	48
South, The—How its Wants may be Supplied	55
Service, The Life-saving, and the Revenue Marine	81
South, The—Reconstruction and the Revival of Industry in	91
Senate, United States—Forty-fourth Congress	108
Senate, The, and Pending Elections	120
Sentiments of Mr. Lincoln	176
South, A Manufacturing	209
Southern Constitutional Conventions.....	214
South, The—What Democracy has Cost....	217
Schools, Common, of the United States—Papal Assault on.....	219
Sensible Conclusion.....	221
South, The Free: Ordeal of Emancipation ..	241
System, Our Free School.....	309
Secession—How Alabama's Abandonment of, is Interpreted.....	313
Speech, The President's, at Des Moines ..	324
Schurz, Carl—What Democrats Think of Him now.....	320
Secretary Bristow Pursuing Revenue Defrauders.....	14
Southern Democratic Reaction—State Rights Assumption.....	372
State Rights Assumption—Southern Democratic Reaction	372
State—Relations of the Railway System to the	292
South, The Free	391
Savings Banks of Great Britain.....	395
Southern Fatuity	396

T.

The Centennial Celebration.....	1
The Mutual Relation of Gold, Greenbacks, and Silver.....	15
The Duties of Young Men.....	35
The Union Forever	38
The South—How did it Accept the Situation?	41
The Whisky Frauds	43
The Elections—Primary Measures.....	46
The Catholic Church and the Public Schools	48
The War and its Results, Mr. Bristow's Views on.....	49
The South, and how its Wants may be Supplied	55
The Nation—Growth of, under Republicanism	65
The French Republic—Its New Constitution and the Guarantees.....	77
The Life-saving Service and the Revenue Marine	81
The Truth of History	87
The Fall Elections.....	97
"The Blue and the Gray"	103
The Senate and Pending Elections.....	120

Taking a Census—In what States.....	145
The Republican Party—Its Mission not Ended.....	151
Taxes Paid by National Bank	167
The Louisiana Census.....	172
The Democratic Party and the Working Men	173
The New National Life.....	177
The People a Nation; The Union Perpetual.....	193
Texas Democracy.....	224
The Republican Party and Workingmen ..	233
The Georgia Panic—Its Cause.....	235
The Free South: Ordeal of Emancipation..	241
The State—Relations of, to the Railway System	292
The Latest Democratic Dodge.....	311
The XLIVth Congress, Political Classification of.....	315
The Meaning of the Victory—Ohio Election	321
Tax-Payers, the, Who are?.....	322
Texas, Democratic Constitutional Convention of.....	323
Tariffs, High and Low, and their Effects ..	228
The President's Speech at Des Moines.....	324
Trichinae in the Wild Hog.....	45
Taxes: Who Pay them?	106
Triumphs of the Republican Party—One of its.....	34
The Republican Party—One of its Triumphs	34
The Fifth Volume of "THE REPUBLIC," Close of	337
The Ohio Election.....	338
The Political Campaign of 1875.....	346
The French Army	371
The Third House	384
The Department of the Interior	386
The Free South	391
"THE REPUBLIC," Close of the Fifth Volume	337

U.

United States Government, Historical Incidents in the Organization of.....	8
Unity, National—Political and Religious...	45
United States Treasury, Condition of	52
United States Senate—Forty-fourth Congress	118
Unity, National, Elements of	237
United States, Spain, and Cuba.....	403

V.

Vaticanism in Germany.....	17
Views, Mr. Bristow's, on the War and its Results.....	49

W.

Whisky Frauds, The.....	43
Warnings, Agricultural.....	42
Workingmen, The, and the Democratic Party	173
White and Colored Carpet-baggers, North and South.....	225
Workingmen, The Republican Party and..	233
What Democracy has Cost the South.....	217
Who are the Tax-Payers?.....	322

Y.

Young Men, The Duties of.....	35
--------------------------------------	-----------

"FAIRLY WITHOUT A RIVAL."—Congregationalist

THE MOST EMINENT AUTHORS of the day, such as Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Max Muller, Prof. Huxley, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Prof. Tyndall, Richard A. Proctor, Edward A. Freeman, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, James [Anthony] Froude, Alfred Russell Wallace, Mrs. Muloch, Mrs. Oliphant, Miss Thackeray, Jean Ingelow, Geo. MacDonald, Wm. Black, Anthony Trollope, R. D. Blackmore, Julia Kavanagh, Mrs. Parr, Henry Kingsley, Mrs. Macquoid, Francis W. Newman, Thomas Carlyle, Creckman-Charlton, W. W. Story, Robert Buchanan, Tennyson, Browning, and many others, are represented in the pages of

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

IN 1876, THE LIVING AGE enters upon its thirty-third year. Having absorbed its younger competitor, "EVERY SATURDAY," it is now without a rival in its special field. Originally commended by President Adams, Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, historians Sparks, Prescott, Bancroft, Ticknor, and many others, it has never failed to receive the warmest support of the best men and journals of the country, and has met with constantly increasing success.

A weekly magazine, of sixty-four pages, THE LIVING AGE gives more than THREE AND A QUARTER THOUSAND double-column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly, forming four large volumes. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its great amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue and with a satisfactory completeness attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical, and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature.

During the coming year, the Serial and Short Stories of

THE LEADING FOREIGN AUTHORS

will be given, together with an amount, unapproached by any other periodical in the world, of the most valuable literary and Scientific matter of the day from the pens of the above-named and many other foremost Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers, and Editors, representing every department of Knowledge and Progress.

In short, THE LIVING AGE is invaluable as a time, labor, and money-saving publication. It furnishes the only satisfactorily fresh and COMPLETE compilation of a literature that is indispensable to American readers;—indispensable because it embraces the productions of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS

in all branches of Literature, Science, Art, and Politics. Attention is invited to the following recent Opinions of The Living Age.

"Ought to find a place in every American Home."—N. Y. Times.

"In no other single publication can there be found so much of sterling literary excellence."—N. Y. Evening Post.

"Through its pages alone it is possible to be as thoroughly well informed in current literature as by the perusal of a long list of monthlies. . . . It reproduces the best thoughts of the best minds of the civilized world, upon all topics of living interest."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Simply indispensable to any one who desires to keep abreast of the thought of the age in any department of science or literature."—Boston Journal.

"A more attractive periodical cannot be found in the United States. Wherever there is culture and breadth of view it is appreciated, and the more it is appreciated the higher will rise the tone of American literature and the taste of American readers."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"The best of all our eclectic publications."—The Nation, N. Y.

"And the cheapest. A monthly that comes every week."—The Advance, Chicago.

"Incomparable in the richness, variety, and sterling worth of its articles, and equal to several ordinary magazines in the amount of matter presented."—The Standard, Chicago.

"Grows richer and richer the longer it lives. There is no other known way of getting so much good reading for so little money."—Christian Register, Boston.

"It is a thorough compilation of what is best in the literature of the day, whether relating to history, biography, fiction, poetry, wit, science, politics, theology, criticism, or art."—Hartford Daily Courant.

"A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction."—Hon. Robert C. Winthrop.

"The best periodical in America."—Rev. Theo. L. Cuyler, D.D.

"Its pages teem with the choicest literature of the day."—N. Y. Tribune.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics, and science of the day."—The Methodist, N. Y.

"The ablest essays, the most entertaining stories, the finest poetry of the English language are here gathered together."—Illinois State Journal.

"More than ever indispensable, in these days of frequent publication in expensive English Reviews, or articles on the great questions of current inquiry, by such men as Max Muller, Huxley, Tyndall, and many others."—Milwaukee Daily Sentinel.

"Its publication in weekly numbers gives to it a great advantage over its monthly contemporaries in the spirit and freshness of its contents."—The Pacific, San Francisco.

"Of all periodicals in the world, if a man can take only one, he should by all means take THE LIVING AGE. . . . There is nothing comparable to it in true value in the whole range of periodical literature."—Mobile Daily Register.

"The more noted new novels appear as serials, and the more distinguished foreign thinkers in criticism, science and art are represented in its pages. . . . It is the only compilation that presents with a satisfactory completeness, as well as freshness the best literature of the almost innumerable and generally inaccessible European quarterlies, monthlies, and weeklies,—a literature embracing the productions of the ablest and most cultured writers living. It is, therefore, indispensable to every one who desires a thorough compendium of all that is admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."—Boston Post.

"It has no equal in any country."—Philadelphia Press.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY at $8.00 a year, free of postage. An extra copy sent gratis to any one getting up a club of five new subscribers. New subscribers remitting before January 1st, for the year 1876, will receive the intervening numbers gratis.

CLUB PRICES FOR THE BEST HOME AND FOREIGN LITERATURE.

"Possessed of 'LITTELL'S LIVING AGE' and of one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

For $10.50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the four-dollar monthly Magazines (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar, or Appleton's Journal, weekly) will be sent for a year, with postage prepaid on both, or, for $9.50, THE LIVING AGE and Scribner's St. Nicholas.

ADDRESS

LITTELL & GAY, 17 Bromfield St., Boston.

"FAIRLY WITHOUT A RIVAL."—Congregationalist

THE MOST EMINENT AUTHORS of the day, such as Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Max Muller, Prof. Huxley, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Prof. Tyndall, Richard A. Proctor, Edward A. Freeman, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, James [Anthony] Froude, Alfred Russell Wallace, Mrs. Muloch, Mrs. Oliphant, Miss Thackeray, Jean Ingelow, Geo. MacDonald, Wm. Black, Anthony Trollope, R. D. Blackmore, Julia Kavanagh, Mrs. Parr, Henry Kingsley, Mrs. Macquoid, Francis W. Newman, Thomas Carlyle, Erckman-Chatrian, W. W. Story, Robert Buchanan, Tennyson, Browning, and many others, are represented in the pages of

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

IN 1876, THE LIVING AGE enters upon its thirty-third year. Having absorbed its younger competitor, "EVERY SATURDAY," it is now without a rival in its special field. Originally commended by President Adams, Judge Story, Chancellor Kent, historians Sparks, Prescott, Bancroft, Ticknor, and many others, it has never failed to receive the warmest support of the best men and journals of the country, and has met with constantly increasing success.

A weekly magazine, of sixty-four pages, THE LIVING AGE gives more than THREE AND A QUARTER THOUSAND double-column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly, forming four large volumes. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its great amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue and with a satisfactory completeness attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical, and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature.

During the coming year, the Serial and Short Stories of

THE LEADING FOREIGN AUTHORS

will be given, together with an amount, unapproached by any other periodical in the world, of the most valuable literary and Scientific matter of the day from the pens of the above-named and many other foremost Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers, and Editors, representing every department of Knowledge and Progress.

In short, THE LIVING AGE is invaluable as a time, labor, and money-saving publication. It furnishes the only satisfactorily fresh and COMPLETE compilation of a literature that is indispensable to American readers;—indispensable because it embraces the productions of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS

in all branches of Literature, Science, Art, and Politics. Attention is invited to the following recent Opinions of The Living Age.

"Ought to find a place in every American Home."—N. Y. Times.

"In no other single publication can there be found so much of sterling literary excellence."—N. Y. Evening Post.

"Through its pages alone it is possible to be as thoroughly well informed in current literature as by the perusal of a long list of monthlies. . . . It reproduces the best thoughts of the best minds of the civilized world, upon all topics of living interest."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Simply indispensable to any one who takes a deep interest in the thought of the age in any department of science or literature."—Boston Journal.

"A more attractive periodical cannot be found in the United States. Wherever there is culture and breadth of view it is appreciated, and the more it is appreciated the higher will rise the tone of American literature and the taste of American readers."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"The best of all our eclectic publications."—The Nation, N. Y.

"And the cheapest. A monthly that comes every week."—The Advance, Chicago.

"Incomparable in the richness, variety, and sterling worth of its articles, and equal to several ordinary magazines in the amount of matter presented."—The Standard, Chicago.

"Grows richer and richer the longer it lives. There is no other known way of getting so much good reading for so little money."—Christian Register, Boston.

"It is a thorough compilation of what is best in the literature of the day, whether relating to history, biography, fiction, poetry, wit, science, politics, theology, criticism, or art."—Hartford Daily Courant.

"A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction."—Hon. Robert C. Winthrop.

"The best periodical in America."—Rev. Theo. L. Cuyler, D.D.

"Its pages teem with the choicest literature of the day."—N. Y. Tribune.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics, and science of the day."—The Methodist, N. Y.

"The ablest essays, the most entertaining stories, the finest poetry of the English language are here gathered together."—Illinois State Journal.

"More than ever indispensable, in these days of frequent publication in expensive English Reviews, or articles on the great questions of current inquiry, by such men as Max Muller, Huxley, Tyndall, and many others."—Milwaukee Daily Sentinel.

"Its publication in weekly numbers gives to it a great advantage over its monthly contemporaries in the spirit and freshness of its contents."—The Pacific, San Francisco.

"Of all periodicals in the world, if a man can take only one, he should by all means take THE LIVING AGE. . . . There is nothing comparable to it in true value in the whole range of periodical literature."—Mobile Daily Register.

"The more noted new novels appear as serials, and the more distinguished foreign thinkers in criticism, science, and art are represented in its pages. . . . It is the only compilation that presents with a satisfactory completeness, as well as freshness the best literature of the almost innumerable and generally inaccessible European quarterlies, monthlies, and weeklies,—a literature embracing the productions of the ablest and most cultured writers living. It is, therefore, indispensable to every one who desires a thorough compendium of all that is admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."—Boston Post.

"It has no equal in any country."—Philadelphia Press.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY at $8.00 a year, free of postage. An extra copy sent gratis to any one getting up a club of five new subscribers. New subscribers remitting before January 1st, for the year 1876, will receive the intervening numbers gratis.

CLUB PRICES FOR THE BEST HOME AND FOREIGN LITERATURE.

"Possessed of 'LITTELL'S LIVING AGE' and of one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

For $10.50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the four-dollar monthly Magazines (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar, or Appleton's Journal, weekly) will be sent for a year, with postage prepaid on both, or, for $9.50, THE LIVING AGE and Scribner's St. Nicholas.

ADDRESS

LITTELL & GAY, 17 Bromfield St., Boston.

1876.

Vol. 6.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,

A Complete Set—Three Volumes—of the Republic,

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,

A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING

THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,

BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE FIFTH VOLUME,

Which closes with the December number of 1875, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

3
R419
SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. VI.—No. 2.

FEBRUARY, 1876.

Whole No. 36.

Contents:

	PAGE
The Work of the Forty-fourth Congress.....	65
Our Best Men for the Convention.....	80
Some Phases of English Land Tenure, and Plans of Land Tenure Reform.....	81
Democratic Promises vs. Performances.....	86
Payment of Rebel Debts.....	88
The Weakness of Democracy.....	90
The Representation of Confederate Treason.....	92
The Democratic Speaker and the House Committees.....	98
Record of the Democratic Speaker.....	104
The National Banking System.....	118
Official Corruption Compared with that of Former Times.....	124
The Slaveholders' War and the Paris Commune.....	126
Investigations.....	127
Confederate Soldiers and Leaders in the Forty-fourth Congress.....	129
A Word to Thoughtful Men.....	132
Review of the Month.....	137
Executive and Department Doings.....	140
Two Pictures for Loyal Eyes.....	144
Appendix—Speeches of Hon. Jas. G. Blaine, of Maine, Hon. James A. Garfield, of Ohio, and Hon. Ben. Hill, of Georgia, on Amnesty.

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

1876.

PROSPECTUS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its sixth volume with the Centennial year, January, 1876.

It is popular in public favor, and has received substantial encouragement from every Territory in the Union.

Its promises have been made good. Its pages have been filled with political information, with the suggestions of wisdom growing out of experience, with facts and figures judiciously arranged, making a fund of knowledge, of itself, a valuable text-book to be relied on in Governmental affairs.

In view of the Presidential election, which takes place in 1876, the REPUBLIC desires to extend its field of usefulness by adding to its list of subscribers. It already numbers among its readers many of the most thoughtful and intelligent citizens of the country. The deep interest expressed by them in the work, is to the publishers, evidence of an appreciation that thousands of others would entertain of the REPUBLIC, could it be brought to their attention. Will not our friends take upon themselves the slight labor of inviting other good citizens to add their names and their influence to a magazine that is published in the interest of public morality and good government.

In the future, as in the past, the REPUBLIC will advocate an honest administration of Government, whether municipal, State or National.

It will favor loyalty, honesty, economy, and personal ability as pre-requisites for office.

It will give credit where credit is due; and impartial criticism whenever required.

It will seek to hold up intelligence as the safeguard to National safety, and will defend our free-school system as essential to its preservation.

It will advocate improvements, that experience may commend, in the education of the young; but will oppose all efforts to divide the public-school funds, or to introduce into the schools sectarian influences.

It will advocate the perpetuation of the Republican party as the best, if not the only means to secure the preservation of the Union, and the impartial execution of the laws.

It will labor earnestly to bring about such reforms as the spirit of progress may demand, and in all things seek to present those methods of administration, which the wisdom and experience of a century have confirmed.

It will give to its readers a clear insight into the various branches of Government, by a faithful record of their doings.

These are among the leading features of the work to which the REPUBLIC is devoted. It pledges anew its best energies to make the Centennial volumes worthy the Nation it serves, and the year it enters upon.

To the Republican press of the country, co-laborers in the grand mission of preserving good government, the REPUBLIC sends greeting and thanks. If increased activity can merit a continuation of the good will expressed, our brethren of the press will still extend their hands in generous welcome. The Presidential campaign will bring upon all, increased responsibilities and new demands. The REPUBLIC will bear its share and perform its duty without fear or favor, keeping ever in view, that the highest reward that patriotism can win, is the consciousness that its efforts have advanced civilization and contributed to the cause of good government.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

RE

COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VI. WASHINGTON, D. C., FEBRUARY, 1876. No. 2.

THE WORK OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

THE CASE OF M'MILLEN.

A long debate sprang up in the Senate on the case of W. L. McMillen, heretofore claiming a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana—the motion being on his request to withdraw his credentials from the files of the Senate. It was a dispute about the old condition of things in that State, and ended where it began, with the passage of the resolution by a vote of 30 to 28. So a distracting element has been withdrawn, it is hoped forever, from the hall of the United States Senate.

HOUSE RESOLUTIONS.

In the House the two parties were evidently feeling each other's strength and preparing to make a record to go to the country. Mr. Blaine introduced a proposal for an amendment of the Constitution which is likely to open a long discussion and to stir the popular mind of the country to its very depths. It is as follows :

ARTICLE XVI.

"No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations."

This proposal was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. Fort proposed the following resolution:

"That in all subordinate appointments

5R

under any of the officers of this House it is the judgment of this House that wounded Union soldiers who are not disabled from performance of duty should be preferred."

Mr. Cox offered an amendment "that inasmuch as the union of the States has been restored, all the citizens thereof are entitled to consideration in all appointments to offices under this Government," and proposed the whole subject be referred to the Committee on Accounts. It was so decided by the Democratic majority.

PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. Harrison proposed the following amendment to the Constitution :

ARTICLE XVI.

"From and after the election for President of the United States next following the ratification of this article, the President shall hold his office during the term of six years, and, together with the Vice President chosen for the same term, be elected in the manner as now provided, or may hereafter be provided; but neither the President nor Vice President, when the office of President is devolved upon him, shall be eligible for re-election as President, but shall be from and after the expiration of his office as President, unless the same be by impeachment, a Senator for life for the United States at large, and as such Senator shall have the same privileges as other Senators, except that he shall not vote as Senator, nor shall he be President pro tempore of the Senate, he shall have the same immunities and compensation; but his attendance upon the sessions shall not be compulsory, nor shall his compensation be abridged by reason of his non-attendance."

Mr. Morrison offered a joint resolution proposing the term of the Presidential office for six years, and to make the President ineligible for more than six years in any term of twelve years after the next Presidential election, which resolution was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. Springer offered a resolution "that the Committee on Military Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency of reducing the regular army to 10,000 men, or to such number as will insure an efficient public service at an expense of not exceeding $20,000,000 annually, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise. The resolution was adopted.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. Stone introduced a bill proposing to establish a Department of Commerce, having charge of the agricultural, manufacturing, and mining interests of the United States, so far as they are committed to the National Government by the Constitution, with a Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Chief Clerk, and such other clerks and officers as may hereafter be designated by law, and that these officers be put on the same footing as those of the other Departments of the Government; that the Department of Commerce shall be charged with the execution of all laws of the United States relating to trade and commerce, foreign and domestic, and of all laws for raising revenue taxes, excises, and duties on imports; that it shall tabulate statistics relating to the subjects with which it is charged, and make an annual report to the President.

REMOVAL OF HENDERSON.

Mr. Buckner submitted a resolution calling on the President "to transmit to the House all correspondence in reference to the dismissal of ex-Senator John B. Henderson, of Missouri, as one of the special counsel of the United States in the prosecution of the whisky-fraud cases before the United States Court at St. Louis." The resolution was laid over.

PROTECTION FROM RAILROAD EXTORTION.

Mr. Wilson introduced a resolution "that it is the duty of Congress to regulate commerce on inter-State railroads by appropriate legislation, so that the agricultural, commercial, and other industrial interests of the country may be protected from extortion and discrimination." It was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

GOVERNMENT DEFAULTERS.

Mr. Hereford submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House with the names of the various persons or officers whose accounts have not been settled, or who have been defaulters to the General Government since March 2, 1865, together with the amounts of each, and by whom appointed." The resolution was laid over.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. Cox presented a memorial from the Centennial Commission and Board of Finance for an appropriation in aid of the exposition. The memorial recites the creation of the commission by act of Congress March 3, 1871, and the subsequent steps of the Government for the furtherance of this national design. It states that the amount required to carry the work to the opening-day is $6,724,850, of which there is now a deficiency of $1,537,100, and makes an earnest appeal for the action of Congress. A visit of those representing the three departments of Government to the Centennial buildings and grounds was subsequently planned and accomplished—a very large number of our public men from the capital sharing the excursion. They were entertained in the most sumptuous manner, and have returned to their posts of office doubtless deeply impressed with the greatness of the occasion, and the need of Congressional assistance.

ALASKA SEAL-FISHERIES.

Mr. Payne offered resolutions calling on the Secretaries of the Navy and the Treasury for information respecting the seal-fisheries in Alaska, and the management of the Alaska Commercial Company of San Francisco from the date of its lease from the United States to the present time. The resolutions were agreed to.

WHISKY FRAUDS.

Mr. Randall submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for copies of all letters, telegrams, orders, and instructions relating to the organization and prosecution of the present movements against the so-called "whisky rings" of St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee." The resolution was laid over.

COURT OF COMMISSIONERS OF ALABAMA CLAIMS.

A proposition was made in the House for the extension of this court beyond the 22d of January, 1876. It was stated that in July, 1873, the amount received from Great Britain in gold to pay for damages by the rebel vessels Alabama, Florida, and Shenandoah was $15,500,000, the value of which is estimated at present to be $19,762,000. The judgments rendered by this commission to December 9, 1875, amounted to $5,836,805.66. The claims that remain undecided amount to $3,400,000, which leaves a balance in the Treasury of $10,426,194.34. The proposal was agreed to.

STATUE OF LAFAYETTE.

Mr. Hoar submitted the memorial of B. H. Kinney requesting an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of an equestrian statue of Lafayette, in memory of his distinguished services in the war of the revolution, and with appropriate designs commemorating the services of other French officers and soldiers in that memorable contest.

NATIONAL AND STATE RIGHTS.

In the Senate, Mr. Morton submitted a series of concurrent resolutions declaring that the people of the United States constitute a nation, and are one people in the sense of national unity; that the Government of the United States is not a compact between the States, but was formed between the people of the United States in their primary capacity; that the rights of the States are defined and guaranteed in the Constitution, and not by any outside theory of State sovereignty; and that these rights cannot be modified except by constitutional amendment; and that State secession is an extinguished heresy.

INFRACTIONS OF REVENUE LAWS.

Senator Stevenson submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for copies of all dispatches and papers relating to the "whisky-frauds" in St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee. On this resolution a spirited debate sprang up, in which it was contended that the communication of such intelligence to the country at this time would impede the prosecution of parties to these frauds, whereupon the resolution was withdrawn.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

In the House, Mr. Hale submitted a preamble and resolution reciting the commitment of the country against repudiation, and declaring it to be the judgment of the House that the former legislation of Congress on this subject should be carried out, and that for this purpose all the necessary power should be put in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. Randall presented a preamble and resolution proposing to remove all remaining disabilities upon persons in the United States arising out of the late civil war, which was made a special order on the Tuesday following.

PAYMENTS TO DISLOYAL PERSONS.

Mr. Vance introduced a bill proposing to repeal the former legislation of Congress prohibiting payments to disloyal persons, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Mr. Morey introduced a bill prescribing the following oath of office for persons elected or appointed to offices under the Government of the United States: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign or domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this oath freely without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God;" that said oath, so taken and signed, shall be preserved in the files of the proper office, and any person who shall falsely take the said oath shall be guilty of perjury, and on conviction, in addition to the present penalties for this offense, shall be deprived of his office, and rendered incapable forever after of holding any office or place under the United States. The second section provides that no other oath shall be required; but this act shall not be construed as relieving persons from any disabilities under which they may lie at present.

which was referred to the Military Committee.

REVISION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. Springer offered a resolution "that the Committee on Military Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency of reducing the regular army to 10,000 men, or to such number as will insure an efficient public service at an expense of not exceeding $20,000,000 annually, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise." The resolution was adopted.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. Stone introduced a bill proposing to establish a Department of Commerce, having charge of the agricultural, manufacturing, and mining interests of the United States, so far as they are committed to the National Government by the Constitution, with a Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Chief Clerk, and such other clerks and officers as may hereafter be designated by law, and that these officers be put on the same footing as those of the other Departments of the Government; that the Department of Commerce shall be charged with the execution of all laws of the United States relating to trade and commerce, foreign and domestic, and of all laws for raising revenue taxes, excises, and duties on imports; that it shall tabulate statistics relating to the subjects with which it is charged, and make an annual report to the President.

REMOVAL OF HENDERSON.

Mr. Buckner submitted a resolution calling on the President "to transmit to the House all correspondence in reference to the dismissal of ex Senator John B. Henderson, of Missouri, as one of the special counsel of the United States in the prosecution of the whisky fraud cases before the United States Court at St. Louis." The resolution was laid over.

PROTECTION FROM RAILROAD EXTORTION.

Mr. Wilson introduced a resolution "that it is the duty of Congress to regulate commerce on inter State railroads by appropriate legislation, so that the agricultural, commercial, and other industrial interests of the country may be protected from extortion and discrimination." It was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

GOVERNMENT DEFTALTERS.

Mr. Herford submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House with the names of the various persons or officers whose accounts have not been settled, or who have been defaulters to the General Government since March 2, 1855, together with the amounts of each, and by whom appointed." The resolution was laid over.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. Cox presented a memorial from the Centennial Commission and Board of Finance for an appropriation in aid of the exposition. The memorial recites the creation of the commission by act of Congress March 3, 1871, and the subsequent steps of the Government for the furtherance of this national design. It states that the amount required to carry the work to the opening-day is $6,724,850, of which there is now a deficiency of $1,537,100, and makes an earnest appeal for the action of Congress. A visit of those representing the three departments of Government to the Centennial buildings and grounds was subsequently planned and accomplished—a very large number of our public men from the capital sharing the excursion. They were entertained in the most sumptuous manner, and have returned to their posts of office doubtless deeply impressed with the greatness of the occasion, and the need of Congressional assistance.

ALASKA SEAL-FISHERIES.

Mr. Payne offered resolutions calling on the Secretaries of the Navy and the Treasury for information respecting the seal-fisheries in Alaska, and the management of the Alaska Commercial Company of San Francisco from the date of its lease from the United States to the present time. The resolutions were agreed to.

WHISKY FRAUDS.

Mr. Randall submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for copies of all letters, telegrams, orders, and instructions relating to the organization and prosecution of the present movements against the so-called "whisky rings" of St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee." The resolution was laid over.

COURT OF COMMISSIONERS OF ALABAMA CLAIMS.

A proposition was made in the House for the extension of this court beyond the 22d of January, 1876. It was stated that in July, 1873, the amount received from Great Britain in gold to pay for damages by the rebel vessels Alabama, Florida, and Shenandoah was $15,500,000, the value of which is estimated at present to be $19,762,000. The judgments rendered by this commission to December 9, 1875, amounted to $5,836,805.66. The claims that remain undecided amount to $3,400,000, which leaves a balance in the Treasury of $10,426,194.34. The proposal was agreed to.

STATUE OF LAFAYETTE.

Mr. Hoar submitted the memorial of B. H. Kinney requesting an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of an equestrian statue of Lafayette, in memory of his distinguished services in the war of the revolution, and with appropriate designs commemorating the services of other French officers and soldiers in that memorable contest.

NATIONAL AND STATE RIGHTS.

In the Senate, Mr. Morton submitted a series of concurrent resolutions declaring that the people of the United States constitute a nation, and are one people in the sense of national unity; that the Government of the United States is not a compact between the States, but was formed between the people of the United States in their primary capacity; that the rights of the States are defined and guaranteed in the Constitution, and not by any outside theory of State sovereignty; and that these rights cannot be modified except by constitutional amendment; and that State secession is an extinguished heresy.

INFRACTIONS OF REVENUE LAWS.

Senator Stevenson submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for copies of all dispatches and papers relating to the "whisky-frauds" in St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee. On this resolution a spirited debate sprang up, in which it was contended that the communication of such intelligence to the country at this time would impede the prosecution of parties to these frauds, whereupon the resolution was withdrawn.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

In the House, Mr. Hale submitted a preamble and resolution reciting the commitment of the country against repudiation, and declaring it to be the judgment of the House that the former legislation of Congress on this subject should be carried out, and that for this purpose all the necessary power should be put in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. Randall presented a preamble and resolution proposing to remove all remaining disabilities upon persons in the United States arising out of the late civil war, which was made a special order on the Tuesday following.

PAYMENTS TO DISLOYAL PERSONS.

Mr. Vance introduced a bill proposing to repeal the former legislation of Congress prohibiting payments to disloyal persons, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Mr. Morey introduced a bill prescribing the following oath of office for persons elected or appointed to offices under the Government of the United States: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign or domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this oath freely without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God;" that said oath, so taken and signed, shall be preserved in the files of the proper office, and any person who shall falsely take the said oath shall be guilty of perjury, and on conviction, in addition to the present penalties for this offense, shall be deprived of his office, and rendered incapable forever after of holding any office or place under the United States. The second section provides that no other oath shall be required; but this act shall not be construed as relieving persons from any disabilities under which they may lie at present.

The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

In 1863-'4, in consequence of disturbance in the Japanese Empire for damages accrued to the shipping interests of other nations, for which an indemnity of three millions of dollars was exacted by the Governments of Great Britain, France, Netherlands, and the United States, the share of the United States was $750,000. The actual damages and expenses arising from the event referred to have all been paid, and amounted to less than $50,000. The unexpended balance amounts at present to more than a million and a quarter dollars. The memorial of David Murray, presented in the House, recites the facts of the case, and offers very cogent reasons why this sum should be returned to the Government of Japan. The subject was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

Mr. Lawrence presented a resolution "that it is the sense of this House that the policy of finance should be steadily pursued which, without a shock to business, will ultimately equalize the purchasing power of the gold and paper dollar. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Currency and Banking.

SUBSIDIES.

Mr. Holman submitted the following resolution: "That in the judgment of this House, in the present condition of the financial affairs of the Government, no subsidies of any sort or kind should be granted by Congress, and that at this time all appropriations should be limited to such amounts only as shall be imperatively demanded by the public service." The resolution was adopted by a vote of 232 to 18; thirty-nine members not voting.

CURRENCY AND EXPENSES.

Mr. Anderson submitted resolutions declaring that instead of increasing revenue Congress should cut down expenses, and that the Committee on Banking and Currency be instructed to report a bill repealing the national banking law, and substituting for national bank currency a national paper money issued directly from the Treasury, made a legal tender for all debts, public and private, including duties on imports, and to be interchangeable for registered bonds bearing 3.65 per cent. interest. The first resolution was adopted, the second referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RECIPROCITY.

Mr. Ward introduced a resolution to authorize the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutual beneficial treaty between the United States and Canada may be negotiated. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATOR SPENCER.

Senator George S. Spencer submitted some remarks touching the aspersions publicly made on the manner of his election to a seat in the Senate from the State of Alabama, and offered a resolution that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to investigate and report upon the same. The resolution was agreed to.

THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

Senator Morton offered a preamble and resolution in regard to the alleged fraud and violence of the recent election in this State, which was taken up for consideration. A long and spirited debate ensued—conducted by Messrs. Morton, Bayard, and Thurman, pending which the Senate entered into executive session. The extent of the scandal of this election is beyond any parallel in the history of the country, and if one-tenth part of the allegation is true, it is a cause of shame that should bring a blush to the cheek of every lover of American institutions.

THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Senator Edmunds offered the following resolution:

"Whereas, since the last session of the Senate the Vice President of the United States has deceased, therefore

"Resolved, That on the 7th of January next at one o'clock, P. M., the Senate will proceed to the election of a President pro tempore."

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The subject was subsequently brought to the attention of the Senate by the following resolution offered by Senator Edmunds:

"Resolved, That Mr. Thomas W. Ferry, a Senator from the State of Michigan, be the President of the Senate until January 7, 1876, and until a fresh appointment shall be made."

The resolution was agreed to.

PETITIONS, BILLS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

To a stranger the number of papers offered in Congress on all subjects is something most surprising. Already in the first month of the session there is a flood of business pouring in upon the new Congress—for increase of pensions, for the relief of private persons, for the division of States into judicial districts, touching the disposition of the Geneva award, for the completion of a naval monument, for the amendment of the revised statutes of the United States, for new post-routes, for the reduction of rates of postage, concerning the transmission of merchandise through the mails, for a joint high commission to settle by arbitration all disputes among nations, for the reduction of tariff on wines, for the relief of Methodist churches, for a commission of inquiry into the alcoholic traffic, for the establishment of new signal stations, and indeed for every thing and all things that it ever entered into the imagination of man to conceive. Surely the right of petition is in full exercise among our fellow-citizens. At this present writing 169 bills have been offered in the Senate, and 384 in the House.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEES.

As the House is Democratic, great interest was manifested in the forty-seven standing committees. This was one of the last acts of Speaker Kerr before the adjournment for the holidays. The committees as at present constituted show a great preference given to the West and South, and an almost total disregard of New England. Many surprises were excited, and the ambition of some prominent gentlemen in the Democratic party has no doubt been disappointed. Time alone will prove with what judgment the Speaker has acted in this important matter.

PAGE'S RESOLUTION.

On Friday, December 17, 1875, Mr. Page submitted the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas, the Constitution of the United States as framed by the fathers of the Republic imposes no limit upon the eligibility of any citizen to the office of President, further than that he shall be native-born, and of a certain age, and time of residence; therefore be it

"Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the right of selecting candidates for the office of President can only be lawfully exercised by the people under the existing Constitutional restrictions, and has never been delegated by the people to the House of Representatives, or to any members of the same, and that any attempt by the House of Representatives to limit or forestall the public will on a question of such importance is an invasion of powers reserved to the people at large, to be freely exercised by them without any interference from any legislative body whatever."

The resolution was permitted to lie on the table. On Monday Congress adjourned for the holidays to Wednesday, January 5, 1876.

The light of the Centennial year has broken upon us—a year to be memorable in the history of the Republic.

AFTER RECESS.

Both Houses met January 5th, 1876, and proceeded to business. In the Senate little but routine business has occurred up to the present date. Tuesday, January 11th, was set apart for eulogies upon the life and character of Senator Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, who deceased during the summer recess of the Senate; and Thursday, January 13th, was set apart for eulogies on Henry Wilson, the late Vice President of the United States. Both occasions were marked by much feeling and the utterance of honest and kindly words.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The question raised by Senator Edmunds before the recess upon the status of the presiding officer of the Senate has been disposed of in the following action of the Senate. Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following resolutions:

1. That the tenure of office of the President pro tempore of the Senate elected at one session does not expire at the meeting of Congress after the first recess, the Vice President not having appeared to take the Chair.

2. That the death of the Vice President does not have the effect to vacate the office of the President pro tempore of the Senate.

3. That the office of President pro tempore of the Senate is held at the pleasure of the Senate.

4. That Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, a Senator from Michigan, who was elected President pro tempore of the Senate at the last session, is now the President pro tempore of the Senate by virtue of said election.

Senator Merrimon contended that when a President pro tempore has been elected he may rightfully continue to hold the office so long as his term of Senator continues, or unless he be removed for cause, until the Vice President shall return to the chair, or a new Vice President shall be elected. An investigation of the records shows the first four cases occurring prior to 1804, which were treated upon the assumption that the office ceased on the reappearance of the Vice President, or on the meeting of the Senate after the first recess. But subsequent to 1804 forty-nine cases are given in support of the position that the office continues without re-election.

Senator Saulsbury maintained that the Senate does not exhaust its power over the question by the choice of a President pro tempore, otherwise a state of things might occur in which the business of the Senate must stop.

Senator Jones, of Florida, concurred in the views of Senator Merrimon, and argued that the Senate has only an implied right of removal, while the law of Congress devolving the duties of President on the President pro tempore of the Senate in case of the death or disability of both President and Vice President has constitutional authority; and that in a conflict between an implied right of the Senate and a law of constitutional authority the implied right must give way to the constitutional authority.

The question being then taken on the first and second resolutions by yeas and nays they were unanimously adopted.

On the third resolution, Senator Thurman held that the solution of this question depends upon the meaning of the phrase pro tempore, and in view of the circumstances moved that the resolution be indefinitely postponed—pending which the Senate adjourned. On Wednesday, January 12th, the subject again recurred. Senator Edmunds argued that the phrase pro tempore means "for the time being," "for the instant," and that the framers of the Constitution so intended. He cited the practice of the English House of Lords in confirmation of this view. He also contended that the power of appointment or election implies the power of removal and change. He supposed a number of cases where any other construction would create confusion, and possibly arrest the legislation of the country.

Senator Wallace held that the President pro tempore of the Senate is an officer of the United States as well as of the Senate. He cited the early action of the framers of the Constitution in proof of this, showing their manifest intention to place the possible succession to the Presidency only upon an officer of the United States. He advanced other cogent proofs of this construction from the legislation of 1792, and from the remarks of Mr. Seward upon the subject in the 33d Congress.

Senator Morton concurred in the views of Senator Edmunds that the Senate has power to elect a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice President at its pleasure, quoting in support of his position from Cushing on Parliamentary Law.

Senator Norwood put the question, "Suppose the President of the United States should die to-day, would not the President pro tempore immediately become acting President—and if so could we by a vote of the Senate here to-morrow change the first and put another man in his place?" To this question Senator Morton replied that he could not answer, as that is one of the very points which remain in doubt. He expressed the opinion, however, that in the case supposed the incumbent would hold both offices and be bound to discharge the duties of both. Instances analogous were cited from the States of Arkansas and Illinois.

Senator Stevenson maintained that the office of President pro tempore of the Senate is one of fixed tenure, not subject to change at the mere pleasure of the Senate, citing in confirmation the opinions of the eminent jurists, Collamer of Vermont and Bayard of Delaware. There was no difference between them on the point that the office was fixed by the Constitution, although they reached different results as to its duration. He held that while the tenure of the office of President pro tempore is of uncertain duration, it is fixed and determined, not by the Senate, but by the Constitution, hence the act of 1792 and a long series of precedents subsequently arising giving this construction.

Senator Conkling put the following case: Suppose the President pro tempore should enter on the duties of the Presidential office, and his term as Senator should expire before the close of the Presidential term, would he continue to be acting ex officio as President of the United States though the term of his Senatorship by virtue of which he came to be President pro tempore had expired?

Senator Stevenson replied that in his opinion such acting President should continue to act though his term as Senator had expired. He likewise contradicted the view of Senator Morton that a President pro tempore on assuming the duties of President of the United States should be bound at the same time to act as presiding officer of the Senate. He cited a case of himself in the State of Kentucky in refutation of such a view, and Senator Thurman of Ohio added two cases in his own State where the governorship of the State devolved on the speaker of the Senate, and it was decided in both cases that the speaker accepting the office of Governor thereby vacated his office as Senator.

Senator Morton added the case of Pinchback, who became Governor of Louisiana; meantime his office as Senator expired, but he continued to act as Governor till Governor Kellogg was installed.

Senator Stevenson contended that this case was directly in support of his views on the question now pending.

Senator Thurman stated that at first he was induced to take the view of the report of the committee, but that the discussion had changed his mind, and that now he inclined to believe that the preponderance of argument was against the power of the Senate to change the presiding officer of the Senate as was contended in the report. He further argued that on assuming the duties of the President of the United States the President pro tempore would vacate his office as Senator:

Senator Alcorn argued in favor of the view that when the President pro tempore assumes the duties of President of the United States he is then beyond the reach of the Senate. He cited authorities from his own state of Mississippi in support of this position, while at the same time contending that the power to appoint implies the power to remove. But he thought these questions did not really conflict.

The question being taken on the indefinite postponement of the resolution, the Senate refused to postpone.

Senator Whyte offered an amendment in pursuance of the view that when the President pro tempore assumes the duties of the President of the United States he steps beyond the reach of the Senate.

The amendment was rejected, and the resolution was agreed to by a vote of 34 to 15.

Senator Stevenson suggested that this action had left the whole question in great uncertainty, and that he should propose a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to look into this matter and by necessary and proper legislation provide for any and every contingency that may occur.

The fourth resolution, declaring that Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, a Senator from Michigan, who was elected President pro tempore at the last session, is now the President pro tempore by virtue of said election, was withdrawn on the ground that in view of the other resolutions already adopted this resolution is unnecessary.

And so after all the efforts on this subject nothing has been settled but a temporary decision of the Senate that it may at its will supersede one incumbent of the office by the election of another, and this rule may itself be reversed at some future time by another vote of the Senate. But the discussion has shown one thing, namely: the great defects of existing legislation upon the whole question, and the imperative necessity in so important a matter of passing an act which will clear the case of its present difficulties and avoid the formidable evils which might now arise in a very palpable contingency.

1876.

PROSPECTUS. Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its sixth volume with the Centennial year, January, 1876.

It is now in public favor, and has received substantial encouragement from every Territory in the Union.

Its promises have been made good. Its pages have been filled with political information with the suggestions of wisdom growing out of experience, with facts and figures skillfully arranged, making a fund of knowledge, of itself, a valuable text-book to be used in Governmental affairs.

At the Presidential election, which takes place in 1876, the REPUBLIC desires to increase its field of usefulness by adding to its list of subscribers. It already numbers among its readers, many of the most thoughtful and intelligent citizens of the country. The deep interest expressed by them in the work, is to the publishers, evidence of an appreciation that thousands of others would entertain of the REPUBLIC, could it be brought to their attention. Will not our friends take upon themselves the slight labor of inviting other good citizens to add their names and their influence to a magazine that is published in the interest of public morality and good government.

In the future, as in the past, the REPUBLIC will advocate an honest administration of Government, whether municipal, State or National.

It will favor loyalty, honesty, economy, and personal ability as pre-requisites for office.

It will give credit where credit is due; and impartial criticism whenever required.

It will seek to hold up intelligence as the safeguard to National safety, and will defend our free-school system as essential to its preservation.

It will advocate improvements, that experience may commend, in the education of the young; but will oppose all efforts to divide the public-school funds, or to introduce into the schools sectarian influences.

It will advocate the perpetuation of the Republican party as the best, if not the only means to secure the preservation of the Union, and the impartial execution of the laws.

It will labor earnestly to bring about such reforms as the spirit of progress may demand, and in all things seek to present those methods of administration, which the wisdom and experience of a century have confirmed.

It will give to its readers a clear insight into the various branches of Government, by a faithful record of their doings.

These are among the leading features of the work to which the REPUBLIC is devoted. It pledges anew its best energies to make the Centennial volumes worthy the Nation it serves, and the year it enters upon.

To the Republican press of the country, co-laborers in the grand mission of preserving good government, the REPUBLIC sends greeting and thanks. If increased activity can merit a continuation of the good will expressed, our brethren of the press will still extend their hands in generous welcome. The Presidential campaign will bring upon all, increased responsibilities and new demands. The REPUBLIC will bear its share and perform its duty without fear or favor, keeping ever in view, that the highest reward that patriotism can win, is the consciousness that its efforts have advanced civilization and contributed to the cause of good government.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

RE

COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VI. WASHINGTON, D. C., FEBRUARY, 1876. No. 2.

THE WORK OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

THE CASE OF M'MILLEN.

A long debate sprang up in the Senate on the case of W. L. McMillen, heretofore claiming a seat in the Senate from the State of Louisiana—the motion being on his request to withdraw his credentials from the files of the Senate. It was a dispute about the old condition of things in that State, and ended where it began, with the passage of the resolution by a vote of 30 to 28. So a distracting element has been withdrawn, it is hoped forever, from the hall of the United States Senate.

HOUSE RESOLUTIONS.

In the House the two parties were evidently feeling each other's strength and preparing to make a record to go to the country. Mr. Blaine introduced a proposal for an amendment of the Constitution which is likely to open a long discussion and to stir the popular mind of the country to its very depths. It is as follows :

ARTICLE XVI.

"No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations."

This proposal was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. Fort proposed the following resolution:

"That in all subordinate appointments

under any of the officers of this House it is the judgment of this House that wounded Union soldiers who are not disabled from performance of duty should be preferred."

Mr. Cox offered an amendment "that inasmuch as the union of the States has been restored, all the citizens thereof are entitled to consideration in all appointments to offices under this Government," and proposed the whole subject be referred to the Committee on Accounts. It was so decided by the Democratic majority.

PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. Harrison proposed the following amendment to the Constitution :

ARTICLE XVI.

"From and after the election for President of the United States next following the ratification of this article, the President shall hold his office during the term of six years, and, together with the Vice President chosen for the same term, be elected in the manner as now provided, or may hereafter be provided; but neither the President nor Vice President, when the office of President is devolved upon him, shall be eligible for re-election as President, but shall be from and after the expiration of his office as President, unless the same be by impeachment, a Senator for life for the United States at large, and as such Senator shall have the same privileges as other Senators, except that he shall not vote as Senator, nor shall he be President pro tempore of the Senate, he shall have the same immunities and compensation; but his attendance upon the sessions shall not be compulsory, nor shall his compensation be abridged by reason of his non-attendance."

Mr. Morrison offered a joint resolution proposing the term of the Presidential office for six years, and to make the President ineligible for more than six years in any term of twelve years after the next Presidential election, which resolution was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. Springer offered a resolution "that the Committee on Military Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency of reducing the regular army to 10,000 men, or to such number as will insure an efficient public service at an expense of not exceeding $20,000,000 annually, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise. The resolution was adopted.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. Stone introduced a bill proposing to establish a Department of Commerce, having charge of the agricultural, manufacturing, and mining interests of the United States, so far as they are committed to the National Government by the Constitution, with a Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Chief Clerk, and such other clerks and officers as may hereafter be designated by law, and that these officers be put on the same footing as those of the other Departments of the Government; that the Department of Commerce shall be charged with the execution of all laws of the United States relating to trade and commerce, foreign and domestic, and of all laws for raising revenue taxes, excises, and duties on imports; that it shall tabulate statistics relating to the subjects with which it is charged, and make an annual report to the President.

REMOVAL OF HENDERSON.

Mr. Buckner submitted a resolution calling on the President "to transmit to the House all correspondence in reference to the dismissal of ex-Senator John B. Henderson, of Missouri, as one of the special counsel of the United States in the prosecution of the whisky-fraud cases before the United States Court at St. Louis." The resolution was laid over.

PROTECTION FROM RAILROAD EXTORTION.

Mr. Wilson introduced a resolution "that it is the duty of Congress to regulate commerce on inter-State railroads by appropriate legislation, so that the agricultural, commercial, and other industrial interests of the country may be protected from extortion and discrimination." It was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

GOVERNMENT DEFAULTERS.

Mr. Hereford submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House with the names of the various persons or officers whose accounts have not been settled, or who have been defaulters to the General Government since March 2, 1865, together with the amounts of each, and by whom appointed." The resolution was laid over.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. Cox presented a memorial from the Centennial Commission and Board of Finance for an appropriation in aid of the exposition. The memorial recites the creation of the commission by act of Congress March 3, 1871, and the subsequent steps of the Government for the furtherance of this national design. It states that the amount required to carry the work to the opening-day is $6,724,850, of which there is now a deficiency of $1,537,100, and makes an earnest appeal for the action of Congress. A visit of those representing the three departments of Government to the Centennial buildings and grounds was subsequently planned and accomplished—a very large number of our public men from the capital sharing the excursion. They were entertained in the most sumptuous manner, and have returned to their posts of office doubtless deeply impressed with the greatness of the occasion, and the need of Congressional assistance.

ALASKA SEAL-FISHERIES.

Mr. Payne offered resolutions calling on the Secretaries of the Navy and the Treasury for information respecting the seal-fisheries in Alaska, and the management of the Alaska Commercial Company of San Francisco from the date of its lease from the United States to the present time. The resolutions were agreed to.

WHISKY FRAUDS.

Mr. Randall submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for copies of all letters, telegrams, orders, and instructions relating to the organization and prosecution of the present movements against the so-called "whisky rings" of St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee." The resolution was laid over.

COURT OF COMMISSIONERS OF ALABAMA CLAIMS.

A proposition was made in the House for the extension of this court beyond the 22d of January, 1876. It was stated that in July, 1873, the amount received from Great Britain in gold to pay for damages by the rebel vessels Alabama, Florida, and Shenandoah was $15,500,000, the value of which is estimated at present to be $19,762,000. The judgments rendered by this commission to December 9, 1875, amounted to $5,836,805.66. The claims that remain undecided amount to $3,400,000, which leaves a balance in the Treasury of $10,426,194.34. The proposal was agreed to.

STATUE OF LAFAYETTE.

Mr. Hoar submitted the memorial of B. H. Kinney requesting an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of an equestrian statue of Lafayette, in memory of his distinguished services in the war of the revolution, and with appropriate designs commemorating the services of other French officers and soldiers in that memorable contest.

NATIONAL AND STATE RIGHTS.

In the Senate, Mr. Morton submitted a series of concurrent resolutions declaring that the people of the United States constitute a nation, and are one people in the sense of national unity; that the Government of the United States is not a compact between the States, but was formed between the people of the United States in their primary capacity; that the rights of the States are defined and guaranteed in the Constitution, and not by any outside theory of State sovereignty; and that these rights cannot be modified except by constitutional amendment; and that State secession is an extinguished heresy.

INFRACTIONS OF REVENUE LAWS.

Senator Stevenson submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for copies of all dispatches and papers relating to the "whisky-frauds" in St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee. On this resolution a spirited debate sprang up, in which it was contended that the communication of such intelligence to the country at this time would impede the prosecution of parties to these frauds, whereupon the resolution was withdrawn.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

In the House, Mr. Hale submitted a preamble and resolution reciting the commitment of the country against repudiation, and declaring it to be the judgment of the House that the former legislation of Congress on this subject should be carried out, and that for this purpose all the necessary power should be put in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. Randall presented a preamble and resolution proposing to remove all remaining disabilities upon persons in the United States arising out of the late civil war, which was made a special order on the Tuesday following.

PAYMENTS TO DISLOYAL PERSONS.

Mr. Vance introduced a bill proposing to repeal the former legislation of Congress prohibiting payments to disloyal persons, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Mr. Morey introduced a bill prescribing the following oath of office for persons elected or appointed to offices under the Government of the United States: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that to the best of my knowledge and ability I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign or domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this oath freely without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God;" that said oath, so taken and signed, shall be preserved in the files of the proper office, and any person who shall falsely take the said oath shall be guilty of perjury, and on conviction, in addition to the present penalties for this offense, shall be deprived of his office, and rendered incapable forever after of holding any office or place under the United States. The second section provides that no other oath shall be required; but this act shall not be construed as relieving persons from any disabilities under which they may lie at present.

The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

In 1863-'4, in consequence of disturbance in the Japanese Empire for damages accrued to the shipping interests of other nations, for which an indemnity of three millions of dollars was exacted by the Governments of Great Britain, France, Netherlands, and the United States, the share of the United States was $750,000. The actual damages and expenses arising from the event referred to have all been paid, and amounted to less than $50,000. The unexpended balance amounts at present to more than a million and a quarter dollars. The memorial of David Murray, presented in the House, recites the facts of the case, and offers very cogent reasons why this sum should be returned to the Government of Japan. The subject was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FINANCIAL POLICY.

Mr. Lawrence presented a resolution "that it is the sense of this House that the policy of finance should be steadily pursued which, without a shock to business, will ultimately equalize the purchasing power of the gold and paper dollar. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Currency and Banking.

SUBSIDIES.

Mr. Holman submitted the following resolution: "That in the judgment of this House, in the present condition of the financial affairs of the Government, no subsidies of any sort or kind should be granted by Congress, and that at this time all appropriations should be limited to such amounts only as shall be imperatively demanded by the public service." The resolution was adopted by a vote of 232 to 18; thirty-nine members not voting.

CURRENCY AND EXPENSES.

Mr. Anderson submitted resolutions declaring that instead of increasing revenue Congress should cut down expenses, and that the Committee on Banking and Currency be instructed to report a bill repealing the national banking law, and substituting for national bank currency a national paper money issued directly from the Treasury, made a legal tender for all debts, public and private, including duties on imports, and to be interchangeable for registered bonds bearing 3.65 per cent. interest. The first resolution was adopted, the second referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RECIPROCITY.

Mr. Ward introduced a resolution to authorize the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutual beneficial treaty between the United States and Canada may be negotiated. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATOR SPENCER.

Senator George S. Spencer submitted some remarks touching the aspersions publicly made on the manner of his election to a seat in the Senate from the State of Alabama, and offered a resolution that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to investigate and report upon the same. The resolution was agreed to.

THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

Senator Morton offered a preamble and resolution in regard to the alleged fraud and violence of the recent election in this State, which was taken up for consideration. A long and spirited debate ensued—conducted by Messrs. Morton, Bayard, and Thurman, pending which the Senate entered into executive session. The extent of the scandal of this election is beyond any parallel in the history of the country, and if one-tenth part of the allegation is true, it is a cause of shame that should bring a blush to the cheek of every lover of American institutions.

THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Senator Edmunds offered the following resolution:

"Whereas, since the last session of the Senate the Vice President of the United States has deceased, therefore

"Resolved, That on the 7th of January next at one o'clock, P. M., the Senate will proceed to the election of a President pro tempore."

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The subject was subsequently brought to the attention of the Senate by the following resolution offered by Senator Edmunds:

"Resolved, That Mr. Thomas W. Ferry, a Senator from the State of Michigan, be the President of the Senate until January 7, 1876, and until a fresh appointment shall be made."

The resolution was agreed to.

PETITIONS, BILLS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

To a stranger the number of papers offered in Congress on all subjects is something most surprising. Already in the first month of the session there is a flood of business pouring in upon the new Congress—for increase of pensions, for the relief of private persons, for the division of States into judicial districts, touching the disposition of the Geneva award, for the completion of a naval monument, for the amendment of the revised statutes of the United States, for new post-routes, for the reduction of rates of postage, concerning the transmission of merchandise through the mails, for a joint high commission to settle by arbitration all disputes among nations, for the reduction of tariff on wines, for the relief of Methodist churches, for a commission of inquiry into the alcoholic traffic, for the establishment of new signal stations, and indeed for every thing and all things that it ever entered into the imagination of man to conceive. "Surely the right of petition is in full exercise among our fellow-citizens. At this present writing 169 bills have been offered in the Senate, and 384 in the House.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEES.

As the House is Democratic, great interest was manifested in the forty-seven standing committees. This was one of the last acts of Speaker Kerr before the adjournment for the holidays. The committees as at present constituted show a great preference given to the West and South, and an almost total disregard of New England. Many surprises were excited, and the ambition of some prominent gentlemen in the Democratic party has no doubt been disappointed. Time alone will prove with what judgment the Speaker has acted in this important matter.

PAGE'S RESOLUTION.

On Friday, December 17, 1875, Mr. Page submitted the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas, the Constitution of the United States as framed by the fathers of the Republic imposes no limit upon the eligibility of any citizen to the office of President, further than that he shall be native-born, and of a certain age, and time of residence; therefore be it

"Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the right of selecting candidates for the office of President can only be lawfully exercised by the people under the existing Constitutional restrictions, and has never been delegated by the people to the House of Representatives, or to any members of the same, and that any attempt by the House of Representatives to limit or forestall the public will on a question of such importance is an invasion of powers reserved to the people at large, to be freely exercised by them without any interference from any legislative body whatever."

The resolution was permitted to lie on the table. On Monday Congress adjourned for the holidays to Wednesday, January 5, 1876.

The light of the Centennial year has broken upon us—a year to be memorable in the history of the Republic.

AFTER RECESS.

Both Houses met January 5th, 1876, and proceeded to business. In the Senate little but routine business has occurred up to the present date. Tuesday, January 11th, was set apart for eulogies upon the life and character of Senator Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, who deceased during the summer recess of the Senate; and Thursday, January 13th, was set apart for eulogies on Henry Wilson, the late Vice President of the United States. Both occasions were marked by much feeling and the utterance of honest and kindly words.

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The question raised by Senator Edmunds before the recess upon the status of the presiding officer of the Senate has been disposed of in the following action of the Senate. Mr. Morton, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following resolutions:

1. That the tenure of office of the President pro tempore of the Senate elected at one session does not expire at the meeting of Congress after the first recess, the Vice President not having appeared to take the Chair.

2. That the death of the Vice President does not have the effect to vacate the office of the President pro tempore of the Senate.

3. That the office of President pro tempore of the Senate is held at the pleasure of the Senate.

4. That Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, a Senator from Michigan, who was elected President pro tempore of the Senate at the last session, is now the President pro tempore of the Senate by virtue of said election.

Senator Merrimon contended that when a President pro tempore has been elected he may rightfully continue to hold the office so long as his term of Senator continues, or unless he be removed for cause, until the Vice President shall return to the chair, or a new Vice President shall be elected. An investigation of the records shows the first four cases occurring prior to 1804, which were treated upon the assumption that the office ceased on the reappearance of the Vice President, or on the meeting of the Senate after the first recess. But subsequent to 1804 forty-nine cases are given in support of the position that the office continues without re-election.

Senator Saulsbury maintained that the Senate does not exhaust its power over the question by the choice of a President pro tempore, otherwise a state of things might occur in which the business of the Senate must stop.

Senator Jones, of Florida, concurred in the views of Senator Merrimon, and argued that the Senate has only an implied right of removal, while the law of Congress devolving the duties of President on the President pro tempore of the Senate in case of the death or disability of both President and Vice President has constitutional authority; and that in a conflict between an implied right of the Senate and a law of constitutional authority the implied right must give way to the constitutional authority.

The question being then taken on the first and second resolutions by yeas and nays they were unanimously adopted.

On the third resolution, Senator Thurman held that the solution of this question depends upon the meaning of the phrase pro tempore, and in view of the circumstances moved that the resolution be indefinitely postponed—pending which the Senate adjourned. On Wednesday, January 12th, the subject again recurred. Senator Edmunds argued that the phrase pro tempore means "for the time being," "for the instant," and that the framers of the Constitution so intended. He cited the practice of the English House of Lords in confirmation of this view. He also contended that the power of appointment or election implies the power of removal and change. He supposed a number of cases where any other construction would create confusion, and possibly arrest the legislation of the country.

Senator Wallace held that the President pro tempore of the Senate is an officer of the United States as well as of the Senate. He cited the early action of the framers of the Constitution in proof of this, showing their manifest intention to place the possible succession to the Presidency only upon an officer of the United States. He advanced other cogent proofs of this construction from the legislation of 1792, and from the remarks of Mr. Seward upon the subject in the 33d Congress.

Senator Morton concurred in the views of Senator Edmunds that the Senate has power to elect a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice President at its pleasure, quoting in support of his position from Cushing on Parliamentary Law.

Senator Norwood put the question, "Suppose the President of the United States should die to-day, would not the President pro tempore immediately become acting President—and if so could we by a vote of the Senate here to-morrow change the first and put another man in his place?" To this question Senator Morton replied that he could not answer, as that is one of the very points which remain in doubt. He expressed the opinion, however, that in the case supposed the incumbent would hold both offices and be bound to discharge the duties of both. Instances analogous were cited from the States of Arkansas and Illinois.

Senator Stevenson maintained that the office of President pro tempore of the Senate is one of fixed tenure, not subject to change at the mere pleasure of the Senate, citing in confirmation the opinions of the eminent jurists, Collamer of Vermont and Bayard of Delaware. There was no difference between them on the point that the office was fixed by the Constitution, although they reached different results as to its duration. He held that while the tenure of the office of President pro tempore is of uncertain duration, it is fixed and determined, not by the Senate, but by the Constitution, hence the act of 1792 and a long series of precedents subsequently arising giving this construction.

Senator Conkling put the following case: Suppose the President pro tempore should enter on the duties of the Presidential office, and his term as Senator should expire before the close of the Presidential term, would he continue to be acting ex officio as President of the United States though the term of his Senatorship by virtue of which he came to be President pro tempore had expired?

Senator Stevenson replied that in his opinion such acting President should continue to act though his term as Senator had expired. He likewise contradicted the view of Senator Morton that a President pro tempore on assuming the duties of President of the United States should be bound at the same time to act as presiding officer of the Senate. He cited a case of himself in the State of Kentucky in refutation of such a view, and Senator Thurman of Ohio added two cases in his own State where the governorship of the State devolved on the speaker of the Senate, and it was decided in both cases that the speaker accepting the office of Governor thereby vacated his office as Senator.

Senator Morton added the case of Pinchback, who became Governor of Louisiana; meantime his office as Senator expired, but he continued to act as Governor till Governor Kellogg was installed.

Senator Stevenson contended that this case was directly in support of his views on the question now pending.

Senator Thurman stated that at first he was induced to take the view of the report of the committee, but that the discussion had changed his mind, and that now he inclined to believe that the preponderance of argument was against the power of the Senate to change the presiding officer of the Senate as was contended in the report. He further argued that on assuming the duties of the President of the United States the President pro tempore would vacate his office as Senator.

Senator Alcorn argued in favor of the view that when the President pro tempore assumes the duties of President of the United States he is then beyond the reach of the Senate. He cited authorities from his own state of Mississippi in support of this position, while at the same time contending that the power to appoint implies the power to remove. But he thought these questions did not really conflict.

The question being taken on the indefinite postponement of the resolution, the Senate refused to postpone.

Senator Whyte offered an amendment in pursuance of the view that when the President pro tempore assumes the duties of the President of the United States he steps beyond the reach of the Senate.

The amendment was rejected, and the resolution was agreed to by a vote of 34 to 15.

Senator Stevenson suggested that this action had left the whole question in great uncertainty, and that he should propose a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to look into this matter and by necessary and proper legislation provide for any and every contingency that may occur.

The fourth resolution, declaring that Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, a Senator from Michigan, who was elected President pro tempore at the last session, is now the President pro tempore by virtue of said election, was withdrawn on the ground that in view of the other resolutions already adopted this resolution is unnecessary.

And so after all the efforts on this subject nothing has been settled but a temporary decision of the Senate that it may at its will supersede one incumbent of the office by the election of another, and this rule may itself be reversed at some future time by another vote of the Senate. But the discussion has shown one thing, namely: the great defects of existing legislation upon the whole question, and the imperative necessity in so important a matter of passing an act which will clear the case of its present difficulties and avoid the formidable evils which might now arise in a very palpable contingency.

NEUTRALITY BETWEEN SPAIN AND CUBA.

Senator Conover submitted a concurrent resolution, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, which was to the effect that the President should issue a proclamation of strict neutrality between Spain and Cuba, and that the President place in full force and operation the same provisions made and enacted by the Government of Her Majesty, the Queen of Spain, June 17th, 1861, on the occasion of the outbreak of the civil war in the United States.

NATIONAL AND STATE RIGHTS.

Senator Whyte gave notice of a substitute for the resolutions of Senator Morton on National and State rights, which substitute recites the old Democratic doctrine on this subject as held before the late war for the suppression of secession and rebellion.

WOMEN'S PETITION FOR POLYGAMY.

Senator Sargent presented the memorial of 22,626 women of Utah, of the Mormon faith, with the remark that while he did not concur in the objects of the petition, but believed them to be wholly detrimental to society, yet recognizing always the people's right of petition he desired that the memorial might be read and referred to the Committee on Territories. The petition prays that Congress may make no law prohibiting the practice of plural marriages as found in the Territory of Utah, and that Utah may be received as a State into the Union.

Strange fanaticism! Can society, for whose protection Government exists, permit such a solecism in the nineteenth century? This is the problem. Men and women claim, under the American doctrine of personal conscience and private judgment, the right to perpetuate as a part of their religious faith this relic of a civilization which was long ago worn out and cast aside through the length and breadth of Christendom.

THE HOUSE.

On the first day of meeting after the recess Mr. Morrison, Chairman of the House Committee of Ways and Means, in Committee of the Whole, offered resolutions assigning the different portions of the President's Message to their respective committees, which being reported to the House caused considerable debate, particularly as to the assignment questions on currency and finance to the Committees of Ways and Means and of Banking and Currency. This resulted in the adoption of the resolutions as they stood.

HISTORICAL SKETCHES.

Mr. Holman offered a resolution recommending that the people of every county in the United States assemble on the 4th of July, 1876, in their several counties, and cause to be delivered a historical sketch of the county from its formation, a copy of which shall be filed with the Librarian of Congress. The resolution was referred to the Centennial Committee.

WORKING MEN OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. O'Brien presented a long memorial, prepared by John Pope Hodnett, in behalf of the working men of the District of Columbia, setting forth a great variety of facts and figures in relation to the condition of labor, and the system of contracts, and the scale of prices, and the claims of laborers under the direction of the Board of Public Works, and the indebtedness of contractors to working men of the District, as well as detailed accounts of the same, and praying an appropriation to pay these men, and the appointment of a disbursing officer to see them paid.

This petition, signed by fourteen thousand working men, was ordered to be printed in the Congressional Record.

MANAGEMENT OF NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. Goode submitted a resolution of inquiry on the management of the navy-yards and of ship building, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SUBSIDY BONDS.

Mr. Lawrence submitted a resolution of inquiry as to what legislation may be necessary to secure the United States indemnity from the Pacific Railroad Company, which was adopted and referred to the Judiciary Committee. He stated that this company received from the United States over twenty-seven millions in bonds, and now refuses to pay the full interest on these bonds. At the same time the company is taking no measures to pay this interest save what is paid in certain amounts of freight, leaving a large balance unprovided for, which balance in bonds and arrears of interest amounts to forty-eight millions of dollars.

EDUCATION.

Mr. Monroe submitted the following preamble and resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

"Whereas it is commonly admitted that the general education of the people is indispensable to the prosperity and even to the continued existence of a republic in which the responsibilities of suffrage are universal; and whereas the last census reveals the alarming fact that more than one-fifth of the population of the United States above the age of ten years is unable to read or write, and that nearly one-fourth of all the legal voters of the nation is in this condition of illiteracy; and whereas this want of the rudiments of knowledge among those who elect the officers of the State and nation exists largely by the act of the National Government through the extension of the right of suffrage and in States which are disabled by the waste and impoverishment of war, from making adequate provision for the support of common schools; and whereas our soundest jurists have held, with Judge Story, that the Constitution confers the power upon Congress, in the exercise of a sound discretion and with proper regard to the just autonomy of the States, to apply the money raised by taxation to the promotion of the general welfare of the United States: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be requested to inquire in regard to the expediency of making moderate appropriation from the Treasury, upon the ratio of illiteracy, for the voluntary acceptance of States which have established or will establish a permanent system of common schools for the education of all their youth, and supported in fair proportion, by the taxation of their own people; and that the said committee report by bill or otherwise."

Mr. Randall. I would like to hear that resolution read again, as it seems to be a very important one.

Mr. Monroe. It is only offered for reference, and not for adoption.

Mr. O'Brien asked if it would be proper to include in this reference of the resolution to the committee that it should never come back again?

Mr. Buckner objected to its going in the Record!

These gentlemen are Democrats.

ECONOMY AND REFORM.

Mr. Morrison submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means:

"Resolved, That the several committees of this House having in charge matters pertaining to Indian affairs, military affairs, naval affairs, post-office and post-roads, public lands, public buildings and grounds, claims and war claims, be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire, so far as the same may properly be before their respective committees, into any errors, abuses, or frauds in the administration and execution of existing laws affecting said branches of the public service, with a view to ascertain what change and reformation can be made so as to promote integrity, economy, and efficiency therein; that the Committees on Expenditures in the State Department, in the Treasury Department, in the War Department, in the Navy Department, in the Post-Office Department, in the Interior Department, in the Department of Justice, and on Public Buildings, be, and they are hereby, instructed to proceed at once, as required by the rules of the House, to examine into the state of the accounts and expenditures of the respective departments submitted to them, and to examine and report particularly whether the expenditures of the respective departments are justified by law; whether the claims from time to time satisfied and discharged by the respective departments are supported by sufficient vouchers, establishing their justness both as to their character and amount; whether such claims have been discharged out of funds appropriated therefor, and whether all moneys have been disbursed in conformity with appropriation laws; whether any, and what, provisions are necessary to be adopted to provide more perfectly for the proper application of the public moneys and to secure the Government from demands unjust in their character or extravagant in their amount; whether any, and what, retrenchment can be made in the expenditures of the several departments, without detriment to the public service; whether any, and what, abuses at any time exist in the failure to enforce the payment of moneys which may be due to the United States from public defaulters or others; and to report, from time to time, such provisions and arrangements as may be necessary to add to the economy of the several departments and the accountability of their officers; whether any offices belonging to the branches or departments, respectively, concerning whose expenditures it is their duty to inquire, have become useless or unnecessary; and to report, from time to time, on the expediency of modifying or abolishing the same; also to examine into the pay and emoluments of all offices under the laws of the United States; and to report, from time to time, such a reduction or increase thereof as a just economy and the public service may require. And for the purpose of enabling the several committees to fully comprehend the workings of the various branches or departments of Government, respectively, the investigations of said committees may cover such period in the past as each of said committees may deem necessary for its own guidance or information, or for the protection of the public interests, in the exposing of frauds or abuses of any kind in said departments; and said committees are authorized to send for persons and papers, and may report by bill or otherwise.

"Resolved further, That the Committee on Public Expenditures be instructed to investigate and inquire into the matters set forth in the foregoing resolution in the legislative department of the Government, except in so far as the Senate is exclusively concerned, and particularly in reference to the public printing and binding, and shall have the same authority as is conferred upon the other committees aforesaid."

This action is regarded as the entering wedge of investigation that knows no end, and will entail on the Treasury an extra expense of uncertain limit with results wholly inadequate to the pains employed.

UNION SOLDIERS.

Mr. Cason submitted the following, which was finally adopted:

"Whereas the people of the United States have lately passed through an internecine war in which one section of the country has been arrayed against the other, brother against brother, and father against son; and whereas we owe the preservation of the Union, the establishment of peace, and the enforcement of law and order to the bravery and patriotic devotion of the loyal soldiers to the Union and its cause: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That we recognize the brave and gallant services rendered by the loyal soldier to his country in the time of its greatest need and peril, and that we do earnestly recommend to the people of our common country the utmost care and watchfulness over the rights and interests of these brave men, securing to each one in need employment, and to such and their families the necessities and common comforts of life; and in all cases of public employment and in the bestowment of the emoluments of office, that, all other things being equal, the soldier should have the preference over the civilian, and, as one branch of the legislative department of this Government, we are in favor of laws being enacted by Congress giving liberal pensions to the deceased and crippled soldiers, and to the widows and children and dependent fathers and mothers of those who have died of wounds or diseases contracted while in the service of the Union army, and to each living soldier, and to the widows and heirs of those dead, such bounties and homesteads as a generous Government can afford to those who have won and preserved to the nation its unity and Constitution."

In pursuance of the above Mr. Fort submitted the following, which was referred to the Centennial Committee:

"Resolved, That the doctrine just announced by the House in the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Cason) is so wise and just, that in the judgment of this House it should be followed by officers of the House in filling subordinate places under their authority, and that in all such cases they are hereby instructed to give to well qualified Union soldiers preference over soldiers of the late Confederate army."

Mr. Cox styled it "a big thing."

Mr. Wood spoke of "buncombe resolutions." So it was buried in the Centennial Committee room.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. Hopkins reported a bill appropriating $1,500,000 for completing the Centennial buildings, and other preparations for the Centennial anniversary, which was ordered to lie on the table.

FRATERNAL FEELING.

Mr. New submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the fraternal feeling and good-will now existing in all sections of the United States, and the manifest disposition and purpose of the men who battled against each other in the late civil war to join hands as one people in the future is a most auspicious ushering in of the Centennial year; and while the people are thus making an honest effort to live together in peace and uphold the same flag for an undivided country, their representatives in Congress should do no act which will unnecessarily disturb the patriotic concord now existing and increasing, or wantonly revive the bitter memories of the past."

Which was unanimously adopted—whereupon Mr. Fort submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in consideration of the existence of the auspicious harmony expressed in the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana, just passed, wounded Union soldiers ought not to be removed from positions in this House which they may be qualified to fill."

Which the chair decided out of order.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BONDS.

Mr. Slemons offered the following resolution, which was adopted :

"Whereas an act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, authorizing the sinking fund commission of the District of Columbia to issue bonds of the District payable in fifty years from date, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, for the payment of which, interest and principal, the faith of the nation is pledged, does not limit the amount of said issue : Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the House Committee on the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, instructed to report as early as practicable what legislation is necessary to the protection of the United States and the District of Columbia against loss on account of the unlimited power of said sinking fund commission in the premises."

Mr. Durand submitted a resolution looking to legislation which shall prohibit assessments or demands on Government employees for political purposes, which was adopted without debate or discussion.

DIFFICULTIES ON THE MEXICAN BORDER.

Mr. Schleicher offered the following :

"Resolved, That the portion of the President's message which refers to the inroads, robberies, and murders along the Mexican border in Texas be referred to a special committee of five members, with instructions to inquire into the cause and the nature and extent of those depredations, and the measures that might prevent their continuance, and to report at as early a day as practicable."

Which, after considerable debate, was adopted.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. Oliver offered the following, which was ordered to be printed in the Record :

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States so as to elect the President and Vice President thereof by a direct vote of the people thereof.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, to wit :

ARTICLE—.

After the year 1876 the President and Vice President of the United States shall be elected by a direct vote of the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the same qualification as the electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

The person receiving the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, and the person receiving the greatest number of votes for Vice President shall be the Vice President ; but if two or more persons shall each receive an equal and the greatest number of votes for President, then the House of Representatives shall from such persons immediately choose the President ; and if two or more persons shall each receive an equal and the greatest number of votes for Vice President, then the Senate shall from such persons immediately choose the Vice President. In such elections each House shall vote viva voce, and each member shall have one vote, and the person receiving a majority of the votes cast shall be elected ; and in case of a tie the presiding officer shall determine it.

The election for President and Vice President shall be held at the time now provided by law for choosing the electors of such officers, but Congress may prescribe a different time, which shall be the same in all the States ; and Congress shall prescribe the manner of holding and conducting such elections and making the returns thereof ; and in case of failure so to do, that duty shall devolve in the order named, first, on the President of the United States ; second, on the Legislature of each State within that State ; and, third, upon the chief executive of each State within that State.

The returns shall be canvassed at the time and in the manner now provided or which may be hereafter provided by the joint rules of the two Houses or by law, by and in the presence of both Houses of Congress, who shall be the judges (each House voting separately) of the returns and election ; but in case the two Houses shall not agree, then the matter of disagreement shall be referred to the Supreme Court of the United States, which shall forthwith decide the same ; and such decision shall be final.

Also the following in relation to the election of United States Senators :

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring,) That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution, to wit :

ARTICLE—.

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two members from each State, who shall hereafter be elected by a direct vote of the people for six years; and the electors in each State shall have the same qualifications as the electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature; but the Congress may by law provide for conducting and holding the election and canvassing the vote.

AMNESTY.

Mr. Randall moved to suspend the rules in order to consider the amnesty bill which had been introduced by him.

The bill proposes (two-thirds of each House concurring) to remove all the disabilities imposed and remaining upon any person by virtue of the third section of the fourteenth amendment, and that whenever such person from whom such disabilities are removed by this act shall be elected or appointed to any post or office of honor or trust under the Government of the United States he shall take the oath prescribed by section 1757 of title 19 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or such other official oath as may be hereafter prescribed in such cases by any future act of Congress.

As soon as the bill was read, Mr. Blaine indicated a desire to offer an amendment as a substitute. Then lively skirmishing commenced on the Democratic side to prevent any amendment and to restrict debate. The Democrats attempted to pass the bill under the operation of the previous question. They failed in this by a vote of 175 to 97, 18 not voting, whereupon Mr. Blaine, as a privileged question, moved to reconsider this vote, and gave notice that upon the motion to reconsider being agreed to he would move the following amendment, and would debate the question:

"Be it enacted, etc., That all persons now under the disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, with the exception of Jefferson Davis, late president of the so-called Confederate States, shall be relieved of such disabilities upon their appearing before any judge of a United States court and taking and subscribing in open court the following oath, to be duly attested and recorded, namely: I, A. B., do solemnly swear, or affirm, that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation free without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of a citizen of the United States."

He proceeded to give the legislative history of amnesty from the passage of the fourteenth amendment, which at the time of its becoming a part of the Constitution, included about 18,000 men in the South. In a time when the Republicans had a two-thirds majority in both Houses of Congress, they began to remit the disability imposed. The very first bill relieved some 1,578 citizens. The next bill set free 3,526 gentlemen. Many of the gentlemen on this floor to-day, said Mr. Blaine, were relieved by these two bills. The next step was a general law passed May 22, 1872, since which time no one has been refused who petitioned for amnesty, with one single exception, and in no instance of amnesty granted has there been any other than a unanimous vote. This clemency has been going on under Republican legislation till the number remaining under disability in the South is not more than 750 persons. As nearly as can be ascertained of those who were educated at West Point, were officers in the Army and went into the rebellion, there are 325, those in the Navy about 295; those under other heads, Senators, Representatives, officers in the judiciary service, heads of Departments and Foreign Ministers, make up a still smaller number.

Mr. Blaine continued, observing that with one exception he saw no reason why these gentlemen should not all receive amnesty, as it had been granted to others of the same class. But he argued that if they were to be clothed with citizenship they should at least ask for it and take an oath that they would be good citizens. He cited Robert Toombs, of Georgia, as having spoken contemptuously both in this country and Europe of asking for American citizenship, and declared that if Mr. Toombs could not ask for citizenship he could stay out, and that the people of the country could stand it.

But while he excepted Jefferson Davis, it was not on the ground of his being President of the rebel government, nor of any special damage done to the Union by him above others, nor of any personal or special consequence attaching to him, but because he was the author, knowingly, deliberately, guiltily, and willfully, of the gigantic murders and crimes at Andersonville. He declared that the atrocities in this rebel prison transcended anything to be found in history.

Mr. Robbins, of North Carolina. That is an infamous slander!

Mr. Blaine continued, holding up the report of a committee of Congress, alleging that the facts could not be disputed or gainsaid. He supported this position by citing portions of the report and the evidence on which it is based. After showing that nobody proposed to punish Jefferson Davis, he concluded by saying that he should protest by his voice and his vote against crowning with the honors of American citizenship the man who organized that murder.

Mr. Cox obtained the floor and made a speech in opposition to Mr. Blaine's amendment, made up of poetical citations, passages of Scripture, and various odds and ends of sharp wit and saucy retort. His speech was withheld for revision before being published in the Record.

Mr. Kelley lifted up a cry for unqualified amnesty, coupled with an appeal for an appropriation for the Centennial celebration.

Mr. Hill, of Georgia, an ex-member of the rebel Senate, obtained the floor, pending which the House adjourned. The next day when the amnesty amendment of Mr. Blaine came up, Mr. Hill made a speech, which, like that of Mr. Cox, was withheld for revision. The points of his speech as revised and published in the Record are as follows:

1. That the whole evidence of the alleged cruelties at Andersonville and ascribing their authorship to Jefferson Davis is ex parte, taken in fury and rage and mutilated at that. To prove this statement he introduced the testimony of Dr. Jones, a Confederate surgeon who was sent to Andersonville to investigate the alleged cruelties—as though the testimony of Dr. Jones was not also ex parte. He likewise referred to the trial of Wirz, the keeper of Andersonville prison, and adduced the testimony of one Lewis Schade, who was counsel for Wirz, and a man of such character that it is surprising he should be taken into consideration for a single moment. He then undertook to insinuate motives on the part of Mr. Blaine by connecting with the discussion General Grant and the whiskey frauds, the Credit Mobilier, the Sanborn contracts, and the Board of Public Works in the District of Columbia.

2. His next point was an attempt to show that the Confederate government did all they could to ameliorate the condition of the prisoners at Andersonville, by providing a healthy locality, pure water and shade trees, by permitting the prisoners to purchase vegetables. They could not furnish them clothing or medicine, for they had them not. The stockade at Andersonville inclosed twenty-seven acres permeated by a stream of water. He attempted to prove that the rebel prisoners at Elmira were worse treated than the Union prisoners at Andersonville, by citing the fact that in round numbers the rebel prisoners in Union hands were 220,000, out of whom over 26,000 died, while the Union prisoners in rebel hands were 270,000, out of whom 22,000 died.

3. His next question was—Who is responsible for this state of things? And he undertook to show that the whole responsibility was on the Union Government in refusing an exchange of prisoners, or listening to any arrangement by which they might be returned.

Mr. Hill was permitted to exceed his hour, and as he was about to continue his speech, Mr. Blaine read an extract from the records of the Confederate congress showing that Mr. Hill as a Senator in that congress had introduced resolutions to the effect that if any person pretending to be a soldier or officer of the United States shall be captured on Confederate soil he shall be presumed to have entered Confederate territory to incite insurrection and abet murder, and shall suffer death, and asked Mr. Hill if he was the author of that resolution. Mr. Hill did not recollect. His memory was evidently at fault. He continued, citing the testimony of General Grant and some statements of the prisoners themselves, and a letter from a Mr. Brown, a contributor to Harper's Monthly, to prove that the only man responsible for all these horrors was Edwin M. Stanton, the Union Secretary of War!

In the conclusion of his speech, he threw down the glove to the Republican party—that great party that saved the Union and gave him leave to speak so freely in that forum—in these terms, “But to you gentlemen who seek still to continue strife, to you we make no concessions. Martyrs owe no apologies to tyrants!” and with this flourish of rhetorical insult he sat down.

The next day General Garfield replied in a speech of great calmness and force, and with tremendous effect, because it was the utterance of truth.

He began by expressing regret for the necessity of recalling the horrible details of the past. He spoke of the importance of the question, and of the purpose of the Democratic majority to put through their measure for amnesty without permitting an adequate discussion, or anything in the shape of amendment. Two points had been suggested for the improvement of the bill. The Republicans were now anxious to close this matter of amnesty in good faith, and in a manner befitting the gravity of the occasion. They wished to imitate the mercy of God which, though free, had still to be implored. That was the first point. The second was to make one only exception—that of Jefferson Davis. The Democratic proposition was affirmative, and should be supported by affirmative reasons. If the Republicans objected, they should have been met soberly. But how have their objections been treated? The speech of Mr. Cox was like joking at a funeral. The speech of Mr. Hill was an arraignment, not only of the Republican party, but of the whole twenty-five millions of Union people in the country. The war not only abolished slavery and set free four millions of bondmen, but it decided the conflict between the Republican and Democratic theories of allegiance. He then discussed the question under the figure of an issue at law when, during the progress of the trial, some of the members of the bar and parties to the contest had been disbarred. He said, using this illustration, there are 750 persons now disbarred before the Constitution, and we are all agreed as to the full restoration of all these persons with one exception.

The reason assigned for this exception is that Jefferson Davis did so violate the laws of war as to make it unfit to restore him to his former privileges as a citizen, and he might have added that there was in the camp of Christ one man so traitorous to God and humanity that there was for him no forgiveness in heaven, earth, or hell.

But how, said he, has this argument been met? They have met it by denying the atrocities at Andersonville. They called the committee of Congress which made the report proving these atrocities “a humbug committee,” an “ex parte committee that made its report in fury and rage.”

He then recited from public documents the history of the report, and of the evidence taken upon the trial of Wirz. He showed the infamous character of Winder, the tool of Jefferson Davis, sent expressly by him to do whatever the malignity of his nature prompted him to do. He adduced the protest of the Confederate Inspector General Chandler against the continuance of these atrocities. Winder was left, however, to go on with his cruelties till he had caused the death of 12,644 Union soldiers in his horrible prison-pen at Andersonville—nearly as large a number of men as fell in the English army in the ten great European battles, commencing with Talavera and ending with the Crimea.

The next answer of the Democrats is that the Union prisons exhibited greater atrocities than the rebel prisons. In reply to this, Mr. Garfield appealed to the Democratic members on the floor from those localities where the Union prisons were to know if they would indorse such a statement. It was indignantly denied by those gentlemen. He produced other incontestible proof of the utter falsity of the allegation, till Mr. Hill was compelled to explain that he meant only to say that the rebel prisoners in Union prisons were subjected only to such hardships as are always incident to war.

Mr. Garfield then showed how the thirty or forty maimed Union soldiers who had been employed about the Capitol have just been turned out to make places for rebel soldiers. This statement called forth an interruption from Mr. Reagan, who said that in the last Congress 18 Federal soldiers had been appointed by the Doorkeeper of the House, while 24 had been appointed by the Doorkeeper of this House.

Mr. Garfield explained that he hoped it was so, but that in the post office of the House a statement just placed in his hands showed that while 9 Union soldiers were on the roll in the last Congress, they have all been removed in this Congress, and 13 rebel soldiers have been placed upon the roll. He was willing the two statements should go together.

He then referred to the number of prisoners taken on either side during the war. He held a statement which showed that the Union forces had taken 476,169 rebel prisoners, while the rebel forces had taken 188,145 Union prisoners, and he gave cogent reasons why the rebel prisoners were not, as a body of men, as strong and capable of endurance as the Union soldiers, and that this was one of the causes of their greater mortality.

He then discussed the question of exchange of prisoners during the war, and showed the reasons which controlled the policy of the Union Government in this matter, and which clearly proved that it was owing to the Confederate hatred and inhumanity toward the blacks, and that the loyal people chose to abide by the laws of war among all civilized nations, at whatever cost, rather than desert the bondmen for whose cause the war was maintained.

He then appealed to the ex-rebels on the floor, and said, "Do you wish easier terms for others than those on which you yourselves came back?" This led to a colloquy, in which Messrs. Hill and Tucker engaged with some pertinacity—the ex-rebel Tucker remarking that he did not speak "to excuse himself, but to excuse some of the noblest men he had ever known, and of whom the gentleman might be proud to claim to be a peer." Of this bravado Mr. Garfield took no notice.

He then replied to the charge of Mr. Hill that all the wrongs of the South were chargeable to Northern fanaticism, and he did this with a dignity and power which should have caused the faces of men with the least sensibility to tingle with the blush of shame, and he concluded one of the most effective and exhaustive speeches that have been delivered in Congress in many years by saying, "I join you all in every aspiration that you may express to stay in the Union, to heal its wounds, to increase its glory, and to forget the evils and bitterness of the past. But do not, for the sake of the 300,000 heroic men, who, maimed and bruised, drag out their weary lives, carrying in their hearts the memory of what they suffered in the prison-pen—do not ask us to vote to put back into power that man who was the cause of their suffering—that man still unshrived, unforgiven, and undefended."

After this a running minor debate followed between Messrs. Seelye, Randall, Frye, Banks, Hill, Blaine, Reagan, Atkins, and Jones.

Mr. Blaine contended that he had the right of reply under the rules. It was finally agreed that Mr. Blaine should have the right of reply for one hour, and then move the previous question, upon which the House adjourned.

The next day the subject was resumed, and Mr. Knott, from the Judiciary Committee, reported the amnesty bill with an amendment requiring an oath to be taken by the person amnestied. No debate, no suggestion, not even from the minority members on the committee was permitted, and the Democrats attempted to put the bill through by a direct vote, which stood 182 to 97; two-thirds not concurring, the motion was lost.

Mr. Blaine then took the floor and moved to reconsider the vote. Attempts were made to obstruct his purpose, but they were foiled on every side. He then read a letter from ex-Governor Holden, of North Carolina, dated January 12, 1876, directed to himself, in which Mr. Holden shows that he has been impeached and disfranchised in that State, and that there is no proposition for amnesty towards him. Mr. Blaine said "gentlemen of the South must come here with clean hands before they asked for amnesty for Jefferson Davis. Do not come here with that request while you are persecuting men in the South for no crime but simply being Republicans!" This was a telling shot. He then asked unanimous consent to offer his bill, and would yield to any gentleman on the other side to strike out the clause excepting Jefferson Davis. Mr. Randall objected. Mr. Blaine made other efforts for unanimous consent, which being persistently rejected he said he would end the matter right here, and withdrawing his motion to reconsider he resumed his seat.

Mr. Randall appealed to him not to withdraw his motion, but the only response was a call for the regular order, and so amnesty was killed in the house of its friends!

This great debate will develop to the country the feelings and purposes of both the political parties as represented in Congress. Republicans have nothing to fear from such an agitation. It is only the apathy of the country and the siren song of fraternity while the designs of the Southern leaders and their plastic allies in the North are being carried forward that the true patriot and loyal citizen has to fear and guard against.

Our Best Men for the Convention.

The Republican Convention that is to meet for the selection of our standard bearers in the Presidential campaign should be a model one in every respect. The people should send to it none but first-class men, men whose character is above reproach, and whose patriotism is beyond question. The Convention will be one of the most, if not the most, important ever held in this country. On its deliberations will depend, in a great degree, the future weal or woe of the Republic. Therefore the most sagacious and reliable men in the Republican ranks must be selected to represent the loyal masses in whose name they are to act. To secure such men the delegates who appoint them must be chosen by the people with especial reference to their high character as citizens and their fitness for the duty which devolves upon them. Republicans everywhere should see to it that no personal ambition nor groundless prejudice should be allowed to trammel the freedom of those who are to meet in National Convention to make choice of the best man for the highest office in the gift of the people. On the choice made the success or failure of the Union cause and the party pledged to its maintenance largely depends. No human sagacity can foretell the direful consequences which would follow in the track of Democratic ascendancy. Our national credit would be imperiled, our rights of citizenship destroyed, our public treasury plundered in the name of law, and those forces of social and political anarchy which were defeated on the battle-field would triumphantly assert their sway over a people that could no longer resist their encroachments.

The safety of the Republic lies in the wisdom of the Convention that is to name the man who is to bear the banner of Republicanism in the approaching struggle. Therefore we plead with the people to send to the Convention the best men of the nation, whose patriotism and judgment can be relied upon, and whose decision will command, not only the respect, but the confidence of the American people.

STAND SHOULDER TO SHOULDER.—When the halls of Congress are converted into a forum for the defense and justification of the late rebellion, and the acts of a loyal people in conducting a great war for the preservation of the Union are criticised and denounced by men who owe their lives to the magnanimity of the loyal masses, is it not about time for the friends of the Union to stand shoulder to shoulder in guarding the nation against renewed attacks of the once defeated enemies of the Government?

GRATITUDE OF REPUBLICS.—Faith in the gratitude of Republics would have been sadly shaken if the victims of deliberate starvation at Andersonville could have looked beyond their misery and beheld the authors and abettors of their sufferings standing on the floors of Congress, defending the cruelties practiced, and holding up to the loyal people of America that arch traitor, Jefferson Davis—whose life has been spared through the magnanimity of a Republic he endeavored to destroy—as a model of patriotism and public virtue.

SOME PHASES OF ENGLISH LAND TENURE, AND PLANS OF LAND TENURE REFORM.

The relations subsisting between English tenant farmers and their landlords were some time since illustrated in connection with a disagreement that arose between the Earl of Darnley and a certain Mr. Lake, who, besides being the tenant of one of Lord Darnley's farms, is Mayor of Gravesend, and therefore a person of some social importance. It seems that Mr. Lake has a son in the West Kent Yeomanry Cavalry, the Colonelcy of which was some time ago resigned by Lord Darnley in consequence of a quarrel with the captain of one of his companies. A majority of the members of that company—most of them being tenants, or the sons of tenants, on the Darnley estate—took sides with his Lordship, and followed his example in leaving the service. This course, however, was not pursued by the son of Mr. Lake, although he was a member of the same company. At this Lord Darnley felt aggrieved, and appealed to the elder Lake to use his influence with his son to induce him to leave the troop. Mr. Lake replied that he "could not think the relations between a loyal subject and his Queen should in any way be interfered with by those between a landlord and his tenant." In short, Mr. Lake refused to interfere, and as a return for his contumacy was served with a notice to quit the farm.

But the point which most interests us is the theory of English land-tenure laid down by the Earl in the course of his correspondence with Mr. Lake on the subject of their differences. It seems that for some years past his Lordship has observed on the part of Mr. Lake a neglect of some of those marks of deference which he regarded as appropriate to the position of a tenant. He complains, for instance, that since 1871 Mr. Lake had not honored him with his company at the annual dinner given to the tenants on his estate, and, indeed, at the last five dinners had been present only once. He then goes on to say: "Now what I wish to suggest for your consideration is how far any person has a right thus to maintain a position of isolation under such circumstances. It is the characteristic of the tenantry on the large estates of this country that they are not mere rent-payers or customers for the commodity called land; but on the contrary retain just so much of feudal tradition as, without compromising their due independence, serves to establish some kind of sympathy of sentiment, and identity of interest between themselves and their landlord." In a subsequent note he says: "If I were willing to have tenants upon such terms as yours, I might as well put up my farms to public competition; indeed, it would be foolish not to do so, as I should get higher rents than I do."

If Mr. Lake had been an average English farmer, we presume he would have recognized the feudal traditions attaching to his tenancy, and anticipated his landlord's wishes, in which case the world at large would not have been reminded, as it has been, that those feudal traditions still exist upon English estates. An English paper, in commenting upon this affair, expressed its sense of obligation to Lord Darnley for so distinctly formulating the feudal theory as to the tenure of land, but suggested that it might be fair to have it clearly stated when a farm is let "whether the transaction is commercial or feudal; whether the tenant is to hold that he has done his duty when he has paid his rent and cultivated his land in scientific fashion; or whether he is still bound to perform the feudal 'incidents' of voting with his landlord, of sharing the patronizing hospitality of tenants' dinners, and of compelling his sons to follow the landlord's flag when he happens to quarrel with the service of his Queen." * * "Of course it is understood," continues the same journal in a sarcastic vein, "that he is not to make use of the nefarious machinery of the ballot to conceal his vote. He will be required to share his landlord's religious as well as his political creed; and though all his sympathies may be with the robust Protestantism of the Baptist Chapel, he will have to worship amid the Ritualistic aids to devotion which please the esthetic piety of his bet-ters. He must not grumble when the county hunt treads his springing corn into the ground. * * He must echo the squire and the parson at the Board of Guardians, and he must vote stoutly against a school board."

These, it seems, are some of the incidents of feudal tenure. At the same time, it must be admitted that not all English landlords are like the Earl of Darnley; and it is a fact, which any one who visits England may ascertain for himself, that either through the force of "feudal tradition," or for some other reason, a considerable portion of the land comprised in the great estates of the nobility is really rented a good deal below its strict commercial value. It must be observed, however, that this is only another way of saying that the men who have monopolized the soil do not push their advantage to the extreme limit; or, in other words, that they do not exact for its use quite as much as the density of population, and the consequent keenness of competition, would enable them to obtain. The London correspondent of the Liverpool Journal, in commenting upon this point, says:

"A kinsman of mine is a Scotch land-surveyor, valuer, and agent. Not long ago I walked with him over a farm of six hundred acres, the property of a great Duke. The land is good, though not of the first-class. The rent is 30 shillings an acre. My friend, when he heard this, exclaimed with astonishment: Thirty shillings! Why I have let thousands of acres of land no better than this at $4 per acre! Some time afterwards I ascertained that all the land on this estate—an estate in one of the best farming counties in England—fetched on an average 25s. 6d. an acre. Its market value, said a gentleman to the proprietor, 'is about 50 shillings per acre.' The answer was, 'I know it.' This is not a singular case in that county. The adjoining estate comprises, on the whole, better land—some of it, indeed, is very excellent land—but the average rent is only 27 shillings an acre. The proprietor of this estate told me that his farms have not been valued for seventy years."

During a recent visit to England the writer of this article became cognizant of cases quite similar to those just mentioned. A mechanic occupying a comfortable brick cottage with about two acres of good land it paid a rent of £5 10s. per annum. The cottage, which was built about two years ago, contains six rooms, which have a height of from 8 feet 6 inches to 9 feet from floor to ceiling, and is situated on a good turnpike road within four miles of a market town, within less than two miles of a railway station, and but a few hundred yards distant from a local post office and a national school. This is on the estate of Lord Hanmer, near Whitchurch, Shropshire. While some of the great proprietors are allowing their cottages to fall into decay, and merging the small plots of land attached to them into the adjoining farms, this nobleman is taking here and there a few acres from his farms and erecting thereon comfortable cottages for the laborers and mechanics of the neighborhood. And while he lets these tenements at very moderate rates, he does not appear, like the Earl of Darnley, to expect in return the privilege of treating his tenants as feudal dependents. In religious matters he is especially liberal, and the only thing towards which he appears to be downright intolerant is the vice of intemperance.

Within a few miles of Lord Hanmer's estate is one which was purchased, about twenty-five years ago, by the son of a wealthy manufacturer. Its purchaser having been brought up in a commercial atmosphere, naturally expects to get for it its full commercial value, and does obtain higher rents than most other landholders in the same part of the country. Although more ready than some of these other landholders to invest capital in the improvement of his farms, he is far from being a favorite among the people in his neighborhood, who regard him as a keen, close trader, always ready to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market.

What has been said will help to explain the position of the different parties of land-tenure reformers in England. Justly disgusted with assumptions of feudal prerogatives, such as that to which the Earl of Darnley has given an indiscreet publicity, and holding that the monopoly of the soil by a small privileged class is contrary at once to public policy and the laws of nature, leading members of the Liberal party, such as

Mr. Bright, are seeking to break up the great estates by removing all obstacles to the transfer of land and making it as easy to sell a piece of real estate as it now is—to use Mr. Bright's own language—to sell a ship. Believing with their whole hearts in the doctrine of free-trade, reformers of this class think that the application of this principle to land would result in dividing it up into comparatively small properties and establishing the very best system of land-tenure which is attainable.

From this view the more radical land reformers wholly dissent. They know that in a country so densely peopled as Great Britain, and one in which wealth is so abundant, yet so unequally divided, free trade in land might, indeed, result in a large increase in the number of landed proprietors, but could not possibly result in a wide distribution of land among the people and the creation of a freeholding peasantry such as now exists in France and Belgium. They know, too, by observation and experience that the large landholder who has inherited his estate from remote ancestors, and whose income even from a moderate scale of rates is usually very large, is apt to make an easier landlord than the proprietor who has purchased land out of the profits gained in trade or manufactures, and whose property may be barely sufficient, even when let to the best advantage, to yield him an income adequate to his real or imagined needs. Hence, if they were reduced to a choice between the adoption of the Bright programme and letting things remain as they are they would probably decide for the latter, on the ground that the mass of the people, whose poverty would still keep them in the position of tenants, are better off under a few comparatively easy landlords than they would be under a large number of more exacting ones.

They do not propose, however, to let things remain as they are, for they do not believe themselves restricted to the alternative just mentioned. Like Lord Darnley, they recognize the "feudal traditions" which cling to the estates of the English nobility, but unlike him they recognize in those traditions a sword with two edges, of which by far the keener one is turned towards the nobility themselves. Nor do they especially mourn on account of the one which is turned towards the farmer, the object of their solicitude being the working people. In short, they propose the adoption of a policy based upon the fact that under the feudal system—the system under which the great estates were established—the nobles were only tenants in capite, holding their lands from the Crown, to which they owed in return homage and service, just as the inferior tenants owed the same to them. In course of time the Crown ceased to exercise its prerogatives, and, as the nobles were left to do about as they pleased in their relations with their tenants, their estates came to be practically the same as if they were their own property. Nevertheless, in the eye of English law the land has never ceased to be the property of the Crown; and under the present constitutional form of Government, the Crown means the nation. Consequently the English estates are legally public land. But although this may be accepted as legal theory, the proposition to reduce it to practice by ejecting the present holders without compensation would shock the English legal and judicial mind quite as much as if no such theory existed. Even the Radicals, however—at least the more prominent and influential of their number—do not propose so much as this. They do propose, however, to take advantage of the nation's legal right so far as to rescue for the masses of the people at least a share of those original rights in the soil of which they have been despoiled.

The plan proposed by the late John Stuart Mill was that of reviving the dormant right of the State so far as regards the future increase in the value of land, except when such increase is due to labor or expenditure on the part of the landholder. This plan would leave the landholder in possession of whatever revenue he now derives from his land, and would only deprive him of his prospective profits from an unearned increase in the price of land or its rental value. In its adoption the nation would virtually say to the landholders: "The land you hold is mine, but I have been negligent in the assertion of my rights and have given you cause to suppose that I never should assert them. In this belief, or perhaps even in ignorance of my legal position, many of you have purchased your land at the prevailing high prices of the present time, and all of you have formed expectations based upon the present value of your holdings. This value, therefore, I am disposed to leave undisturbed in your possession; but I shall not permit you to enhance it still further by taking advantage of the growing necessities of the people. I give you notice, then, that for every shilling of additional tribute which you levy upon the people in the form of increased rents, I shall take as much from you in the shape of taxes, to be used for the benefit of the people in the maintenance of free schools and other useful institutions, or in the reduction of the taxes now paid by other portions of the community."

Those who advocate this policy point out that the population of Great Britain has more than doubled since the beginning of the present century; that the average rental value of land has increased in more than the same proportion, while the increase in its selling price has been still greater; that this increase, whether in rental value or in selling price, has not been due, save in a very small degree, to labor or expenditure on the part of the landholders, but simply to the fact that increased competition for land and its products has enabled them to ask and obtain increased prices, they having the monopoly of an article, the supply of which remains absolutely fixed in quantity, however great may become the increase of demand through increase of population. They might also justly argue that if there are a very few estates like that above mentioned, the rent-roll of which has not been revised for seventy years, there are many others like that of the Duke of Westminster, which being cut up into city lots and built upon, has made the family rich beyond computation. This increase of population, they say, is still going on, though somewhat less rapidly than formerly, and may be expected to go on for a considerable period in the future; and if the Government does not interfere, rents will rise still higher, the landlords grow still richer, and the masses sink deeper and deeper into helpless and hopeless poverty.

The latest proposition on this subject emanates from no less distinguished a personage than Professor Newman, who some months ago, it will be remembered, organized a new national union of agricultural laborers with a view to the adoption of political methods, instead of strikes, as a means of advancing their cause. In a letter to Mr. Walter, M. P. — better known as chief proprietor of the London Times—Professor Newman proposes that existing estates be carved into small farms, and let at a fixed rent, with a guaranty that this rent shall never be raised on individuals separately, but only by a national act adding to the rents existing at the time of its passage such uniform percentage as may be deemed proper. This statement, which is taken from a short paragraph on the subject in an English paper, probably fails to give a precise idea of Professor Newman's scheme, but it serves to show how the idea of putting into exercise those national rights over the land which have so long been held in abeyance is gaining ground among English thinkers, and being disseminated among the people.

Such ideas will probably strike most people, even among republican Americans, as decidedly revolutionary in their character; but desperate evils require desperate remedies, and considerations affecting the very existence of the nation may ere long force the British Government to repair the wrong by which the masses of the people have been robbed of their interest in the soil.

There is a suspicion abroad that British power has entered upon a period of decay, and if that be true, it is high time to do something calculated to infuse new spirit among the masses of the British people. When Russia found herself beaten in the Crimean war her most sagacious statesmen perceived that the emancipation of her peasants was necessary to the development of her full strength. A few years later the new Emperor issued the ukase giving freedom to the serfs, and that was accompanied by measures designed to raise those serfs to the position of freeholders. When Prussia, like all the rest of continental Europe, lay trembling at the feet of the first Napoleon, her great statesman, Baron von Stein, whose monument has recently been dedicated at Berlin amid the acclamations of a grateful people, saw plainly enough what was necessary to restore her strength. "To lift a people up," said he, "it is necessary to give liberty, independence, and property to its oppressed classes, and extend the protection of the law to all alike. Let us emancipate the peasant, for free labor alone sustains a nation effectually. Restore to the peasant the possession of the land he tills, for the independent proprietor alone is brave in defense of hearth and home."

In former times English armies were largely made up of the yeoman class. "And you, good yeomen," cries Henry V. at Harfleur, "whose limbs were made in England, show us here the mettle of your pasture." In Shakspeare's time the yeoman class still formed a considerable part of the population, and Nasse points out that "in the beginning of the seventeenth century Coke could say in a well-known judgment that the third part of England consisted of copyhold." But copyholds and common lands have alike been swallowed up in the great estates, and the agricultural population of the England of to-day consists of tenant farmers, few of whom enjoy any real independence, and wage-laborers, who pass through life with the possibility of ending it in the poor-house ever before their eyes.

To devise and carry out a practical reform which shall not merely create a yeoman class, but turn to the highest advantage of the entire people those rights in the soil which, in belonging to the nation, belong in part to each one of its citizens; to establish a system which, so far as is possible, will preserve these rights against new encroachments, and transmit them unimpaired through successive generations—to do this with the requisite boldness, and yet without unnecessary harshness, will require statesmanship of the very highest order. Until such statesmanship is developed it is to be hoped that things may be allowed to remain as they are, or, at least, that the principle of "free-trade in land," advocated by Mr. Bright and others, may not be embodied in legislation. Such a measure would be a formidable obstacle to any thorough and radical reform at a future day, for it would involve a practical surrender of the reserved rights of the Crown, and after thus depriving the people of that share in the soil which already belongs to them, it would offer them a privilege of which not one in fifty would ever have the means to avail himself—that of buying land with somewhat less of legal impediment than now attends its purchase.

On the Other Limb.

It is a homely but apt proverb which illustrates the change men feel when the boot that pinches is on their own leg, or their own ox, not a neighbor's, is being gored. The Democratic and "Liberal" newspapers and politicians are just now writhing under such a pressure—mildly applied, it is true. The day of the silent men in public affairs seems to be upon us. What an amount of wit and printers' ink has been spilled over the Republican party during the last few years, owing to the reluctance far more than inability of President Grant to make speeches. The poetasters and humorists, the satirists and logicians, have all alike united in affirming his unfitness because of this fact for the high administrative duties of a position which requires only that its incumbent should write, not verbally deliver, his views and recommendations. Most American Presidents have been polished talkers, but no one of them was elected to that high position simply on account of his possessing such talent.

A change has come over the critical dream. Mr. Speaker Kerr has appointed as "leader of the House" a man who having served for four years in that body without opening his lips, either in colloquial debate or set speech, must of necessity be presumed to be especially well qualified for a post which is commonly supposed requires in a pre-eminent degree the capacity to think on one's feet, and to speak readily and clearly at all times and to the point. Mr. Kerr is praised for doing this by the same pens and tongues that have heretofore found no vocabulary copious enough to abuse the Republican President, who has never pretended to be a speech-maker. There is a distinction with a difference—don't you see? Mr. Morrison, Chairman of the Ways and Means, ought to be able to speak, and either can't or won't, while the President is not required to, and having neither taste nor inclination therefor, simply avails himself of his privilege and refrains.

DEMOCRATIC PROMISES VS. PERFORMANCES.

In his speech of December 4, as Chairman of the Democratic Caucus that nominated a candidate for Speaker, Mr. Lamar, of Mississippi, announced the programme of Democracy on their temporary return to the control of the House of Representatives.

Two paragraphs of his speech are suggestive on account of the subject-matter, and also because we have already had an illustration of the old truth that performance does not always keep pace with the high sounding proclamation which precedes it.

Speaking of the needed reform in the "Civil Service," Mr. Lamar said:

"There has been for some time in the public mind a conviction, profound and all-pervading, that the civil service of the country has not been directed from considerations of public good, but from those of party profit, and for corrupt, selfish, and unpatriotic designs. The people demand at our hands a sweeping and thorough reform, which shall be conducted in a spirit that will secure the appointment to places of trust and responsibility of the honest, the experienced, and the capable."

How has this patriotic and unpartisan declaration been followed out during the thirty days of subsequent performance? If change is reform, then the reform has been "sweeping and thorough."

Indeed, it may almost be said that the Democracy of the whole country came to Washington for the sole purpose of making it "sweeping"—and to fill the subordinate positions in the south wing of the Capitol with "experienced and capable" persons.

Two of the four subordinate officers nominated by Mr. Lamar's caucus took the modified oath. One of them, the Postmaster, late a captain in the rebel army, has appointed nearly all of his employees from Alexandria, Virginia. He has fourteen subordinates, and nine of them could not take the oath that they had never borne arms against the United States.

The Doorkeeper of the House, nominated at Mr. Lamar's caucus, had proved his "experience and capability," by serving as Sergeant-at-Arms of the rebel House of Representatives. In fact, it is becoming apparent that experience in attempting to destroy the Union is a much better passport to position under this new civil service reform than service in the army of the Union.

For several years past thirteen disabled soldiers have been employed as assistant doorkeepers, and though seriously disabled by wounds received in defending the Union, they have performed for the House the same service which able-bodied men would have done.

On Tuesday, December 13th, a resolution was offered in the House declaring that in filling such places the preference should be given to disabled soldiers who were able to do the needed work, but it was voted down by the solid vote of the Democratic members—with the honorable exception of Mr. Holman, of Indiana.

But Mr. Lamar discussed another topic of far greater importance when he indicated the Democratic policy in reference to the Southern States. He said:

"On the part of those who have been invested with the political power and destiny of our country during the last 10 or 15 years, it has been a frequent remark that the era of constitutional politics had closed, that questions of constitutional limitations and restrictions were no longer to hinder or delay the legislation of the Government in its dealings with financial, economical, or social subjects which were, it was assumed, now the only matters worthy of public attention. And yet, amid their grand boastings, the Forty-third Congress found themselves faced with the gravest questions of constitutional law, reaching down to the fundamental principles of the system, and involving, not only the relations of the State in the Federal Government, but that of the people to their own home Government. The grandest inspiration of the Democratic party is, and its crowning glory will be, to restore the Constitution to its primitive strength and authority, and to make it the protector of every section, and of every State in the Union, and of every human being, of every race, color, and condition in the land."

This paragraph begins with a bold misrepresentation of the doctrine of the Republican party. When has Mr. Lamar heard the Republican party declare its purpose to break down the "barrier of constitutional limitations" in order to deal with "financial, economical, or social subjects?" Can he be so reckless as to deny the right of Congress to regulate the finance and economy of the nation? If his charge means anything, his meaning is covered by the words "social subjects." It will not be forgotten that the term "social institutions" was the old Democratic euphemism for slavery and all its horrors. He makes his charge more specific by referring to the action of the Forty-third Congress—meaning, of course, the legislation in regard to the Louisiana troubles. This comes with an ill grace from Mr. Lamar, who is known to have been extremely anxious for the adoption of the Wheeler compromise, which saved that distracted State from the greatest and most dangerous complications. His meaning was clearly illustrated by the first act of his party after the election of Mr. Kerr—when he and they attempted to reopen the wounds of Louisiana by disregarding the fundamental condition of the Wheeler compromise. It was fortunate for the peace of the country that a few members of his own party were willing to unite with the Republicans to prevent the consummation of the outrage upon plighted faith. The people will not soon forget that first day's work of the Democratic House. It leaves us in no doubt of Mr. Lamar's meaning, when he says that "the grandest inspiration of the Democratic party is, and its crowning glory will be, to restore the Constitution to its primitive strength and authority."

Its "primitive strength and authority" were used by the Democracy to deny all the rights of manhood to the negro race. Mr. Lamar's declaration is brim-full of ultra State sovereignty—of disregard to the recent amendments of the Constitution which the Democracy have again and again denounced—and which they do not intend to enforce.

The protection to "every human being, of every race, color, and condition" Mr. Lamar proposes to give may be best illustrated by the protection recently given to the colored voters in his own State. A statement of the vote therein 1873 and that in 1875 will show its character. In the first named year the Republican State Treasurer received 70,462 votes; the Democratic candidate, 47,486—a Republican majority of 22,976. In 1872 the vote for President was: Republican, 82,175;

Democrat, 52,857—a Republican majority of 29,318. In 1875, when the polls and the preliminary canvass was overshadowed by the protection Mr. Lamar promises so lavishly, the vote stood as follows: Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, 97,922; Republican candidate for State Treasurer, 67,000—Democratic majority, 30,922. This shows a change of votes to the extent of more than 40,000; and an increase of 46,974 in the total vote over that of 1873.

Mr. Lamar will not assert that such a result has been achieved by honest and honorable means, and that, too, in a State where the colored population exceeds the white persons, (census 1870,) by 61,305, and the normal excess of voters of that class is at least 15,000. How the change was brought about is well understood. An extract made from a private letter, written in Monroe county, will show the methods employed by the Democracy to secure in Mr. Lamar's own State the equal protection to "every human being, of every race, color, and condition," he so grandiloquently promises:

"Several days prior to the 2d of November the Democrats began to parade with guns and artillery. They kept up a brisk cannonade all over the country in order to frighten and overawe the black voters. They pretended that a large number of colored men intended to vote the Democratic ticket, but it was discovered on election day that not one hundred of such volunteer Democrats lived in the county. Then they resorted to force and intimidation. They took guns and pistols and carried their cannon to the courthouse where the voting was to take place, and told the blacks that they must either vote the Democratic ticket or not vote at all. In about half an hour the news spread all over the precinct. A large number of colored men were coming to vote, but turned back to save themselves. Some were knocked down when they were in the act of voting. Now, I have only this to say, that every species of effectual intimidation was used, and a large number of the largest landholders in the county have refused to rent or lease to blacks who took a leading part in the election. If something is not done to protect us, I can assure you that not a vote will be cast by the black Republicans in this county for President, &c., in 1876."

This illustrates the Lamar code—the mode of protecting all rights and all men (who don't vote their ticket) when it is to be pursued under the Democratic rule. Monroe county had, in 1870, a population of 22,631, of whom 14,000 were colored. In 1873 it cast 3,844 votes, of whom 2,007 were Republican, making a majority of 170. In 1875 the vote was 4,165, divided into Democrats, 2,619, and Republicans, 1,546—a Democratic majority of 1,073. According to the last Federal census, the number of male citizens in Munroe county was 4,336—only 171 more than the total of the last poll. The ratio to the whole population is somewhat more than one voter to every five persons, and would give to the colored population about 2,800, or a majority of more than 1,200. These figures are quite sufficient to verify the statement made in the letter already quoted.

One other instance will be sufficient. Yazoo county, with a total voting population in 1870 (U. S. census) of 3,398, gave in 1873 a Republican vote of 2,427, and a Democratic poll of 411—a Republican majority of 2,016. At the last election, when the Democracy protected the polls, the Republican vote was seven (7) and the Democratic 4,044, or a total increase of 653 votes since 1870, indicating an addition to the population of the county of at least 3,265. Mr. Singleton, one of Mr. Lamar's colleagues, owes his election to this Yazoo county vote. This is a simple absurdity, refuted by its own statement. An influential citizen thus writes from Mississippi:

"As matters now stand, the Democrats will carry the next election as they choose, because the negroes must either vote the Democratic ticket or stay at home. I know the leading Republicans of the State are to some extent to blame, but the Democrats are armed with Winchester rifles. $4,000 was spent in * * I am told, for guns and ammunition. You must not make public this statement, because it would make it unsafe for me here. Northern men here must do hereafter one of these things: 1st. Leave the State. 2d. Vote the Democratic ticket. 3d. Be still at home and not vote at all."

Mississippi answers Mr. Lamar. The forty thousand oppressed citizens who have either been debarred from exercising the franchise, or compelled under duress to cast their ballots contrary to their wishes, are the witnesses of Mr. Lamar's false pretenses.

PAYMENT OF REBEL DEBTS.

The Congressional Record of December 16 contained the following significant item:

"Mr. Vance, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 228) to repeal a joint resolution of March 2, 1867, and the act of February 4, 1862, prohibiting payment to any person not known to be opposed to the rebellion; which was read a first and second time."

The bill offered by Mr. Vance repeals the joint resolution of March 2, 1867, which a loyal Congress enacted for the protection of the United States Treasury. Under this joint resolution no claim for damages done, or property used during the rebellion, would be entertained or paid by the United States, unless the loyalty of the claimant was clearly established. It has proven a safeguard; and has excluded a class of unjust claims amounting in the aggregate to several hundred millions of dollars. The act of February 4, 1862, authorized the Secretary of the Interior to strike from the pension-roll the names of such persons as had taken up arms against the Government.

Other laws of a similar nature have been passed from time to time, having for their object the exclusion of war claims presented by those who were engaged in the rebellion.

Mr. Vance, in the first flush of Democratic ascendancy, opens a direct fire upon these loyal barriers, and has at his back a powerful influence in the House of Representatives. Of course this infamous proposition, the effect of which, if legalized, would be to double our national debt, cannot become a law. A Republican Senate and a loyal President stand in the way of its enactment. Still, the animus of Democracy is seen in this proposition of the North Carolina member. His bill reflects the views of every Southern Democrat, and at least a majority of those coming from the North.

It is safe to say that the control of the nation by the Democracy would cost the Government not less than $1,000,000,000 within the next four years. Among the claims awaiting the restoration of the Democratic party are the following:

Payment for all slave property ; for damages done to private property by military operations ; for supplies taken by or furnished to the army ; refunding the cotton tax ; payment for property, contraband of war, seized and confiscated. These are among the leading claims held in reserve for the restoration of Democracy to power. These are among the claims that would be pressed for settlement if the bill offered by Mr. Vance should ever become a law.

It is well for the loyal element that still controls the Government to note the drift of Democracy, and to take such action as patriotism indicates to prevent the humiliating and disastrous surrender which the Democrats are building their hopes upon. The action of Mr. Vance in the House in proposing to break down the barriers which a loyal Congress had erected for the protection of the nation ; the rejection by a strict party vote of Mr. Fort's just resolution, giving preference to disabled Union soldiers in appointments made by the House ; the wholesale dismissal of wounded heroes from positions they had long occupied with credit, and the substitution of ex-Confederate officials, are such startling indications of the revolutionary policy to be pursued by the Democratic party that its encouragement and support by the American people will be little short of a crime against the Republic.

We call upon the true friends of the nation to organize for its defense. Let Republican clubs be started everywhere to keep the people thoroughly posted on the condition of affairs, and to arouse them to a sense of duty during the Presidential campaign. The common enemy is vigilant and our friends must meet it with equal vigilance. Local prejudices must be laid aside until the great question of national safety is decided. Good men must band together for the common defense. Personal ambition must bend to the public good. The skies are bright for a glorious Republican victory in 1876. But victory depends upon activity, hard work, and upon that laudable spirit of self-sacrifice that prompts each patriot to forget self in his devotion to the country he loves.

We call upon the Republican press of the nation to renew its efforts in behalf of the noble party whose overthrow would be a death blow to the Union. Plain words must be spoken ; the truth must be presented ; the mask must be torn from Democracy, and the dangers following its restoration so clearly shown that no patriot of average intelligence need err in forming a correct judgment as to his duty in the Presidential campaign. Republican journals throughout the country have struck grand blows for liberty and justice in the past, but grander work is still before them. The Centennial year will be one of inspiration to patriotism ; let all who love the Republic labor to make it one of victory.

TURNING wounded Union soldiers out of office to make room for ex-Confederates may be fully up to the "true reform" promised by Democracy, but it will fall far short of the reform that will satisfy the country. It is bad enough to appoint ex-Confederate soldiers and leading rebels to office while tens of thousands of brave fellows can be found who served the nation in its hour of peril, and who stand in need of some employment that will yield them fair pay for honest services, but it is far worse to turn out one-legged and one-armed heroes from positions conferred by a grateful country to make room for the former enemies of the Republic. If this is the policy of Democracy, the people will effectually squelch it when it presents itself at the ballot-box at the next election.

WHEN the rebellion broke out a Captain of Police at the Capitol building deserted his post and went South to fight in the ranks of treason. He was a native of Virginia, and appointed from that State.

The Democratic control of the House of Representatives brings this valiant official into the public service again. The ex-Confederate Doorkeeper appoints him to a responsible position. Now he hails from California, having removed to that State soon after the surrender of the Confederacy. After this appointment who will doubt the love of Democracy for those who tried to destroy the Union.

THE WEAKNESS OF DEMOCRACY.

The Democratic party having been for fifteen years a party of promise has at last assumed a new position, and for a month has been endeavoring to show to the country precisely what it can do as a party of performance.

Standing aloof from responsibility in the enactment of laws and in the execution of them, with nothing to do but criticise and protest and denounce all the proceedings and propositions, and principles, and appointments of the Republicans, the managers of Democracy have had the advantage which a party out of power always enjoys, of not being held accountable for anything done. By opposing everything, they were sure to be on the record against all unpopular measures, and opposition to popular schemes is always immediately forgotten when the schemes are carried, and hence at the end of a long period of minority, the outs have obtained by immunity from responsibility a reputation for honesty, discernment, capacity and usefulness, which this country has thought worthy to have tested, and this has resulted in giving them an ample working majority in the House of Representatives, and imposing upon them the duty of showing what they can do.

The standards by which the Democratic party must inevitably be judged are two; both clearly beyond question. The work of the majority is to be contrasted with the ideals set up when the party was out of power, and with the performances of the party which has been in power. There can be no dispute on either of these points. The trial is now going on before the country, and a full month has passed since its commencement. This month has developed a state of things by no means flattering to the management which has assumed control. It has taken a whole month to organize the House and select the committees. This has never happened before since the foundation of the Government, and the circumstance at once puts at rest the claim set up that in business capacity, comprehension of the wants and duties of the hour, and a determination to do the needful things whatever they may be, the Democratic party is superior to its opponent, but the contrary is shown. The boasted statesmanship of which we heard so much did not show itself as predicted. The beautiful material which was supposed to be lying around loose in the Democratic ranks, all fitted and planed and polished for immediate use in legislation, was not on hand at the commencement of the session ready to be worked into the new and improved political temple. In looking for a Colfax or a Blaine to occupy the Chair no such presiding genius could be found, and the nearest approach in the person of Sam. J. Randall, could not be elected—two circumstances very significant and equally unfortunate. Not to have the men out of which to make a Speaker equal to the past signifies a lowering of the standard of ability in the House, and consequently of the power to perform the promises given to the country of improved legislation. A weak legislature always fails, and invariably incurs the contempt of its constituency, and the reasons are so obvious they need not be stated. Not to be able to elect the most fit man as Speaker argues division, incoherency of purposes, and internal weakness, corresponding to the weakness in leadership. And when the new Speaker was installed and his opponents Randall and Cox acquiesced in the arrangement, and the difficulty was supposed to have been mainly surmounted, to their dismay it was found wholly unsolved and more formidable than ever. Not only was there a lack of material for the Speakership, but a greater lack of material for leadership, and for chairmanship of committees, to cope with Blaine, Garfield, Wheeler, Hear, Hale, Kasson, and the other experienced statesmen of the minority. Cox claimed to be as good as Wood, who was an older soldier, and Wood thought himself the very father of the happy family, while Morrison, an unknown man who had sat in two Congresses undiscovered, comes up and is pronounced the superior of both. The leadership falls to the unknown, and the principal chairmanships are scattered among Kentuckians, Virginians, and Missourians, whose names never before reached much beyond the confines of their native counties, and in most instances not even to that extent; while New England and the great States of New York and Pennsylvania are shoved unmercifully aside, with the great Northwest also out in the cold. Were this necessary on account of the superiority of talent of the Democratic members from Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri, however painful the fact might be, it could be borne and readily acquiesced in, but there being no such superiority, and the preponderance of experience being the other way, only one conclusion can be reached, and that is, that the Democratic party has not been able to take a broad view of the nature of its position, nor act in a way to command the confidence even of its own members. The failure is the most conspicuous one in history: so felt and confessed. Moreover there is no recovery from it.

The fact of superior ability and higher legislative capacity of the Republicans is one that cannot be remedied by them. The men are there for two years, and nature can add not a whit to the capacity of the Democratic elect. They will abide in all their mediocrity, and the contrasts will grow more striking as from time to time the responsibilities become more fully developed.

Failure was inevitable from the start. The Democratic party has a more vital deficiency than lack of ability and lack of cohesiveness: it is barren of ideas that constitute true nationality and national greatness. It is a party of negations, save that one of its factions is badly infected with ideas positive for mischief. It doesn't believe in doing anything to develop resources, and for the immense mass of ignorance that prevails in the inferior races and degraded masses it not only has no remedy, but it has no appreciation of the dangers which are the inseparable concomitants of ignorance and lawlessness. The make-up of the committees clearly indicates its negative position. The composition of the Democratic party makes this so necessarily. The power of Democracy is in the Southern States, and there is where their majorities are to come from in the next election. This fact accounts for the arrangement of committees by Speaker Kerr; the South has got the preponderance, and the rebel element is predominant in the Democratic House in numbers and far more in influence and in talent: so the Southern ideas of statesmanship are sure to prevail. The key-note of this faction which is to control was sounded by Lamar in his speech to the caucus, when he said, "we want a government which we can love." That is it exactly. The Republican party has preserved the national unity, destroyed rebellion and slavery and secession, the three grand enemies of nationality; has proclaimed equal rights to all races, colors, and conditions of men; has done what it could to promote the education of the poor and the ignorant; has encouraged the industrial interests of the South by affording all the protection in its power to immigrants, and preserving order when interrupted by mob law and violence; has pardoned the crime of rebellion, and restored to the men lately in arms against the Government all the rights which citizens who were always true enjoy, and has asked nothing in return save the one simple condition, that the rights of the freedmen gained by the war and the Constitutional amendments shall be accorded them in good faith and according to the spirit of the amended charter. And the Government which has preserved the Union, made freedom and equal rights sacred, and forgiven the traitors who attempted the destruction of all, they cannot love; and they can be pacified only by having a government which they can love. What kind of a government that may be is not doubtful. It must be a government of different ideas from the one which has maintained the Union and fought disunion. That the rebels cannot love a Union government is proof that they have not in their hearts accepted the results of the war. If they believed in union and freedom, and the political equality of the races, they would be Republicans, because the Republican party is the instrumentality by which these have been secured, and is the only party that is committed by a living faith to the maintenance of these grand ideas. It was not to be expected of rebels that they should love the ideas against which they fought, and they don't, and Lamar frankly confesses that they don't. They love the opposite ideas. Not a soul of them will acknowledge that they were in the wrong. They believe and say they were right, and though crushed to earth, like truth, they hope to rise again. They believe in the Democratic party as it was, and hold with James Buchanan that a State cannot be coerced. They believe in the resolution of the State Democratic Convention of Mississippi, where Lamar is a shining light, that it is the design of the Republican party to place white men under the control of their late slaves and "degrade the Caucasian race as inferiors of the African negro, which needs only to be mentioned to be scorned by all intelligent minds." They believe with the Democratic legislature of New Jersey, which repudiated the fourteenth amendment after it had been adopted, and declared "that the origin and objects of said amendment were unseemly and unjust; that the necessary result of its adoption must be the disturbance of the harmony if not the destruction of our system of government," and in a word they believe in the old State sovereignty theories, out of which came the heresy of secession and the iniquity and horrors of rebellion and civil war. Because they thus believe they love the Democratic party. They have been whipped, but not so whipped that they question their original right to commit treason. Their political faith is the same as before the fight, and all they want is to have the suitable opportunity to carry it out. They are not to blame for this; it is human nature. The blame is on the part of the people in trusting them with power before they have utterly outgrown and renounced their old heresies and purposes. These heresies are destructive of all government and all nationality, and no party which holds them or tolerates them can stand. This is the weakness of Democracy; this is what elected Kerr and prompted him in fixing his committees, and he readily cottoned to the rebel element and gave it the lion's share. The Northern Democracy must take back seats and play second fiddle to the men who lately stood as rebel pickets and shot down the defenders of the Constitution and the flag of the Union, and it holds the power in the House on this condition and no other. Probably it begins to see it.

THE REPRESENTATION OF CONFEDERATE TREASON.

The transaction under the apple tree at Appomattox swept out of existence the thing that was called the Confederate power; and the disbanding of the armies of the Rebellion and the relegation of the men and officers to their States and to the pursuit of their vocations, without harming a hair of their heads, swept out of existence the last vestige of the Confederate States. The rebel officers returned to their homes with mingled feelings, in which doubt of the future predominated; and while they were uncertain as to their fate, they were anxious and ready to concede anything to remove the burden, or furnish any proof of good-will that would be received. Indeed, the disloyal element in the South was whipped and cowed. Jefferson Davis fled from arrest in the guise of an old woman, valiant with a slop-bucket, yet asking the respect due to petticoats which enervated the legs of the rebel President; generals left the country, too timid to face what they feared. It is an historic fact that the leaders and more prominent rebels realized their position, and that was, that if they had their deserts, their punishment would be severe. The spirits of these men were low and their prospects bleak; for it was known that few conquered rebels taken with arms in their hands had hitherto escaped, and if the old world custom had been adopted by the North in its hour of victory none could have complained; and it is probable that the condemnation of some of the most notorious and the publication of an account of how they demeaned themselves would have served as the warning of the age against the crime of treason.

If the South had been oppressed by unjust legislation—if it had a real cause of complaint—its rebellion would have had some ground of excuse. But the South had no excuse; and the treason of the Slave States stands forth as a crime of barbarous blackness, of gratuitous infamy; and for the following reasons:—The North was free and the South was slave, both of their own volition. Both had willed it so, and both were well aware of the distinctive character of the social structure in each, and what it involved. The North, yearning for progress, stretched out its hands to all who could help, and to the adoption of every appliance that could advance its material prosperity. It had railroads and canals; and ships and manufactories; it had public institutions of learning, and it loved knowledge. That its citizens might receive all the advantages of such a disposition, the multiplication of school-houses kept pace with the growth of population; and the result was that the men of the North became imbued with a civilization superior to that of Europe; a sturdy love of liberty penetrated their hearts; and they added what is not found in Europe—the control by the people of their own affairs. The South, with perhaps greater advantages of soil and climate, secluded itself from improvement, and stood aloof from enterprise although upon the Nation's highway. It built up a Chinese wall against progress, and devoted itself to casting the mind of its citizens in one mould; and that mould was Slavery. A man was appreciated—he rose in esteem—as he proved himself sound on that question. A doubt, however, upon the right of the white man to enslave the black was absolute ruin. In thus protecting the peculiar institution, Southern society was deprived of the civilizing influences of education, of association with men of art and science, of the cultivation of a generous literature which elevates the mind and draws out the noble instincts of our nature. Instead of this political and social power were seized by the hands of the slave-owning aristocracy, leaving the masses still further debased by the creation in their midst of a new class of paupers—the poor whites—who could neither read nor write, who would not work, who lived on charity—and in the brutalizing presence of a race toiling in hopeless bondage. To keep up this unnatural condition of life—this civilization of debasement—it was necessary to rear a class of braggarts who, when outside of the limits of Slave States, should boast of the beauties of slavery, their own chivalry, and what blessings the people enjoyed; and when intending to be particularly impressive with professors of religion, though in many cases the children of the masters by slave mothers were at work as slaves on the plantation or sold to traders to work elsewhere, they boldly asked: How are the heathen blacks to be Christianized except through slavery in the religious South? Southern Senators and Members of the House were selected for the distinctive purpose of putting forth the claims of slavery; and preposterous as they were, they succeeded in allying themselves with the Democratic party, who seemed to be overawed at their condescension; and with profound servility it sympathized with the South, defended its assumption at the expense of every manly sentiment, and rendered it all the aid and comfort it was pleased to demand. The Democratic party was therefore cognizant of the aims and intentions of the South; of the character of the threats Southerners uttered and which Democrats repeated; and of the preparations being made for rebellion. And looking back upon the past it is to be observed that some of the loudest clamor was made by Northern Democrats with Southern proclivities; and some of the most offensive prophecies of the defeat of the armies of the North if they should be found fighting to preserve the Union came from the lips of the Democratic party.

The unnatural condition of the South, unknown to people generally because of the personal danger which attended the visit of men who did not hold with slavery, had borne the only fruit possible in a country where the majority of citizens were free. In spite of the threats and boastings of Southern Senators and Representatives on the floors of Congress and of Northern Democrats slavery was hemmed in; and when the leaders of the rebellion became convinced that it could not spread, they, with the sanction of the Democratic party, precipitated the war and brought upon the country the sorrow and death which followed, and the heavy war debt which is still to be paid.

The principles and customs which prevail in the old world on the occasion of social turmoil and convulsion always have some reason for their existence. A rebellion in Europe is a calamity as dreadful as was our own, which entailed incalculable suffering and woe. But there its authors would be sure to receive their deserts. And this even when the despotism of a dynasty might be urged in mitigation. No such plea, however, could be presented here. The rebellion of the slave States was a wicked and deliberate act in the interest of slavery, in the vain hope of prolonging the existence of a social condition which God had denounced and which freemen abhorred. Freemen put down the rebellion on behalf of freedom and order; but their action towards its authors was the reverse of that if the old world. The leaders of the rebellion were sent home; and Republican statesmen introduced laws, which a Republican Congress passed, to reconstruct the ruin which had been wrought in the South. Directly the magnanimity of the Republican party was realized, the attitude of the rebel leaders changed to defiance. They spurned the flag of the Union and belittled the Federal Government. Northern men who had not been concerned in the rebellion were employed under the reconstruction laws, only to be assailed as carpet-baggers and mudsills. And treason has been rampant in the South though years have passed since the war ended. As the disabilities of rebels were removed and the franchise was restored to them, the grounds on which such restoration was made were forgotten. The same Constitution, Federal or State, under which the franchise was exercised by the newly rehabilitated Southern white conferred the right on the colored citizen. But from the day the rebel whites made the discovery that it was a mistake to have tried to destroy the Nation, and that they could get the control they wanted in the Union, they entered into a conspiracy to prevent the colored man from exercising the franchise and to secure for themselves the pretense of an election. They knew the colored majority were against them. What of that? They could do without a majority by obtaining the appearance of one by the aid of their friends. States that have a Republican majority are therefore in the hands of Democrats. The colored voter has been kept away from the polls by being brutally assaulted or shot down in cold blood by men who shot loyal soldiers or who skulked in the woods and are reserved for this work. The result is that a reign of terror prevails, of which the Confederate officers in the House have taken advantage.

In almost all of the late rebel States under Democratic control arrangements are being carried out to make the destiny of the blacks worse than slavery. Democrats complain of the ignorance of negroes; but what have the Democracy done to remove it? Who ever heard of the Democratic party being in favor of education? A great crime has been perpetrated on colored men in this respect. They have as far as possible been persistently shut out from instruction, with a view to the extinction of their vote. That was the object labored for, and the Southern Democracy have to a certain extent achieved it. Two very grave questions arise here in view of the condition of colored citizens: First—What is the duty of Congress in the case of States which have refused to provide sufficient educational facilities for the blacks and who have been practically deprived of the franchise? Second—Are the elections legal where the colored vote has been excluded, or enforced? Are the Confederate officers now sitting in the House of Representatives from those States entitled to their seats, which they reached in defiance of the colored majority, and by stuffing the ballot-boxes to such an excess that the ballots exceed the voters in numbers? And who do those Confederate officers represent? A Republican cotemporary says:

“The existence of Confederate sentiment in each of the slave States of the Union is a fact beyond dispute. No one should be surprised at the existence of this sentiment. It is the outgrowth of fifty years of political treachery and political agitation. The late civil war added the seal of blood to this sentiment, and thus enshrined it as the controlling political affection in the hearts of the Southern whites. It was natural that this sentiment should select its cherished leaders as its representatives, both in the State and National Legislature. This Confederate sentiment thus represented in the Government is now a fixed, permanent, and formidable power. It will control 128 votes in the Electoral College, a vote which requires only fifty-six additional votes to make it the Government."

The Confederate officers in the House represent nothing more than the disloyal white vote of the late rebel army and the rebel sympathizers. This is a danger that was not looked for and had not been provided against. It is all the more alarming because it shows that the spirit of the rebellion still lives. The war is still being fought, not with arms, indeed, but with what is far worse—with a public sentiment which in time, if allowed to continue, will rear a race of rebels from their infancy; and the strength of the Republic will be sapped by holding the dry-rot of disloyalty within the Union, which cannot be sloughed off. In the early days of the Republic purity of election was considered as guaranteed to citizens by the Constitution. The fathers never could have conceived of such a departure from the true principle of representation as the appearance on the floor of the Capitol of eighty-six Confederate officers, whose treason having been pardoned, now stand forth to revive that treason in their persons and to represent it in the presence of the loyal people by whom they had been forgiven. Before the nation is a hundred years old, nay, in the hundredth year of its age, it is forced to behold the evidence that the seeds of its dissolution are sown in its bosom, unless the people come forward and pluck them up by the roots. Let them inquire whether the elections in the South, which issued in sending these Confederates to Congress, were held in accordance with the Constitution. Were they free? Did a majority or minority of the citizens vote? And which do the Confederates represent—the minority of white rebels or the majority of white and colored citizens who were loyal to the Union and the flag? If they represent the rebel minority what right have they in the National Legislature?

A class of dangerous Representatives have thus procured access to the House, apparently unchallenged, to swell the vote of the Democracy to a Congressional majority, when the nation is Republican and the Democratic party a minority. The strange spectacle exists of a House of Representatives which does not represent the majority of the people who are supposed to have sent them there. And the most monstrous grievance of the day is the existence of the class of "Dangerous Representatives" alluded to. A Republican cotemporary asks:

"How is this dangerous power to be checked? What is to prevent the Confederate South from becoming again resectionalized, with negro serfdom as its cornerstone, as a determining balance of power in national politics? These are the questions of immediate interest in American politics. There can be but two ways of meeting this danger. One is by remanding the late Confederate States to a territorial condition, to be governed as Territories until Southern society frees itself from those elements which have always made it a danger to the Republic. The other process consists in building up the negro power at the South as a Union power side by side with this Confederate power as its counterpoise.

"The day has passed for such a policy. The Confederate is 'in' the Government and must remain in for weal or for woe. The only remaining alternative must now be embraced. The negro power must be built up by political protection and educational culture until it shall be strong enough to resectionalize the South. This policy will effectually 'break' the Confederate power and force its absorption into the Republican body politic of the nation, and it is the only policy that will or can accomplish this result."

The remedy here proposed may possibly be resorted to, but it surely cannot be the only remedy for such a state of affairs. Writers on Constitutional law involving popular and parliamentary powers say, it is ridiculous to imagine that the same law which provides a remedy for every private wrong should provide none for those public wrongs which have thrust eighty-eight spurious Representatives into a body of men dignified with the title of Representatives of the nation, and that nation having put down in blood the rebellion the eighty-six Southerners represent. If an effective remedy is not applied, and that speedily, these Confederate officers may perpetuate themselves by the same fraud and violence, or assist other rebel officers to succeed them in order to keep up the representation of disloyalty, while the candidate of the popular choice, if all citizens had been allowed to vote according to law, is kept out, and will always be so.

The reconstruction measures of the Republican party have enriched the South, and put it on the path to progressive prosperity. The Republican party also redeemed the South from isolation, and opened to it all the appliances which are the groundwork of national greatness. Had the South accepted the situation, and settled down in good faith to the work of recovery, there is no part of the Union which it might not by this time have surpassed in material growth. But the South seems to be destined to be the abode of political turmoil and cruel chicanery. If it is chivalry to intimidate a negro and prevent his voting, and yet pretend to have been sent to Congress by stuffing handfuls of negro votes into the ballot box which had never been cast, it is either a misapprehension of the word, or Southern chivalry must be as peculiar as its late institution—only a Southern production. At all events, Southern chivalry which shoots down a negro or purloins his vote with as much pleasure as a Knight of the Round Table would rescue a beautiful lady is not esteemed very highly by gentlemen of wealth at the great centers of trade. While such chivalry prevails in the South capital locks up its coffers. Capital makes no objection to an investment among a people of the highest moral tone and honor in their dealings between man and man. But capital will not expose itself to the danger of encountering political broils and bloodshed. Capital is only safe where there is equality for all men before the law, and where there is an abiding sense of the necessity of a loyal and honorable obedience to that law, and it is apt to look a little askance on localities where indulgence in vote purloining is a frequent pastime.

The condition of the colored citizens in many parts of the South, especially where the Democracy have obtained the ascendancy, is deplorable. They are in greater danger to life and limb now that they are citizens of the United States, than when they were slaves. The Constitution affords them no protection in the exercise of their rights, while as slaves they had no rights which a white man was bound to respect. Rebels have usurped the elective offices in the same manner as the eighty-six officers say they were sent to the House, namely, by blotting out the colored vote and stuffing the ballot-box. Formerly the South said it could not hold together without slaves, and it is free. Now, the South has colored citizens whose rights it estops, while white Southerners, like the Confederate officers who sit as Representatives, could not do without them, and have either used the rights of the colored men themselves, or by their friends, in order to be returned to Congress. If colored men complain and appeal to the State courts, the judges deny them justice. Laws are made by State Legislatures often aimed directly at the negro, and when they associate to gain strength to face a common foe, rebel emissaries murder or maltreat them in open daylight, and who, though known, are never arrested. Colored men are therefore like a rope of sand, without the power of cohesion; and being harried mercilessly through their counties are easily scattered and divided. This is not the condition the colored citizen desires, but it is the condition in which he is. He is anxious to act under the Constitution, and to send men to Congress whom the Constitution will recognize. To be violently cast aside, and to see their ballots cast by others, and their enemies said to be their representatives in consequence, colored men knew to be illegal; but they are too weak to resist the revolver, or the systematic ill-usage of the white element opposed to the freedom of their race.

The reconstruction measures of the Republican party were designed to restore and to build up, not only the material interests of the South, but to lay the foundation of social order and a reorganization of the elements of society, so that, as one of the issues of the war, all opposition should disappear beneath the healing influence of freedom. Had the participants in the rebellion gradually yielded in sentiment and effort, and entered heartily into the plans for social reorganization, the citizenship of the South would have joined with that of the North, and the dividing line between them would have been obliterated. All sectional strife and differences would have been absorbed in the great question of how best to advance the welfare of the Union—in the accomplishment of which the South would have aided. Thoughtful and earnest men looked forward to the time when the heritage of the American citizen would have been the same in the South as in the North, when words of welcome and friendship would well up from the heart and evince the great change which had occurred. The change did not take place. The Republic is in danger.

Alas! the bitter spirit of sectionalism and rebellion could not be eradicated. It sprang up in growth like a rank weed on a favoring soil, and has overspread as with miasma the fairest portion of the land. Southerners alone are to blame for this. Injustice, rapine, and murder have stalked about the South, leaving a bloody track among the black men and such white Republicans as were held to be obnoxious. It is time for the country to cry, halt! It is hoped that the REPRESENTATION OF TREASON has for the last time made its appearance in the House of Representatives. We call upon the people to bestir themselves—to be no longer blind to so grievous a violation of the Constitution—to protest at once against so hideous a mockery—to cast their votes for men they can trust to enforce the law or to enact the law that shall prevent forever so shameless a spectacle as 86 rehabilitated rebels standing on the floor of Congress to proclaim that they are there through the disloyalty of the South, and as the REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TREASON for the destruction of which the war was fought and the sacrifices made by a nation never more in earnest for self-preservation.

We repeat that the Republic is in danger. The South, where the representatives of treason come from, is as disloyal as ever; and if, as Mr. Lincoln said, the Union could not exist half slave and half free, but must be all one or the other, with how much greater emphasis does it come home to the bosoms of a patriotic people that the defiant disloyalty of the South is a standing menace which must be dealt with by men who fought for their country, and who are not likely to permit the great object of the war to be defeated by the survivors of the rebellion whose lives they generously spared?

Remember, O my friends, the laws, the rights, The generous plan of freedom handed down From age to age by your renowned forefathers; So dearly bought, the price of so much blood.

THE OLD SUBSERVIENCY.—The sectional character of Mr. Speaker Kerr's committee distribution has been excused by "Liberal" apologists, on the ground that the Democratic party counts the largest proportion of its support and representation in and from the former slave States. How shallow is this apology may be seen from one fact. The section formerly slave-owning sends to Congress eighty-eight Democratic representatives. From the section always loyal and free there are eighty-nine, one more than in the South. Yet in the distribution of the committees the large majority of all the important positions are assigned to the representatives who stand for the former slave States. Fifteen of the old free States, (including five of the States that framed the Union,) are without a single chairmanship, yet they have one-fourth of the Democratic representation sent to the Capitol by the Northern States. It is the same policy that has always controlled the Democracy. The Northern Democrat has always been a Doughface. There are degrees of subserviency, and now, as in the past, the Western politician of that faith is the one most ready to make obeisances, frequent and lowly, to those whom they have always esteemed as political masters.

TOTAL estimated domestic production of the precious metals for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875:

Arizona.....	$1,000,000
California.....	17,000,000
Colorado.....	5,472,000
Idaho.....	2,500,000
Montana.....	4,119,852
Nevada.....	31,795,193
New Mexico.....	1,000,000
Oregon.....	1,665,000
Utah.....	6,844,570
Wyoming Territory.....	250,000
Washington Territory.....	300,000

Total.....$71,946,615
Of the above amount about $40,000,000 was gold.

THE DEMOCRATIC SPEAKER AND THE HOUSE COMMITTEES.

Parliamentary committees are presumed to represent the interests of a community, as well as the politics of the party dominant in the legislative body. This is especially true, or should be, of a great body like the American Congress. Parties have, of course, distinctive standpoints from which interests are to be regarded. In the distribution of the committees, to which in a body like the House of Representatives the preparatory and shaping legislative work is committed, a wise partisanship regards not only the party relations of those who are selected, but aims to secure in such subordinate bodies themselves a compendious knowledge of the subjects to be committed to them, as well as to distribute the memberships as to represent with some approach to fairness the vast diversity of interests, material, sectional, and commercial, which are so distinctive features of a continental country like our own. The statements that follow will make manifest how far short Speaker Kerr has fallen in the work entrusted to him by the majority of the House of Representatives. There is only a dreary waste of partisanship, and that, too, of the small-beer sort; an evident making-up of a slate for Presidential purposes; and worse than all, that bitter sectionalism which sacrifices the more sagacious necessities for the gratification of a microscopic pride.

Speaker Kerr served eight years before his present term in the House of Representatives. His service from 1865 to 1873 was during a period of intense interest, when the largest issues were being discussed. A man of comprehensive mind could not fail to take a broad, if extreme, view of the pending issues; nor should he have failed to obtain a clear insight into character and capacity. A narrow and prejudiced man could hardly help, on the other hand, being dwarfed into the merest partisanship by the bitterness of the strife and the very intensity of his opinions. Mr. Kerr is an apt illustration of this latter phase, and the manner in which he starts out, in the new and mighty dignity with which he is so evidently overloaded, is a striking proof of the fact.

His make-up of the committees proves the truth of this criticism. He has followed the worse traditions of ante bellum Democratic management, when he has not been wholly controlled by Kerr-ish prejudices and antipathies. They are "fearfully and wonderfully made," as was to be expected, being in the main evolved from his own "inner consciousness." It is a profound abyss, into which only Southern and sectional rays seem to penetrate. The Republicans can look on without compunction, under the plea that it is not "their funeral," but even the most indifferent may be pardoned for having a lively apprehension of the "fitness of things." In the present case, however, there is little of that or any other congruous article.

But the opposition may be left to settle that at their leisure. Being comparatively free from responsibility, Republicans can find leisure to analyze the curious olla podrida by which the Democratic Speaker has completed the organization of the present House of Representatives.

The leading principle employed in the selection, if any were employed, appears to have been that of an entire new deal. The experience and acknowledged ability of the older members, so well understood in connection with important committees, and which a wise man would have endeavored to utilize in making such important selections, has been almost systematically ignored. There is to a large degree a failure to utilize the experience of those whose capacity is a "household word." But the distinctive feature of the slate is that of sectionalism. This is most glaring, and overtops all evidence of incapacity for properly utilizing the men who are to be found in Democratic ranks. Analysis of the sectional arrangement of the committees will best illustrate the force of this criticism.

The House of Representatives consists of 292 members. Of these, 106 are from the States formerly slave-owning. This embraces West Virginia. The remaining 186 are from the States known before the civil war as non-slaveholding, or free. The States of Kansas, Nebraska, and Nevada have been admitted since the civil war begun. There are eighty-eight (88) Democrats from the section formerly slaveholding, and eighty-nine (89) from the other States. Of the Southern, or Confederate Democrats, fifty-six (56) are from the slave States that went into rebellion. The remaining thirty-two (32) are from Kentucky, (9,) Missouri, (13,) Maryland, (6,) West Virginia, (3,) and Delaware, (1.) Of Northern Democrats, sixty-eight (68) are from the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York, New Jersey, Illinois, and Indiana. Adding to the votes thus located those of Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri—thirty-one, (31,) and there is a total Democratic vote of ninety-nine, (99,) a majority of twenty-one, (21,) in a belt of States where more recent elections show a large revival of Republican strength and a great falling off in Democratic victories.

The relative Democratic strength of the two sections can be appreciated from the foregoing analysis. Now let us turn to the committees :

In all there are forty-eight, (48,) including the Special Committee on the Centennial. Thirty-three of these committees are regarded as leading, but only a score are of real importance. There are 410 places, requiring therefore that at least 117 members shall serve on two committees. The Territorial delegates are allowed a member on the Committees on Territories and Mining.

Of the forty-eight chairmanships, the former slave States, (fifteen in number,) with less than two-fifths of the population, have twenty-four. These include all the important ones, after Ways and Means, Appropriations, and Banking and Currency. Their associates of the old free States are left to bask in the minor places.

In accordance with the old time policy of the sectional Democracy, nearly every Northern chairman of a committee is handicapped by a strong Southern Democrat as the second man on the committee. The section indicated has thirty of the second places, making in all fifty-four out of eighty-eight Democrats from the former slave States who are put in leading positions. To analyze a little closer, the ex-rebel States have thirteen chairmanships, and seventeen of the second position. The most notable fact, however, is to be seen in the lion's share that is given to the Democratic delegations from Kentucky and Missouri. Two motives appear to have dictated the strange partiality displayed by Mr. Kerr. These seem to be the desire to reward his personal supporters, and to secure the most unmitigated Bourbons in distinctive positions without risking too large a degree of that odium which would have followed an exclusive selection from the Confederate politicians of the rebel South. Missouri presents an unbroken Democratic delegation of thirteen, and secures five chairmanships, with eight of the second important posts. The first are the District of Columbia, Post Offices and Post Roads, Manufactures, Expenditures of the Post Office Department, and Mines and Mining. Missouri Democrats are second on Military Affairs, Public Buildings and Grounds, Revolutionary Pensions, Private Land Claims, Public Expenditures, Railways and Canals, and Mississippi Levees. Eighteen appointees in all are made from that State. The nine Democrats from Kentucky have the chairmanships of four important committees and three of the second places, while the delegation serves on seventeen committees. The Speaker has solved the knottiest problem of the organization by placing a man known as a wit, but not as a lawyer of wide repute, at the head of the Judiciary Committee. Durham has the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Public Expenditures and Railways and Canals also fall to this State. The Speaker has given nearly one-fifth of the committee chairmanships, including several of the most important, to two States, which returned only but one-ninth of the entire Democratic vote of the House. No one who knows the men will presume to say that such great favoritism has been shown because of the notable talents of those selected. Five out of the nine chairmen are parliamentary nonentities—one of them, Jones of Kentucky, not having previously served in Congress. The combination by which Mr. Kerr was elected Speaker crops out all through the committees. Bargain and sale is everywhere apparent. Ohio and the inflation Democracy there are recognized with thirty-three appointments, of which five are chairmanships and four second places. The chairmanships are Printing, Territories, Military Affairs, Public Lands, and Militia. Illinois, which led the contest for Mr. Kerr, with the rallying cry of "hard money," received four chairmanships—one being that of Ways and Means. War Claims and the Committees on Expenditures of the State Department and of the Department of Justice constitute the others. It has thirty-three appointments, and one second place. It will be seen that the bulk of Mr. Kerr's support came from the moderate inflationists, and that they are amply repaid by his distribution of the powers of the majority.

The Northern States send 186 members, and have 292 places on committees. Their Democratic members number eighty-nine, and Mr. Kerr has distributed among them twenty-three chairmanships and fourteen of the second places.

Examining the distribution still further, and it will be found that the New England States, the Northwest, and the States west of the Mississippi are all left "out in the cold." It is believed for the first time in the history of the Union, not a single chairmanship has been assigned to the representatives from New England, embracing five out of the thirteen original States. An excellent beginning this is for the Centennial Congress. Two second positions, one on Elections and the other on Expenditures in the State Department, are assigned to Mr. Thompson, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chapin is given the sixth place on Ways and Means. The six New England States, with a membership of twenty-eight in the House, have thirty-seven positions assigned them, a majority being insignificant in character, while Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, and North Carolina, with twenty-four members, have forty-three positions, inclusive of five chairmanships, a large proportion being on prominent committees. It cannot be said, either, that the New England Democrats, nine in number, are without capacity or experience.

Certainly not, when that possessed by Mr. Kerr's sectional nominees is considered. Messrs. Thompson, Phelps, Warren, and Tarbox, at least, are regarded as able lawyers, while Barnum and Chapin, as business men, rank very high, yet Mr. Kerr finds in such legislative tyros as Jones, of Kentucky, Ellis, of Louisiana, Scales, of North Carolina, and in such confessedly "light weights" as Caldwell, of Alabama, Gunter, of Arkansas, Hunton, of Virginia, Bland and Stone, of Missouri, Milliken, of Kentucky, Hereford, of West Virginia, and Vance, of North Carolina, among others, the material out of which efficient chairmen for important committees are to be found. But the truth is that New England Democrats belong, as a rule, to a different school from that to which the Speaker is allied. This is certainly true of the four from Massachusetts, who were loyal supporters of the Union, and one of whom, at least, sustained it in the field as a soldier. Probably it is true of others. The return to Democratic associations of those named grew out of the reconstruction policy. Mr. Kerr greatly prefers for prominent positions those who wore the Confederate grey, and marched beneath the "Stars and Bars." Next to them come those whose sympathies, if not their acts, were with the Confederate cause. The round dozen of Confederate generals and colonels who figure with the ex-Vice President of the Confederacy as chairmen of influential committees offer a striking proof of Mr. Kerr's sympathies and relations. They balance admirably against the one ex-Union colonel from Ohio, who, with a bar-sinister on his Democracy, as the last relic of the Greeley conjunction, finds himself stranded as a good-humored figure-head for the Military Committee.

Ancient Democrats like Heister Clymer, of Pennsylvania, or Smith Ely, jr., of New York, men tried in the coppery furnace of anti-war sympathies, must feel themselves greatly gratified at the systematic ignoring they receive from the Speaker they have elected. The Northern Democrats receive the chairmanships of the following large committees: Ways and Means, Appropriations, Banking and Currency, Public Lands, Military Affairs, War Claims, Public Buildings, Invalid Pensions, Printing, Territories, with the Centennial Committee—ten in all. They are also at the head of Militia, Civil Service Reform, Accounts, and of eight of the minor Committees on Expenditures in the several Departments. These latter are usually esteemed as positions of no importance whatever.

The Southern Democrats receive Elections, Pacific Railroad, Judiciary, Revision of the Laws, Foreign and Naval Affairs, Commerce, Post Office and Post Roads, Claims, Patents, Education and Labor, District of Columbia, Indian Affairs, Public Expenditures, Manufactures, Agriculture, Weights and Measures, Mines and Mining, Private Land Claims, Railways and Canals, Mississippi Levees, Revolutionary Pensions, Expenditures in the Post Office Department, and Enrolled Bills—in all, twenty-four. The selection of Mr. Harris, of Virginia, as chairman of the Committee on Elections, seems to have been based on no reasonable grounds of fitness. There is, however, an important contest pending from that State, in which the right of the Republican contestant, Mr. Platt, would be unquestioned before any fair-minded committee, but the claims of the sitting member, Daniel Goode, jr., are championed by Judge Harris, hence the remarkable fairness displayed in putting him in as the presiding examiner of the case, on whose merits he has already declared and committed himself.

Of the nine (9) Committees on the Expenditures of the several Departments Mr. Kerr has given the chairmanships of eight to Northern Democrats. They will probably do no special service therein, and the selections he has made are not likely to try. So much was said after the list was announced on this last point that the friends of the Speaker, if not himself, have been compelled to credit him with making up these committees with the view of their doing the important work for which they were originally provided. That work is to be found in what the name indicates—an examination into and supervision over departmental expenditures. But it requires only a very cursory examination of the committees as announced to prove this claim to be a mere apologetic afterthought.

The following table, which shows the proportion of Democratic members from each section assigned to the larger committees also illustrates the ingenuity with which it is attempted to avoid the charge of sectional unfairness :

NAME OF COMMITTEES.	From former slave States.	From the old free States.
Elections	4*	3
Ways and Means	4	3*
Appropriations	4	3*
Banking and Currency	2	5*
Pacific Railroad	5*	2
Judiciary	3*	4
Public Lands	2	5*
Foreign Affairs	3*	4
Military Affairs	3	4*
Commerce	3*†	4
Post Offices and Post Roads	3*	4
Claims	4*	3
† War Claims	4	3*
Naval Affairs	4*	3
Revision of Laws	2*	5
Education and Labor	4*	3
District of Columbia	3*	4
Public Buildings	4	3*
Patents	4*	3
Invalid Pensions	3	4*
Revolutionary Pensions	4*	3
Weights and Measures	4*	3
Indian Affairs	5*	2
Territories	3	4*
Agriculture	4*	3
Private Land Claims	5*	2
Public Expenditures	4*	3
Railways and Canals	3*	4
Mississippi Levees	5*	1
Reform in the Civil Service	3	4*
Manufactures	4*	3
Militia	4	3*
Mines and Mining	3*	4
Printing	1	1*
Library	1	1*
Centennial	1	6*
Mileage	1	2*
Accounts	1	2*
Enrolled Bills	1*	1
Total	126	124

The asterisk (*) indicates the locale of the chairmen. There are twenty-three (23) from the Southern and sixteen (16) from the Northern division, the small committees not being included.

† The Chairman is from West Virginia.

† There are four Southern members whose constituents are interested in the business that goes before them on this committee.

To return to our analysis. The annexed tabular divisions are of value in this connection. They present the reason for their arrangement in themselves: First in order comes those States on which the Bourbon Democracy most largely depend, and with whose associations and principles politi-ment of the House committees. At any rate, their whole construction indicates the difficulty which must be encountered by a Northern Democrat who bows before the Southern Baal. He is not allowed even to defer to those prejudices which Lord Bacon said a statesman was bound to consider. But then no one ever accused Mr. Kerr of statesmanship, and this last piece of work proves that no injustice is done thereby. But even if he were, it would be impossible to exercise it fairly with such a pressure as he endures. No one can doubt but that he yielded, and to all appearance with that alacrity which has always been so marked a feature of Northern and Western Democracy.

RECORD OF THE DEMOCRATIC SPEAKER.

THE MORAL OF IT.

The election of the Hon. Michael C. Kerr, of Indiana, as Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress is an event of more than ordinary political significance. So much has been said of the acceptance of "the situation" by the Southern Democracy, that on the principle that constant iteration produces belief, there has come to be a widespread, though vague, acceptance of the truth of this statement. Perhaps no better evidence of the fallacy concealed therein could be found than the conduct of the Democratic majority that now controls the present House of Representatives. The election of Speaker speaks to the point. The three candidates—Kerr, Randall, Cox—were all from the North. This fact was strategic, and would be sufficient, it was supposed, by the ex-Confederate leaders who virtually rule to mask their real meaning. Messrs. Randall and Cox were Democrats of the most pronounced type. But there were to them two insuperable objections: both were from States whose interests are necessarily national, and not sectional; while they themselves had proven the force of associations and sentiment in voting for all the supplies necessary to sustain the military and naval forces by whose aid the slaveholders' rebellion was suppressed. Mr. Cox also voted to abolish slavery. To have sustained the Union army and emancipated the slave was altogether too much for the Democratic associates who resisted both. Mr. Kerr was chosen over their head, though it is generally conceded that he is no more able as a public man, and not as competent for the post to which he is called as either of his competitors. Of Mr. Randall it is generally conceded that he would have been so worthy a successor of Blaine, Colfax, and Banks as a presiding officer that the present majority would have had no cause to dread such party disasters as those that will follow the leadership they have chosen.

But an examination of Mr. Kerr's previous Congressional career offers abundant reasons for the preference shown him by the ex-Confederate Democrats and their allies of the West. Mr. Kerr entered public life with the Thirty-ninth Congress—a body which contained many of the ablest men that have served the American Republic, and was charged with the most momentous task that could have fallen to the hands of a great legislative body. In many respects that task was greater even than that which greeted the Thirty-seventh Congress when it convened in special session during the early war-summer of 1861.

The Thirty-ninth Congress was called to the duty of binding up the nation's wounds, and of not only restoring the Union, but of reconstructing it on a definite and pronounced Republican basis. The President who had led the country through the Red Sea of civil war had fallen by the bullet of a Democratic assassin. His chair was occupied by one who made haste to show that in the difficult task before the Government the sympathies of the Executive were sectional, and not national. It was evident, also, that Andrew Johnson was bound to enlarge the function of his office to the utmost. He set up a policy of his own, and aimed, as it was termed, to secure a "restoration" of the Southern States.

Under the Executive initiative the machinery of Government in the rebel States was attempted to be set in motion. Those who were called upon to do this work proved beyond peradventure that they at least had no sympathy with the massive results that have been a consequence of the slaveholders' rebellion, its progress and final defeat. The emancipation of the slave was to be nullified by every means that could then be made available. When the surrender of Lee, Johnston, and Kirby Smith completed the disbandment of the rebel Democracy, the general feeling throughout the South was one of surprised satisfaction at being allowed to return unmolested to their homes—devastated perhaps, but unavoidably so by the war themselves and their leaders had created. Mr. Johnson's course soon evoked and re-aroused the ancient spirit, and there grew up the feeling expressed by an able ex-rebel colonel of West Tennessee, who said to a Federal army officer within six months after Lee's surrender: "In two years, major, you (meaning the loyal States) will be in rebellion, and we (meaning the Southern or rebel States with their sympathizers North) will be the Government."

It was upon this stage, then, Mr. Kerr entered, representing an Indiana district, known only for its virulent rebel sympathies. He had no history behind him other than that of being a man of personal integrity, a good lawyer, and a bitter partisan. In the hope so distinctly formulated by the rebel colonel referred to, Mr. Kerr became one of the most vigorous of workers, as the annexed record of his Congressional career will prove beyond question. The man himself is of no great importance, but as he possessed the courage both of his convictions and his partisanship he early assumed a prominent place. Because thereof he has now become a representative public man in the most marked sense of the term. What he has said and how he has voted are therefore of grave consequence. Let the records show.

Mr. Kerr entered Congress December 4, 1865, and at once took rank as an advocate of extreme Southern State rights opinions, and as an able, alert, and unscrupulous opponent of the reconstruction and other measures of the Republican majority.

REBEL REPRESENTATION.

His first recorded vote (December 4, 1865,) in Congress after the election of Speaker was given against the proposition introduced by

Mr. Stevens, of Pennsylvania, providing for a committee to inquire into the condition of the so-called Confederate States, and whether any of them were entitled to representation in Congress, pending the report of which committee no member should be received from such States. This was the first initial step in reconstruction legislation—a vote against which was a vote in favor of the immediate admission of the ex-rebel representatives.

December 11, 1865, he voted in favor of giving representatives from the late rebel States, claiming seats in Congress, the privileges of the floor. On the following day, December 12, 1865, Mr. Kerr voted against admitting the loyal representatives from Tennessee, who had been elected under a Republican Constitution, to the privileges of the floor, and also against their admission to seats.

AID AND COMFORT TO THE ENEMY.

December 19, 1865, he voted against a proposition looking to the expulsion of Representative Benjamin G. Harris, of Maryland,* who had been convicted by a court-martial for giving aid and comfort to the public enemy, and for expressing his regret that the assassination of President Lincoln had "came too late to be of any use to the rebels."

January 10, 1866, he voted in favor of a resolution allowing the late rebel States to "resume their position and functions in the Union without delay"—i. e., without reconstruction, pledges, or conditions.

January 16, 1866, he voted against authorizing the Committee on the Condition of the Southern States to take testimony.

January 8, 1866, he voted in favor of withdrawing the military forces from the late rebel States, but on January 21, 1867, he voted against a resolution inquiring into the use of the army by Andrew Johnson to enable disfranchised rebels to vote in Maryland.

June 11, 1866, Mr. Kerr voted against a resolution directing the trial of Jefferson Davis for treason.

* This is the person who was recently candidate for Sergeant-at-Arms on the ground of his avowed sympathy with the rebel South.

REBEL CLAIMS.

Mr. Kerr's first resolution, offered December 11, 1865, looked to making provision for the payment of claims in the rebel States for supplies alleged to have been taken by United States troops, and his first bill, presented December 21, 1865, was for the "relief" of owners of personal property which had been forfeited for criminal acts connected with the rebellion.

He was conspicuous throughout his Congressional career in the presentation and advocacy of all "Southern claims" designed to draw money from the Treasury for the benefit of that section. As Speaker, he has again shown his active animus in this direction by such an organization of the House Committee "on War Claims" as to insure favorable consideration for the class of claims committed to that body, and which he has always so consistently supported. Leaving out "compensation for slaves," at least of non-combatants, and there is a demand on the Treasury for not less than two or three hundred million dollars.

THE COTTON TAX.

In harmony with his general course in respect to favoring the late rebel States and the former slaveholding citizens at the expense of the people of the whole country, Mr. Kerr was an ardent advocate of that stupendous fraud—the attempted refunding of the cotton tax.

Mr. Kerr's last elaborate speech in Congress, February 18, 1873, was made in favor of this measure, which calls for at least SIXTY-EIGHT MILLION DOLLARS FROM THE NATIONAL TREASURY. His consistency is shown by the fact that on May 14, 1867, he voted against the proposition to prohibit the Southern States from repudiating debts due to loyal citizens.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES—TEST OATH.

During Mr. Kerr's former service in Congress he introduced a large number of bills removing the disabilities of persons who had been engaged in the rebellion, and was conspicuous in these efforts to restore to the Democratic party its voting and fighting strength. He was also the especial champion of the repeal of the test oath.

One of his earliest votes, December 18,

1865, was in favor of dispensing with this requirement.

January 15, 1866, he voted in favor of allowing attorneys in the rebel States to practice without taking the test oath. January 12, 1870, he introduced a bill repealing the test oath for jurors in United States courts. January 22, 1867, he made a heated speech against the test oath, which will be referred to hereafter.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Mr. Kerr's first speech in the House of Representatives was made January 22, 1866, in opposition to the fourteenth amendment, which he opposed as "not justified by the circumstances of the country." He fiercely assailed both its principles and its scope, declaring that it would make Congress "supreme over the States," and that under the power claimed, "Congress can go into South Carolina and take suffrage from the lately disloyal whites and give it to the negroes." "We have indeed," continued Mr. Kerr, "fallen upon evil times."

His speech was an elaborate argument against the power of Congress to regulate suffrage in the States, and was a complete reproduction and reassertion of all the ultra Southern State sovereignty theories of the ante-bellum period.

Throughout the struggles in which the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments were finally the dearly-won results of our great national conflict, Mr. Kerr assumed a leading part in opposition to their passage, and actively participated in all the dilatory measures and other parliamentary expedients of resistance, recording his vote against the amendments in any form in which they were presented, and at every stage of their progress. It is important to remember, too, that no word of Mr. Kerr's appears upon record by which he stands committed himself, or commits his party, to an acknowledgment of the validity of either of these amendments since their incorporation into the Constitution; nor can it be denied that, with the single exception of the Baltimore platform of 1872, there is not a single authoritative act of the Democratic party which looks in that direction, while there are many of a contrary character.

On the 30th of March, 1868, Mr. Kerr voted against returning to that body the resolutions of the Democratic Legislature of New Jersey, purporting to withdraw the assent of that State to the fourteenth amendment. It will be remembered that a distinct effort was made, of which the New Jersey episode was one, to secure from several States in which the Democracy had obtained control of the Legislative branch of the government thereof a repudiation of the ratification previously voted.

Mr. Kerr made numerous speeches, which will be referred to, in opposition to measures designed to secure the rights guaranteed by the aforesaid amendments.

IMPARTIAL SUFFRAGE.

December 13, 1865, Mr. Kerr voted against a resolution introduced by Mr. Farnsworth favoring "equal rights and privileges to all citizens irrespective of color."

December 18, he voted in favor of "referring the question of suffrage to the several States, and denying the right of Congress to extend the elective franchise."

On the same day he also voted against a resolution offered by Mr. Baker denouncing class rule and aristocratic principles of Government, and favoring the largest attainable liberty to the whole people of the Republic, irrespective of class or race. On the 18th of January, 1866, he voted against the passage of the bill extending suffrage in the District of Columbia.

STATE RIGHTS.

The theories upon which the institution of slavery had been maintained within the Federal Union, and upon which secession was justified and the war of the rebellion defended, were also the theories upon which the former slaveholders of the South attempted to regain possession of the Government they had failed to destroy. Among the Northern Democratic allies of the Southern faction which sought thus to reverse the judgment of the war none were more bold, defiant, and audacious than Mr. Kerr, who is still their consistent advocate.

The mantle of Calhoun would seem to have fallen upon his shoulders. On every available question he asserted the doctrine of State inviolability as the basis and backbone of his argument. This dreary waste of State sovereignty logic was usually enlivened by rhetorical scintillations denunciatory of the "Radical party," calumniating Republican leaders, and especially villifying the negro, as well as all Southern Republicans of native or Northern origin. His consistency will be seen by his votes.

RECONSTRUCTION.

January 9, 1866, he voted in favor of resolutions indorsing the "restoration" policy of Andrew Johnson.

In a speech upon reconstruction delivered January 21, 1868, Mr. Kerr argued that the rebel States had forfeited no rights under the Constitution—that they never were out of the Union. He alleged that "the war was but a mighty display of the police power of the Government in aid of the civil authorities in the States," and charged that the policy of the Republican party was "a confession of insincerity, of hypocrisy, and a covert purpose of revolution." He sustained all the acts of Andrew Johnson—opposed any attempt to enforce the provision of the Constitution requiring Congress to guarantee to the several States a republican form of government, and characterized all such attempts as "an insult to a free people's will;" as "a most mischievous purpose;" as "attempts to subordinate all government in the States to the partisan purposes of the 'fierce will of the majority,'" and stigmatized the expressions "American nationality," "the nation," "the people's will," and "the life of the Republic," as "transcendental terms and phrases, all intended to operate upon the people as a sort of political mirage, to inspire them with false hopes and lead them into political chaos or despotism."

He denounced the whole scope of Republican legislation as "a monstrous policy" and as "most extraordinary assumptions of power and most revolutionary threats against the integrity of the Constitution."

January 15, 1868, on the motion to censure Fernando Wood for using the words (in reference to the reconstruction bill) "a monstrosity, a measure the most infamous of the many infamous acts of this most infamous Congress"—Mr. Kerr voted "No."

January 16, 1868, in a speech against the reconstruction acts, Mr. Kerr defended the pro-slavery, State rights decisions of Judge Taney, and declared that "It is the sole duty of Congress to go into those" (the rebel) "States, and to vindicate the pre-existing governments." He styled Republican measures "the vandal tread of radicalism and absolutism," called the loyal Constitutional Conventions which had been held in the South, "revolutionary negro Conventions," and declared that he indorsed the language for which Fernando Wood had been the day before censured at the bar of the House.

December 19, 1868, he voted against a proposition to require the Southern States to repay to the Treasury a portion of the expenses incurred in carrying the reconstruction acts into effect.

ADMISSION OF RECONSTRUCTED STATES.

As Mr. Kerr was one of the most persistent advocates of recognizing the unreconstructed States with their Confederate Democratic Governments, so he was one of the most persistent opponents of the admission of those States under Republican Constitutions.

March 28, 1868, in a speech upon the admission of Alabama, Mr. Kerr said: "The first speech I had the honor to make in this House was against this wicked, this revolutionary heresy now so rapidly being adopted by the Radical party of this country—that Congress may regulate suffrage in all the States of this Union."

He styled the enfranchisement of the colored race a refusal of the "radical party" to "remit these negroes to the control of the natural law and the law of God," and declaimed against appropriations for educational purposes in the South.

The Republican Constitution of Alabama was disposed of by Mr. Kerr in language of which the following is a specimen:

"The radical party of Alabama sacrificed their manhood; they surrendered their God-given right of self government and got down upon their miserable knees to the Radical party in making this Constitution, and in its presentation to Congress and asking it to be forced upon the people of Alabama."

He described the acts of Congress as "the dictation of such terms as Congress pleases to the tools of Congress in Alabama."

The efforts to make Congressional legislation acceptable to the opposition he styled as "inducements to white men to stultify themselves, surrender their judgments and become allies of the Republican party in its efforts to force a hateful, odious, and anti-republican Constitution on all the people." Any attempt to prescribe terms upon which those who had participated in the rebellion might resume the prerogatives of citizenship he characterized as "usurpation," and the presence of troops in the South for the protection of loyal men he habitually designated as "continuing your military despotism in full force." He was especially severe in his animadversions upon the clause in the new constitutions providing that they should not be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen, or class of citizens, of the right to vote who were by those constitutions entitled to vote. These provisions were, in Mr. Kerr's language, "shackles upon the limbs of States," "irrepealable brands of degradation and inferiority." Such provisions established "a hateful union of unequal members," constituted "a most dangerous innovation," and would "erect a most vicious precedent in our history." A Republican government in the South he defined to be "a government that the people despise, that they loathe, that they reject in every way that is left to them by military despotism to express their feelings." The conditions of admission, as to the future non-exclusion of citizens from the right to vote, he affirmed to be "degrading conditions precedent."

Reconstruction in Alabama he termed "a shameful and disgraceful spectacle," and the soldiers of the Union army and other Northern citizens who had settled in that State were, in Mr. Kerr's vocabulary, "political adventurers and vultures."

The test oath was "only fit to mark and disgrace the sway of an oppressor." The doctrine of the civil and political equality of all men Mr. Kerr proclaimed as "existing only in the imaginations of political utopians or demagogues." Nobody but "purblind fanatics" would take an oath not to restrict negro suffrage. The right to "deprive any person or persons, on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men, Mr. Kerr held to be "one of the rights of a free American citizen." The exacting of a pledge not to do this Mr. Kerr affirmed as "disclosing a purpose not only to control the actions, but also to debase, demoralize, and enslave the judgments and consciences of men."

Speaking incidentally of the fourteenth amendment he said, "I pray God it shall never be adopted, and if it ever is it will be against the will and judgment of the white people of this country. It will be done under the lash of military power." The provision in the Constitution of Alabama exempting small homesteads from sale or execution he denounced as "a bid for negro votes, a bid for the control of a debased, demoralized, corruptible population." The provision for the maintenance of a public school system in Alabama he styled provisions "for the levying of most onerous taxes." "Who," said Mr. Kerr "will enjoy the benefit of that" (the school) "fund?—Negroes alone, not white men." Its purpose was "to further burden the white people of Alabama." He whined about the crippled resources and diminished prosperity of Alabama, but did not attribute this to its secession and the waste of the war of the rebellion. No, it was all owing to Radical "agitation"—to the "horrible oppression of the whites" under "an unholy and infamous government." In conclusion, Mr. Kerr maintained that "this State should be admitted at once to representation under her own" (Johnson) "constitution, not this mongrel and bastard instrument, because she was never out of the Union, and never lost or forfeited her rights, and is now simply the victim of superior brute force."

December 21, 1869, Mr. Kerr made a violent speech against the bill for the admission of Georgia, which imposed fundamental conditions, prohibiting secession, repudiation, and disfranchisement. He declared this bill "cruel and infamous," an "attack" upon the State, "precipitated with indecent haste and zeal." He villified the Republicans of Georgia and repeated the whole vocabulary of rebel slanders against the Union men of that State who were aiding in the process of reconstruction. They were "dishonest and corrupt, defaulters, speculators, and robbers." No epithets were strong enough to express Mr. Kerr's abhorrence of Republicans who presumed to live in the State of Georgia, no words too suave with which to caress the unreconstructed rebels and the brutal murderers of loyal citizens in that State. "These fundamental conditions were a monstrous wrong," he said, "and ought to be rejected with emphasis and indignation."

The bill for the admission of Georgia was again opposed March 5, 1870, by Mr. Kerr in a speech especially directed against those clauses which provided that the State of Georgia should never deprive any citizen of the right to vote or hold office, except as a punishment for crime. This he declared to be "an initial step in the infamous system of congressional legislation," "a fundamental outrage on free institutions," "an abominable measure," which "had no precedent in the hitherto unparalleled legislation of Congress." He was "prepared to believe that we are now upon the threshold of a new career of aggressive, reckless, and abominable legislation which may lead this country God knows where," such bills as these would reduce the States "to the condition of abject, miserable, and most pitiable dependence upon a great central Republican despotism, having its seat in this capital, and from here with the strong hand of power destroying every franchise, every guaranty, every limitation upon power hitherto held absolutely inviolable and sacred."

STATE GOVERNMENTS REPUBLICAN IN FORM.

March 18, 1868, Mr. Kerr made a bitter speech against the bill "to guaranty to the several States of the Union a republican form of government." He said the title ought to be changed so as to read "a bill to corrupt the blood, demoralize the lives, and undermine the foundations of all constitutional government, and the civil liberties of the people of this country, and perpetuate the ascendancy of the Radical party," such was "the deliberate policy of Radicalism." Denouncing as cowards "those white men who marshaled themselves under the leadership of the Radical party, and seek to skulk and intrench themselves behind the power and influence and aid of a negro population, he described the colored men of the country as of "the most inferior and ignorant and corruptible races of the earth." The Republican measures of enfranchisement were described as "a revolutionary and corrupting policy." The Democratic party was "compelled to meet the ignorance, and barbarism, and stupidity, and vice of the country controlled by the political party in power," and it (the Democratic party) "trembled for the welfare of the country." "The Democratic party is to-day, and has been throughout the whole history of this country, the truest and best friend of the negro; and always will be." But "the negro should have no political power. The government should remain in the hands of the white race." This bill proposed "to corrupt that ruling race," and to "appeal to that ignorant and inferior race to help the party in power to retain the political control of the country."

Mr. Kerr voted against the joint resolution "excluding from the electoral college votes of the States lately in rebellion which had not then been recognized," and in favor of sustaining Andrew Johnson's vetoes of that and other Republican measures. Of course he voted against the tenure of office bill and against every other measure calculated to resist Executive usurpations.

IMPEACHMENT OF ANDREW JOHNSON.

March 30, 1868, Mr. Kerr voted in favor of restricting the power of the impeachment managers to obtain necessary testimony, and throughout the impeachment proceedings he assumed a leading part in the Democratic defense of Mr. Johnson.

The following paragraph from one of his assaults upon Secretary Stanton, (February 25, 1868,) illustrated the animosity, perversion, and falsehood which characterized his frequent utterances:

"Mr. Chairman, why do the majority here and Mr. Stanton himself resort to such extraordinary measures, such questionable expedients, to keep him in office? Why does he, with their assistance, cling with such selfish trembling and indecent tenacity to this office? Does he fear to expose the secret and unpublished record of that Department to the eye of any successor, to the knowledge of the people? It seems so. It may be that the frauds, the concealments, the oppressions, the crimes of that Department during his administration are such as to lead him to shrink from their exposure. The violation of law, the invasions of the rights of persons and property, the outrages upon personal liberty, the contempt of the Constitution, and the scandalous prostitution of his office to the base purposes of his party may well deter him from any voluntary exposure of his official conduct during the last seven years. * * * He ought to have been removed years ago."

This was Mr. Kerr's tribute to the man who, probably, more than any other one person contributed to carrying the nation safely through the rebellion. It was because of the loyal devotion of Edwin M. Stanton to his country and to his official duty that Mr. Kerr's abuse was showered upon him.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

March 8, 1866, Mr. Kerr made an elaborate speech in opposition to the original civil rights bill. The first section of that bill declared "all persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power—excluding Indians not taxed—to be citizens of the United States without distinction of color." This declaration Mr. Kerr averred to be "utterly vain." "Congress had no right to declare who should be citizens." This was "an invasion of the rights of the States." The bill was "inherently vicious." He argued in favor of the right of States to make discriminating laws against "inferior races," and defended State laws which excluded colored children from the public schools.

THE ENFORCEMENT ACT.

The bill to enforce the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution providing for the protection of citizens as voters and as witnesses when summoned before the courts, offered May 27, 1870, Mr. Kerr opposed in a similar vein to that which marked his opposition to all Republican measures.

In another set speech against the bill to enforce the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, delivered March 28, 1871, Mr. Kerr emphatically denied that "citizenship" carried with it the suffrage as a necessary right. The qualifications for suffrage were to be prescribed only by "States," and could "as perfectly exist without as with citizenship." Mr. Kerr, himself, emphasized the following sentence of his speech by causing it to be printed in italics: "No person ever did exercise the right of suffrage in virtue of the naked unassisted fact of citizen- ship." "But," he continued, "in every instance the right depends, and the franchise of suffrage is exercised, upon some additional fact and cumulative qualification prescribed by the laws of the State, which may as perfectly exist without as with citizenship." "The word citizenship has not in any of its elements or meanings under the Federal Constitution, nor have the words 'privileges' and 'immunities,' in any of their just interpretations, anything to do with or any power to set aside or disregard any of the distinctions, requirements, or rights based upon domicile or residence in the respective States."

SOUTHERN OUTRAGES.

In the debate (April 12, 1870, et. seq.) upon the Louisiana credential cases Mr. Kerr eulogized as "men of integrity and honor," and as gentlemen of "culture," the leaders of the "White Camelia" and "Sicilian Innocents" who had led the murderous attacks upon the Republican members of the Legislature of that State, had participated in the slaughter of hundreds of fleeing negroes, and who, in accordance with the rebel sense of "integrity" and "honor," had, as witnesses before the Congressional committee, denied under oath not only their participation in those outrages, but even the fact that any outrages had been committed. With a like inversion of truth and justice, Mr. Kerr at the same time stigmatized as "bad, unscrupulous, corrupt," as "covered all over with crime," as "vile, low, mean, and unprincipled"—who? the banditti, who with revolvers and bludgeons had invaded the hall of Representatives and had made the streets of New Orleans literally run with blood? It was not these men to whom Mr. Kerr applied such epithets. It was against the Republicans of Louisiana, whose offense was that they supported the National Government, and believed in the equal rights of all citizens, black as well as white.

Throughout this debate, which continued for several days, Mr. Kerr denied every conclusively proven fact respecting the condition of affairs in Louisiana, and indorsed, commended, and eulogized as true every proven perjury of the Ku-Klux leaders and their instruments.

The officially corroborated record he styled

"a common stock of slanders; baseless and foolish cries." He strenuously fought for every point on the floor of the House favoring the admission of the Democratic claimants who had attempted by violence and fraud to prevent the polling of Republican votes, and resisted by every device of parliamentary strategy the seating of Republicans returned as properly elected.

ELECTIONS.

On the 8th of January, 1868, in a speech upon the contested Kentucky election case of McKee vs. Young, Mr. Kerr declared that "suffrage is not a natural or absolutely indefeasable right," that it might be alienated or destroyed on other grounds than as a penalty for crime, and that the States had a right to disfranchise negroes or other classes of persons.

In a later speech (February 3, 1868,) upon the same contested election case, Mr. Kerr argued that Congress had no right to require persons who had been engaged in the rebellion to take a test oath, and defended John Young Brown upon proven charges of active and persistent disloyalty as doing only "what he deemed to be his duty as a man and a citizen of Kentucky." He repeated these views June 20, 1868, in a speech favoring Brown's admission.

In every case of contest for seats in the House of Representatives Mr. Kerr advocated and voted for the admission of the rebel claimants, and against the loyal claimants, without exception.

So in all other contests between Democratic and Republican contestants Mr. Kerr invariably opposed and voted against the Republican contestant, no matter how indisputable the right of such Republican, and in like manner urged and voted for the admission of the Democrat, no matter how clearly baseless or illegal his claim.

In reply to an accusation of this character made on the floor of the House, Mr. Kerr declared that he had on more than one occasion voted for the admission of Republicans, and against Democrats. The explanation of this statement is that one or two Republicans were included in the delegations from the unreconstructed States which Mr. Kerr had voted to admit, and likewise that the delegates elected under the reconstruction acts, against the admission of whom Mr. Kerr steadily voted, also embraced some Democratic members.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

February 2, 1866, Mr. Kerr made one of his usual set speeches in advocacy of State Rights doctrines, holding that Congress had no power over the late rebel States—that those States had never been out of the Union, and that therefore they were entitled to recognition without condition. This speech was delivered in opposition to the bill to establish the Freedmen's Bureau. Upon the question of slavery he claimed that it was a "domestic relation" and not a "public relation." All efforts to preserve the freedom which had been secured by the thirteenth amendment he denounced as "unconstitutional"—as "uncalled for," and as constituting a "centralization of power." He bitterly opposed the bill, and declared that such legislation "condemns to merited reproach those who favor it." The measures proposed in Congress looking to the protection of the negro were, he affirmed, "radically and wickedly wrong." He especially opposed the educational feature of the Freedmen's Bureau bill, sneeringly asking "what is a 'common school education,' and who long will it take some negroes to acquire it?"

On the 19th of March, 1863, he voted against continuing the educational features of the Freedmen's Bureau.

AID TO EDUCATION.

On the 14th of December, 1865, Mr. Kerr voted against a resolution introduced by Mr. Donnelly, of Minnesota, for the establishment of a bureau of education as a permanent part of any system of reconstruction.

The bill to establish an educational fund and to apply the proceeds of the public lands to the education of the people, proposed February, 1872, was also opposed by Mr. Kerr, who, with more truth than usually characterized his utterances, avowed that it was "precisely out of the line of the Democratic policy, and of the conduct of the Democratic party in the past, and precisely in the line of the present and past policy of the Republican party."

That provision of the bill that no State should partake of its advantages which did not provide for the free education of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen years was especially abhorrent to Mr. Kerr. He wanted the "States" to use their respective shares of the proposed Congressional appropriation as they saw fit, without imposing upon them such "unjust conditions."

The proposition to establish a system of national education met, as a matter of course, with uniform hostility from the Democracy. In a speech made February 17, 1871, against this measure Mr. Kerr made a more than usual violent and defamatory State rights and negro hostility speech, arraigning the Republican party as being guilty of nearly all the crimes in the calendar, which, in Mr. Kerr's view, seemed synonymous with any measure of justice towards the freedmen of the South or with any effort to promote education and civilization among the ignorant whites of that or other sections. "On the overthrow of the South," Mr. Kerr affirmed, "the revolution had been continued in the Capitol by the leaders of the Republican party." "They," (the Republican leaders,) "proceeded from one aggression to another." Their shibboleth was "centralization of power." "State rights to them are hateful." * * "This proposition to establish a system of national education was a New England idea and policy," and its provisions indicated "the animus, the peculiar statesmanship, and the cruel sectarianism attempted to be concealed by New England in this measure." It would impose upon "the South" most "unequal, unjust, and oppressive burdens." To enforce taxation for the support of public schools, especially in "the South," "violated every principle of just government." The bill he said "seeks under cover of a false pretense to accomplish a great outrage upon the people of some sections of our country, and to override and defy the original and necessary jurisdiction of the States." To compel those who had been so long supported by negro labor to aid in providing for the education of the children of such negroes, was, in Mr. Kerr's view, a "great outrage" upon "the people" of "the South."

The whole scope and purpose of such persistent parading of State sovereignty dogmas on all occasions, opportune or otherwise, by the Democratic leaders, orators, and press, is clearly seen to be the justification of the rebellion, to maintain the former pretexts for future action, excuse the violation of reconstruction conditions, prepare the way for a repeal of the Constitutional amendments, and to reduce the freed people to the condition of civic serfs, if not chattels personal—after pay for the slaves emancipated through the war shall have been demanded and received. Mr. Kerr is the boldest and most representative defender, among Northern Democrats, of the theories, arguments, and logic on which all these policies and possibilities are to be sought and defended. His election as Speaker is their indorsement.

PAYMENT FOR SLAVES.

July 16, 1866, Mr. Kerr, with his Democratic colleagues in the House, on a strict party division, voted against laying on the table a resolution favoring payment for slaves taken for military purposes.

MISCELLANEOUS BOURBONISM.

March 10, 1868, on a like party division, Mr. Kerr voted against the sale of the Government lands in the Sea Islands to the freedmen.

June 7, 1868, he voted in favor of selling the iron-clads. He also voted to exempt cotton from the internal revenue tax; to reduce the tax on State banks; against paying pensions to provost marshals; and on June 13, 1868, against a bill requiring concurrence of two-thirds of the Justices of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress invalid. He also voted against the bill providing for the retirement of Judges of the Supreme Court after attaining the age of 70 years, and against the provision that no Judge should sit in the Supreme Court upon the hearing of an appeal from his own decision. The object of these votes was to continue, if possible, the conditions supposed to exist in that high tribunal owing to the age and past associations of some of the members thereof. With consistent Democratic hostility to all humanitarian measures, as well as with a due regard to the pecuniary interests of the Democratic contractors who have always constituted the de facto "Indian Ring," Mr. Kerr opposed and voted against the bill providing for the appointment of the Indian Peace Commission.

July 23, 1866, Mr. Kerr is recorded as "not voting" on a proposition to amend the Constitution so as to limit the Presidential office to one term.

A BLOW AT POPULAR REPRESENTATION.

Mr. Kerr in a speech made upon the apportionment bill, December 13, 1871, argued in favor of a restricted, as against an increased popular representation in Congress. This position, taken by an acknowledged and conspicuous party leader, is in the direct line of the aristocratic and unrepugnant idea of small representative bodies and extended terms of office; while it derives additional significance from the concurrent facts of almost daily observation showing the Democratic disposition to discredit suffrage, and generally to condemn the processes of a popular administration of the Government.

COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES—RELATED MEASURES.

On June 16, 1866, Mr. Kerr made another of his familiar State Right speeches against the exercise of the Constitutional power of Congress to "regulate commerce among the several States," arguing against its right even to protect the Treasury from the grasping demands of private State corporations, the transportation of the mails and of Government supplies, and reiterating the whole schedule of fallacies and assumptions which distinguish the Calhoun school.

On February 4, 1869, the same speech was repeated, the same array of exploded "opinions."

April 11, 1872, Mr. Kerr opposed the bill for the prevention of cruelty to animals while in transit on railroads, upon the alleged ground that "it invades the jurisdiction of States." According to the Democratic party the "Constitutional rights of the States" are always in the way of national protection against outrages, whether upon men or animals. The "Constitution" as it was, or was claimed to be under Democratic interpretation, is ever invoked as a shield to gates elected under the reconstruction acts, against the admission of whom Mr. Kerr steadily voted, also embraced some Democratic members.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

February 2, 1866, Mr. Kerr made one of his usual set speeches in advocacy of State Rights doctrines, holding that Congress had no power over the late rebel States—that those States had never been out of the Union, and that therefore they were entitled to recognition without condition. This speech was delivered in opposition to the bill to establish the Freedmen's Bureau. Upon the question of slavery he claimed that it was a "domestic relation" and not a "public relation." All efforts to preserve the freedom which had been secured by the thirteenth amendment he denounced as "unconstitutional"—as "uncalled for," and as constituting a "centralization of power." He bitterly opposed the bill, and declared that such legislation "condemns to merited reproach those who favor it." The measures proposed in Congress looking to the protection of the negro were, he affirmed, "radically and wickedly wrong." He especially opposed the educational feature of the Freedmen's Bureau bill, sneeringly asking "what is a 'common school education,' and who long will it take some negroes to acquire it?"

On the 19th of March, 1863, he voted against continuing the educational features of the Freedmen's Bureau.

AID TO EDUCATION.

On the 14th of December, 1865, Mr. Kerr voted against a resolution introduced by Mr. Donnelly, of Minnesota, for the establishment of a bureau of education as a permanent part of any system of reconstruction.

The bill to establish an educational fund and to apply the proceeds of the public lands to the education of the people, proposed February, 1872, was also opposed by Mr. Kerr, who, with more truth than usually characterized his utterances, avowed that it was "precisely out of the line of the Democratic policy, and of the conduct of the Democratic party in the past, and precisely in the line of the present and past policy of the Republican party."

That provision of the bill that no State should partake of its advantages which did not provide for the free education of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen years was especially abhorrent to Mr. Kerr. He wanted the "States" to use their respective shares of the proposed Congressional appropriation as they saw fit, without imposing upon them such "unjust conditions."

The proposition to establish a system of national education met, as a matter of course, with uniform hostility from the Democracy. In a speech made February 17, 1871, against this measure Mr. Kerr made a more than usual violent and defamatory State rights and negro hostility speech, arraigning the Republican party as being guilty of nearly all the crimes in the calendar, which, in Mr. Kerr's view, seemed synonymous with any measure of justice towards the freedmen of the South or with any effort to promote education and civilization among the ignorant whites of that or other sections. "On the overthrow of the South," Mr. Kerr affirmed, "the revolution had been continued in the Capitol by the leaders of the Republican party." "They," (the Republican leaders,) "proceeded from one aggression to another." Their shibboleth was "centralization of power." "State rights to them are hateful." * * "This proposition to establish a system of national education was a New England idea and policy," and its provisions indicated "the animus, the peculiar statesmanship, and the cruel sectarianism attempted to be concealed by New England in this measure." It would impose upon "the South" most "unequal, unjust, and oppressive burdens." To enforce taxation for the support of public schools, especially in "the South," "violated every principle of just government." The bill he said "seeks under cover of a false pretense to accomplish a great outrage upon the people of some sections of our country, and to override and defy the original and necessary jurisdiction of the States." To compel those who had been so long supported by negro labor to aid in providing for the education of the children of such negroes, was, in Mr. Kerr's view, a "great outrage" upon "the people" of "the South."

The whole scope and purpose of such persistent parading of State sovereignty dogmas on all occasions, opportune or otherwise, by the Democratic leaders, orators, and press, is clearly seen to be the justification of the rebellion, to maintain the former pretexts for future action, excuse the violation of reconstruction conditions, prepare the way for a repeal of the Constitutional amendments, and to reduce the freed people to the condition of civic serfs, if not chattels personal—after pay for the slaves emancipated through the war shall have been demanded and received. Mr. Kerr is the boldest and most representative defender, among Northern Democrats, of the theories, arguments, and logic on which all these policies and possibilities are to be sought and defended. His election as Speaker is their indorsement

PAYMENT FOR SLAVES.

July 16, 1866, Mr. Kerr, with his Democratic colleagues in the House, on a strict party division, voted against laying on the table a resolution favoring payment for slaves taken for military purposes.

MISCELLANEOUS BOURBONISM.

March 10, 1868, on a like party division, Mr. Kerr voted against the sale of the Government lands in the Sea Islands to the freedmen.

June 7, 1868, he voted in favor of selling the iron-clads. He also voted to exempt cotton from the internal revenue tax; to reduce the tax on State banks; against paying pensions to provost marshals; and on June 13, 1868, against a bill requiring concurrence of two-thirds of the Justices of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress invalid. He also voted against the bill providing for the retirement of Judges of the Supreme Court after attaining the age of 70 years, and against the provision that no Judge should sit in the Supreme Court upon the hearing of an appeal from his own decision. The object of these votes was to continue, if possible, the conditions supposed to exist in that high tribunal owing to the age and past associations of some of the members thereof. With consistent Democratic hostility to all humanitarian measures, as well as with a due regard to the pecuniary interests of the Democratic contractors who have always constituted the de facto "Indian Ring," Mr. Kerr opposed and voted against the bill providing for the appointment of the Indian Peace Commission.

July 23, 1866, Mr. Kerr is recorded as "not voting" on a proposition to amend the Constitution so as to limit the Presidential office to one term.

A BLOW AT POPULAR REPRESENTATION.

Mr. Kerr in a speech made upon the apportionment bill, December 13, 1871, argued in favor of a restricted, as against an increased popular representation in Congress. This position, taken by an acknowledged and conspicuous party leader, is in the direct line of the aristocratic and unrepudican idea of small representative bodies and extended terms of office; while it derives additional significance from the concurrent facts of almost daily observation showing the Democratic disposition to discredit suffrage, and generally to condemn the processes of a popular administration of the Government.

COMMERCE AMONG THE STATES—RELATED MEASURES.

On June 16, 1866, Mr. Kerr made another of his familiar State Right speeches against the exercise of the Constitutional power of Congress to "regulate commerce among the several States," arguing against its right even to protect the Treasury from the grasping demands of private State corporations, the transportation of the mails and of Government supplies, and reiterating the whole schedule of fallacies and assumptions which distinguish the Calhoun school.

On February 4, 1869, the same speech was repeated, the same array of exploded "opinions."

April 11, 1872, Mr. Kerr opposed the bill for the prevention of cruelty to animals while in transit on railroads, upon the alleged ground that "it invades the jurisdiction of States." According to the Democratic party the "Constitutional rights of the States" are always in the way of national protection against outrages, whether upon men or animals. The "Constitution" as it was, or was claimed to be under Democratic interpretation, is ever invoked as a shield to oppression and cruelty. The Constitution, as it was in fact, and as it now is, must be held insufficient in its plainest provisions to guarantee justice or protection. This is plainly the theory of the Democratic party as explained by Mr. Speaker Kerr, whose fidelity to the past constructions, and whose hostility to the Constitution as amended, has been approved by his election to the position he now holds.

COMMISSION TO INQUIRE INTO THE CONDITION OF LABOR.

December 13, 1872, the Committee on Education and Labor reported a bill providing for a commission "to inquire into the condition of the laboring classes, and how the same are affected by existing laws regulating commerce, finance, and currency."

This wise and thoughtful measure in the interests of the working men and women of the country was, of course, at once opposed by the Democratic party, and Mr. Kerr subsequently made a prepared speech against the bill, in which he correctly defined his first opposition as "simply instinctive." But mature deliberation brought to Mr. Kerr's mind no more enlightened views. Mr. Kerr affirmed that there was "no need of this bill." He further styled it a "partisan measure," (i. e., Republican,) and asserted that all "good Democrats" should "oppose and reject it."

THE TARIFF.

Mr. Kerr's decided free trade record is well known. His speeches upon this topic were numerous, and often forcible. His action, however, as Speaker, in appointing a Committee upon Ways and Means which fails to represent either his own or his party's expressed views of national policy, shows with what facility a Democratic leader can ignore all past assertions, and how easily the Democratic party can subordinate economic questions or other incidental issues to its one great purpose—the re-establishment of sectional Democratic supremacy.

THE CURRENCY.

Mr. Kerr's first speech in Congress upon the currency question was a direct "hard money" argument, and comprised an explicit and peremptory demand for an immediate "contraction of the currency," and a "speedy resumption of specie payments." Necessarily hostile to the financial measures which had carried the country through the rebellion, he stigmatized the national currency as "rags," and with an equally patriotic desire to hamper the Government in its efforts to fund the national debt, and also to interrupt the processes of reconstruction through financial embarrassments, he wanted contraction and resumption precisely at the time when the results mentioned must inevitably have followed such an attempt.

But at a later period, when, reconstruction accomplished and the national debt secured, the Democratic party sought to devise new means to lure Republicans from their political fealty, Mr. Kerr's tone upon the financial question became sensibly altered.

In a speech made January 22, 1870, he was "willing" that specie payments should be resumed. He would "not delay resumption a month beyond the period when it shall have become practicable without a dangerous and injurious shock to the prosperity and business of the country." But there was no "royal road to resumption." It could not be accomplished by any mere act or device of legislation. "It can only result from a general condition of the country."

He advocated the absolute and complete separation of banks and financial institutions from the business of currency-making. The decision of the Supreme Court that Congress had the power to issue a credit, as well as a coin currency, "did not meet his approval," but "if it would lead to a separation of all financial institutions from all control or influence over the making of currency, and aid the more speedy resumption of specie payments," he should "rejoice that it was made." "Let whatever currency the country possesses, whether good or bad, belong to all the people."

He demanded that the Government "call in and cancel every dollar of currency issued to the national banks."

He declared that the principal of the bonds deposited by the national banks for the security of their circulation was "payable in the currency of the country, not in gold, * * until gold becomes a part of that currency." He demanded the taxation of Government bonds by the United States, and the repeal of the provision exempting them from State and municipal taxation. He protested against "immediate resumption," declaring that its attempt would work "infinite injury."

He opposed contraction, and favored "the redemption, not the purchase of bonds," and held that they should be redeemed at par "in the common currency of the country," i. e., Treasury notes.

It was at this time that the House instructed the Committee on Banking and Currency to report a bill increasing the currency to the amount of at least $50,000,000. A bill was reported providing for a further issue of $95,000,000 in national bank notes, and the retirement of $45,000,000 in three per cent. certificates. Mr. Kerr's speech June 8th, 1870, shows that he opposed this bill because it failed to carry out the order of the House. "This order," he said, "is clear and definite in terms, and, in my judgment, means an increase of $50,000,000 in the greenback currency of the country, not in national bank currency." He opposed it, in the second place, because it offered "no relief to the country." "It offers," he said, "no better currency than we have. The best credit currency we now have is the greenback; but this bill reduces the amount of that by $40,000,000. It offers the expansion of the worst currency we have, the national bank paper. To that it would add $95,000,000." He opposed it, in the third place, because it proposed "to add directly and most effectively to the power of the system of national banks in this country." "Such a system," he said, "such a fearful agency for monetary and political control, is dangerous in the extreme in any country, but supremely so in a republic." He opposed it in the fourth place, because it would "lead to a contraction of the currency." "The country" he said, "now demands an increase of the currency. If the system should be changed at all, it should be by an increase of the currency, and not by contraction." He believed that, besides the retirement of the treasury notes and the three per centum certificates, there would be in practice a retirement of "$9,000,000 in the increased amount of reserves required by the national bank law, making an aggregate contraction of $104,000,000." Deducting from this $95,- 000,000 increase of national bank notes, and there would be left "a net contraction of $9,000,000." He opposed it, in the fifth place, because it did not provide in good faith for "a redistribution of the currency." "It discriminates," he said, "against the West and the South, and in favor of the States that now have such a great excess of the currency of the country." He opposed it, in the sixth place, because it proposed to redeem $40,000,000 of the existing greenback currency of the country by the issue and sale of gold-bearing bonds. Among other things Mr. Kerr said:

"I would, therefore, retire every farthing of the national bank currency and issue such an amount of greenbacks in redemption of bonds at par, dollar for dollar, as would make the aggregate amount of greenbacks equivalent in the uses of the country to the amount we now have, and more.

"Issue more greenbacks and redeem bonds, thus giving more currency and also reducing the annual interest on the public debt, giving the country more money and less taxes."

OFFICIAL UNFAIRNESS.

As a member of the Committee on Elections in the Fortieth, Forty-first, and Forty-second Congresses, Mr. Kerr assumed the especial championship of the Democratic party, and was the recognized leader of all aggressive movements in that committee and upon the floor of the House for seating unreconstructed Southern rebels and fraudulently elected Northern Democrats. He was more than once reprovved in debate by Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts, Mr. Stevenson, of Ohio, and others, for attempting to override the rules of the House, for violating the proprieties enjoined by the committee, for ignoring all equities in his treatment of contested election questions, and for his frequent defiance of fact in his statements of evidence presented.

His habitual unfairness and utterly unscrupulous partisanship were especially shown in his conduct in the investigations ordered by Congress in the case of the New York election frauds, and in the contested election cases in Louisiana.

The Democratic party naturally being deemed as on trial, whether the charges under inquiry related to repeating and ballot-box stuffing in New York, or to intimidation, outrage, and murder in the South, Mr.

Kerr, as a member of committees charged with these investigations, took upon himself the role of counsel, substituting for his official duty of investigation a strictly partisan defense.

More than this, he notoriously sought to thwart the investigations he had been directed to assist in making, and his efforts to this end were marked by all the audacity of Democratic hardihood. The conduct of these investigations exhibited upon the Democratic side the customary policy of overloading testimony with irrelevant matter in cross-examination, the concealment of proper evidence, the bold denial of established facts, and the constant introduction of false rebutting testimony, and Mr. Kerr personally participated in the attempted intimidation of witnesses before the committee of which he was a member through the instrumentality of illegal processes and the encouragement of ruffianly force.

On this head Mr. Kerr may speak for himself. The journal of the select committee in the New York election frauds contains the following paragraph:

NEW YORK, January 8, 1869.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment.

Present: The chairman, Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Kerr, and Mr. Ross.

* * * * *

The proceedings of the committee were interrupted by the arrest of several witnesses, as reported to the committee by the sergeant-at-arms, as follows:

"MR. CHAIRMAN: I have a report to make upon which I desire the instructions of the committee. Several of the witnesses summoned before this committee, including some who have been examined and were directed to remain for further examination, and others who have not yet been called, have just been arrested in the hall of this building by the sheriff of this county and his deputies. I have reason to believe that these arrests were made without warrant or other lawful authority, and for some ulterior purpose connected with this investigation. I desire to be informed if I have any power, or this committee has any power, to protect from arrest the witnesses summoned before it."

Mr. Kerr stated that the arrests were made at his instance, and that he would take the responsibility of the act.—Lawrence's Report, Journal, page 165.

The facts in this case, which can be established by living witnesses, and which, as to

Mr. Kerr's complicity, the foregoing extract confirms, are understood to be that during the investigation in New York Mr. Sheriff O'Brien, with the concurrence of the Hon. Michael C. Kerr, a Democratic member of the Congressional committee, caused the United States court-house in which the sessions of the committee were being held to be invaded by a body of more than seventy special deputy sheriffs, recruited from among the prize-fighting and shoulder-hitting elements of the Democratic party of that city, for the recognized purpose of terrifying witnesses called before the committee, who, having been employed in "repeating" under the immediate direction of the Democratic officials of New York, were in possession of conclusive evidence of these frauds.

The arrangement was that all such witnesses should be arrested as soon as they left the committee-room, and for this purpose they were to be pointed out by the Democratic members of the committee. Then perjured testimony was to be manufactured in rebuttal, (the evidence necessary to be thus refuted being communicated by the Democratic members to a volunteer Democratic committee composed of William M. Tweed, Sheriff O'Brien, and A. Oakey Hall,) and when the original witnesses should be sought to be recalled they would not be found. In pursuance of this arrangement the arrests reported to the committee were made, Mr. Kerr, as stated by eye-witnesses, leaving the committee-room and passing down the hall in company with the Sheriff, pointed out the persons whose testimony had been deemed especially damaging, who were then and there summarily seized and removed from the building.

In the inquiry thereupon instituted by the committee, Robert Murray, United States Marshal, testified in answer to question 5512, and in presence of Mr. Kerr, as follows:

"I was standing in the hall, looking for one of my men to go on some errand. Mr. Kerr was out in the hall at the time pointing out certain parties to the sheriff. The sheriff ordered the arrest of some of these."

Sheriff O'Brien being called admitted (testimony, page 517,) that the arrests were made without warrant and at Mr. Kerr's instance.

Upon another occasion three deputy sheriffs had in like manner been stationed at the door of the committee-room, which indignity was reported to the committee by the sergeant-at-arms as follows :

"MR. CHAIRMAN: I have to report that I find three of the deputies of the sheriff of this county stationed at the door of this room. I respectfully ask to be informed if these officers are so stationed by the direction of this committee. And I desire further to state that I have already experienced great difficulty in retaining the witnesses summoned before this committee, on account of the intimidation exercised by the presence in this building of sheriff's officers and other persons who watch, follow, attempt to manipulate, and, in some instances, maltreat them. —Journal, page 165.

For this outrage Mr. Kerr was also responsible. These are some of the acts for which he stands condemned upon the record. Yet, in Democratic language, he is "an honorable man." And it was for his services to the Democratic party in thus attempting to crush this investigation that the New York Democracy then pledged to him their future support—a pledge they have since fulfilled.

IN CONCLUSION.

These facts, drawn from the record, and in which naught is "set down in malice," prove conclusively how thoroughly Mr. Kerr represents the most positive and logical opinions—those which under Southern Democratic leaders kept the Union in a turmoil from 1820 to 1861, with the aggressions of the slave power, and then having failed to rule, attempted to destroy, by plunging into civil war and seeking the destruction of the Union. Mr. Kerr is in hearty accord with this sectional philosophy; he is an ingrained belittler of the national life; one who, like Calhoun, constructs a shapely pyramid and then attempts to make it stand on its apex. No man north of Mason and Dixon's line could now be found in public life so ready to do the behests of the Southern or Confederate Democracy. He is, as has been shown, a daring partisan, ready to sacrifice even the comity of gentlemanly intercourse to accomplish a purpose. His election as Speaker is the most significant event in the present partial resumption of Democratic power.

SECRETARY BRISTOW AND THE WHISKY RING.

—A desperate attempt is being made by the kings of the whisky ring to break the force of the prosecution against them by publishing throughout the country base rumors against the President and Secretary Bristow. Column after column has been devoted to pure fiction, in the vain hope that the public would demand immunity for the revenue thieves while considering the charges against their prosecutors. Money has been freely used to start a counter current, and the ring could supply millions more if success were possible. But every effort to escape has thus far failed. The hand of the law has been laid upon these wrong-doers, and its grasp will not be released until justice is satisfied. The President has said, "Let no guilty man escape," and Secretary Bristow is determined, so far as human foresight and courage can avail, to carry out this order both in spirit and in letter. The Secretary of the Treasury need fear nothing from his enemies. He has already entrenched himself in the confidence of the people, and they will sustain him in enforcing the laws, and in prosecuting those who violate them. The administration of President Grant will take no steps backward in prosecuting those who have been defrauding the revenue. It is in downright earnest, and will punish the guilty whenever or wherever they are discovered, or whoever they may be.

THE Presidential campaign will be one of the most active in our history. Democracy will not relinquish its foothold upon the House of Representatives, much less its hopes of national control, without a desperate struggle. Every means available will be brought to bear to overthrow the Republican party. The stake is a grand one—no less than the nation itself—and to secure it Democracy will marshal, in battle array, every element and shade of opposition. Republicans must be wide awake to the nature and necessities of the conflict. Clubs must be organized; the local paper must be made a power for good; the people should be enlightened, and no stone should be left unturned to secure a glorious victory for the cause of Justice and Union. Republicanism saved the nation from overthrow; Republicanism can alone preserve it.

THE NATIONAL BANKING SYSTEM.

The Comptroller of the Currency in his late annual report to Congress gives a very full history of the national banking system, and of many of the financial measures proposed or adopted by the Government since the commencement of the war of 1812. He states that during that war the bank currency of the country, according to an estimate of Secretary Crawford, was increased in volume from $29,000,000 in 1812 to $99,000,000 in 1815; while at the same time treasury notes amounting to $60,500,000 were authorized, of which $36,680,000 were issued by the Government. The effect of this great increase of currency was that the bank notes became very greatly depreciated, and specie almost entirely disappeared from circulation. The treasury notes, although bearing interest at the rate of five and two-fifths per cent. per annum, or "one cent and one-half a cent per day," on each one hundred dollars, were also discredited, but instead of continuing as part of the circulation of the country they were mostly exchanged, under the law authorizing their issue, for funded six per cent. stock of the United States.

The policy of the State banks at that time seemed to be antagonistic to the Government, and to correct this antagonism various propositions were made with a view to identify the interests of the various monetary institutions with those of the United States. Fifty years later this was accomplished by the establishment of the national banking system. He also gives the information that as early as 1815 a plan was proposed by a magazine writer of that period which embodied the substantial principles of the present national banking system.

Under the head of "The discussion and passage of the national bank act," he states that in December, 1861, the Secretary of the Treasury proposed two methods for obtaining the necessary means for carrying on the war. His first proposition was to substitute demand notes, payable in coin, in place of the notes of private corporations. The second was the gradual issue of national bank notes secured by the pledge of United States bonds to replace the existing bank notes authorized by the laws of the several States.

The report of the Secretary was prepared with the expectation, then prevalent, that the war would be of short duration; but soon the magnitude of the struggle became evident, and the large drafts upon the Treasury, caused by the expenditure of more than a million of dollars daily, made it plain that the urgent necessities of the Government could not be supplied through the associated action of the existing banks, nor depend wholly upon the sale of its bonds.

A national bank bill was introduced into Congress in 1861, by Mr. Spaulding, of New York, but was not then finally acted upon; and in December, 1862, the Secretary again called the attention of Congress to his second plan of the year previous. In February, 1863, the banking bill previously introduced was reported, with amendments, from the Senate committee by Mr. Sherman, and subsequently passed both houses of Congress. Prior to this the issue of $300,000,000 of treasury notes had been authorized, which were fundable into a six per cent. Government bond; but on March 3, 1863, the right to exchange legal tender notes for six per cent. bonds was limited to July 1, 1863, and the act of June 30, 1864, provided that the total amount of United States notes issued, or to be issued, should not exceed $400,000,000, and such additional sum, not exceeding $50,000,000, as might be lawfully required for the redemption of temporary loans.

He quotes the report of the Secretary for 1865, in which the opinion is expressed that the legal-tender acts were war measures, and ought not to remain in force one day longer than should be necessary to enable the people to prepare for a return to the gold standard; and that the paper circulation of the country should be flexible, increasing and decreasing according to the requirements of legitimate business; while, if furnished by the Government, it would be quite likely to be governed by the necessities of the Treasury or the interests of parties rather than by the demands of commerce and trade. Besides, a permanent Government currency would be greatly in the way of public economy, and would give to the party in possession of the Government a power which it might be under strong temptations to use for other purposes than the public good—keeping the question of the currency constantly before the people as a political question, than which few things would be more injurious to business.

He also adduces the action of the House of Representatives during the same month in passing a resolution, by 144 yeas to 6 nays, cordially concurring in the views of the Secretary as to an early resumption of specie payments. In order to carry into effect this resolution, Congress, on March 12, 1866, authorized the funding of the legal-tender notes, and under that act more than $72,000,000 were retired. In January, 1868, however, any further reduction was prohibited, the amount then outstanding being $356,000,000. On March 18, 1869, an act was passed in which the United States "solemnly pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of United States notes in coin;" and the act of June 20, 1874, provides that "the amount of United States notes outstanding and to be used as a part of the circulating medium shall not exceed the sum of $382,000,000."

The Comptroller also states that a banking system similar to that now existing was again suggested in 1831 by Albert Gallatin; and it is said that a similar policy was proposed by Alexander Hamilton, before his appointment to the Secretaryship of the Treasury, when, on being asked by Washington, "What is to be done with our terrible debt?" he answered, "Bank on it; it is our only available capital, and the best in the world."

He then briefly reviews the policy of the Government and of the banks from 1812 to 1863, and says that the Government currency won its honors and secured the confidence of the people at a time when no other form of currency then existing could command general circulation. It borrowed the war debt from the people, and at the same time supplied them with the indispensable medium of exchange in all business transactions. The Government was then contracting debt day by day, and the people cheerfully received its promises to pay in exchange for their commodities and services. It purchased largely, and its creditors were content to wait until it should regain the ability to redeem its promises.

He says of the national bank act, that its success has more than fulfilled every expectation. The interest-bearing, convertible, and interchangeable treasury notes issued in the early days of the Government were withdrawn from circulation two years after the close of the war of 1812; and it is evident, from the reports of finance ministers, from the debates in Congress at the time of the passage of the legal-tender act, from the uniform legislation since that time, including the measures adopted by the last Congress, and, finally, by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, that it was intended that the national banking system should be permanent, the institutions organized under it being by the express terms of the law authorized to continue for a period of twenty years; and that the issue of treasury notes should not be increased in amount, but were to be withdrawn from circulation as rapidly as possible.

He adds that the United States notes have performed every service expected of them, and that the national bank issues have the same security; and he concludes this branch of the subject by saying that reason and experience alike teach us that we must either continue to adhere to the national banking system, or yield control of the issue and management of bank currency to the varying and conflicting legislation of forty or fifty different States and Territories, accompanied, as it surely will be, by all those evils and disasters which are the natural attendants upon the organization and perpetuation of State banking institutions.

In considering the objections to the national banking system, the Comptroller first notices the charge that it is a monopoly, and says that the system, so far from being a monopoly, has in fact uprooted the real banking monopoly, which has existed in this country from the foundation of the Government down to a late day; and that it is the only national system not a monopoly in operation in any country.

A monopoly is a privilege; something so valuable that it commands a premium, and which its owner does not willingly surrender without a struggle. But the national banks have, since the passage of the act of June 20, 1874, voluntarily surrendered more than $33,000,000 of their circulation; and forty-three banks, with a total capital of $5,040,000, have since that date gone into liquidation, chiefly for the reason that the privilege of circulation is not a profitable one, and because the restrictions of the system are onerous in comparison with those imposed by State legislatures. If the national bank act contained no restrictions upon the banks, or imposed no taxes upon their circulation, and if currency were issued to them equal in amount to the value of bonds deposited, then the interest received by them upon the bonds would, it is granted, be in the nature of a gratuity. This condition of things was true in some of the States previous to the organization of the national banking system, but it has not at any time been true of the national banks.

He then proceeds to show that the idea commonly entertained that the national banks derive great profit from their circulation is an erroneous one, and adds that if specie payments should be reached within a few years, the premium paid by the national banks upon their bonds would be nearly if not entirely lost, while investments by private bankers and State banks of an equal amount of capital in loans on bond and mortgage would not suffer from any such depreciation.

On the subject of the dividends of national banks, which it is urged, as a second objection, are greater than those of other moneyed corporations, he says that they do not, as a rule, exceed by more than two per cent. the current rates of interest authorized by law in the respective States; and that this additional amount of profit is surely not too great a compensation for the risks and expenses incident to the business of banking, and to which capital loaned directly on mortgage security is not subject. He fortifies these statements by tables compiled from reports of the banks, showing that for the last six and a half years the average ratio to capital of the semi-annual dividends of the national banks has been but 5.1 per cent., while their ratio to capital and surplus has been but 4.1 per cent.

He also discusses the proposed issue of 3.65 treasury notes, and says that with such issue the experience of 1815 will be repeated; for though, unlike the issues of 1815, they are not of a standard sufficiently high for funding purposes, yet the principle of interchangeability will cause the non-interest bearing notes to be exchanged for them almost as soon as issued. He shows that the expedient will result in a loss to the Government instead of a gain, and adds that if the proposition now under consideration should be adopted many of the banks would go into liquidation, and their loans, to a great extent, be called in, for the purpose of distributing their present capital and surplus among their stockholders, who would, without doubt, generally organize under State systems and as private banks.

In discussing the subject of restrictions he says that the national banks have earned a good character, because, as a rule, they have conformed to such needful restrictions as have been fixed by legislation, and as are required for the safety of their creditors or dealers. That these restrictions have been generally observed by the national banks may be seen by reference to tables of reserve, and to the summaries of reports of various kinds frequently published by his office; and it may also be inferred from the few failures and the comparatively small losses to creditors which have occurred during the twelve years' continuance of the system.

Upon the subject of "Failures of national banks," he states that the losses to creditors from the failures of banks prior to 1863 cannot be even approximately estimated, the only accessible data having reference solely to losses upon circulation. He quotes from Elliot's "Funding System" to the effect that in 1841, alone, 55 banks failed in the United States, having an aggregate capital of over 67 millions, which was more than one-fifth of the entire banking capital of the country at that time; while since the organization of the national banking system only thirty-eight national banks have failed, with a total capital of $9,011,100, and with circulation amounting to $5,874,893.

The experience of this country previous to the organization of the national system has shown that in twenty years an amount equal to its whole banking circulation was lost in the hands of the people—the loss by bills of broken banks alone being computed to have been at the rate of five per cent. per annum. There has been no loss whatever upon the circulation of the national banks, and no loss to the bill-holder can arise so long as the present laws remain in force.

The total amount of claims proved against insolvent national banks is $14,672,106. Dividends amounting to $8,292,877 have been paid upon these claims; and it is estimated that the total loss to their creditors since the organization of the system will not exceed $3,985,000. There has already been paid upon the total amount of proved claims an average of fifty-six and one half per cent., and it is estimated that the proportion paid and to be paid upon such claims will be about seventy-three per cent.

Six banks in New York city and one in Brooklyn have failed, with an aggregate capital of $3,000,000; and three of those in New York have paid their depositors in full. There have been no losses by failures of national banks in any of the other principal cities, except in Chicago, New Orleans, and Washington. One bank only has failed in the New England States, the total loss being but $1,379. The loss in the Middle States is estimated at $701,401, and in the Western States at $841,729. The largest proportion of loss has been in the Southern States, where business has continued unsettled, the losses in those States being estimated at $2,439,994 upon $6,638,074 of liabilities.

In each of ten of the States there has been but a single failure, while in twenty-two States and Territories no failures have occurred. The number of mercantile failures in the United States since 1869 is estimated at 26,880, with liabilities of $809,460,000, while the number of failures of national banks which have occurred in the United States during the same period is but twenty-two, with liabilities amounting to $3,952,878. Upon this sum dividends amounting to $5,492,029 have already been paid, and it is thought that a large proportion of the remaining indebtedness will yet be liquidated.

Under the head of "Publicity" the Comptroller recites the difficulties experienced by the Government in former years in collecting statistics of the State banks of the country, and says that efforts have been made to induce the State legislatures to remedy the difficulty by appropriate legislation, but thus far without success; and he thinks it is not probable that, under the ever-changing statutes of forty-three different States and Territories, any reliable statistics as to the affairs of banking corporations chartered by them can ever be obtained. Under the national system frequent reports are required from all of the banks, and they must also be published in the local newspapers; in addition to which the banks are frequently examined by competent persons, who report the results of their examinations to the Comptroller. He further says that statistics so complete and accurate as those deduced from the reports of the national banks have never been made in any country under any previous system. Experience has shown that such statistics cannot be obtained except under a general law of Congress, requiring frequent and detailed reports from the banks to be made to one officer, and by him compiled for the use of the public.

The Comptroller reviews the subject of the funding of the national debt, and says that the monetary problems to be solved during the next few years are the consolidation of this debt into bonds bearing a low rate of interest, and the resumption of specie payments. The conversion of the present national debt into a bond bearing four and one-half per cent. interest would save to the Government nearly nineteen millions of dollars annually, while the reduction of interest resulting from the funding of the debt into a four per cent. bond would amount to twenty-seven and one-half millions annually; and there appears no good reason why, during the next ten years, the public debt should not be consolidated into a bond bearing interest at no greater rate than four per cent. In order to accomplish this most desirable end it will be necessary to enlist in its support all the leading monetary institutions of the country.

He thinks that the national banking system should not be repealed, but should be so moulded as to become and continue both profitable to the people and advantageous to the Government. The interests of the national banks will be promoted by the reduction to a low rate of the interest upon the public debt; for such a reduction will carry with it a reduction of the present onerous taxation upon bank capital, circulation, and deposits. The funding of the national debt at a low rate of interest will also aid materially in bringing about the resumption of specie payments; for the return to specie payments depends to a great extent upon the credit of the Government.

The experience of the last twelve years, he says, has shown that the present is a safe and good system; but even were it much less perfect than it is the common prudence of ordinary business men would dictate the postponement of the discussion of the repeal and liquidation of a banking system whose resources amount to nineteen hundred million dollars, among which are included one thousand million of loans to the people, with more than four hundred millions to the Government, until the debt of the country shall be funded at a satisfactory rate of interest, and permanent arrangements be effected for the redemption of its demand obligations. When the purchasing power of the legal-tender notes shall be made equal to gold it will then be in order to discuss the policy of the establishment of a different banking system, and the issue of additional paper money by the Government.

He also reviews the operation of the acts of March 3, 1865, June 20, 1874, and January 14, 1875, as they have affected the issue and retirement of national bank circulation, giving copious tables showing the amount issued and retired under each act. He approves of the present system of redemption of the notes at the Treasury, and gives reasons why it should be continued. He suggests in this connection that the Government tax upon deposits—which was imposed as a war tax—shall, like other similar war taxes, be repealed; or, if not repealed, that at least the expense of redemption, which is now borne by the banks, shall be paid out of the fund arising from that tax.

He considers at some length the subject of taxation of national banks, and gives tables compiled from the returns made by the banks to his office, showing for the years 1867, 1869, and 1874 the amount of United States and State taxes assessed upon them. From these tables it appears that New York paid the highest bank taxes of any of the Eastern or Middle States, the total taxation in the State named for the year 1867 being 6.1 per cent.; for 1869, 5.3 per cent; and for 1874, 4.8 per cent. Taking all the States together, the average rates of bank taxation for the three years mentioned, were 3.5, 4.3, and 4.1 per cent.

He discusses the subject of the two-cent stamp tax upon bank checks, of which he says that the annoyance to the banks and to his office growing out of the strict enforcement of this provision of the law has been greater than that in reference to all the other restrictions of the national banking laws combined; and believing that the amount of revenue derived from this source does not counterbalance the evils arising from the surveillance to which all banks and bankers are necessarily subjected thereby, and being satisfied that, in almost every instance, the failure to comply strictly with this requirement is chargeable to the carelessness of transient depositors or to the insufficiency of the mucilage upon Government stamps, he urgently recommends the repeal of the provision requiring the affixing of the two-cent stamp upon bank checks.

Under the head of "Specie, paper currency, and bank checks," he gives a table exhibiting the transactions of the clearing-house in New York city for twenty-two years, showing that during that period but 61 millions of currency of all kinds were used by the banks of that city in making settlements amounting to more than 413,000 millions. Upon this point he says that the amount of the coin and paper currency of a great nation is small in comparison with that of bank checks, certificates, and bills of exchange which are used as credit circulation. It has been said that they are simply the "small change;" and the table shows how inconsiderable is the aggregate of currency used in comparison with that of bank checks, and how small an amount is actually needed to settle the large daily transactions of business at the New York clearing-house. In this connection an estimate of the amount of specie in the country on June 30, 1874, and 1875, is given.

A table prepared by Mr. E. B. Elliott is presented, showing, for the period of thirteen years and nine months, from the close of the year 1861 to the 30th of September, 1875, the average greenback price of gold, and the average gold price of greenbacks, by months, quarter-years, half-years, and fiscal and calendar years, as derived from daily quotations of sales in open market in New York city. The diagram accompanying the table exhibits the average currency prices of gold and the average gold prices of currency, by quarter-years, for the same period.

He refers to the many exaggerated estimates of the proportion of lost or unredeemed treasury and bank notes which have been in actual circulation, and says that the amount of demand treasury notes not presented for redemption is less than one-eighth of one per cent. of the amount issued. In the absence of sufficient data no reliable statement of similar losses arising from the circulation of bank notes has ever been made, but from returns supplied to him through the courtesy of the Superintendent of the Bank Department of the State of New York it is found that, of the circulation of 286 State banks in that State, the proportion unredeemed is 2.83 per cent. only of the amount issued. The returns of 35 of these banks, which are still in operation in New York city, show the per centage of their unredeemed notes to be but 1.83 of the amount issued to them; and an examination of the returns of the State banks in Wisconsin, received from its State Comptroller, shows the per centage of their unredeemed notes to be 1.78 only of the amount issued.

The Comptroller cites the late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The Farmers and Mechanics' Na- tional Bank of Buffalo vs. Dearing upon the subject of usury, and says that he is frequently solicited to bring suits, under the authority of section 5239 of the Revised Statutes, for the forfeiture of the rights, privileges, and franchises of national banks on account of usurious transactions; but that until Congress shall make it his duty to do so he does not feel called upon to institute such proceedings, when it is evident that the business of the association is legitimately and safely conducted in other respects.

He states that in counting and assorting in the Treasury an amount of national bank notes nearly equal to two-thirds of the total national bank circulation, only 520 counterfeits of all denominations have been discovered, the value represented by these counterfeits being $3,840. A table is given showing the number and amount of counterfeit notes of the Bank of England presented to that bank during the last seventy years, by which it appears that from 1806 to 1830 the number was 255,837, and the amount $1,700,001. Since 1830 the number of such notes presented has been 11,686, and their amount $241,987—the average annual number for the last named period being 265, and the annual amount $5,500. This table shows that the national banks do not compare unfavorably with the Bank of England in respect to their immunity from counterfeits.

Tables showing the amount of reserve held by the national banks for a series of years are also given, by which it appears that the national banks held on October 1, 1875, $26,400,000 more of reserve than would have been required prior to the act of June 20, 1874, and $82,400,000 more than is required under that act. The amount of cash-reserve held was $148,500,000, which sum exceeded by $25,000,000 the amount required prior to June, 20, 1874, and is $43,000,000 greater than that required under the present act.

A chapter of the report is given to the subject of the returns of the State and savings banks and trust companies obtained by the Comptroller during the present year, and which he is required to report to Congress. The returns received by him are meagre, the only satisfactory ones being from New England, New York, and New Jersey; but from the limited material obtained, and from the returns made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for purposes of taxation, a valuable comparative table has been prepared, giving much instructive information respecting the State and savings banks of the country. The Comptroller says that information in regard to these institutions approximating to accuracy and completeness can be obtained only through improved State legislation. And, in reference to the want of accessible data, he adds that it is a truth not universally recognized that concealment is not among the vested rights of chartered money corporations; but it is safe to say that the soundest of them regard publicity of their affairs to be a measure of safety to themselves and a duty to the public.

The report also contains a synopsis of all the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States relative to national banks; and an appendix is added containing a great number and variety of tables illustrative of the various topics discussed in the report. More than sixty of these tables are included in the text of the report and in the appendix, giving full information in reference to almost every branch of the subject. The historical portion of the report is particularly interesting, and the report itself may be said to be a text book of the national banking system for the use of legislators and statisticians. Comptroller Knox has a happy faculty of intermingling what might be considered dry statistics with interesting subjects which are the topics of the day, and in this pleasant way he has presented the most complete and useful bank report which has ever been submitted to Congress.

OFFICIAL CORRUPTION COMPARED WITH THAT OF FORMER TIMES.

Expressions similar to the following are at present profusely heralded from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, and from the Lakes to the Gulf.

"The corruption among the officers of the several Governments in our country, from the constable in an obscure township up to the President of the United States, has assumed such alarming proportions that our whole Republican Government must inevitably be swallowed up by this whirlpool of vice, and our free institutions cannot be saved from being buried under such reckless satisfaction of the wild passions for rule and unclean gain, pursued by their pretended guardians, if the people do not make an end of such profligacy."

To join in the chorus of such sweeping accusations merely because others do so proves a deplorable lack of intellectual capacity and moral sense. No reasonable and honest person will join in the furious clamors for the blood or liberty of a fellow-citizen because a maddened mob is thus carried away by ungovernable passions. Reason and justice require an impartial weighing of all attainable evidence, not only against, but also in favor of the accused, before the verdict can be pronounced.

The same rule must be applied if we wish to arrive at a correct estimate of the moral value of a community, a people, or an age. The faithful historian therefore never omits to portray, as minutely as possible, all the moving factors that established the character of a certain people or age. Does it not, then, behoove every intellectual member of our enlightened nation to inquire into the real merits of the above-cited sweeping accusation, with the honest intention of arriving at the real truth, instead of repeating thoughtlessly and noisily such wholesale condemnations, with a view to a very cheap self-laudation?

Only an uninformed and ignorant person can make the ridiculous assertion that the human family is constantly and rapidly degenerating. Incontrovertible facts prove conclusively that the human family is progressing in every respect. Who can deny the rapid progress of science? Who can deny that the standard of morals is higher and more refined now than it was at any previous time? The preference all civilized nations demonstrate at present to adjust their differences by arbitration instead of doing so by the sword, the better treatment of criminals in their punishment, the higher purity of the ballot-box, and other improvements and reforms too numerous to mention, show the moral improvements of the present age. Even statistics prove that the longitude of human life exceeds now considerably that of the past century. But that man improves his health and prolongs his life by a more strict conformity with the requirements of the organic law is beyond contradiction. Such a general improvement of the order of life can, however, only result from purer morals and a better government of human passions. And the general spirit of the age cannot be separated, nor can it be different, from the leading characters of individuals, because the former is created by the latter. And who of our American fellow-citizens can forget himself so far as to assert that the people of the United States do not keep pace with the rest of the progressing civilized nations merely for the purpose of gratifying party hatred?

But how can these arguments from indisputable facts be reconciled with the recent revelations of the gigantic frauds in official circles? Simply by comparing the present with former times.

The thoughtlessly repeated phrases conveying the idea that the Government under our forefathers was purer than it is at the present time are without foundation, and an evidence of ignorance.

Certain papers of the century now closed are full of the vilest defamations of our former Presidents. From the time of Washington—the Father of our Country, who was called a “debaucher” of the American nation, a “deceiver,” the “vilest of hypocrites,” &c.—down to President Grant, not a single one had a spark of honesty according to that part of the country’s press that represented the opposition at the time. So much is certain, however, that whenever we look back into the past, and see nothing but a halo of sanctity enveloping it, we may be assured that only a one-sided view of the whole situation has been obtained. The critic must further take into consideration that the electric wires, at the present day, bring every occurrence before it gets two or three days old, fresh within the reach of nearly every inhabitant of the civilized world, while it required months in former times for news to travel the same distance. Before it was fairly distributed it became stale, losing vivacity and command of attention. Similar news, that comes now fresh to the notice of every one, had in former times no existence for nearly seventy-five per cent. of the whole population, for the reason just given.

In the same proportion, it must be acknowledged, in which our Government and its administration increased, becoming in the highest degree complicated, has the responsibility of its administration necessarily become greatly enlarged; so, also, have the temptations to improper official conduct increased in scope and intensity. Our forefathers could hardly have had a proper ideal conception of the magnitude in which the complicated machinery of our present Government presents itself to the view of the world. Since all the members of the entire human family cannot be transformed into faultless saints in the twinkling of an eye, how, then, could it be surprising to see corruption increase? The rapid growth of the nation necessitated such increase. But although corruption has increased in dimension, it has decreased in proportion. But the same causes that have multiplied temptations to dishonest acts have made better persons of those who preferred honesty to unjust gain. There is more moral heroism now than at any former period; because it requires at present more moral nerve and unwavering honesty to stand the test. If all the secret struggles in which honesty has prevailed were heralded as freely through the country as are slanders and vices many a dishonest defamer would then be put to shame.

Finally, it ought not to be overlooked that, if all official dishonesty were minutely compared with all the occurring frauds and dishonesty in private business life, official honesty would not only favorably compare with private honesty, but greatly outweigh it. Accurate statistics would prove this observation to be correct. What would become of our Government if the officers of it would not daily check the nearly innumerable fraudulent claims against the nation’s treasury and property, presented by persons who are known as “respectable gentlemen,” and who are generally the first to complain of “dishonest officials?”

It is not the intention of this article to excuse or defend official dishonesty. All our aims must be higher and purer than our present practice if we wish to preserve our independence. But we ought, at the same time, beware of falling into the same temptation in which many of our so-called reformers have fallen, by hurling their sweeping denun-ciations at all Government affairs, without exception, and thus lower themselves to the level of common slanderers of their fellowmen and their nation. They need not to be envied for the cheap self-laudation they proclaim by such conduct, nor for the personal honor and respect they intend to establish by their unsupported indictments of fellow citizens.

THE SLAVEHOLDERS' WAR AND THE PARIS COMMUNE.

The French Government has quite recently printed and distributed to the Assembly a document of most remarkable character. It is the report of General Appert, President of the Court-Martial General by which the Communist prisoners of Paris were tried. It is a document to make one shudder for the sake of our common humanity, and it will hereafter, if not at present, make Frenchmen of whatever shade of opinion thoroughly ashamed of what it reveals. This judgment has nothing whatever to do with the right or wrong-doing in the Paris Commune, its leaders and defenders. Only it must be remembered that, however mistaken the means, the leaders' object was not a blind striking at order, but rather, an effort to remove the causes of chronic disorder by restoring self-government and breaking down an autocratic centralization. Nor can it be truthfully declared that it was a reckless attempt to destroy wealth, as such, but on the contrary, an effort (unwise without doubt) to put into motion forces which would lead, it was hoped, to the abolition of Poverty rather than to the abolition of Property. It must also be borne in mind that from the date of the Commune outbreak in Paris in March, 1871, until McMahon's army entered it in May, no life was taken by the Commune otherwise than in battle. This is the statement of English writers who were in Paris and not friendly to the Communists. What was done in the way of destruction, either of life or property, was done after the army entered, when the defense of despair had begun, and the Government troops had announced and proven that no quarter would be given.

But to return to General Appert's report, a brief summary of which is given, in order to point the moral of the false outcry continually made of the harsh treatment received by the rebel leaders and States in the American Republic.

General Appert states that 38,000 persons alone were arrested on personal denunciation. Of these, 1,090 were released almost immediately. No account is given of the summary executions and deaths, which the organs of the Government have often exultingly referred to as being at least 25,000. Not 5,000 of these occurred in actual combat. Nearly four thousand prisoners were taken in the fights around Paris, and about 28,000 in the final conflict within the unfortunate city. There were twenty-two courts-martial in session for nearly three years. The prisons were fearfully overcrowded—150 alone dying at Versailles in the first three months from that cause. In the hulks 1,600 were on the sick list at one time. During the first year, in four prisons 738 died. Among the prisoners were 850 women, of whom 623 were released; also 654 children not over sixteen years of age, 38 being boys between seven and thirteen. Of these 460 were released after a detention of many months. When the Government was satiated, and the courts-martial closed their sittings December 31, 1874, they had refused to prosecute 9,291 persons, discharged 25,023 prisoners, condemned 10,042, and acquitted 2,452. There were besides sentences pronounced against 3,751 persons, who, by exile or other means, had escaped the clutches of the authorities. This makes a total of 50,559 decisions, of which 16,245 were condemnations. This total does not include the transportation to New Caledonia, which at the present time has a population of about 60,000 of these Communist convicts.

Against all this long rage of bloodshed and cruelty, the civilized world tells with bated breath of the death of the Archbishop of Paris, and a small number of other priests and citizens, which act though wanton and wicked, was not done by any authorized authority, or indeed by any power but that of the assassins; of a vain attempt to change conditions that at least have evil in them as well as good; of an unflinching but unavailing resistance; of the pulling down of the Column Vendome, and the firing of the Tuileries and the Hotel de Ville—the latter done, too, in the wild frenzy of a despair so hopeless as to be almost heroic.

But granting that the Commune rebellion was as bad as that of the civil war started by our slaveholders—and to do so is an insult to the Paris Communists—let us compare with the above the treatment meted out to those who led in or fought for the Democratic rebellion. The latter was inaugurated to make slavery permanent, to insure the continuance of poverty as a social system and political fact; to prepare the way for the perpetuation of an oligarchy by the destruction of free government and the Union based thereon. It continued for nearly four years. It laid waste half a continent; it desolated a half million homes; it was marked all through by the destruction of property, the creation of debt, deeds of cruelty, and the continued debasement of the rank and file who sustained it with their lives. When the end came—what followed? None have been punished for political reasons. One man was hung—Wirtz—for outraging the laws of war. A few assassins who conspired and aided to destroy the Chief Magistrate were tried, convicted, and executed. The rebel President was incarcerated for a brief period, and—that was all. The States themselves were restored to their places in the Union. The slaves were emancipated, enfranchised, and partially protected. This was all. Freedom went there to bless and stay, in spite of the sorry welcome she has received. Contrast all this with what has been stated of the French methods of treating those who resist the controlling government. We allow statues in honor of rebel generals to be erected. To propose amnesty at Versailles is almost to place the proposer's liberty in jeopardy. The city of Lyons sends M. Ranc as a Deputy; the Government demands his life. In America we do these things better—the Southern rebels rule the House of Representatives in the National Congress and dismiss from petty places officials who served in the Union army.

INVESTIGATIONS.

Few things have been more highly eulogized than an investigating mind. The man who "wanted to know, you know," in the circumlocution office, and whose enthusiasm was only blunted by encountering Timothy Barnacle, belonged to an unsophisticated class. The boy who cut up the bellows to discover the seat of the wind was the prototype of the Democratic party of to-day. The latter, having just discovered that they are unable to do anything themselves, have whittled down their work to a mere attempt to reform the Republicans. They have discovered that modern issues are a little too modern for them. That in their unhappy attempt to bring about the millenium they have been born "as one out of due season." Their only idea of reform is a reformatory school, in which the elements shall be thin soup and multitudinous flaggelations.

The Democratic majority in the House has resolved itself into investigating committees, in the making of which there is no end. The one idea that seems to permeate the Democratic brain is to "send for persons and papers." The "economy" of the thing is not so obvious, as the contingent expenses of the House are likely to show, but it possesses another feature. The Democratic House is besieged by an army of Confederate office-seekers that no man can number. They besiege the doors of the House so that members cannot get in, and demonstrate the theory, of which there has hitherto been some doubt, that this is the "popular branch." If each of these investigating committees, general and special, has two clerks, a couple of stenographers, and a few doorkeepers to frown down upon the wicked who come before them, these will be a means of indemnifying these patriots for the loss of that pension which the bigoted prejudice against the "Lost Cause" has denied them. The party that promised a reduction of "useless employees" is increasing them, and the expense created by them in the only branch of the Government over which they have the slightest control.

The Republicans have behaved very discreetly in the matter. They have seen the Committees of the House with the work of a great nation before them diverted from their legitimate business, and each converted into a bottle of "smelling salts." Occasionally there has been an expostulation against some wild Democratic vagary, but, knowing that opposition was, in the first place, hopeless, and would, in the second, be construed into a desire to shirk investigation, they have sat in dignified silence and permitted the Democratic majority to do their work without offering impotent or factious opposition. And this is right, for however the Democrats may turn their backs on genuine reform, and however they may poison the whole springs of public life by Confederate malignity, still the people sent them here, and it is well that they should show their hand. As the Chinaman said when he taught the American to make tea: "You see me do, then you know." Those who have had doubts as to what the party calling itself "Democracy" will do need have doubts but for a little season. The Confederate element, which constitutes the majority of the Democratic party, comes in with all the hopes and hates that made them seek to tear down the flag of the Union. The Democratic minority, respectable in numbers, if in nothing else, has become the victim of traditional flunkeyism. Every would-be ambitious Northern Democrat puts "cotton" on his face and makes a bid to rebel. They have been educated in that school, and still spell negro with two g's. They shout themselves hoarse for "State Rights," and scan the "stars and bars" to see how many there were of them.

They prostitute the power given to them by the Union loving Democracy of the North, and play second fiddle to the men who have come back to the Union before they had learned to love it.

There is another picture on the Democratic easel, the outlines of which are but confronting the people. On January 7th, when a universal amnesty bill was being considered, Mr. Blaine desired to offer an amendment which gave amnesty to all but one, and which only required that the recipients of this national bounty should ask it, and go before a court and take the oath of allegiance to the Union. Mr. Randall would not even consent to have such an amendment voted on. What these men want is not amnesty, but justification. They wish to come back with all their power, asserting that rebellion is right. The one exception, the name of Jeff Davis, is hated as the name of Benedict Arnold is hated. His exclusion from political power is nothing, for his imbecility is greater than even his treachery, and yet that one exception is designed to show that treason shall not be deified, but is odious. The Democracy as the first of their "reforms" fight for its justification.

There is another side to the same picture. Only a few years ago the broken fragments of the Confederate army stood before the great Captain of the Union soldiers, not deserving and scarcely expecting their lives for the great crime against humanity and liberty of which they had been guilty. They were treated with a magnanimity unparalleled in history. Sherman, to some extent, fell under ban for his too liberal concessions, and Grant, while he held to essentials seemed to have but one purpose—

"To soften, soothe, and save
The feelings of the conquered brave."

They come back, these men, come back fledged with the power granted them by a generous army and a generous people to show all the gall and bitterness of their side of the struggle, and to strive to sully the laurels of the great leaders of the Union army. The latter ask no favors. They need to ask none. Their record is spotless and stainless. If they had a fault it consisted in being too magnanimous to an enemy incapable of appreciating it. They may suffer from the reckless assaults of a profligate press, and the hatred of Confederate malignity, but the people can look at this strange picture, and can remember.

If we were in condition to advise the Democracy it would be that the multiplicity of their investigations destroys their power. An investigation now and then, if there is real cause, will be tolerated, but this effort to convert every branch of government into an investigating mill, and every moment of its time into a hunt for scandal, will disgust all sensible people. There is something else and there is something better to do. The people expected something more of the party than that it would waste its time in needless investigations and adjournments.

But if the Democrats can only investigate, let them give us something that will give a point to it. When the ex-Confederate Postmaster General rises to thunder on reform and honesty, let him tell us what became of the United States postal property stolen by the Confederates. When the Indian bureau is being investigated, let us find out what became of the Indian beads stolen from the Government safe by Jake Thompson and his confreres. Let all these forgiven Confederates inform us how much of the proceeds of all that wasted United States property is still clinging to their fingers. When Ben Hill defends Jefferson Davis, let him tell us of the adoption in the Confederate senate of orders to give no quarter to those who commanded colored soldiers, and of the open violations of the laws of civilized warfare which the Confederates, Davis leading, urged and acted upon. The Republican party has not demanded this, but if they are honest in their pretensions, here is a fine field open for them.

CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS AND LEADERS IN THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

Public interest has been greatly aroused by the fact that a large number of rebel officers, as well as several of the most prominent Confederate leaders, have been returned to, and are now sitting in the present Congress. There cannot be the slightest doubt among those who have followed the movements of the Southern Democracy that a considerable number of these gentlemen hold their present positions by reason of the well-devised and organized system of terror, fraud, riot, and assassination which is a chief characteristic of their politics. In Georgia, for example, a fair and decently ordered canvass and election, in which Republicans could have worked and voted as the Democrats have the right and opportunity of doing in the Northern States, would have resulted at the last or in any future Congressional election in electing at least three out of the nine Congressmen from that State. According to the returns of elections and of polls for taxation given in the State Comptroller-General's report for 1874, the following tabular statement illustrates the truth of this assertion:

The total number of "polls" returned is 199,086; the total vote is 130,379, or 68,707 less than the number of citizens reported for taxable purposes. According to the United States census of 1870 the total number of male citizens was 234,919, or 35,833 more than the State Reports show. This total was divided between the races as follows: White voters, 129,665; colored, 107,962. Part of the Democratic machinery is an oppressive and unconstitutional mode of levying the capitation tax. The poll list is designedly kept as small as possible. It will be observed, however, that the small Republican vote is within 47,667 of the colored polls as given above. It will also be noted that the colored polls outnumber the white in the second and sixth districts, while in the first and eighth the two classes nearly balance each other. It will be observed, also, that by the above table there is one district having a colored "poll" of 7,470 without a single Republican vote. In another, the eighth, with twelve Republican votes, there were colored polls to the number of 11,405. In view of these and other facts, it may well be doubted if there are not three, at least, of the Georgia Confederate Congressmen who represent minorities of their constituents, and who are seated in the House by means of a process thoroughly oppressive, and designed to nullify indirectly the rights guaranteed to colored Americans, as well as to all others, under the amended Constitution. In Alabama there can be no doubt that the same processes have seated at least one-half of the present Democratic delegation in that State. So also with regard to at least two of the three rebel officers occupying seats from Louisiana. In Virginia, John Goode, Jr., is notoriously occupying a seat to which James H. Platt, Jr., was elected. In Tennessee and North Carolina the same protection to person and opinion, the same rights of free speech and canvassing, which the loyal States have always maintained, would give us from four to six, if not more, Republican members of Congress. Arkansas would add two to the list, and freedom in Texas would result in electing at least that number. Mississippi is the latest victim of this Democratic system. It is a reproduction of the spirit of slavery. Before the Southern Democracy went into rebellion the lives of inoffensive Northern citizens were always in peril in that region. To declare slavery a moral wrong, an economic injury, or a political evil, was to place one's life in peril of mob violence, or risk liberty from infamous laws, which in all the slave States forbade the teaching of colored persons, and made free opinion, as in Texas, a penitentiary offense. Taking the case of Mississippi and its Democratic representatives, so-called, and the vote will show that the Georgia policy, even more intensified and vigorous, was pursued at the last election. The following comparative table will prove this:

Number of District.	Forty-third Congress.		Forty-fourth Congress.
	Rep. vote.	Dem. vote.	Rep. vote.	Dem. vote.
First District....	4,954	9,679	None.	18,412
Third District...	15,047	6,440	5,883	13,744
Fourth District..	15,795	6,870	9,914	19,790
Fifth District....	14,817	8,073	10,653	16,530
	50,613	31,062	26,450	68,476
Rep. maj. 19,551. Dem. maj. 42,026.

These districts are represented by Messrs. Lamar, Singleton, Money, and Hooker—Democrats. The change is indeed significant, and cannot be explained by any other process than that of oppression which the Confederate Democracy have been for eight years past engaged in perfecting. The total vote on members for the last Congress in the districts cited was 81,675; that for the present members is 94,926—a total increase of 13,251 votes. There is an increase shown of 37,414 Democratic, and a decrease of 24,163 Republican votes. There is nothing in the politics of Mississippi to justify so extraordinary a change by any of the normal agencies and influences. The only way in which it could be effected is that one in which the Confederate Democrats are so proficient; the organization of terror and violence.

The object of these references is to establish this point: that there are to-day in the House of Representatives certainly a score or more of ex-Confederate soldiers and politicians holding seats as Democrats whose districts are largely Republican in politics. The voters of the majority being in the main freedmen, defenseless and poor, have been overawed at the polls, driven away, or kept from appearing there in order to secure the minority the representation which belongs to the constitutional majority. In order to deceive the country, systematic vilification has been entered on, and no where to a larger extent than in the State of Mississippi, and against the Republicans who have had control of affairs there since 1870.

In the following list will be found the names of those who served in the Confederate army. There are a few who from modesty, or perhaps with a dim perception of the fitness of things, do not parade their treason, but the younger men are quite ready to emblazon the act:

Ex-Confederate Officers.

NAMES.	States.	Rebel army.	Rank.
SENATORS.
Goldthwaite	Ala.	1s	Adj't Gen.
Jones	Fla.	2	Brig. Gen.
Gordon	Ga.	3	Major Gen.
Alcorn, (Rep)	Miss ..	4	Brig. Gen.
Cockrell	Mo.	5	Major Gen.
Ransom	N. C.	6	Major Gen.
Key	Tenn ..	7	Lieut. Col.
Maxey†	Texas..	8	Major Gen.
Withers	Va.	9	Colonel.
REPRESENTATIVES.
Williams	Ala.	10	Major.
Bradford	do	11	Colonel.
Hays, (Rep)	do	12	Brig. Gen.
Hewitt.	do	13	Colonel.
Forney	do	14	Brig. Gen.
Lewis	do	15	Colonel.
Gause	Ark	16	Colonel.
Slemons	do	17	Brig. Gen.
Gunter.....	do	18	Colonel.
Smith	Ga.	19	Captain.
Hartridge	do	20	Colonel.
Cook	do	21	Brig. Gen.
Blackburn	Ky	22	Lieut. Col.
Gibson	La.	23	Brig. Gen.
Ellis	do	24	Captain.
Levy	do	25	Colonel.
Lamar†	Miss ..	26	Colonel.
Hooker	do	27	Colonel.
Franklin	Mo	28	Captain.
Clark.....	do	29	Brig. Gen.
Yeates	N. C.	30	Major.
Waddell	do	31	Lieut. Col.
Davis	do	32	Captain.
Scales*.....	do	33	Brig. Gen.
Robbins.....	do	34	Colonel.
Vance	do	35	Brig. Gen.
Dibrell	Tenn ..	36	Brig. Gen.
Whitthorne	do	37s	Colonel.
Atkins*.....	do	38	Lieut. Col.
Young	do	39	Colonel.
Culbertson	Tex	40	Colonel.
Throckmorton	do	41	Brig. Gen.
Douglas	Va.	42	Major.
Cabell.....	do	43	Colonel.
Tucker	do	44	Captain.
Hunton.....	do	45	Brig. Gen.
Ferry	do	46	Brig. Gen.
Faulkner*§.....	W. Va..	47	Colonel.

* The asterisk indicates that the person so marked was in the Federal Congress before the rebellion.
s indicates that those marked were State adjutant generals.
(Rep) indicates the party position of the persons named.
† Senator Maxey was also rebel Superintendent of Indian Affairs.
‡ Lamar was also in the rebel diplomatic service, having been sent to Russia by Davis.
§ Faulkner was also Minister to France under Buchanan.

The following tables are significant, and should be preserved for future reference:

I.—Ex-Members of the Rebel Government and Congress.

Present position.	Names.	State.	Position.	Senate.	House.
H. R.	Stephens ...	Ga. ...	V. Pres.
H. R.	Reagan	Texas	P. M. Gen.	1
H. R.	Hill	Ga.	1
Sen.	Caperton ...	W. Va.	2
H. R.	Ashe	N. C.	3	2
H. R.	House	Tenn.	3
H. R.	Goode	Va.	4
H. R.	Smith	Ga.	5
H. R.	Hatcher	Mo.	6
H. R.	Singleton ..	Miss..	7

II.—Members of Congress Before the Rebellion.

Names.	State.	Body.	Last service.
Stephens.	Ga.	House..	36th Cong.
Lamar	Miss ..	House..	36th Cong.
Singleton	Miss ..	House..	36th Cong.
Scales	N. C.	House..	35th Cong.
Atkins	Tenn ..	House ..	35th Cong.
Reagan	Texas..	House..	36th Cong.
Faulkner	W. Va ..	House..	35th Cong.
Harris	Va.	House..	36th Cong.

III.—State and Other Positions Held During the Rebellion.

Names.	States.	Secession conventions.	State Legislatures.	Legal.
Caldwell	Ala.	Solicitor.
Norwood	Ga.	1
Candler	Ga.	2
Tucker	Va.	Att'y Gen.
Culbertson	Texas..	3
Reagan	Texas..	1
Stephens	Ga.	2
Harris	Ga.	3	4
Candler	Ga.	4
Slemons	Ark....	5
Gunter	Ark....	6
Lamar	Miss ..	7
Hatcher	Mo	8*
Dibrell	Tenn ..	9
Goode	Va.	10
Hunton	Va.	11
Harris	Va.	12

* The Missouri rebels maintained the farce of a State Legislature, which met sometimes east and occasionally west of the Mississippi, but never in the State itself after the summer of 1861. The electors were the rebel soldiers from that State.
“The South is here and has come to stay,” said “Ben” Hill, of Georgia, in his elaborate defense of Jefferson Davis, and equally as vigorous assault on the policy of the Union. How far the first part of his boast is true the foregoing facts will prove. Whether the latter part of the same shall continue to be true, in the spirit that it now presents itself, depends wholly upon the loyal votes of the land. The South will stay, because the American people will it. As a sectional force, it will be obliterated. As American citizens, its people will have the same rights and power as that which belongs to the East, North, and West—no more and no less.

A WORD TO THOUGHTFUL MEN.

When Mr. Lamar informed the Democratic caucus that the people of his section could not love the Republican Administration, he but stated an apparent fact, yet it is one pregnant with meaning which all thoughtful men should consider. The reason why such love cannot exist is not difficult to find. There is so wide a difference between the ideas of government prevailing with the statesmen and people of the North and at the South that any other result than a lack of love could not be expected. The difference goes to the very basis and foundation of government, and concerns all that is vital or of real worth in the institutions under which we live. The founders of the Government of the United States held certain fundamental notions, which are held by the Republican party now, and are not held by the friends and allies of Mr. Lamar.

1. Patriotism or love of country. The Republicans hold that to have rights, industries, security, order, and stability, we must have a nation whose integrity is above all else, whose perpetuity is of the highest consideration.

The people of the South do not thus believe. They are brought up to believe in local sovereignty, that the higher allegiance is due to their State, and are taught to regard themselves as citizens of Virginia, Georgia, Louisiana, and Texas, and they so call themselves, and feel bound to "go with as,

in ow

he

in ed

a

a

secessionist in principle or theory, but was swept into the heresy solely by this feeling of paramount fealty to his State. This feeling survives in all its power, and patriotism, in the sense of love of country in its broad national sense, does not exist with the leaders of the South to-day any more than it did on the 14th day of April, 1861. These men deny the doctrine that the General Government can do anything within the limits of a State except to collect the revenues needed to maintain it and defend it against foreign invasion. Practically this is where they would draw the line if they could, and leave everything else to local authority. They make the General Government secondary, the government of the State sovereign, and they do so because of the absence, the entire absence, of patriotism, or love for the country as a nation. Lacking patriotism they cannot love the party of patriotism, the party of nationality, the party which crushed secession, and established the sovereignty of the whole people as against the people of a section or a State.

They desire a national government unquestionably, but it must have little to do, and with an abundance of offices to give employment to that class of people in the States who have a large development of the office-holding faculty and no taste for business or labor. In this sense it will not do to deny their patriotism, and the exemplification is found in the way they grabbed the small modicum of spoils which were up for division on the organization of the House.

2. The Republican party, holding as it does to nationality as the grand first idea, fosters and encourages those measures which tend directly to build up the nation as a whole, and which will give to each section or part its full share of all the advantages to be derived from education, good order, uniformity of laws, so far as possible, and internal improvements, while the Southern Democratic sectional party, in its local narrowness and jealousy, opposes all such measures.

That there is fair ground on single questions and schemes for a division of opinion we are not disposed to deny. The trans continental railway, for instance, could not be built without Government aid, and the benefits of it to New York and California must, in the nature of the case, be greater than to Maine and Florida. These latter States may raise, therefore, the objection of inequality, and if allowed, it would be fatal to the project, and the country must go without its great railroad. But the immense general good of such a work is so obvious that it becomes a public necessity, and the narrow States' rights doctrines are made to give way, the great achievement is realized, the Pacific States become bound to the Union by bands of iron, and the ideas of the Republican party wrench from the very fates a solid victory whose influence will be felt to the remotest history of the nation. We all realize the great good of that great work, in some small degree, but we are apt to forget that it was made possible by the Republican party, and would never have been constructed had the Virginia school of politics continued in the ascendancy. This particular work being accomplished has ceased to be vital, and we use it only as an illustration to show how one party would build up the nation and the other would keep it stationary; how the one stands for progress, and the other for conservatism. That railroad is a perpetual monument and landmark by which the observer may measure the worth of the separate ideas of the two schools of political science.

But this is not the whole of it. The idea of State sovereignty as held by Mr. Lamar and the men of his school goes not so much against the power of the General Government to do or cause to have done certain things as to the doing of the things by anybody. Looking at the New England States we find them substantially, unanimously Republican. There is absolutely no feeling of fear that the arm of the National Government rests upon them oppressively, and the Democratic thunder generated in the political atmosphere in that region is not charged with sounds of wrong perpetrated upon anybody there. It is the alleged wrong done to people in Louisiana and Mississippi that excites indignation, and yet all that the Government has done or claims the right to do is to preserve order in States where the people have notoriously and palpably failed to do it themselves; a duty which the Constitution expressly imposes upon the Executive. They have a way at the South of fixing things, disputes about schools, elections, social questions, and so on, by the armed intervention of bodies of men on horseback who volunteer to see justice done in ways improvised for the occasion; and the tyranny is not really that the Government interposes to prevent that popular method of administering justice, so much as that there is such interposition. The idea is that the people there best know what they want, and these administrators of justice kindly assume to be the people. The laws apply to all the States alike, and there is no trouble in any well ordered State, and none of the people in States where anarchy does not prevail ever dream that they are under a despotism. Mr. Lamar will love a Government which allows the peculiar methods of justice of his section full license to work out their ends; but it is the ends he desires, and not the methods. The trouble is that the ends do not conform to those which alone are compatible with the general good, and hence interference becomes in his view unlovely and oppressive.

Proceeding further in this direction we find abundant evidence of the entire incompatibility of the notions of Mr. Lamar and his friends with any possible government by the people. A government by the people implies general suffrage and intelligence, and especially virtue, or the will to do right, and there is proof that in none of these requisites are the Lamar politicians up to the exigencies of the occasion. It will not be claimed that the Southern politicians are in advance of the Northern democracy at the close of the war. They denounce reconstruction now as then, and on the same grounds. Mr. Rogers, of New Jersey, the Democratic lethe House, said of suffrage: "There is no privilege so high; there is no right so grand. It lies at the very foundation of this Government; and where you introduce into the social system of this country the right of the African race to compete at the ballot-box with the intelligent white citizens of this country, you are disturbing and embittering the whole social system; you rend the bonds of a common political faith; you break up commercial intercourse and the free exchanges of trade, and you degrade the people of this country before the eyes of the envious monarchs of Europe, and fill our history with a record of degradation and shame." Mr. Buckalew, of Pennsylvania, one of the most moderate Democrats in the country, and who has gained some reputation among the liberals as a "reformer," spoke against granting suffrage to negroes, and said: "I shall not vote to degrade suffrage. I shall not vote to pollute and corrupt the foundations of political power, either in my own State or any other. I shall resist it everywhere and at all times. If overborne, if contrary and opposing opinions prevail, I shall simply submit to the necessity which I cannot resist, leaving to just men and future times the vin-

They think it no wrong to deny it to them, and as the reconstruction measures have established suffrage there in law, they prevent its exercise by violence and intimidation, unless the negro consents to vote the right ticket.

Now the spirit that denies suffrage to the negro also denies him education for the same reason. And there is another and all powerful reason in the Southern mind for opposing the education of the colored race, and a reason which comes home to every man in the old slave States; and that is the expense. Free schools for negroes (and the poor white people, also) cost money, and as the negroes are poor and have but little money, the burden falls upon the white property-holders, and we confess it causes taxation to the very point of hardship. There is no denying this, and opposition to schools is a very natural consequence of the fact. And yet the only way out of the mire of Southern degradation is through education, if it does cost money and heavy burdens; and the whole people should take hold and share in the cost and burdens. But here we are met by the Democrats of the South, and the North also, with a Constitutional objection, and with what is more effective than a Constitutional want of power—a want of will, or rather a determined opposition to all plans of education, and a hatred of education itself. Even as late as 1871 the Superintendents of education in Louisiana and Texas reported that white men in many sections would not sell their land at any price if a school-house or colored children was to be built on it. Prejudice against the profession of teacher is so strong that in Texas only a single white man of standing and influence had become a teacher. In many places where the colored people had succeeded in establishing schools their teachers were maltreated, threatened, and driven away by intimidation, and in other places the school-houses were burned. In some portions of Louisiana free schools were started, but the apathy of the whites was so general that they amounted to very little. One parish, that of Sabine, with a territory of thirty by sixty miles, equal to an entire county of the State of Massachusetts, was reported as without a single school, colored or white, private or public. In that parish every black man who was summoned to serve on a jury during the year 1870 was shot, hung, or driven out of the country. So dense is the prejudice in that region against education of the colored people that their letters and the letters to their friends are not delivered to them, and in many places it is regarded as much a crime to teach a colored child as it was in the days of slavery, and the punishment is meted out with as much certainty, though without the forms of law.

That such a state of things exists is abundantly proved, and cannot be denied. It is the natural legacy of the institution of slavery. It could not be possible for the Southern people, with their ideas all formed under the overmastering influence of the slave system, to appreciate the importance and necessity of general systematic education, and especially to be willing to stand taxation to secure what they had never believed in. The only attempt to break the force of these facts is to sneer and turn them by flippant remarks about "carpet-baggers" and the "bloody shirt," as though there were any argument or reason in harping upon phrases which a venal press has endeavored to render odious.

And on this question of education and taxation for education the Democratic party North is in full accord with the South. Mr. Kerr, the new Speaker, in 1871 laid himself out in an elaborate effort opposing taxation for educational purposes, and brought an array of statistics to prove that the South could not educate her people, asserted that she did as much for education according to ability as the other sections, and contended that the proposition for national education, made by Mr. Hoar, imposed the most unequal, unjust, and oppressive burdens upon the Southern States, and he exclaimed: "Is it credible that such monstrous doctrines shall be approved, find defenders, or be tolerated in this country?" The proposition was for a tax of fifty cents per capita yearly, solely for the purposes of education, the amount raised to be expended in the district where raised; and he further said: "It violates every principle of just government, and is unworthy of the age in which we live."

By the returns of the ninth census only one fourth of the children in the majority of the Southern States, white and black together of an age to be in school were receiving any instruction in reading and writing at all; and according to Mr. Kerr that community would regard a tax of fifty cents a year on each person, to give them a chance to learn to read as a burden so monstrous that it is incredible it should find a defender! It is true that Mr. Kerr opposed the proposition on constitutional grounds, but that in no way affected the onerousness of the burden, which in his view could not be borne. And this in view of the fact that the common schools in the Southern States were wholly inefficient, and three quarters of the children were growing up without an education. And Mr. Kerr of all the Democratic statesmen of the North is chosen to the highest position in the gift of the party. It is now eleven years since the close of the war, a period that covers the entire school life of a generation of voters. They who do not get an education between the ages of five and sixteen years do not get one at all. The census returns show that three-fourths of the children of the South were not in any school in 1870, but were growing up to become the greatest source of weakness and danger in a possible republic. Says Laboulaye, the great French statesman: "Whence comes it that Germany has so rapidly and completely overcome France, which is equally populous, more rich, and more warlike? Every one answers it is because Germany had had compulsory education for all. It is not the needle-gun which has conquered; it is the schoolmaster. We cannot declare it too loudly: it is ignorance that has lost France. It was in vain that Jules Simon, Pelletan, Durin, Jules Favre, cried out year after year, 'There must be millions for education or France is lost.' The Government was deaf. It denied nothing to pleasure, to luxury, to ostentation. It denied everything to education. The calamities which ignorance is causing France during the war are not to be compared to those which she is menaced in peace. The former, cruel as they may be, are transitory; the latter are abiding. Everywhere and always, despotism has been the natural fruit of ignorance."

George Washington eighty years ago said in his memorable Farewell Address: "Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a Government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened." John Adams in his Inaugural declared: "A love of letters, and a wish to patronize every rational effort to encourage schools and every institution for propagating knowledge, virtue, and religion, is the only means of preserving our Constitution from its natural enemies." James Madison in his Inaugural declared the "advancement of science and the diffusion of information the best aliment to true liberty." Said James Monroe: "It is only when the people become ignorant and corrupt, and degenerate into a populace, that they are incapable of exercising sovereignty." John Quincy Adams said: "No Government, in whatever form constituted, can accomplish the lawful ends of its institution but in proportion as it improves the condition of those over whom it is established. Among the first, perhaps the very first instrument for the improvement of the condition of men is knowledge: and to the acquisition of much before they are subjected to the alienating competitions of life. This institution is the greatest discovery ever made by man: we repeat it, the common school is the greatest discovery ever made by man."

If authority and the examples in history settle a question, this question of the necessity of education in a republic is settled; and now what do we find, and how are we placed in relation to the vital duty of doing what is necessary to maintain freedom and preserve republican institutions? In one whole section of the Union no adequate provision is made for the education of the larger portion of the people, and the attempt to furnish it is met by the demagogue, and echoed by the statesmen of the hour, with the cry of "taxation," "oppression," "imposing a burden too great to be borne." Fifty cents a head to save the nation is a contribution so enormous as to justify resistance, and the Government which proposes to save the nation by diffusing intelligence is denounced as unworthy the affection of the people, and powerless to command it. The whole ingenuity of the Kerrs, and Davises, and other leaders of Democratic opinion, is directed to finding obstacles in the way of educating the people, and excuses for the South for not doing more than they have in this direction. They could find abundant Constitutional power to scour the North and remand the poor escaped bondman back to his servitude and chains; they find plenty of authority to buy the needle-gun and the chasseur to drive the Indians from the lands wanted by the cupidity of the frontiersman and the adventurer, they have no difficulty in providing an army to invade Mexico and steal territory to add to the security of certain of our institutions; but to arm ourselves with a protection more powerful than needle-guns and chassepots, and more vital than cattle and lands, and any material possessions, is a proposition at which they roll their eyes in horror, and scout with all the energy of frantic vociferation and anathema.

Countrymen, are you aware of the immensity of the conflict before you? Do you realize that on the side of continued ignorance and debasement of the masses in the South is the great Democratic party ready to sacrifice every measure looking to the education of these people? Do you feel that the grand alliance against our institutions is now composed of that portion of the people of this country which is without the idea of nationality, without a belief in human rights as a principle, the haters of reconstruction, with the opponents of any and all systems of education? The coming conflict is to be with the masses of ignorance combined with the haters of institutions of learning and the enemies of nationality; with men lacking intelligence, and men destitute of patriotism; and it is the most fearful conflict which our institutions have been subjected to, save only the war of the rebellion—perhaps not even that.

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

AMNESTY IN CONGRESS.

...It would be almost impossible to find as many men who need remission for past sins (political at least) and condonation for those they are sure to commit as the present Democratic majority in the House of Representatives. The Northern Democrats are, if anything, more in need of amnesty than are the Southern members. The country owes to Mr. Blaine a debt of gratitude for having with the Ithuriel spear of parliamentary skill and keen logic exposed the real animus of the temporary reaction by which, under false pretenses, these men have re-obtained power.

Elsewhere in THE REPUBLIC the record will be found of the remarkable events and debates of the last month. They will not be repeated here. But there are some things to be said, necessary to a right understanding and summing up of the case as it stands. In the first place, then, no just argument can be made against the Republican minority, because that party in the last Congress voted, so far as the House was concerned, to amnesty Jefferson Davis. The conditions were different. It was an act of grace and mercy then. An unwise one we think, but the spirit in which it was tendered is to be honored. In the present instance amnesty is demanded as a right by a majority in sympathy with the avowed principles for the treasonable and wanton support of which Mr. Davis stands branded. To tender the olive branch is one thing; to seize the crown of full citizenship, and place it defiantly on the brow of this man, is quite another. The effect would be, if successful, to place loyalty to freedom and Union on trial.

It would arraign the entire policy which has marked the course of the Republic since 1861. Mr. Blaine, with that sagacity which distinguishes him, saw and has successfully opposed this attempt. The Democrats are in the position of men who, striving to secure an ideal result, refuse to accept a large and practical good. They seek to rehabilitate the sectional South over the shoulders of Jefferson Davis. The Republicans have won a substantial victory for the Nation by the overwhelming indictment that has been made of this man, not as an individual merely, but as the full-blown flower and consummate product of a savage system masquerading under the name of Democratic civilization.

...A conversation between Mr. Greeley and another younger and prominent journalist, which occurred on one occasion, illustrated the national feeling then as well as now. It was when the venerable editor was in the early and rosy flush of his campaign of sent mentality towards the South. His friend objected to the positions assumed in the Tribune, and ended his criticism by remarking that "The rebellion was not an offense, a crime."

"Well!" was Mr. Greeley's reply, "what are you going to do?"

Of course there was nothing to be said. But since that date there was justice to be done, mercy to be tendered had quite possible for "The sword to brew bitter destruction."

...In summing up the amnesty debate, it must be said that Mr. Blaine and his associates

1st. In not only defeating the Confederate-Democratic attempt to arraign and try the Union, as such, but that they have also changed the situation, and by assuming the aggressive, as befits right principles, have placed the Democratic party at the judgment bar and again shown its approval and indorsement of the slaveholders' war and its attendant horrors.

2d. In doing this the present and pending canvass for the future direction of the country has been lifted from the miry plane of detraction and slander in which the politics of two years past have been floundering, and placed upon that of great national issues, principles, and policies. Ethics and convictions have place in this struggle. Libel and abuse have been the marked features of the more recent discussions.

3d. The Republicans have, under Mr. Blaine's skillful leadership, most distinctly unhorsed their antagonists. The latter are chargeable with an attempt to force a grave result without debate and under the whip and spur of a demagogue majority. They are also proven guilty of so eager a desire to honor their Confederate partisans as to be unwilling to accept amnesty for all others, the one man being excluded. This may be logical, but it is not wise. The Nation is not "hankering" to honor the South, and it is very clear in apprehending the danger to public safety that must arise from replacing it in power as the controlling factor of a triumphant party.

Two other points are to be stated. One is—and the Democracy, North and South, must learn it sooner or later, and that is—that the people of this country, that majority that fought and maintained the Union, will never trust again with national control the political organization or leaders who either betrayed it or blew hot and cold while its balance, will show, arraigned represented power, into uelty, the ights, the arrow partisanship, provincial and egotistic in character, which must follow the existence and domination of slavery as a directing social and political force. Jefferson Davis was not unfairly treated by Mr. Blaine, and the verdict of history will sustain the stinging indictment with which his name has been seared and blasted.

...The following comprehensive and sagacious call for the next Republican convention fitly opens the great Centennial campaign. The bugle's blast is clear—the trumpet tones are distinct. No uncertain sounds break on the ear. This is the call:

The next Union Republican National Convention for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President of the United States will be held in the city of Cincinnati, on Wednesday, the fourteenth day of June, 1876, at 12 o'clock noon, and will consist of delegates from each State equal to twice the number of its Senators and Representatives in Congress, and of two delegates from each organized Territory and the District of Columbia.

In calling the conventions for the election of delegates, the committees of the several States are recommended to invite all Republican electors, and all other voters, without regard to past political differences or previous party affiliations, who are opposed to reviving sectional issues, and desire to promote friendly feeling and permanent harmony throughout the country by maintaining and enforcing all the constitutional rights of every citizen, including the full and free exercise of the right of suffrage without intimidation and without fraud; who are in favor of the continued prosecution and punishment of all official dishonesty, and of an economical administration of the Government by honest, faithful, and capable officers who are in favor of making such reforms in government as experience may from time to time suggest; who are opposed to impairing the credit of the nation by depreciating any of its obligations, and in favor of sustaining in every way the national faith and financial honor; who hold that the common-school system is the nursery of American liberty, and should be maintained absolutely free from sectarian control; who believe that, for the promotion of these ends, the direction of the Government should continue to be confided to those who adhere to the principles of 1776, and support them as incorporated in the Constitution and the laws; and who are in favor of recognizing and strengthening the fundamental principle of National Unity in this Centennial Anniversary of the birth of the Republic.

H. D. MORGAN, Chairman,
WM. E. CHANDLER, Secretary,
REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, January 13, 1876.

...In the January number of THE REPUBLIC appeared an item relating to the dismissal of Union soldiers by the Confederate majority in the House of Representatives, and the substitution of men who under the "Stars and Bars" fought to destroy the Union.

Everywhere among the loyal masses hot indignation at the insolence thus manifested is exhibiting itself. Much responses as the following are coming to hand. The stanzas so aptly express this indignation that we depart from our usual practice and insert them. The writer, a well-known State officer of Michigan, writes as follows under date of January 5: "I don't claim any particular merit for these lines, but I like plain talk, and believe the sentiment expressed therein will find a response in all the hearts of all the loyal North. * * The people cannot have too much light." In this there is a common agreement. The reader will surely join in the sentiment after reading the annexed poem, which was first published in the Lansing (Michigan) Republican.

"SAY, BOYS, DO YOU HEAR THAT YELL"

BY ROBERT BOLAND.

The Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, who was also Sergeant-at-Arms in the Confederate Senate, has dismissed 14 ex-Union soldiers, who are disabled men, from their positions as Assistant Doorkeepers, and has appointed ex-Confederate soldiers in their stead.
—THE REPUBLIC.

Say, boys, do you hear that Confederate yell
Ringing out on the winter's air?
You have heard it in times when brave men fell,
In the days of our dark despair.
You have heard it in sixty-one and two,
And in sixty-three and four;
But when the weary war was through,
Dreamed ye ever to hear it more?

Say, boys, do you hear that Confederate yell
Ringing up from the nation's hall?
And remember they swore to "winter in hell,
Or level the Capitol's walls?"
Do you mind, for aye, the northern trail
Where their legions in triumph trod,
Until hurled back by your iron hail
From the consecrate acre of God?

Oh, say, do you hear that same old yell
From the battle-field ringing out,
That was heard in days remembered so well
On the picket-line and redoubt?

Do you relish its scornful, defiant tone?
Is this what you fought for? Say,
Ye stalwart heroes, whose blood and bone
Have saved us, a nation to-day!

Say, boys, do you hear the yell of the crew
Ye have fought by day and by night?
And driven in blood, all the Wilderness through,
Believing in God and the right?
Do you halt on crutches! live on a crumb,
That the country ye fought for gave?
And have ye no votes? are all tongues dumb,
That ye live the Confederate's slave?

Boys, ye have trod on the northern hills,
Ye have marched on the southern plain,
With the iron nerve of the man who will
The blessings of life through pain;
And is this the goal that ye fought to win,
And conquered in sixty-five?
Is this the harvest ye gathered in
When you gave us the nation alive?

I say, brave heroes of northern soil,
Is it all in vain that ye fought?
Does not the nerve harden, the hot blood boil?
Was your valor thus sold for naught?
Are the thousands who stood on the battle line,
Clad all in the loyal blue,
Uphearing the banner of stars to shine
For aye? Are ye still as true?

O God! Brave boys, do you hear that yell
From the Capitol's halls well forth?
Was it more defiant when Sumter fell
On the stern, true-hearted North?
And have ye no shots for this rebel rout?
No votes for the wooden leg
Whom the vanquished in war are turning out,
To halt on the streets and beg?

Oh say, is the flag ye loved so well
To droop now, or loyal blue?
Was it for a lie that your comrades fell?
Hath peace no victories too?
Is all that ye won in the battle's van
To be wrested by fraud away?
And have ye no cheer for the crippled man
Who stood at the front that day?

And now there goes up another shout
From brave hearts, true and tried,
"Oh yes! we have put them all to rout;
Not in vain have our comrades died.
We have met them, for aye, on many a field;
We have fought them on many a plain;
We have conquered, when it was death to yield,
And we will conquer again."

From the northern tops of our whispering pine,
From our prairies, broad and free,
There came a shout from the loyal line
Of our future yet to be.
"Oh yes! we have met this same old crew,
And now hear our comrades cry;
And ten million scars are marshaling to Avenge their wrongs or die!

"We have not forgotten our com
Or our murdered Lincoln yet,
Nor the living, who bravely fought
Ere the sun of rebellion set.
The heart of the nation is true as
And this is the soldier's boon;
Were we to fight the war through
We'd not close it a year too soon

"We would not exempt from a
The feasts that the halterers eat
But swiftly in sorrow—oh, not in Punish well ere we one forgive
And had this been done ten years
We never had seen this rout,
Or heard the old rebel yell we know
Now turning the loyal out.

"But a million true hearts are on the march,
And we answer the rebels' yell
Who swore to 'winter 'neath the Capitol's arch,
Or else they would winter in hell.'
And some, we know, have kept that vow;
But the rest of the traitor crew
Have come to make laws for the loyal now,
Who forgave when the war was through.

"Oh yes! we have heard the old wild yell
From the dome on Capitol hill;
But the future will have its tale to tell
Of the loyal veteran's will.
And it will not say that a hundred years
Have given us, bond and soul,
With the nation's treasure, and blood, and tears,
To the vanquished 'rebs' control."

* * * * *
And I sat in my chamber alone at night,
And I heard their gathering feet,
With the marshaled tread of the warrior's might,
All hasting again to meet.
And I saw afar their stalwart forms
Come filing down through the gloom,
With brave hearts ready for battle storms,
To make for their comrades room.

And I saw their banner flung to the breeze,
And the gleam of their army blue,
As they march along 'neath the autumn trees
That shade the dim avenue.

And they answered for aye for the whole broad land;

*"We have made it the nation's will
That the crippled and torn of our patriot band
Are the wards of the nation still!"*

LANSING, Dec., 28, 1875.

STATE CONVENTION.

...The Indiana Republicans, under Senator Morton's wise leadership, are already in the field. The following call has been issued:

"The Republicans of Indiana are invited to meet in delegate convention in the city of Indianapolis, at the Academy of Music, at ten o'clock, Tuesday, February 22, 1876, to give expression to their political faith and purposes, and to nominate candidates for governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary, auditor, and treasurer of State, attorney-general, four judges of the supreme court, reporters of the supreme court, and superintendent of public instruction, to be chosen on the second Tuesday in October, 1876; also, to select delegates to the next National Republican Convention, and fifteen Presidential electors, to be chosen on the first Tuesday in November, 1876.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

THE EXECUTIVE.

THE CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD.

The President has appointed Edgar Mills and Christopher Green, of Sacramento, California, and Jacob Neff, of Auburn, Colorado, Commissioners to examine and report upon twenty additional miles of the California and Oregon railroad, beginning near Vina, Trehama county, California, and making a total of 117½ miles reported completed up to date.

INDIAN DELEGATES WITH THE PRESIDENT—THE ADMINISTRATION POLICY.

On Thursday, the 12th instant, the delegates representing the Cherokee, Creek, Seminole, and Choctaw nations called upon the President, and in answer to their report upon the condition of the several tribes, and their approval of his policy toward them, the President said in substance:

I am glad to hear such a good report of your people; to hear of their advancement in civilization and self-support. There have been, and are, strong parties in favor of opening your country to white settlement. The measure, no doubt, would contribute greatly to the benefit of such parties, and perhaps to a portion of your people, but your masses would be made wanderers, without homes. It is not the policy, at present, to open your country for settlement—not until all are alike prepared to meet the change, and are ready to assume and discharge the duties and responsibilities of citizens. There will be no change of the administration in the affairs of your country without the consent of your people.

STATE DEPARTMENT.

NAVIGATION OF AMERICAN CANALS BY CANADIAN VESSELS.

Owing to the refusal of the United States authorities to allow Canadian vessels to navigate American canals on the same footing as American vessels the Dominion Government has prepared a case, and forwarded it to Secretary Fish.

SIAM AT THE CENTENNIAL.

The King of Siam has signified to the Secretary of State his intention of representing that kingdom at the Centennial, and will expend a sum not less than $96,000 in making full preparations. John H. Chandler, an American who has resided in Siam for some time past, has been appointed commissioner, and will leave Bangkok some time in December with goods for the exposition. It was intended that a prince and several noblemen should be present at the Centennial, but it has finally been decided that no nobles will accompany Mr. Chandler, into whose hands all the arrangements have been placed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

REDUCTION IN THE DRAWBACK ON HARD SUGARS.

It will be seen by the following order of the Secretary of the Treasury fixing the new rates of drawback that a very small reduction in the drawback on hard sugars has been found necessary. This slight change of rates will not impede the prosperity of the trade, and, under present laws and regulations, we may safely count on our continued ability to undersell foreign countries in the markets of the world in supplying them with hard sugars.

The order is directed to the several collectors of the ports, viz:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 17, 1875.

Collector of Customs:

SIR: The following rates of drawback on refined sugars and sirup wholly manufactured from imported raw sugar are hereby established in lieu of those heretofore in force:

On loaf, cut loaf, crushed, granulated, and powdered refined sugar, stove dried, or dried by other equally effective process, entirely the product of foreign duty-paid sugar, three and sixty one-hundredths (3 60-100) cents per pound. [Former rate, 3 75-100 cents per pound.]

On refined white coffee sugar, undried and above No. 20 Dutch standard in color, entirely the product of foreign duty-paid sugar, three (3) cents per pound. [Former rate, 2 50-100 cents per pound.]

On all grades of refined coffee sugar, No. 20 Dutch standard and below in color, entirely the product of foreign duty-paid sugar, two and one-half (2½) cents per pound. [Rate unchanged.]

On sirup resulting entirely from the refining of foreign duty-paid sugar, six and one-quarter (6¼) cents per gallon. [Unchanged.]

The allowance on sugar to be subject to the deduction of one (1) per cent., and the allowance on sirup to the deduction of ten (10) per cent., as prescribed by law.

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

REVENUE PAYMENTS BY CHECKS DISCONTINUED.

In view of the labor and hazard incurred by the Treasurer of the United States and other independent Treasury officers by the receipt and collection of drafts and checks received by them from national banks, public officers, and other parties having payments to make into the Treasury, the Secretary has advised these officers that he thinks it better they should receive in all official transactions only the lawful and proper moneys of the United States, as provided by law and regulations thereunder. This will prevent national banks from paying their semi-annual duties, banks and other parties from paying for fractional currency, and collectors of internal revenue from making deposits in the offices mentioned by means of drafts and checks, thus doing away with a feature which seems to have crept into Government transactions without any special authority of law or regulations, and which has become a burden to the officers who voluntarily undertook to collect for parties the checks and drafts transmitted for the purpose of making the payments mentioned.

ISSUE OF NEW NOTES.

The Comptroller of the Currency, December 28, advised the Secretary of the Treasury of the issue of $905,690 of additional national bank notes, under the act of June 14, 1874, upon which amount 80 per cent. of legal-tender notes will be destroyed. The amount of additional national bank notes issued since November 1 is $1,761,280, and the total amount issued since the passage of the act of June 14, 1874, is $12,715,975. The amount of legal-tender notes deposited by the national banks for the purpose of retiring circulation since November 1 is $2,987,206.

IMPORTED FURNITURE TO BE USED AT THE CENTENNIAL NOT EXEMPT FROM DUTY.

Mr. J. H. Cundell, resident engineer of the British Executive Commission at Philadelphia, having written to the Treasury Department stating that the British Executive Commission had found it advisable to procure in England certain furniture, house-linen, etc., to furnish a house rented as a residence for the staff attached to that Commission, and inquiring whether such articles generally as may be required for the use of ria, and also for correspondence addressed to Spain, including the Balearic Isles, the Canary Islands, the Spanish possessions on the northern coast of Africa, and the postal establishments of Spain upon the western coast of Morocco. The postal union territory now includes the whole of Europe, Asiatic Russia, Asiatic Turkey, Egypt, and the United States.

MIS-SENT LETTERS AND NEWSPAPERS.

Railroad post office clerks and route agents will in future be required to stamp the word "mis-sent" on all letters or newspapers that may come into their hands erroneously, the practice having been found beneficial in some of the large post offices. Two thousand stamps have been prepared for the purpose, and will be at once distributed.

SUCCESSOR TO MR. BANGS.

Theodore M Vale, assistant superintendent of railway mail service, will succeed Mr. George S. Bangs as superintendent. Mr. Bangs' resignation will take effect in February.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

REFUND OF TAXES ILLEGALLY COLLECTED.

Attorney General Pierrepont has decided the question as to the refund of $176,257 tax illegally collected on dividends of the stock of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, held by non resident alien stockholders, in favor of the company, the issue being whether the refund should be made to the company from which it was collected or to the non-resident alien stockholders interested. The Attorney General holds that the Government should pay the money illegally collected back to the company; and the stockholders can recover from the company.

TWO PICTURES FOR LOYAL EYES.

The Democrats have given the nation a fair sample of the reformed civil service which they would establish if entrusted with national power. In order to show how radical a reform has been brought about in the post office of the House of Representatives, we give the employees of the post office under the Forty-third Congress, Republican, and the ones now employed under the Democratic Forty-fourth. They form two interesting pictures for loyal eyes:

POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Henry Sherwood, Postmaster, entered the service in, we believe, the Second Michigan Cavalry early in the war. He was in all the battles in the West, from Perrysville to the battle of Kenesaw mountain in 1864, and lost a leg at the fight at Lattimer's Mill on the left of Kenesaw.

Joseph F. Wilson, Assistant Postmaster, entered the service from Illinois, and in one of the battles of the war had his lower jaw entirely shot away.

Norman Crane, of Vermont, was not in the army, but furnished the service with two substitutes.

D. B. Bradley enlisted in a Wisconsin regiment in 1861, and was honorably discharged November, 1864.

A. M. Legg, from New York, served during the war in our navy.

C. M. Thomas, Iowa; J. H. Lytle and W. B. Sessions, New York; J. D. Serun and D. F. Bishop, Pennsylvania, and Cripti Palmont, District of Columbia, were appointed from civil life.

POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

James M. Stewart, Postmaster, from Virginia, was captain in the rebel army, and served with J. E. B. Stuart's raiding cavalry.

Edgar Snowden, Assistant Postmaster, from Virginia, was a press correspondent in the rebel army.

G. W. Rock, Va., served in the rebel army.

G. W. Kennedy, Va., served in the rebel army.

A. W. C. Nowlin, Va., served in the rebel army.

W. H. Robertson, Va., served in the rebel army.

J. R. Fisher, Va., served in the rebel army.

W. B. Lowry, Va., served in the rebel army.

E. C. Glass, Va., served in the rebel army.

The other employees are Richard Allen, Virginia, Edwin Estes, New York, who took the modified oath; Thomas B. Kelly, Tennessee, P. S. Goodsell, Connecticut, James M. Taylor, Pennsylvania, and William Tudge are old employees retained.

Jefferson Davis—Amnesty.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, January 10, 1876.

The House having under consideration the bill [H. R. 214] to remove the disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of the Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. Blaine to reconsider the motion by which the bill was repealed.

MR. BLAINE :

Mr. SPEAKER, I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote which has just been declared. I propose to debate that motion, and now give notice that if the motion to reconsider is agreed to it is my intention to offer the amendment which has been read several times. I will not delay the House to have it read again.

EVERY TIME THE QUESTION OF AMNESTY has been brought before the House by a gentleman on that side for the last two Congresses, it has been done with a certain flourish of magnanimity which is an imputation on this side of the House, as though the Republican party which has been in charge of the Government for the last twelve or fourteen years had been bigoted, narrow, and illiberal, and as though certain very worthy and deserving gentlemen in the Southern States were ground down to-day under a great tyranny and oppression, from which the hard-heartedness of this side of the House cannot possibly be prevailed upon to relieve them.

If I may anticipate as much wisdom as ought to characterize that side of the House, this may be the last time that amnesty will be discussed in the American Congress. I therefore desire, and under the rules of the House, with no thanks to that side for the privilege, to place on record just what the Republican party has done in this matter. I wish to place it there as an imperishable record of liberality, and large-mindedness, and magnanimity, and mercy far beyond any that has ever been shown before in the world's history by conqueror to conquered.

With the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] I entered this Congress in the midst of the hot flame of war, when the Union was rocking to its foundations, and no man knew whether we were to have a country or not. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have been surprised when he and I were novices in the Thirty-eighth Congress if he could have foreseen before our joint service ended we should have seen sixty-one gentlemen, then in arms against us, admitted to equal privileges with ourselves, and all by the grace and magnanimity of the Republican party. When the war ended, according to the universal usage of nations, the Government, then under the exclusive control of the Republican party, had the right to determine what should be the political status of the people who had been defeated in war. Did we inaugurate any measures of persecution? Did we set forth on a career of bloodshed and vengeance? Did we take property? Did we prohibit any man all his civil rights? Did we take from him the right he enjoys to-day to vote?

Not at all. But instead of a general and sweeping condemnation the Republican party placed in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution only this exclusion; after considering the whole subject it ended in simply coming down to this:

That no person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

It has been variously estimated that this section at the time of its original insertion in the Constitution included somewhere from fourteen to thirty thousand persons: as nearly as I can gather together the facts of the case, it included about eighteen thousand men in the South. It let go every man of the hundreds of thousands—or millions if you please—who had been engaged in the attempt to destroy this Government, and only held those under disability who in addition to revolting had violated a special and peculiar and personal oath to support the Constitution of the United States. It was limited to that.

Well, that disability was hardly placed upon the South until we began in this hall and in the other wing of the Capitol, when there were more than two-thirds Republicans in both branches, to remit it, and the very first bill took that disability off from 1,578 citizens of the South; and the next bill took it off from 3,526 gentlemen—by wholesale. Many of the gentlemen on this floor came in for grace and amnesty in those two bills. After these bills specifying individuals had passed, and others, of smaller numbers, which I will not recount, the Congress of the United States in 1872, by two-thirds of both branches, still being two-thirds Republican, passed this general law:

That all political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendments of the Constitution of the United States are hereby removed from all persons whomsoever, except Senators and Representatives of the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Congresses, officers in the judicial, military, and naval service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States.

Since that act passed a very considerable number of the gentlemen which it still left under disability have been relieved specially, by name, in separate acts. But I believe, Mr. Speaker, in no single instance since the act of May 22, 1872, have the disabilities been taken from any man except upon his respectful petition to the Congress of the United States that they should be removed. And I believe in no instance, except one, have they been refused upon the petition being presented. I believe in no instance, except one, has there been any other than a unanimous vote.

Now, I find there are widely varying opinions in regard to the number

THAT ARE STILL UNDER DISABILITIES IN THE SOUTH.

I have had occasion, by conference with the Department of War and of the Navy, and with the assistance of some records which I have caused to be searched, to be able to state to the House. I believe with more accuracy than it has been stated hitherto, just the number of gentlemen in the South still under disabilities. Those who were officers of the United States army, educated at its own expense at West Point and who joined the rebellion, and are still included under this act, number, as nearly as the War Department can figure it up, 325; those in the Navy about 295. Those under the other heads, Senators and Representatives of the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Congresses, officers in the judiciary service of the United States, heads of departments, and foreign ministers of the United States, make up a number somewhat more difficult to state accurately, but smaller in the aggregate. The whole sum of the entire list is about—it is probably impossible to state it with entire accuracy, and I do not attempt to do that—is about 750 persons now under disabilities.

I am very frank to say that in regard to all these gentlemen, save one, I do not know of any reason why amnesty should not be granted to them as it has been to many others of the same class. I am not here to argue against it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] suggests "on their application." I am coming to that. But as I have said, seeing in this list, as I have examined it with some care, no gentleman to whom I think there would be any objection, since amnesty has already become so general—and I am not going back of that question to argue it—I am in favor of granting it them. But in the absence of this respectful form of application which since May 22, 1872, has become a sort of common law as preliminary to amnesty, I simply wish to put in that they shall go before a United States Court, and in open court with uplifted hand, swear that they mean to conduct themselves as good citizens of the United States. That is all.

Now, gentlemen may say that this is a foolish exaction. Possibly it is. But somehow or other I have a prejudice in favor of it. And there are some petty points in it that appeal as well to prejudice as to conviction. For one I do not want to impose citizenship on any gentleman. If I am correctly informed, and I state it only on rumor, there are some gentlemen in this list who have spoken contemptuously of the idea of their taking citizenship, and have spoken still more contemptuously of the idea of their applying for citizenship. I may state it wrongly, and if I do I am willing to be corrected, but I understand that Mr. Robert Toombs has, on several occasions, at watering places both in this country and in Europe, stated that he

WOULD NOT ASK THE UNITED STATES FOR CITIZENSHIP.

Very well, we can stand it about as well as Mr. Robert Toombs can. And if Mr. Robert Toombs is not prepared to go into a court of the United States and swear that he means to be a good citizen, let him stay out. I do not think that the two houses of Congress should convert themselves into a joint convention for the purpose of embracing Mr. Robert Toombs and gushingly request him to favor us by coming back to accept of all the honors of citizenship. That is the whole. All I ask is that each of these gentlemen shall show his good faith by coming forward and taking the oath which you on that side of the House and we on this side of the House and all of us take and gladly take. It is a very small exaction to make as a preliminary to full restoration to all the rights of citizenship.

In my amendment, Mr. Speaker, I have excepted Jefferson Davis from its operation. Now, I do not place it on the ground that Mr. Davis was, as he has been commonly called, the head and front of the rebellion, because on that ground I do not think the exception would be tenable. Mr. Davis was just as guilty, no more so, no less so, than thousands of others who have already received the benefit and grace of amnesty. Probably he was far less efficient as an enemy of the United States; probably he was far more useful as a disturber of the councils of the Confederacy than many who have already received amnesty. It is not because of any particular and special damage that he above others did to the Union, or because he was personally or especially of consequence, that I except him. But I except him on this ground: that he was the author, knowingly, deliberately, guiltily, and willfully, of the gigantic murders and crimes at Andersonville.

A MEMBER. And Libby.

Mr. BLAINE. Libby pales into insignificance before Andersonville. I place it on that ground, and I believe to-day, that so rapidly does one event follow on the heels of another in the rapid age in which we live, that even those of us who were contemporaneous with what was transpiring there, and still less those who have grown up since, fail to remember the gigantic crime then committed.

Sir, since the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] introduced this bill last month I have taken occasion to reread some of the HISTORIC CRUELITIES OF THE WORLD.

I have read over the details of those atrocious murders of the Duke of Alva in the Low Countries which are always mentioned with a thrill of horror throughout Christendom. I have read the details of the massacre of Saint Bartholomew, that stand out in history as one of those atrocities beyond imagination. I have read anew the horrors untold and unimaginable of the Spanish Inquisition. And I here before God, measuring my words, knowing their full extent and import, declare that neither the deeds of the Duke of Alva in the Low Countries, nor the massacre of Saint Bartholomew, nor the thumb-screws and engines of torture of the Spanish Inquisition begin to compare in atrocity with the hideous crime of Andersonville. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. That is an infamous slander.

The SPEAKER. If such demonstrations are repeated in the galleries the Chair will order them to be cleared.

Mr. BLAINE. Thank God, Mr. Speaker, that while this Congress was under different control from that which exists here to-day, with a Committee composed of both sides and of both branches, that tale of horror was placed where it cannot be denied or gainsaid.

I hold in my hand the story written out by a committee of Congress. I state that Winder, who is dead, was sent to Andersonville with a full knowledge of his previous atrocities; that these atrocities in Richmond were so fearful, so terrible, that Confederate papers, the Richmond Examiner for one, stated when he was gone that, "Thank God, Richmond is rid of his presence." We in the North knew from returning skeletons what he had accomplished at Belle Isle and Libby, and fresh from those accomplishments he was sent by Mr. Davis, against the protests of others in the Confederacy, to construct this den of horrors at Andersonville.

Now, of course it would be utterly beyond the scope of the occasion and beyond the limits of my hour for me to go into details. But in arraigning Mr. Davis I undertake here to say that I will not ask any gentleman to take the testimony of a single Union soldier. I ask them to take only the testimony of men who themselves were engaged and enlisted in the Confederate cause. And if that testimony does not entirely carry out and justify the declaration I have made, then I will state that I have been entirely in error in my reading.

After detailing the preparation of that prison, the arrangements made with hideous cruelty for the victims, the report which I hold in my hand, and which was concurred in by Democratic members as well as Republican members of Congress, states this—and I beg members to hear it, for it is far more impressive than anything I can say. After, I say, giving full details, the report states:

The subsequent history of Andersonville has startled and shocked the world with

A TALE OF HORROR, OF WOE, AND DEATH before unheard and unknown to civilization. No pen can describe, no painter sketch, no imagination comprehend its fearful and unutterable iniquity. It would seem as if the concentrated madness of earth and hell had found its final lodgment in the breast of those who inaugurated the rebellion and controlled the policy of the Confederate government, and that the prison at Andersonville had been selected for the most terrible human sacrifice which the world had ever seen. Into its narrow walls were crowded thirty-five thousand enlisted men, many of them the bravest and best, the most devoted and heroic of those grand armies which carried the flag of their country to final victory. For long and weary months here they suffered, maddened, were murdered, and died. Here they lingered, unsheltered from the burning rays of a tropical sun by day, and drenching and deadly dews by night, in every stage of mental and physical disease, hungered, emaciated, starving, maddened; festering with unhealed wounds; gnawed by the ravages of scurvy and gangrene; with swollen limb and distorted visage; covered with vermin which they had no power to extirpate; exposed to the flooding rains which drove them drowning from the miserable holes in which, like swine, they burrowed; parched with thirst and mad with hunger; racked with pain or prostrated with the weakness of dissolution; with naked limbs and matted hair; filthy with smoke and mud; soiled with the very excrement from which their weakness would not permit them to escape; eaten by the gnawing worms which their own wounds had engendered; with no bed but the earth; no covering save the cloud or the sky; these men, these heroes, born in the image of God, thus crouching and writhing in their terrible torture and calculating barbarity, stand forth in history as a monument of the surpassing horrors of Andersonville as it shall be seen and read in all future time, realizing in the studied torments of their prison-house the ideal of Dante's Inferno and Milton's Hell.

I undertake to say, from reading the testimony, that that is a moderate description. I will read but a single paragraph from the testimony of Rev. William John Hamilton, a man I believe who never was in the North, a Catholic priest at Macon. He is a Southern man and a Democrat and a Catholic priest. And when you unite those three qualities in one man you will not find much testimony that would be strained in favor of the Republican party. [Laughter.]

This man had gone to Andersonville on a mission of mercy to the men of his own faith, to administer to them the rights of his church in their last moments. That is why he happened to be a witness. I will read his answer under oath to a question addressed to him in regard to the bodily condition of the prisoners. He said:

Well, as I said before, when I went there I was kept so busily engaged in giving the sacrament to the dying men that I could not observe much; but of course I could not keep my eyes closed as to what I saw there.

I SAW A GREAT MANY MEN PERFECTLY NAKED.

Their clothes had been taken from them, as other testimony shows—walking about the stockade perfectly nude; they seemed to have lost all regard for delicacy, shame, morality, or anything else. I would frequently have to creep on my hands and knees into the holes that the men had burrowed in the ground, and stretch myself out alongside of them to hear their confessions. I found them almost living in vermin in those holes; they could not be in any other condition but a filthy one, because they got no soap and no change of clothing, and were there all huddled up together.

Let me read further from the same witness another specimen:

The first person I conversed with on entering the stockade was a countryman of mine, a member of the Catholic church, who recognized me as a clergyman. I think his name was Farrell. He was from the north of Ireland. He came toward me and introduced himself. He was quite a boy; I do not think, judging from his appearance, that he could have been more than sixteen years old. I found him without a hat and without any covering on his feet, and without jacket or coat. He told me that his shoes had been taken from him on the battle-field. I found the boy suffering very much from a wound on his right foot; in fact the foot was split open like an oyster; and on inquiring the cause they told me it was from exposure to the sun in the stockade, and not from any wound received in battle. I took off my boots and gave him a pair of socks to cover his feet and told him I would bring him some clothing, as I expected to return to Andersonville the following week. I had to return to Macon to get another priest to take my place on Sunday. When I returned on the following week, on inquiring for this man Farrell, his companions told me he had stepped across the dead-line and requested the guards to shoot him. He was not insane at the time I was conversing with him.

Now Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to go into such horrible details as these for any purpose of arousing bad feeling. I wish only to say that the man who administered the affairs of that prison went there by order of Mr. Davis, was sustained by him; and this William John Hamilton, from whose testimony I have read, states here that he went to General Howell Cobb, commanding that department, and asked that intelligence as to the condition of affairs there be transmitted to the Confederate government at Richmond. For the matter of that, there are a great many proofs to show that Mr. Davis was thoroughly informed as to the condition of affairs at Andersonville.

One word more and I shall lay aside this book. When the march of General Sherman, or some other invasion of that portion of the country, was under way, there was danger, or supposed danger, that it might come into the neighborhood of Andersonville; and the following order—to which I invite the attention of the House—a regular military order—order No. 13, dated, headquarters Confederate States military prison, Andersonville, July 27, 1864, was issued by Brigadier-General John H. Winder:

The officers on duty and in charge of the battery of Florida artillery at the time will, upon receiving notice that the enemy have approached within seven miles of this post, OPEN FIRE UPON THE STOCKADE WITH GRAPE-SHOT without reference to the situation beyond these lines of defense.

Now, here were these 35,000 poor, helpless, naked, starving, sickened, dying men.

This Catholic priest states that he begged Mr. Cobb to represent that if they could not exchange those men, or could not relieve them in any other way, they should be taken to the Union lines in Florida and paroled; for they were shadows, they were skeletons. Yet it was declared by a regular order of Mr. Davis' officer that if the Union forces should come within seven miles the battery of Florida artillery should open fire with grape-shot on these poor, helpless men, without the slightest possible regard to what was going on outside.

Now I do not arraign the Southern people for this. God forbid that I should charge any people with sympathizing with such things. There were many evidences of great uneasiness among the Southern people about it; and one of the great crimes of Jefferson Davis was that besides conniving at and producing that condition of things, he concealed it from the Southern people. He labored not only to conceal it, but to make false statements about it. We have obtained, and have now in the Congressional Library, a complete series of Mr. Davis' messages—the official imprint from Richmond. I have looked over them, and I have here an extract from his message of November 7, 1864, at the very time that these horrors were at their acme. Mark you, when those horrors of which I have read specimens were at their extremest verge of desperation, Mr. Davis sends a

MESSAGE TO THE CONFEDERATE CONGRESS
at Richmond, in which he says:

The solicitude of the Government for the relief of our captive fellow-citizens has known no abatement, but has on the contrary been still more deeply evoked by the additional sufferings to which they have been wantonly subjected by deprivation of adequate food, clothing, and fuel, which they were not even permitted to purchase from the prison sutler.

And he adds that the—Enemy attempted to excuse their barbarous treatment by the unfounded allegation that it was retaliatory for like conduct on our part.

Now I undertake here to say that there is not a Confederate soldier now living who has any credit as a man in his community, and who ever was a prisoner in the hands of the Union forces, who will say that he ever was cruelly treated; that he ever was deprived of the same rations that the Union soldiers had—the same food and the same clothing.

Mr. COOK. Thousands of them say it—thousands of them; men of as high character as any in this House.

Mr. BLAINE. I take issue upon that. There is not one who can substantiate it—not one. As for measures of retaliation, although goaded by this terrific treatment of our friends imprisoned by Mr. Davis, the Senate of the United States specifically refused to pass a resolution of retaliation, as contrary to modern civilization and the first precepts of Christianity. And there was no retaliation attempted or justified. It was refused; and Mr. Davis knew it was refused just as well as I knew it or any other man, because what took place in Washington or what took place in Richmond was known on either side of the line within a day or two thereafter.

Mr. Speaker, this is

NOT A PROPOSITION TO PUNISH JEFFERSON DAVIS.

There is nobody attempting that. I will very frankly say that I myself thought the indictment of Mr. Davis at Richmond, under the administration of Mr. Johnson, was a weak attempt, for he was indicted only for that of which he was guilty in common with all others who went into the Confederate movement. Therefore, there was no particular reason for it. But I will undertake to say this, and, as it may be considered an extreme speech, I want to say it with great deliberation, that there is not a government, a civilized government, on the face of the globe—I am very sure there is not a European government—that would not have arrested Mr. Davis, and when they had him in their power would not have tried him for maltreatment of the prisoners of war and shot him within thirty days. France, Russia, England, Germany, Austria, any one of them would have done it. The poor victim Wirz deserved his death for brutal treatment, and murder of many victims, but I always thought it was a weak movement on the part of our Government to allow Jefferson Davis to go at large and hang Wirz. I confess I do. Wirz was nothing in the world but a mere subordinate, a tool, and there was no special reason for singling him out for death. I do not say he did not deserve it—he did richly, amply, fully. He deserved no mercy, but at the same time, as I have often said, it seemed like skipping over the president, superintendent, and board of directors in the case of a great railroad accident and hanging the brakeman of the rear car. [Laughter.]

There is no proposition here to punish Jefferson Davis. Nobody is seeking to do it. That time has gone by. The statute of limitations, common feelings of humanity, will supervene for his benefit. But what you ask us to do is to declare by a vote of two-thirds of both branches of Congress that we consider Mr. Davis worthy to fill the highest offices in the United States if he can get a constituency to indorse him. He is a voter; he can buy and he can sell; he can go and he can come. He is as free as any man in the United States. There is a large list of subordinate offices to which he is eligible. This bill proposes, in view of that record, that Mr. Davis, by a two-thirds vote of the Senate and a two-thirds vote of the House, be declared eligible and worthy to fill any office up to the Presidency of the United States. For one, upon full deliberation, I will not do it.

One word more, Mr. Speaker, in the way of detail, which I omitted. It has often been said in mitigation of Jefferson Davis in the Andersonville matter that the men who died there in such large numbers (I think the victims were about fifteen thousand) fell prey to an epidemic, and died of a disease which could not be averted. The record shows THAT OUT OF 35,000 MEN ABOUT 33 PER CENT.

DIED,

that is, one in three, while of the soldiers encamped near by to take care and guard them only one man in four hundred died; that is, within half a mile only one in four hundred died.

As to the general question of amnesty, Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, it is too late to debate it. It has gone by. Whether it has in all respects been wise, or whether it has been unwise, I would not detain the House here to discuss. Even if I had a strong conviction upon that question, I do not know that it would be productive of any great good to enunciate it; but, at the same time, it is a very singular spectacle that the Republican party, in possession of the entire Government, have deliberately called back into political power the leading men of the South, every one of whom turns up its bitter and relentless and malignant foe; and to-day, from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, the very men who have received this amnesty are as busy as they can be in consolidating into one compact political organization just as they were before the war. We see the banner held out blazoned again with the inscription that with the united South and a very few votes from the North this country can be governed. I want the people to understand that is precisely the movement; that that is the animus and the intent. I do not think offering amnesty to the seven hundred and fifty men who are now without it will hasten or retard that movement. I do not think the granting of amnesty to Mr. Davis will hasten or retard it, or that refusing it will do either.

THE OLD SLAVE STATES,

I hear it said, "We will lift Mr. Davis again into great consequence by refusing amnesty." That is not for me to consider; I only see before me, when his name is presented, a man who by a wink of his eye, by a wave of his hand, by a nod of his head, COULD HAVE STOPPED THE ATROCITY AT ANDERSONVILLE.

Some of us had kinsmen there, most of us had friends there, all of us had countrymen there, and in the name of those kinsmen, friends, and countrymen I here protest, and shall with my vote protest, against their calling back and crowning with the honors of full American citizenship the man who organized that murder.

SPEECH OF HON. BENJAMIN H. HILL, OF GEORGIA,

In the House of Representatives, Tuesday, January 11, 1876.

Mr. HILL said:

I advance directly to that portion of the gentleman's argument which relates to the question before the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. RANDALL) has presented to this House, and he asks it to adopt, a bill on the subject of amnesty which is precisely the same as the bill passed in this House by the gentleman's own party, as I understand it, at the last session of Congress. The gentleman from Maine has moved a reconsideration of the vote by which it was rejected, avowing his purpose to be to offer an amendment. The main purpose of that amendment is to except from the operation of the bill one of the citizens of this country, Mr.

y he
n. I ian's
, was itily,
and e in-sec-
Ann his such take up the propositions of the gentleman in their order. I hope no gentleman imagines that I am here to pass in eulogy upon Mr. Davis. But the charge is that he is a murderer, and a deliberate, willful, guilty, scheming murderer of "thousands of our fellow citizens." Why, sir, knowing the character of the honorable gentleman from Maine, his high reputation, when I heard the charge fall from his lips, I thought surely the gentleman had made a recent discovery, and I listened for the evidence to justify that charge. He produced it; and what was it? To my utter amazement, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KELLEY) has well stated, it is nothing on earth but a report of a committee of this Congress, made when passions were at their height, and it was known to the gentleman and to the whole country eight years ago.

Now, I say first, in relation to that testimony, that it is exclusively ex parte. It was taken when the gentleman who is now put upon trial by it before the country was imprisoned and in chains, without a hearing and without an opportunity to be heard. It was taken by enemies. It was taken in the midst of fury and rage. If there is anything in Anglo-Saxon law which ought to be considered sacred, it is the high privilege of an Englishman not to be condemned until he shall be confronted with the witnesses against him. But that is not all.

The testimony produced by the gentleman is not only ex parte, not only exclusively the production of enemies, or at least taken by them, and in the midst of passion, but the testimony is mutilated, ingeniously mutilated, palpably mutilated, most adroitly mutilated. Why, sir, one of the main witnesses is Dr. Joseph Jones, a very excellent gentleman, who was called upon to give his testimony in what is called the Wirz trial, and which is produced before this House and attention called to it by the gentleman.

One of the most striking and remarkable pieces of evidence in this whole report is found in the report made by Dr. Jones, * * * sent to Andersonville by the Confederate authorities to investigate the condition of that prison. * * The first point is as to the knowledge of this report going to any of the authorities at Richmond. Here is what Dr. Jones says:

"I had just completed the report, which I placed in the hands of the judge-advocate, under orders from the Government, when the Confederacy went to pieces. That report never was delivered to the surgeon-general, and I was unaware that any one knew of its existence until I received orders from the United States Government to bring it and deliver it to this court in testimony."

And when the report itself, or that which purported to be the report, was presented to him while he was a witness he discovered that it was mutilated and he asked permission to state that fact. Hear what he says on that subject:

"I beg leave to make a statement to the court. That portion of my report which has been read is only a small part of the report. The real report contains the excuses which were given by the officers present at Andersonville, which I thought it right to embody with my report. It also contains documents forwarded to Richmond by Dr. White and Dr. Stevenson, and others in charge of the hospitals. Those documents contained important facts as to the labors of the medical department and their efforts to better the condition of things."

The committee ask him:

Question. "Are your conclusions correctly stated in this extract?"

Answer. "Part of my conclusions are stated—not the whole. A portion of my conclusions, and also my recommendations, are not stated."

Q. "Well, touching the subject of exchange?"

A. "Yes, sir, the general difficulties environing the prisoners and their officers."

Q. "What became of your original report?"

A. "This is my original report."

That is, he had there the extract as far as it went.

Q. "Did you make this extract yourself?"

The committee seem to suspect that he was the man that simply made the extract and brought it before the committee. Now, here is his answer:

"I did not. My original report is in the hands of the judge-advocate. I delivered it into his hands immediately upon my arrival in Washington."

And this committee of Congress to which the gentleman refers absolutely tells us that this mutilated report was the one introduced in evidence against this man Wirz, and it is the one incorporated in this book.

Now I want to call attention to another extract from that original report—a part not included in this book. There are a great many such omissions; I have not been able to get all of them.

Dr. Jones, in his report, is giving an account of the causes of the sickness and mortality at Andersonville; and he says, among other things:

"Surrounded by these depressing agents, the postponement of the general exchange of prisoners, and the constantly receding hopes of deliverance through the action of their own Government depressed their already desponding spirits, and destroyed those mental and moral energies so necessary for a successful struggle against disease and its agents. Home-sickness and disappointment, mental depression and distress, attending the daily longing for an apparently hopeless release, are felt to be as potent agencies in the destruction of these prisoners as the physical causes of actual disease."

Now, sir, there is another fact. Wirz was put on trial, but really Mr. Davis was the man intended to be tried through him. Over one hundred and sixty witnesses were introduced before the Military Commission. The trial lasted three months. The whole country was under military despotism; citizens labored under duress; and quite a large number of Confederates were seeking to make favor with the powers of the Government. Yet, sir, during those three months, with all the witnesses they could bring to Washington, not one single man ever mentioned the name of Mr. Davis in connection with a single atrocity at Andersonville or elsewhere. * * * *

Now, sir, there is a witness on this subject. Wirz was condemned, found guilty, sentenced to be executed; and I have now before me the written statement of his counsel, a Northern man and a Union man. He gave this statement to the country, and it has never been contradicted.

Hear what this gentleman says:

"On the night before the execution of the prisoner Wirz a telegram was sent to the Northern press from this city, stating that Wirz had made important disclosures to General L. C. Baker, the well-known detective, implicating Jefferson Davis, and that the confession would probably be given to the public. On the same evening some parties came to the confessor of Wirz, Rev. Father Boyle, and also to me as his counsel, one of them informing me that a high Cabinet officer wished to assure Wirz that if he would implicate Jefferson Davis with the atrocities committed at Andersonville his sentence would be commuted. The messenger requested me to inform Wirz of this. In presence of Father Boyle I told Wirz next morning what had happened."

Hear the reply:

"Captain Wirz simply and quietly replied: Mr. Schade, you know that I have always told you that I do not know anything about Jefferson Davis. He had no connection with me as to what was done at Andersonville. I would not become a traitor against him or anybody else even to save my life!"

Sir, what Wirz, within two hours of his execution would not say for his life the gentleman from Maine says to the country to keep himself and his party in power. * * *

He who makes a charge must produce his witnesses. They must be informed witnesses. They must be credible witnesses. The gentleman from Maine makes his charge, but produces no witnesses. He says that men sent by Jefferson Davis to Andersonville were his officers, executing his orders, commissioned by him, and he therefore charges Mr. Davis with these atrocities by inference. * * * *

Now, Mr. Speaker, I pass from the construction of that question to the real facts about Andersonville. First, I want to call the attention of the House to the law of the Confederate Government on the subject of the treatment of prisoners. I read from the act of the Confederate Congress on that subject; it was very simple, and directed: "The rations furnished prisoners of war shall be the same in quantity and quality as those furnished to enlisted men in the army of the Confederacy."

That was the law; that was the law Mr. Davis approved, and that was the law that he, so far as his agency was concerned, executed.

The gentleman in his speech has gone so far as to say that Mr. Davis purposely sent General Winder to Andersonville to organize a den or horrors and kill Federal soldiers. I do not quote exactly his language, but I know it is "to organize a den of horrors;" but I am sure I cannot use any language more bitter than the gentleman used himself. Therefore the next thing I will read is the order given for the purpose of locating this prison at Andersonville, or wherever it should be properly located. The official order for the location of the stockade enjoins that it should be in a "healthy locality, with plenty of pure water, with a running stream, and, if possible, with shade trees, and in the immediate neighborhood of grist and saw mills." That does not look like the organization of a den of horrors to commit murder. That was the official order. That was not all. These prisoners at Andersonville were not only allowed the rations measured out to Confederate soldiers, both in quantity and quality in every respect, but they were allowed also to buy as much outside as they desired; a privilege, I am reliably informed, which was not extended to many of the Confederate prisoners. I do not know how that is.

* * * * *

The Confederate Government gave Federal prisoners the same rations that Confederate soldiers in the field received. Federal prisoners had permission to buy whatever else they pleased, and the Confederates gave their friends at home permission to furnish them the means to do so. And yet, Mr. Speaker, it is true that, in spite of all these advantages enjoyed by these prisoners, there were horrors, and great horrors, at Andersonville. What were the causes of those horrors? The first was want of medicine. * * *

Now, how was it that medicines and other essential supplies could not be obtained? Unfortunately they were not in the Confederacy. The Federal Government made medicine contraband of war.

The Federal Government made clothing contraband of war. It sent down its armies and they burned up the factories of the South wherever they could find them, for the express purpose of preventing the Confederates from furnishing clothes to their soldiers, and the Federal prisoners of course shared this deprivation of comfortable clothing. It was the war policy of the Federal Government to make supplies scarce. * * *

Now, then, sir, whatever horrors existed at Andersonville, not one of them could be attributed to a single act of legislation of the Confederate Government, or to a single order of the Confederate Government, but every horror of Andersonville grew out of the necessities of the occasion, which necessities were cast upon the Confederacy by the war policy of the other side. The gentleman from Maine said that no Confederate prisoner was ever maltreated in the North. And when my friend answered from his seat "a thousand witnesses to the contrary in Georgia alone," the gentleman from Maine joined issue, but as usual produced no testimony in support of his issue. I think the gentleman from Maine is to be excused. For ten years unfortunately he and his have been reviling the people who were not allowed to come here to meet the reviling. Now, sir, we are face to face, and when you make a charge you must bring your proof. The time has passed when the country can accept the impudence of assertion for the force of argument, or recklessness of statement for the truth of history.

Now, sir, I do not wish to unfold the chapter on the other side. I am an American. I honor my country, and my whole country, and it could be no pleasure to me to bring forward proof that any portion of my countrymen have been guilty of willful murder or of cruel treatment to poor manacled prisoners. Nor will I make any such charge. These horrors are inseparable, many of them and most of them, from a state of war. I hold in my hand a letter written by one who was a surgeon at the prison at Elmira, and he says:

"The winter of 1864, 1865, was an unusually severe and rigid one, and the prisoners, arriving from the Southern States during this season were mostly old men and lads, clothed in attire suitable only to the genial climate of the South. I need not state to you that this alone was ample cause for an unusual mortality among them. The surroundings were of the following nature, namely: narrow, confined limits, but a few acres in extent"—

And Andersonville, sir, embraced twenty-seven acres—

"and through which slowly flowed a turbid stream of water, carrying along with it all the excremental filth and debris of the camp; this stream of water, horrible to relate, was the only source of supply, for an extended period, that the prisoners could possibly use for the purpose of ablution and to slake their thirst from day to day; the tents and other shelter allotted to the camp at Elmira were insufficient and crowded to the utmost extent; hence small-pox and other skin diseases raged through the camp.

"Here I may note that, owing to a general order from the Government to vaccinate the prisoners, my opportunities were ample to observe the effects of spurious and diseased matter, and there is no doubt in my mind but that syphilis was ingrafted in many instances; ugly and horrible ulcers and eruptions of a characteristic nature were, alas! too frequent and obvious to be mistaken. Small-pox cases were crowded in such a manner that it was a matter of impossibility for the surgeon to treat his patient individually; they actually laid so adjacent that the simple movement of one would cause his neighbor to cry out in an agony of pain. The confluent and malignant type prevailed to such an extent and of such a nature that the body would frequently be found one continuous scab.

"The diet and other allowances by the Government for the use of the prisoners were ample, yet the poor unfortunates were allowed to starve."

Now, sir, the Confederate regulations authorized ample provision for Federal prisoners, the same that was made for Confederate soldiers, and you charge that Mr. Davis is responsible for not having those allowances honestly supplied. The United States made provision for Confederate prisoners, so far as rations were concerned, for feeding those in Federal hands; and yet what says the surgeon? "They were allowed to starve."

"But 'why?' is a query which I will allow your readers to infer and to draw conclusions therefrom. Out of the number of prisoners, as before mentioned, over three thousand of them now lay buried in the cemetery located near the camp for that purpose—a mortality equal if not greater than that of any prison in the South. At Andersonville, as I am well informed by brother officers who endured confinement there, as well as by the records at Washington, the mortality was twelve thousand out of, say, forty thousand prisoners. Hence it is readily to be seen that the range of mortality was no less at Elmira than at Andersonville."

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment to ask him where he gets that statement?

Mr. HILL. It is the statement of a Federal surgeon published in the New York World.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say that I live within thirty-six miles of Elmira, and that those statements are unqualifiedly false.

Mr. HILL. Yes, and I suppose if one rose from the dead the gentleman would not believe him.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman say that those statements are true?

Mr. HILL. Certainly I do not say that they are true, but I do say that I believe the statement of the surgeon in charge before that of a politician thirty-six miles away. * * * Now I call the attention of gentlemen to this fact, that the report of Mr. Stanton, the Secretary of War—you will believe him, will you not?—on the 19th of July, 1866—send to the Library and get it—exhibits the fact that of the Federal prisoners in Confederate hands during the war only 22,578 died, while of the Confederate prisoners in Federal hands 28,438 died. And Surgeon-General Barnes reports, in an official report—I suppose you will believe him—that, in round numbers, the Confederate prisoners in Federal hands amounted to 220,000, while the Federal prisoners in Confederate hands amounted to 270,000. Out of the 270,000 in Confederate hands 22,000 died, while of the 220,000 Confederates in Federal hands over 28,000 died. The ratio is this: More than 12 per cent. of the Confederates in Federal hands died, and less than 9 per cent. of the Federals in Confederate hands died. What is the logic of these facts according to the gentleman from Maine? I scorn to charge murder upon the officials of northern prisons, as the gentleman has done upon Confederate prison officials. I labor to demonstrate that such miseries are inevitable in prison life, no matter how humane the regulations.

* * * * *

But the great question is behind. Every American, North or South, must lament that our country has ever impeached its civilization by such an exhibition of horrors on any side, and I speak of these things with no degree of pleasure. God knows if I could hide them from the view of the world I would gladly do it. But the great question is, at last, who was responsible for this state of things? And that is really the only material question with which statesmen now should deal. Sir, it is well known that, when the war opened, at first the authorities of the United States determined that they would not exchange prisoners. The first prisoners captured by the Federal forces were the crew of the Savannah, and they were put in chains and sentenced to be executed. Jefferson Davis hearing of this, communicated through the lines and the Confederates having meanwhile also captured prisoners, he threatened retaliation in case those men suffered, and the sentences against the crew of the Savannah were not executed. Subsequently our friends from this way, * * * insisted that there should be a cartel for the exchange of prisoners. In 1862 that cartel was agreed upon. In substance and briefly it was that there should be an exchange of man for man and officer for officer, and whichever held an excess at the time of exchange should parole the excess. This worked very well until 1863.

* * * * *

In 1863 this cartel was interrupted; the Federal authorities refused to continue the exchange. * * * This I say frankly to the gentlemen on the other side, was in truth one of the severest blows stricken at the Confederacy, this refusal to exchange prisoners in 1863 and continued through 1864. The Confederates made every effort to renew the cartel. Among other things, on the 2d of July, 1863, the Vice-President of the Confederacy, the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Maine, (Mr. BLAINE,) alluded the other day in so complimentary terms, Mr. Alexander H. Stephens, was absolutely commissioned by President Davis to cross the lines and come to Washington to consult with the Federal authorities, with a broad commission to agree upon any cartel satisfactory to the other side for the exchange of prisoners. Mr. Davis said to him, "Your mission is simply one of humanity, and has no political aspect." Mr. Stephens undertook that work. What was the result? I wish to be careful, and I will state this exactly correctly. Here is his letter:

CONFEDERATE STATES STEAMER TORPEDO,

In James River, July 4, 1863.

SIR: As military commissioner, I am the bearer of a communication in writing from Jefferson Davis, Commander-in-Chief of the land and naval forces of the Confederate States, to Abraham Lincoln, Commander-in-Chief of the land and naval forces of the United States. Hon. Robert Ould, Confederate States agent of exchange, accompanies me as secretary, for the purpose of delivering the communication in person and conferring upon the subject to which it relates. I desire to proceed to Washington in the steamer Torpedo, commanded by Lieutenant Hunter Davidson, of the Confederate States navy, no person being on board but Hon. Mr. Ould, myself, and the boat's officers and crew.

Yours, most respectfully,

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

To S. H. LEE, Admiral.

This was directed to S. H. Lee, admiral. Here is the answer:

Acting Rear-Admiral S. H. LEE, Hampton Roads:

The request of Alexander H. Stephens is inadmissible. * * *

GIDEON WELLS,

Secretary of Navy.

You will acknowledge that Mr. Stephens' humane mission failed. The Confederate authorities gave to that mission as much dignity and character as possible. * * * The Federal Government would not even receive him; the Federal authorities would not hear him.

What was the next effort? After Mr. Stephens' mission failed, and after the commissioner for the exchange of prisoners, Colonel Ould, having exhausted all his efforts to get the cartel renewed, on the 24th January, 1864, wrote the following letter to Major-General E. A. Hitchcock, agent of exchange on the Federal side.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,

WAR DEPARTMENT,

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, January 24, 1864.

SIR: In view of the present difficulties attending the exchange and release of prisoners, I propose that all such on either side shall be attended by a proper number of their own surgeons, who, under rules to be established, shall be permitted to take charge of their health and comfort. I also propose that these surgeons shall act as commissaries, with power to receive and distribute such contributions of money, food, clothing, and medicines, as may be forwarded for the relief of the prisoners. I further propose that these surgeons shall be selected by their own Government, and that they shall have full liberty, at any and all times, through the agents of exchange, to make reports, not only of their own acts, but of any matters relating to the welfare of the prisoners.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT OULD,

Agent of Exchange.

Major General E. A. HITCHCOCK,

Agent of Exchange.

The SPEAKER. The hour of the gentleman has expired.

Mr RANDALL. I move the gentleman from Georgia be allowed to proceed. * * *

There was no objection.

Mr BLAINE. I believe the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] was a member of the Confederate Senate. I find in a historical book of some authenticity of character that in the Confederate Congress, Senator Hill, of Georgia, introduced the following resolution, relating to prisoners—

Mr HILL. You are putting me on trial now, are you? Go ahead.

Mr BLAINE. This is the resolution.

"That every person pretending to be a soldier or officer of the United States who shall be captured on the soil of the Confederate States after the 1st day of January, 1864, shall be presumed to have entered the territory of the Confederate States with the intent to incite insurrection and abet murder, and, unless satisfactory proof be adduced to the contrary before the military court before which the trial shall be had shall suffer death. This section shall continue in force until the proclamation issued by Abraham Lincoln, dated at Washington on the 31st day of September, 1863, shall be rescinded, and the policy therein announced shall be abandoned, and no longer."

Mr HILL. * * * My own impression is that I was not the author, but I do not pretend to recollect the circumstances. If the gentleman can give me the circumstances under which the resolution was introduced they might recall the matter to my mind.

Mr BLAINE. Allow me to read further.

"October 1, 1862. The Judiciary Committee of the Confederate Congress made a report and offered a set of resolutions upon the subject of President Lincoln's proclamation, from which the following are extracts:

"1. Every white person who shall act as commissioned or non-commissioned officer, commanding negroes or mulattoes against the Confederate States, or who shall arm organize, train or promote negroes or mulattoes for aid them in any military or military of Confederate States, by death."

"2. Every white person who shall incite or pretend to give them the mentioned act of Congress, by abducting or causing or inducing them to used, suffer death."

HILL, of Georgia, is read the resolution I have airman of the Judiciary into. this resolution came from the gentleman frankly member

gentleman does not say

I will say this: I think

Possibly I reported the in terms to "pretended," right that inasmuch as argument was to show

Confederate policy, this in calling up the facts

laughter and applause

it due deference to the o did not think any such is would divert me from argument and break its

Mr BLAINE. Oh, no.

Mr HILL. He thought he would get up a discussion about certain measures presented in the Confederate Congress having no relation to the subject now under discussion, but which grew out of the peculiar relation of the Southern States to a population then in servitude—a population which the Confederate Government feared might be incited to insurrection—and measures were doubtless proposed which the Confederate Government may have thought it proper to take to protect helpless women and children in the South from insurrection.

But, sir, I have read a letter from the Confederate Commissioner of Exchange, written in 1864, proposing that each side send surgeons with the prisoners, that they nurse and treat the prisoners; that the Federal authorities should send as many as they pleased, that those surgeons be commissioned also as commissaries to furnish supplies of clothing and food and everything else needed for the comfort of prisoners.

Now, sir, how did the Federal Government treat that offer? No reply was ever received.

Then, again, the Confederates made two more propositions. I will state that the cartel of exchange was broken by the Federal authorities for certain alleged reasons.

The Confederates next proposed, in a letter from Colonel Guld, dated the 10th of August, 1864, waiving every objection the Federal Government had made, to agree to any and all terms to renew the exchange of prisoners, man for man, and officer for officer, as the Federal Government should prescribe. Yet, sir, the latter rejected that proposition. It took a second letter to bring an answer to that proposition.

Then, again, in that same month of August, 1864, the Confederate authorities did this:

They proposed to send the Federal sick and wounded prisoners without equivalent.

That proposition, communicated to the Federal authorities in August, 1864, was not answered until December, 1864. In December, 1864, the Federal Government sent ships to Savannah. Now, the records will show that the chief suffering at Andersonville was between August and December. The Confederate authorities sought to avert it by asking the Federal Government to come and take its prisoners without equivalent, without return, and it refused to do that until four or five months had elapsed.

Now, sir, it was in reference to that state of things exactly that Dr. Jones reported, as I have already read to the House, in his report which was mutilated before that Committee of Congress and in the trial of Wirt—It was in consequence of that very state of things that Dr. Jones said that depression of mind and despondency and home-sickness of these poor prisoners carried more to their graves than did physical causes of disease. That was not wonderful at all.

But, Mr. Speaker, why were all these appeals resisted?

Who is at fault? There must be a reason for this. That is the next point to which I wish to call the attention of the House.

Here is General Grant's testimony before the committee on the exchange of prisoners, February 11, 1865. You believe him, do you not?

Question. It has been said that we refused to exchange prisoners because we found ours starved, diseased, and unserviceable when we received them, and did not like to exchange sound men for such men."

That was the question propounded to him. His answer was:

"Answer. There never has been any such reason as that. That has been a reason for making exchanges. I will confess that if our men who are prisoners in the South were really well taken care of suffering nothing except a little privation of liberty then, in a military point of view it would not be good policy for us to exchange because every one they get back is forced right into the army. I once, while that is not the case with our prisoners when we receive them. In fact, the half of our returned prisoners will never go into the army again, and none of them will until after they have had a furlough of thirty or sixty days. Still, the fact of their suffering as they do is a reason for making this exchange as rapidly as possible.

"Q. And never has been a reason for not making the exchange?"

"A. It never has. Exchanges having been suspended by reason of disagreement on the part of agents of exchange on both sides before I came into command of the armies of the United States and it then being near the opening of the spring campaign I did not deem it advisable or just to the men who had to fight our battles to re-enforce the enemy with thirty or forty thousand disciplined troops at that time. An immediate resumption of exchanges would have had that effect without giving us corresponding benefits. The suffering said to exist among our prisoners South was a powerful argument against the course pursued, and so I felt it."

There is no disputing the fact that with the knowledge that his prisoners were suffering in the South, he insisted that the exchange should not be resumed because it would in effect the military power of the enemy. Now that may have been a good military reason. I do not quote it for the purpose of reflecting upon General Grant in the slightest. I am giving the facts of history. I give you the facts, and I have given you General Grant's interpretation of these facts. Let the world judge.

Against whom does the charge lie, if there are to be accusations of any, for the horrors of Andersonville?

Mr. HILL: What was the percentage of deaths in the prisons?

Mr. HILL: I have already given it. I have proved that with all the horrors at Andersonville, greater sufferings occurred in the prisons where Confederate soldiers were confined, and that the percentage of death was 5 per cent greater among Confederate troops in Federal hands than among Federal soldiers held by the Confederates. And I need not state the contrast between the needy Confederacy and the abundance of Federal supplies and resources.

Sir, if any man will reflect a moment he will see that there was reason why the Confederate government should desire exchange of prisoners. It was a case of food, pitched for clothing, shod up with the binnacle of its ports, it needed troops. Its ranks were thinning.

Now Mr. Speaker it is proper that I should read one or two sentences from the man who has been arraigned as the worst murderer in history. After the battles around Richmond, in which McClellan was defeated some ten thousand prisoners fell into the hands of the Confederacy. Victory had perched upon its standard and the rejoicing naturally following victory was heard in the ranks of the Confederate army. Mr. Davis went out to make a gratulatory speech. Now, gentlemen of the House, gentlemen of the other side, if you are willing to do justice, let me simply call your attention to the words of this man that then fell from his lips in the hour of victory. Speaking to the soldiers, he said:

"You are fighting for all that is dearest to man and though opposed to a foe who disregards many of the usages of civilized war, your humanity to the wounded and the prisoners was a fit and becoming glory of your valor."

The gentleman from Maine yesterday introduced the Richmond Examiner as a witness in his behalf. Now it is a rule of law that a man cannot impeach his own witness. It is true that the Examiner hated Mr. Davis with a cordial hatred. The gentleman could not have introduced the testimony of perhaps a bitterer foe to Mr. Davis. Why did it hate him? Here are its reasons: "The chivalry and humanity of Jefferson Davis will inevitably ruin the Confederacy. That is your witness, and the witness is worthy of your cause." "That is not all. In the same paper it says: 'The enemy have gone from one unmanly cruelty to another. Encouraged by their impunity till they are now and have for some time been inflicting on the people of this country the worst horrors of barbarous and uncivilized war.' Yet in spite of all this the Examiner alleged 'Mr. Davis in his dealing with the enemy was as gentle as a sucking dove'."

I do not doubt that I am the bearer of unwelcome messages to the gentleman from Maine and his party. He says that there are Confederates in this body, and that they are going to combine with a few from the North for the purpose of controlling this Government. If one were to listen to the gentleman on the other side he would be in doubt whether they rejoiced more when the South left the Union, or regretted most when the South came back to the Union that their fathers helped to form, and to which they will forever hereafter contribute as much of patriotic ardor, of noble devotion, and of willing sacrifice as the constituents of the gentleman from Maine. O, Mr. Speaker, why cannot gentlemen on the other side rise to the height of this great argument of patriotism? Is the bosom of the country always to be torn with this miserable sectional debate whenever a Presidential election is pending? To that great debate of half a century before secession there were left no adjourned questions. The victory of the North was absolute and God knows mission of the South was complete. We have recovered from the humiliating defeat, and we come here among you ask you to give us the greetings to brothers by brothers.

Sir, my message is this: There are no Confederates in this House; there are no Confederates anywhere; there are no Confederate ambitions, hopes, desires, passions here. But the South is here, she intends to remain. [Enthusiastic applause.] Go on and pass your qualification upon the Constitution; sworn to support, abnegate the p your fathers. In its rage upon our people multiply your injustices until the like the stars of heaven or the man seashore, without number; but know all your iniquities the South will seek a remedy in the majesty of its reason. [Continued applause.] We are in the house of our fathers; ours are our companions, and we are stay, thank God. [Much applause.]

We come charging upon no wrong to us. The Union never us. The Union has been an unmineral to every section, to every State, man of every color in America. We all our wrongs upon that "big" fanaticism that never kept a pledge nor obeyed a law. The South did seek to leave the association of those who, she believed, would not keep fidelity to their covenants; the South sought to go to herself; but, so far from having lost our fidelity to the Constitution which our fathers made, when we sought to go, we hugged that Constitution to our bosoms and carried it with us.

* * * * *

Sir, we did the Union one great wrong. The Union never wronged the South; but we of the South did to the Union one great wrong; and we come, as far as we can, to repair it.

We wronged the Union grievously when we left it to be seized and rent and torn by the men who had denounced it as a "covenant with hell and a league with the devil." We ask you, gentlemen of the Republican party, to rise above all your animosities. Forget your own sins. Let us unite to repair the evils that distract and oppress the country. Let us turn our backs upon the past, and let it be said in the future that he shall be the greatest patriot, the truest patriot, the noblest patriot who shall do most to repair the wrongs of the past and promote the glories of the future. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

AMNESTY—MR. HILL, GEORGIA.

In the House of Representatives, January 12, 1876.

MR. GARFIELD:

Mr. SPEAKER, no gentleman on this floor can regret more sincerely than I do the course that the debate has taken, especially that portion which occurred yesterday. To one who reads the report of that discussion it would be difficult to discover and to learn from the RECORD itself the scope and character of the pending measure. I regret that neither the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] nor that of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hill] has yet appeared in the RECORD. I should prefer to quote from the full report, but, replying now, I must quote them as their speeches appeared in the public journals of yesterday and to-day. But they are here, and can correct any inaccuracy of quotation. Any one who reads their speeches would not suspect that they were debating a simple proposition to relieve some citizens of political and legal disabilities incurred during the late war. For example, had I been a casual reader and not a listener, I should say that the chief proposition yesterday was an arraignment of the administration of this Government during the last fifteen years. If I had been called upon to pick out those declarations in the speech of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hill] which embody the topic of debate, I should have said they were these:

THE REAL QUESTION AT ISSUE

The history of the last fifteen years is yet fresh in the minds of the world. It is useless to speak of the grace and magnanimity of the Republican party. With the master enslaved, with intelligence disfranchised, with society disordered, with States subverted, with Legislatures dispersed, people cannot afford to talk of grace and magnanimity. If that is grace and magnanimity, I pray God to spare the country in the future from such virtues.

I should say that the propositions and arguments arrayed around that paragraph were the center and circumference of his theme. Let me then in a few words try to recall the House to the actual topic of this debate.

A gentleman on the other side of the House, a few days ago, introduced a proposition in the form of a bill to grant amnesty to the remaining persons who are not yet relieved of their political disabilities under the Constitution. That is a plain proposition for practical legislation. It is a very important proposition. It is a proposition to finish and complete forever the work of executing one of the great clauses of the Constitution of our country. When that bill shall have become a law, a large portion of the fourteenth amendment will have ceased to be an operative clause of the Constitution.

Whenever so great and important a matter is proposed a deliberative body should bring to its consideration the fullest and most serious examination. But what was proposed in this case? Not to deliberate, not to amend, not even to refer to a committee for the ordinary consideration given even to a proposition to repeal the tax on matches. No reference to anybody; but a member of the House, of his own motion and at his own discretion, proposes to launch that proposition into the House, refusing the privilege of amendment and the right to debate, except as it might come from his courtesy, and pass it, declaring, as he does so, the time has come to do justice to an oppressed people.

Under circumstances like these, Mr. Speaker, a large number of gentlemen on this floor felt they had a right, under the rules of the House and in the forum of justice and fair dealing, an undoubted right to deliberate on the proposition; that it should be open for amendment and debate. Every expression on this side of the House showed that we were earnestly in favor of so closing this last act in the drama of war so far as it relates to disabilities; that it should be closed forever—and with good feeling. We deeply regretted that the attempt was made to cut us off from deliberation and amendment, and we therefore threw ourselves back upon our rights; and it is by virtue of those rights that we debate this question to-day.

CLOSED IN GOOD FAITH

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] offered a criticism on the bill. He suggested that there were two points in which it ought to be changed. One was that the seven hundred and fifty persons who are still forbidden to hold office under the Constitution should have free and absolute amnesty whenever they declare by taking the oath of allegiance in open court that they want it; that, like God's mercy and perfect pardon, amnesty should be granted by asking for it. It was suggested that we should follow the rule that we have followed hitherto in all cases similarly situated. That was the first point.

Another point was suggested, that there is one person, and only one, who ought to be excepted from the operation of the proposed law. Now that may have been wise or it may have been unwise, as a matter of statesmanship, but it was a question deserving debate, deliberation, and answer.

The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is an affirmative one, and should be supported by affirmative reasons. If we allege any reason against, we ought to be answered. Two allegations have been made: first, that there ought to be an oath of allegiance before a court; and, second, that one man ought to be excepted. How have these propositions been met? How have these suggestions been answered? The first response was a speech full of brilliant wit and personalities. It was like joking at a funeral to joke on such an occasion. They have been answered, in the second place, by the speech of yesterday, which arraigns not the Republican party alone, but arraigns twenty-five millions of people, arraigns the history of the Republic for fifteen years, arraigns everything that is glorious in its record and high and worthy in its achievement. I was deeply pained that such an arraignment should have been made on such a subject. If the gentleman had confined himself to a reply to the argument which had been offered to show why the exception should be made, it would have been a response pertinent to the subject-matter in controversy.

While I occupy the attention of the House, I shall endeavor to confine myself to the question and to the speech of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.]

Let me say in the outset that, so far as I am personally concerned, I have never voted against any proposition to grant amnesty to any human being who has asked for it at the bar of the House. Furthermore, I appeal to gentlemen on the other side who have been with me in this Hall many years, whether at any time they have found me truculent in spirit, unkind in tone or feeling toward those who fought against us in the late war. Twelve years ago this very month, standing in this place, I said this:

"I BELIEVE A TRUCE could be struck to-day between the rank and file of the hostile armies now in the field. I believe they could meet and shake hands together, joyful over returning peace, each respecting the courage and manhood of the other, and each better able to live in amity than before the war."

I am glad to repeat word for word what I said that day. For the purposes of this speech I will not even claim the whole ground which the Government assumed toward the late rebellion. For the sake of the present argument, I will view the position of those who took up arms against the Government in

THE LIGHT LEAST OFFENSIVE TO THEM.

Leaving out of sight for the moment the question of slavery, which evoked so much passion, and which was the producing cause of the late war, there were still two opposing political theories which met in conflict. Most of the Southern statesmen believed that their first obedience was due to their State. We believed that the allegiance of an American citizen was due to the National Government, not by the way of a State Capital, but in a direct line from his own heart to the Government of the Union. Now, that question was submitted to the dreadful arbitrament of war, to the court of last resort—a court from which there is no appeal, and to which all other powers must bow. To that dread court the great question was carried, and there the right of a State to secede was put to rest forever. For the sake of peace and union I am willing to treat our late antagonists as I would treat litigants in other courts, who, when they have made their appeal and the final judgment is rendered, pay the reasonable costs and bow to its mandates. But our question to-day is not that, yet is closely connected with it. When we have made our arguments and the court has rendered judgment, it may be that in the course of the proceedings the court has used its discretion to disbar some of its counsellors for malpractice, for unprofessional conduct. In such a case, a motion may be made to restore the disbarred members. Applying this illustration to the present case, there are seven hundred and fifty people who are yet disbarred before the highest authority of the Republic, the Constitution itself. The proposition is to offer again the privileges of official station to these people; and we are all agree every human being of them save

I do not object to Jefferson Davis because he was a conspicuous leader. Whatever we may believe theologically, I do not believe in the doctrine of vicarious atonement in politics. Jefferson Davis was no more guilty for taking up arms than any other man who went into the rebellion with equal intelligence. But this is the question: In the high court of war did he practice according to its well-known laws—the laws of nations? Did he, in appealing to war, obey the laws of war; or did he so violate those laws that justice to those who suffered at his hands demands that he be not permitted to come back to his old privileges in the Union? That is the whole question; and it is as plain and fair a question for deliberation as was ever debated in this House.

Now, I wish we could discuss it without any passion—without passionate thoughts, such as we heard yesterday. The words were eloquent, for the gentleman from Georgia well knows how to utter passionate thoughts with all the grace and eloquence of speech.

What answer has been made to the allegations of the gentleman from Maine to the reasons he offered why a full amnesty should not be offered to Jefferson Davis? The gentleman from Georgia denies, and so also apparently did the gentleman from New York, [Mr Gox,] the authenticity of

THE CHARGES OF ATROCITIES AT ANDERSONVILLE.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] spoke of the committee from whose report the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] read as a "humbug committee." The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] spoke of it as an ex parte and partisan committee—a committee that wrote and reported out of its fury and rage. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling that this case shall turn upon the mere authority of a committee, however high; but I want to say now, without arguing the merits, that whether the charge was just or unjust, it was a charge made by the Government of the United States. I mean to place the responsibility of the charges on the high ground of the authority of the Government, which no self-respecting man can call trivial and unworthy of his serious attention.

On the 4th day of May, 1864, the Secretary of War, speaking by the authority of the executive department of the National Government, addressed a communication to a committee of Congress, which I will read. It is found in a volume of reports of committees of the first session of the Thirty-eighth Congress, volume 1, 1863-'64, and is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON CITY, May 4, 1864.

SIR: I have the honor to submit to you a report made to this Department by Colonel Hoffman, Commissary General of Prisoners, in regard to the condition of Union soldiers who have until within a few days been prisoners of war at Richmond, and would respectfully request that your committee immediately proceed to Annapolis to take testimony there and examine with their own eyes the condition of those who have been returned from rebel captivity. The enormity of the crime committed by the rebels toward our prisoners for the last several months is not known or realized by our people, and cannot but fill with horror the civilized world when the facts are fully revealed. There appears to have been a deliberate system of savage and barbarous treatment and starvation, the result of which will be that few, if any, of the prisoners that have been in their hands during the past winter will ever again be in a condition to render any service or even to enjoy life.

Your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,

Secretary of War.

HON. B. F. WADE, Chairman of Joint Committee on Conduct of the War.

On the receipt of this letter a joint committee of the two Houses, known as the Committee on the Conduct of the War, was sent to Annapolis, to hold their sessions in the presence of the thousands of returned prisoners who had just been landed, and as the result of their deliberations, and after taking testimony on the spot from officers and men who had just returned, they reported not only their opinions, but the testimony in full, in the volume which I hold in my hand. That committee was composed of

REPUBLICANS AND DEMOCRATS,

and its report is unanimous. The Democrats on the committee were among the foremost members of the Senate and House. One of them was Mr. Odell, of New York, a gentleman not now living, who was one of the best men that party has had on the floor of this House since I have been a member. Another was Senator Harding, of Oregon. That committee made an elaborate report, from which I will read a few paragraphs:

The evidence proves beyond all manner of doubt a determination on the part of the rebel authorities, deliberately and persistently practiced for a long time past, to subject those of our soldiers who have been so unfortunate as to fall in their hands to a system of treatment which has resulted in reducing many of those who have survived and been permitted to return to us to a condition, both physically and mentally, which no language we can use can adequately describe. Though nearly all the patients now in the Naval Academy Hospital at Annapolis and in the West Hospital in Baltimore have been under the kindest and most intelligent treatment for about three weeks past, and many of them for a greater length of time, still they present literally the appearance of living skeletons, many of them being nothing but skin and bone; some of them are maimed for life, having been frozen while exposed to the inclemency of the winter season on Belle Isle, being compelled to lie on the bare ground without tents or blankets, some of them without overcoats or even coats, with but little fire to mitigate the severity of the winds and storms to which they were exposed. * * *

It will be observed from the testimony that all the witnesses who testify upon that point state that the treatment they received while confined at Columbia, South Carolina, Dalton, Georgia, and other places, was far more humane than that they received at Richmond, where the authorities of the so-called Confederacy were congregated, and where the power existed, had the inclination not been wanting, to reform those abuses and secure to the prisoners they held some treatment that would bear a public comparison to that accorded by our authorities to the prisoners in our custody. Your committee, therefore, are constrained to say that they can hardly avoid the conclusion expressed by so many of our released soldiers, that the inhuman practices herein referred to are the result of a determination on the part of the rebel authorities to reduce our soldiers in their power by privation of food and clothing and by exposure to such a condition that those who may survive shall never recover so as to be able to render any effective service in the field.

I am not now discussing the merits of the charge at all, but am showing that such is, and for twelve years has continued to be, the authoritative official charge of the executive department of the Government and of a joint committee of the two Houses. So much for the responsible character of the charge. To this I should add that this charge is believed to be true by a great majority of the people whom we represent on this floor.

I now inquire is this charge true?

The gentleman from Georgia denies generally the charge that atrocities were practiced upon our prisoners at Andersonville. He makes a general denial, and asserts that Mr. Davis did observe

THE HUMANE RULES OF MODERN WARFARE.

As a proof, he quotes the general order issued by the President of the Confederate Government under which the prison was to be established, an order providing that it should be located on healthy ground, where there was an abundance of good water, and trees for healthful and grateful shade. That is a perfect answer so far as it goes. But I ask how that order was executed? To whose hands was committed the work of building the Andersonville prison? To the hands of General Winder, an intimate and favorite friend of Mr. Davis. And who was General Winder? He was a man of whom the Richmond Examiner used these words the day he took his departure from Richmond to assume command of the proposed prison:

Thank God that Richmond is at last rid of old Winder. God have mercy upon those to whom he has been sent!

He was, as the testimony in the Wirz trial shows, the special and intimate friend of Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederacy, by whom he was detailed on this business, and detailed with such a send-off as I have read you from a paper of his own city warmly in the interest of the rebel cause.

What next? How did General Winder execute the order after he went there? I turn to the Wirz trial, and read from it only such authorities as the gentleman from Georgia recognizes —

OFFICERS OF THE REBEL ARMY.

The gentleman stated yesterday that there was nothing in this book connecting the head of the Confederate Government with the Andersonville atrocities. Before I am through we will see. On the 5th day of January, 1864, a report was made by D. T. Chandler, a lieutenant colonel of the Confederate army. This report was offered in evidence in the Wirz trial, and Colonel Chandler was himself a witness at that trial, and swears that the report is genuine. I quote from page 224:

ANDERSON, January 5, 1864.

COLONEL: Having, in obedience to instructions of the 25th ultimo, carefully inspected the prison for Federal prisoners of war and post at this place, I respectfully submit the following report:

The Federal prisoners of war are confined within a stockade fifteen feet high, of roughly hewn pine logs about eight inches in diameter, inserted five feet into the ground, inclosing, including the recent extension, an area of five hundred and forty by two hundred and sixty yards. A railing round the inside of the stockade, and about twenty feet from it, constitutes the "dead line," beyond which the prisoners are not allowed to pass, and about three and one-fourth acres near the center of the inclosure are so marshy as to be at present unfit for occupation, reducing the available present area to about twenty-three and one-half acres, which gives somewhat less than six square feet to each prisoner. Even this is being constantly reduced by the additions to their number. A small stream passing from west to east through the inclosure, at about one hundred and fifty yards from its southern limit, furnishes the only water for washing accessible to the prisoners. Some regimen of the guard, the bakery, and the cook house, being placed on the rising grounds bordering the stream before it enters the prison, render the water nearly unfit for use before it reaches the prisoners. * * *

D. T. CHANDLER,

Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General.

Colonel R. H. CHILTON, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General.

Here is an official exhibit of the manner in which the officer detailed by Jeff. Davis chose the place for health, with "running water, and agreeable shade." He chose a piece of forest-ground that had a miasmatic marsh in the heart of it and a small stream running through it; but the troops stationed outside of the stockade were allowed to defile its pure water before it could reach the stockade; and then, as if in the very refinement of cruelty, as if to make a mockery of the order quoted by the gentleman from Georgia, he detailed men

TO CUT DOWN EVERY TREE AND SHRUB in the inclosure, leaving not a green leaf to show where the forest had been. And subsequently, when the burning sun of July was pouring down its fiery heat upon the heads of these men, with square feet of ground to a man petition was made by the prisoners to Winder to allow these poor men to be detailed to go outside, under guard, and cut pine from the forest to make arbors under which they could shelter themselves, and they were answered with all the loathsome brutality of malignant hate, that they should have no bush to shelter them; and thus, under the fierce rays of the southern sun, they miserably perished.

These last statements are made on the authority of Ambrose Spencer, a planter of Georgia, who resided within five miles of Andersonville. I quote from his testimony, (Wirz's trial, p. 359:)

Between the 1st and 15th of December, 1863, I went up to Andersonville with W. S. Winder and four or five other gentlemen, out of curiosity, to see how the prison was to be laid out. * * * I asked him if he was going to erect barracks or shelter of any kind. He replied that he was not; that the damned Yankees who would be put in there would have no need of them. I asked him why he was cutting down all the trees, and suggested that they would prove a shelter to the prisoners, from the heat of the sun, at least. He made this reply, or something similar to it: "That is just what I am going to do; I am going to build a pen here that will kill more damned Yankees than can be destroyed in the front." Those are very nearly his words, or equivalent to them.

So much for the execution of the President's order to locate the prison.

But I am not yet done with the testimony of Colonel Chandler. A subsequent report was made by him in the month of August. He went back and re examined the horrors of that pen, and as the result of his examination he made a report, from which I quote the last few sentences, (Wirz's trial, p. 227:)

ANDERSONVILLE, August 5, 1864.

COLONEL: * * *

My duty requires me respectfully to recommend a change in the officer in the command of the post, Brigadier General J. H. Winder, and the substitution in his place of some one who unites both energy and good judgment with some feeling of humanity and consideration for the welfare and comfort (so far as is consistent with their safe-keeping) of the vast number of unfortunates placed under his control; someone who at least will not advocate deliberately and in cold blood the propriety of leaving them in their present condition until their number has been sufficiently reduced by death to make the present arrangement suffice for their accommodation; who will not consider it a matter of self-laudation and boasting that he has never been inside of the stockade, a place the horrors of which it is difficult to describe, and which is a disgrace to civilization, the condition of which he might, by the exercise of a little energy and judgment, even with the limited means at his command, have considerably improved.

D. T. CHANDLER,

Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General.
Colonel R. H. CHILTON, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General C. S. A., Richmond, Virginia.

Mr. HALE. What is the date of that report?

Mr. GARFIELD. August 5, 1864.

Mr. HALE. How long after that was Winder retained there in command?

Mr. GARFIELD. I will come to that in a moment.

Now, what do honorable gentlemen suppose would naturally be done with such a report as that? Remember that Colonel Chandler was a witness before the court that tried Wirz and reaffirmed every word of this report. If he is living I would make a pilgrimage to see him and thank him for

THE HUMANITY AND TENDERNESS

with which he treated my unfortunate comrades. So anxious was he that the great crime of Winder should be rebuked that he went to Richmond, and in person delivered his report to the Secretary of War, a member, of course, of the cabinet of Jefferson Davis. If I am not correct in this I believe there is a member of that cabinet now on this floor who can correct me. Of course, being a soldier, Colonel Chandler first delivered his report to the adjutant general, and that officer, General Cooper, on the 18th of August, 1864, wrote upon the back of the report these words:

ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
August 18, 1864.

Respectfully submitted to the secretary of war. The condition of the prison at Andersonville is a reproach to us as a nation. The engineer and ordnance departments were applied to, and authorized their issue, and I so telegraphed General Winder. Colonel Chandler's recommendations are coincided in. By order of General Cooper.

R. H. CHILTON,

Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General.

Not content with that indorsement, Colonel Chandler went to the office of the secretary of war himself; but, the secretary being absent at the moment, the report was delivered to the assistant secretary of war, J. A. Campbell, who wrote below General Cooper's indorsement these words:

These reports show a condition of things at Andersonville which calls very loudly for the interposition of the department, in order that a change be made.

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. REAGAN. Does not the gentleman know that the adjutant general could only have made such an order by direction of the president?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know what the habit was in the confederacy. It is not so in this Government.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman will allow me to say that all persons familiar with the business of that office know that the adjutant general executes direct orders made by the president, but has not himself authority to make such orders.

Mr. GARFIELD. That may have been the rule in the Confederate government; but it was never the rule here. The Adjutant General of our Army signs no order except by order of the Secretary of War. The Adjutant General is the clerk of the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War is in turn the clerk of the President. But the gentleman from Texas [MR. REAGAN] will soon see that he cannot defend Davis by the indorsement of General Cooper. The report did not stop with the adjutant general. It was carried up higher and nearer to Davis. It was delivered to Assistant Secretary Campbell, who wrote the indorsement I have just read. The report was lodged with the department of war, whose chief was one of the confidential advisers of Mr. Davis—a member of his official family. What was done with it? The record shows, Mr. Speaker, that a few days thereafter an order was made in reference to General Winder. To what effect? Promoting him! Adding to his power

IN THE FIELD OF HIS INFAMY!

He was made commissary-general of all the prisons and prisoners throughout the confederacy. That was the answer that came as the result of this humane report of Colonel Chandler; and that new appointment of Winder came from Mr. Seddons, the Confederate secretary of war.

A MEMBER. By order of the President.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course all appointments were made by the President, for the gentleman from Georgia says that they carried our Constitution with them and hugged it to their bosoms. But that is not all. The testimony of the Wirz trial shows that at one time the secretary of war himself became shocked at the brutality of Winder, and, in a moment of indignation, relieved him from command. For authority upon this subject I refer to the testimony of Cashmyer, a detective of Winder's, who was a witness before the Wirz court. That officer testified that when Mr. Seddons, Secretary of War, wrote the order relieving Winder, the latter walked over with it to Jefferson Davis, who immediately wrote on the back of it, "This is entirely unnecessary and uncalled for." Winder appears to have retained the confidence and approval of Davis to the end, and continued on duty until the merciful providence of God struck him dead in his tent in the presence of the witness who gave this testimony.

Now, who will deny that in the forum of law we do trace the responsibility for these atrocities to the man whose name is before us to be relieved of all his political disabilities? If not, let gentlemen show it. Wipe out the charge, and I will be the first man here to vote to relieve him of his disabilities.

Winder was allowed to go on. What did he do? I will only give results, not details. I will not harrow my own soul by the revival of those horrible details. There is a group of facts in military history well worth knowing which will illustrate the point I am discussing. The great Napoleon did some fighting in his time, as did his great antagonist, the Iron Duke. In 1809 was fought the battle of Talavera, in 1811 the battle of Albuera, in 1812 the battle of Salamanca, in 1813, Vittoria, in 1815 the battles of Ligny, Quatre Bras, Waterloo, Wavre, and New Orleans, and in 1854 the battles of the Crimea. The number of men in the English army who fell in battle or who were killed or died of wounds received in these battles amounted in the aggregate to 12,928. But this Major-General Winder, WITHIN HIS HORIBLE ARENA OF DEATH, from April, 1864, to April, 1865, tumbled into the trenches of Andersonville the dead bodies of 12,644 prisoners—only two hundred and eighty-four less than all the Englishmen who fell in or died of wounds received in the great battles I have named.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have simply given these results. Percentages pale and fade away in the presence of such horrible facts.

THE REBEL PRISONERS AT ELMIRA.

And the gentleman from Georgia denies the charge of atrocities at Andersonville and charges us with greater ones. I will give his words as they are quoted in the morning papers:

When the gentleman from Maine speaks again let him add that the atrocities of Andersonville do not begin to compare with the atrocities of Elmira, of Fort Douglas, or of Fort Delaware, and of all the atrocities, both at Andersonville and Elmira, the Confederate government stands acquitted from all responsibility and blame.

I stand in the presence of that statement with an amazement that I am utterly incapable of expressing. I look upon the serene and manly face of the gentleman who uttered it and I wonder what influence of the supernal or nether gods could have touched him with madness for the moment and led him to make that dreadful statement. I pause; and I ask the three Democrats on this floor who happen to represent the districts where are located the three places named, if there be one of them who does not know that this charge is fearfully and awfully untrue. [A pause.] Their silence answers me. They are strangers to me, but I know they will repel the charge with all the energy of their manhood.

Mr. PLATT. I hold in my hand a telegraphic communication from GENERAL B. F. TRACY, late commandant of the military post of Elmira, and I beg permission to read that communication.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. PLATT. The communication is as follows:

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, January 12, 1876.
 To Hon. T. C. PLATT,
House of Representatives, Washington,
District of Columbia:

The facts justify your denial of cruelty, inhumanity, or neglect in the treatment of prisoners at Elmira. There was no suffering there which is not inseparable from a military prison. First, there was no dead-line. No prisoner was ever shot for attempting to escape. Second, the food was ample and of the best quality. Thousands of dollars were expended in the purchase of vegetables, in addition to the Army ration. No congressman in Washington eats better bread than was given daily to the prisoners. The beef was good, and of the same quality and quantity as that distributed to our own soldiers guarding the camp. Third, the dead were not buried in trenches, but the remains were placed in neat coffins and buried in separate graves, with a head-board bearing the name, company, and regiment, and time of death, and all were buried in the public cemetery at Elmira. Fourth, there was no better supplied military hospital in the United States than the hospital in the prison camp. Fifth, all the prisoners were comfortably quartered in new wooden barracks, built expressly for them. From the time I took command, in September, all the saw-mills in the vicinity of Elmira were kept constantly running to supply lumber for buildings, &c. The barracks for prisoners were first built, and in the extreme cold weather of winter the prisoners were all in barracks, while the soldiers guarding them were still in tents. I was criticised for this in the Army and Navy Journal, I think it was, at the time, by an officer of our Army. Sixth, the camp and all the buildings were well policed, and kept scrupulously clean. Seventh, the mortality which prevailed was not owing to neglect or want of sufficient supplies or medical attention, but to other and quite different causes.

B. F. TRACY.

Late Commandant Military Post Union.

Mr. WALKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, as the member from the district in which Elmira Depot is located, I take pleasure in indorsing every word of Colonel Tracy's dispatch. I was almost daily at Elmira during the war, and I know that Confederate prisoners

HAD THE SAME CARE AND TREATMENT that the Union soldiers had, and I never heard a complaint. [Great applause.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the lighting is our witness. From all quarters of the Republic denials are pouring in upon us. Since I came to the House this morning, I have received the following dispatch from an honored soldier of Ohio, which tells its own story:

CLEVELAND, Ohio, January 12, 1876—10.33 a. m.
 To GENERAL GARFIELD,

House of Representatives:

By authority of Secretary of War I furnished 15,000 rebel prisoners at Elmira with the same rations—coffee, tobacco, coal, wood, clothing, barracks, medical attendance—as were given to our own soldiers. The dead were decently buried in Elmira cemetery. All this can be proved by Democrats of that city.

General J. J. ELWELL.

Mr. HILL. By permission of the gentleman from Ohio, I desire to say that there was no purpose on my part by any of my remarks on yesterday to charge inhumanity upon anybody at Elmira or anywhere else. I only read the evidence from official sources as I understood it.

Mr. BLAINE. A letter in a newspaper.

Mr. HILL. Let me get through, if you please. Do not be uneasy. Keep quiet, and I will not hurt you. [Laughter.]

Mr. MACDOUGALL. That is what you told us in 1861.

Mr. HILL. I simply say that I was reading the evidence of cruelties, in the language of that letter, "inseparable from prison life." Then I read of the small-pox epidemic at Elmira and its character. But the remark which the gentleman is now commenting on was not connected with any charge of inhumanity upon any person in the world. I wish it distinctly understood that I meant to charge inhumanity upon nobody. I was simply speaking of those horrors that are inseparable from all prison life; and I wound up my statement by saying that the official reports of Secretary Stanton, on the 19th of July, 1866, after the war was over, gave the relative mortality of prisoners in Federal hands and prisoners in Confederate hands, and that the mortality of Confederate prisoners in northern prisons was 12 per cent., while the mortality of Federal prisoners in Confederate hands was less than 9 per cent. Now I simply said that judging by that test there was more atrocity (if you please to call it so)—I meant, of course, mortality—in the prisons of the North than in those of the South. Let the gentleman take the benefit of that statement. I simply referred to the report of Secretary Stanton.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Does the gentleman mean to charge that the amount of mortality in Northern prisons was owing to any cruelty or neglect of the Federal officers?

Mr. HILL. I do not undertake to say to what special cause the mortality on either side was attributable. I say it was attributable to those horrors inseparable from prison life everywhere; and I simply entered my protest against gentlemen seeking to stir up those old past horrors on either side to keep alive a strife that ought to be buried. That is all. [Applause.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I am glad to hear what the gentleman says, and to give it more force by contrast I quote again the words he used as reported in the newspapers this morning:

When the gentleman from Maine addresses the House again let him add to it that the atrocities of Andersonville do not begin to compare with the atrocities of Elmira, of Fort Douglas, or of Fort Delaware; and of all the atrocities, both at Andersonville and Elmira, the Confederate government stands acquitted from all responsibility and blame.

I refer to it to show why I could not—

Mr. HILL. I have no doubt the gentleman's motive is good; but he will permit me to remind him that what he has just read was said by me after reading Secretary Stanton's report; and of course, while I mentioned prison places at the North I did not mean to charge inhumanity upon any one as a class.

Mr. GARFIELD. But let me say another word to close this branch of the subject. The only authority introduced to prove the pretended atrocity at Elmira was an anonymous letter printed in the New York World. The Roman soldiers who watched at the sepulchre of the Saviour of mankind attempted to disprove his resurrection by testifying to what happened while they were asleep. Bad as this testimony was, it was not anonymous; but in this case the testimony was that of a shadow—an initial—nobody. Stat nominis umbra. What the substance was we know not. But even as to this

ANONYMOUS AUTHORITY, it would have been well for the cause of justice if the gentleman had been kind enough to quote it all. I read, I believe, from the very book from which the gentleman quoted—The Life of Davis—a sentence omitted by him, but which I hope he will have printed in his speech. It is this:

The facts demonstrate that in as healthy a location as there is in New York, with every remedial appliance in abundance, with no epidemic, &c.

So that even this anonymous witness testifies that we planted our Elmira prison in as healthy a place as there was in the State of New York. It ought to be added that the small-pox broke out in that prison very soon after the date of this letter; and the mortality that followed was very much greater than in any other prison in the North.

How we have kept alive our vindictiveness will be seen by the fact that Congress, at its last session or the session before last, passed a law making the rebel cemetery at Elmira a part of the national-cemetery system; and to-day, this malignant Administration, this ferocious Constitution-hating and South-hating Administration is paying an officer for tenderly caring for the inclosure that holds the remains of these outraged soldiers!

Mr. MACDOUGALL. And a Union soldier, Captain Fitch, is building at his own expense a monument at Elmira to the Confederate dead.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not know that. At another place, Finn's Point, in Virginia, we have within the past few months embraced another cemetery of rebel soldiers under the law and protection of our national cemetery system. All this out of the depths of our wrath and hatred for our Southern brethren!

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word on that point?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. In response to what the gentleman has said, I desire to state as a fact what I personally know, that on the last occasion of decorating soldiers' graves in the South, our people, uniting with Northern soldiers there, decorated in harmonious accord the graves of the fallen Federals and the graves of the fallen Confederates. It is because of this glorious feeling that is being awakened in the country that I protest against the revival of these horrors about any prison.

Mr. GARFIELD. So do I. Who brought it here? [Cries from the Democratic side of the House, BLAINE! BLAINE!] We will see as to that. I wish this same fraternal feeling could come out of the graveyard and display itself toward the thirty or forty maimed Union soldiers who were on duty around this Capitol, but who have been displaced by an equal number of SOLDIERS ON THE OTHER SIDE.

[Applause.]

There was another point which the gentleman made which I am frank to say I am not now able to answer.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention (with the permission of the gentleman from Ohio) to the exact state of facts in reference to the allegation just made by him. This is not the first time the statement has been made that there have been thirty or forty crippled Federal soldiers removed from office under this House and their places filled by Confederate soldiers. I was shown yesterday morning by the Doorkeeper of the House (and the information is as accessible to the gentleman from Ohio and all others as to myself) a roll showing there were eighteen Federal soldiers appointed by the Doorkeeper of the House during the last Congress, while twenty-four Federal soldiers have been appointed by the Doorkeeper of the present Congress; while at the same time the aggregate number of appointments allowed to the Doorkeeper of the House of the last Congress was very much larger than that allowed to the Doorkeeper of the present Congress. Besides that, more than three-fourths of those appointed by the present Doorkeeper have taken what is popularly denominated as the iron-clad oath.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should be glad to know that the gentleman from Texas is correct.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The gentleman from Texas has referred to a list which I have here before me.

Mr. GARFIELD. My time is fast running out, and I do not want it all taken up by these explanations; but I will hear my colleague.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. RANDALL. Your time will be extended.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The statement which I have before me, and to which the gentleman from Texas referred, is that of the one hundred and fifty-three appointments made by the Doorkeeper in the last House of Representatives, there were eighteen Union soldiers; while, out of the eighty-five appointments allowed to the Doorkeeper of the present House, twenty-six Union soldiers have been appointed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. These demonstrations are entirely out of order.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. My point is this: I do not know whether it is a point of order or not, but I do request that the Speaker will in the most determined manner suppress any applause in this House. I regret this debate, and especially these details; but this applause is unbecoming the gravity of the question, however unfortunately it may have come up here; and I do request that on this side of the House there shall be no applause of any member who speaks for the South, or any demonstration against any one speaking on that side of the House. I hope courtesy and decorum will be observed. [Cries of "Good!" "Good!"] It is unbecoming the House, and unbecoming the country, and I hope it will be stopped.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky is well made. These things are not in order, and the Chair earnestly requests the House will set an example to those outside of the bar and in the galleries by stopping all such demonstrations. And the Chair takes occasion to say to the galleries that if these things are continued it will be his duty to have them cleared.

Mr. GARFIELD. I regret as much as any one the discussion of this question. I did not intend to refer to it at all. I hope what my colleague has presented as a statistical table will turn out to be correct. I shall be it is correct into my list of the old and the post-war claimed on the

of this employees they had not borne arms against the Government. If the statement be correct which I have had put into my hands, it would seem to throw some shadow of doubt on what we have just heard. But let both statements go in together.

This is the list handed to me:

POST-OFFICE OF THE HOUSE.

The old force.—Norman Crane, Vermont; A. M. Legg, New York, two years in Union Army; P. A. Wardell, Massachusetts, four years in Union Army and permanently disabled at Winchester; J. H. Paine, Ohio, was in Union Army; O. M. Thomas, Iowa, R. P. Bishop, Michigan, lost an arm in the Union Army, R. S. McMichael, Wisconsin, nearly lost his sight in the Union Army; D. B. Bradley, Wisconsin, three years in Union Army; J. H. Lytle, New York; W. B. Sessions, New York; J. D. Severn, Pennsylvania; D. F. Bishop, Pennsylvania; W. Tudge, District of Columbia; Crichton Palmon, District of Columbia.

The new force.—George W. Rock, Virginia, in Confederate army; Henry Cook, Virginia, in Confederate army; Richard Allen, Virginia; S. W. Kennedy, Virginia, in Confederate army; A. W. C. Nowlin, Virginia, in Confederate army; Edward C. Sloss, Virginia; W. H. Robinson, Virginia, in Confederate army; J. B. Fisher, Virginia, in Confederate army; P. S. Goodall, W. B. Lowery, Virginia, in Confederate army; Joseph M. Taylor, Edwin Kate, New York; Thomas Kirby, Connecticut, in Union Army.

Mr. Speaker, I was about to refer to another point made by the gentleman from Georgia in his statement of the number of prisoners taken by us and taken by them and the relative number of deaths. I have this morning received from the Surgeon General references to all the pages of official reports on that subject, but I have not been able, in the hurried moments of the session since I arrived here, to examine the figures. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] has made up a part of the statement which I am now able to present. That statement shows that during the war we took 476,169 prisoners, while on the other side they took 188,145 prisoners from us.

This is a statement to which the Surgeon General referred me in a note received since I took my seat in the House this morning, and is in a printed report on the treatment of prisoners of war by the rebel authorities, third session Fortieth Congress, page 228, which gentlemen can examine at their leisure.

It ought to be added in this connection that the conscription laws of the Confederate congress forced all able-bodied citizens between the ages of seventeen and fifty into the service, while our laws limited the conscription to the usual military ages. This, of course, put into their army a large number of immature boys and broken-down old men, among whom the mortality would naturally be greater than in an army made up of men of the ordinary ages.

I turn now to another point. The gentleman makes another answer concerning these atrocities.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's hour has expired.

Mr. HILL. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will be permitted to go on.

There being no objection. Mr. GARFIELD's time was extended indefinitely.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am very grateful for this courtesy and will not abuse it.

The gentleman from Georgia makes another answer, that whatever was suffered by the prisoners for at least a considerable portion of the time was in consequence of our REFUSAL TO MAKE AN EXCHANGE OF PRISONERS, because we would not give them their fresh men in our prisons, and take our shadows and skeletons that came back from theirs.

This is a part, and an important part, of a great history, which must not be omitted in this debate; and I will very briefly refer to its leading points. There was much trouble about the exchange of prisoners between the two belligerents; first, because for a long time we did not acknowledge the Confederates as belligerents. We hoped under the ninety days theory of Mr. Seward to get through without their recognition, but that hope failed. Our enemies were as gallant a people as ever drew the sword, and the fulfillment of that hope was delayed for months and for years. But finally an arrangement was made under which it was possible to make a cartel for the exchange of prisoners; and on the 22d of July, 1862, a cartel was agreed upon between the belligerents, which provided that within ten days after a prisoner was taken he should be paroled and sent home; and whenever it was announced by either side that a certain number was relieved from the parole a corresponding number should be released from the other side, and in that way the exchange was effected.

There were two points of delivery of prisoners. One was at Vicksburg. Another was at a point near Dutch Gap, in Virginia. And the exchange went on for some time until a series of events occurred which interrupted it. To those events I desire to call attention for a moment. The first in order of time was a proposition which was read before the House yesterday, and which I incorporate here in my remarks, not for the sake of making any personal point, but to preserve the continuity of the history.

HILL'S BLACK FLAG RESOLUTION.

In October, 1862, a resolution was introduced into the Confederate Senate by Senator Hill, of Georgia—

That every person pretending to be a soldier or officer of the United States who shall be captured on the soil of the Confederate States after the first of January, 1863, shall be presumed to have entered the territory of the Confederate States with intent to excite insurrection and to abet murder, and that unless satisfactory proof be adduced to the contrary before the military court before which his trial shall be had he shall suffer death.

That was the first step in the complication in regard to the exchange of prisoners of war. That resolution appears to have borne early fruits.

On the 22d day of December, 1862, Jefferson Davis, the man for whom amnesty is now being asked, issued a proclamation, a copy of which I hold in my hand. I read two paragraphs:

First. That all commissioned officers in the command of said Benjamin F. Butler be declared not entitled to be considered as soldiers engaged in honorable warfare, but as robbers and criminals deserving death; and that they, and each of them be, whenever captured, reserved for execution.

Mr. HILL. A reason is stated for that.

Mr. GARFIELD. The reason is in the preamble. I am not discussing the reasons for this extraordinary proclamation, but its effects upon the exchange of prisoners.

Third. That all negro slaves captured in arms be at once delivered over to the executive authorities of the respective States to which they belong, to be dealt with according to the laws of said States.

Fourth. That the like orders be executed in all cases with respect to all commissioned officers of the United States when found serving in company with said slaves in insurrection against the authorities of the different States of this Confederacy.

Two great questions were thus raised: first, that a certain class of officers, merely because they served under General Butler, should be declared not entitled to the rights of prisoners of war, but should be put to death when taken. These men were serving, not Benjamin F. Butler, but the Union. They did not choose him as their general. They were assigned to him; and by this proclamation that assignment at the hands of their captors. But the second question was still more important. It was an order that all men who had been slaves and had enlisted under the flag of the Union should be denied all the rights of soldiers, and when captured should be dealt with as runaway slaves under the laws of the States where they formerly belonged, and that commissioned officers who commanded them were to be denied the rights and privileges of prisoners of war. The decision of the Union people everywhere was that, great as was the suffering of our poor soldiers at Andersonville and elsewhere, we would never make an exchange of prisoners until the manhood and the rights of our colored soldiers were acknowledged by the belligerent power. And for long weary months we stood upon that issue, and most of the suffering occurred while we waited for that act of justice to be done on the other side.

CONSIGNED THEM TO DEATH

To enforce this proclamation of Mr. Davis a law was passed on the 1st of May, 1863, by the Confederate congress, reported, doubtless, from the judiciary committee by the gentleman who spoke yesterday, and in that law the principles of the proclamation I have just read were embodied and expanded. Section 4 of the law reads as follows:

SEC. 4. That every white person, being a commissioned officer or acting as such, who during the present war, shall command negroes or mulattoes in arms against the Confederate States, or who shall arm, train, organize, or prepare negroes or mulattoes for military service against the Confederate States or who shall voluntarily aid negroes or mulattoes in any military enterprise, attack, or conflict in such service, shall be deemed as inciting servile insurrection, and shall, if captured, be put to death or be otherwise punished, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 5. Every person, being a commissioned officer or acting as such in the service of the enemy, who shall during the present war excite, attempt to excite, or cause to be excited, a servile insurrection, or who shall incite or cause to be incited a slave to rebel, shall, if captured, be put to death or be otherwise punished, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 7. All negroes and mulattoes who shall be engaged in war or be taken in arms against the Confederate States, or shall give aid or comfort to the enemies of the Confederate States, shall, when captured in the Confederate States, be delivered to the authorities of the State or States in which they shall be captured, to be dealt with according to the present or future laws of such State or States.

Approved May 1, 1863.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am here to say that this position taken by the head of the Confederacy, indorsed by his congress and carried into execution by his officers, was the great primal trouble in all this business of the exchange of prisoners. There were minor troubles, such as claims by both sides that paroles had been violated. I think General Halleck reported that a whole division of four brigades, Stevenson's division, which had not been properly exchanged, fought us at Lookout Mountain; but that may have been a mistake. It was one of the points in controversy. But the central question was that of the Government of the United States having committed itself to the doctrine that

THE NEGRO WAS A MAN AND NOT A CHATTEL, and that being a man he had a right to help us in fighting for the Union, and being a soldier we would perish rather than that he should not be treated as a soldier.

To show that I am not speaking at random I will read from a report which I hold in my hand, a report of the Secretary of War on the difficulty of the exchange of prisoners. This paper is dated August 24, 1864. I think it is a misprint for 1863, from what surrounds it; but no matter as to that. It was in August General Meredith reported:

To my demand "that all officers commanding negro troops, and negro troops themselves, should be treated as other prisoners of war, and be exchanged as such," Mr. Ould declined acceding, remarking that they (the rebels) would "die in the last ditch" before giving up the right to send slaves back to slavery as property recaptured.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. A. MEREDITH,

Brigadier-General and Commissioner for Exchange.

Major-General E. A. HITCHCOCK, Commissioner for Exchange of Prisoners, Washington, D. C.

Thus it appears that in the negotiation, as late as the month of August, 1863, the refusal of the rebel authorities to treat the negro as a man and a soldier, prevented the exchange of prisoners.

One other point in that connection and I will leave this subject. I have here a letter, dated March 17, 1863, written by Robert Ould and addressed to that man of "bad eminence," General Winder, in which Mr. Ould, speaking of his arrangement for the exchange of prisoners, says:

The arrangements that I have made work largely in our favor. We get rid of a set of miserable wretches and receive some of the best material I ever saw.

Now in that single line, in a communication between two men, not par nobile fratrum but par turpe diabolorum, is proof that the object of this outrageous treatment at Andersonville was to make our men so that their exchange would be valueless to us, and it throws light upon the charge about our treatment of prisoners held in the North.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I return from all this to the direct discussion bearing immediately upon Jefferson Davis. It seems to me incontrovertible that the records I have adduced lay at his door the charge of being himself the author, the conscious author, through his own appointed instrument, of the terrible work at Andersonville, for which the American people still hold him unfit to be admitted among the legislators of this nation.

Before I leave that subject let me say another word or another point. I see around me here a large number of gentlemen who did not hesitate to take the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, who did not hesitate to ask to be relieved of their political disabilities, and I ask if any one of them, in the years they have served here with us, has been ever taunted with the fact that he has been thus relieved of disabilities at his own request? Can any one of them recall a discourteous remark that has ever been made here in debate because he has asked and accepted the amnesty of the Government? Do you want us to say that the remaining seven hundred and fifty need not ask what you did? Do the honorable gentlemen who are here to-day want easier terms on which the others may come in than the terms on which they themselves came back?

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask a question for information, for I want the facts, and my recollection differs from that of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] The act of 1872, granting a partial amnesty to quite a large number, does not, as I understand it, make any such requisition as is contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is right.

Mr. HILL. It was an unconditional amnesty like that contained in the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] It required no oath or anything of the sort.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly not.

Mr. HILL. I am very sure that it was under that act that I was relieved. And I never applied for any amnesty at all, but I would not have felt it

ANY LOSS OF PRIDE HAD I DONE SO.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly not. I remember very well that we relieved a large number of soldiers in one act. But we did not relieve those who, at the time the rebellion broke out, held offices and commissions under the Government, which they had sworn before God they would protect and defend, and afterward went into the rebellion. Those are the people that we have required to ask for amnesty.

Mr. HILL. Allow me to call the attention of the gentleman to a correction of his statement. The act of Congress of 1872 relieved all persons, as I understand it, from disabilities who had been members of any State Legislature, or who had been an executive or judicial officer of any State, and relieved all in civil or military service, or who had even been in the Congress of the United States, excepting the Thirty-fifth or Thirty-sixth Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh Congresses.

Mr. HILL. Well, one or the other. It relieved all those who were not in Congress at the time of secession, all members of State Legislatures, all civil and military officers, except the few remaining, some seven hundred and fifty. You granted them relief without any condition whatever.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will observe that those to whom he refers did not, at the time the war broke out, hold commissions as United States officers.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GARFIELD. We excepted from amnesty all those who held in their hands a commission from the Federal Government, and who had sworn to be true to their commission; and we did this because they had added to rebellion—I must use words—

THE CRIME OF PERJURY
in the eyes of the law.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio, speaking here to-day of kindness to gentlemen on this side of the House, to say that any man who held a commission under the United States at the time the war broke out, and who went into secession, was guilty of perjury?

Mr. GARFIELD. I will repeat precisely the measured words I used. I said "the crime of perjury in the eyes of the law." In view of the fact of flaming war, I do not say those men should be regarded as ordinary perjurers; I never said that. But what will the gentleman call it? By what other name does the law know it? I did not make the dictionary, nor did I make the law. The gentleman certainly knows me well enough to know that I am incapable of making a reference to any personal matter in this discussion. He must see that I am using the word as it is used in the law.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.) Does the gentleman from Ohio yield further to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER?]

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not ask to interrupt the gentleman that I may excuse myself, but to excuse some of the noblest men that I have ever known, and of whom the gentleman might be proud to claim to be a peer.

Mr. GARFIELD. There were some passages in the speech of yesterday which make me less reluctant

TO SPEAK OF BREAKING OATHS.

He said:

We charge all our wrongs to that "higher law" fanaticism which never kept a pledge or obeyed a law. We sought to leave the association of those who would not keep fidelity to covenant. We sought to go by ourselves; but, so far from having lost our fidelity to the Constitution, we hugged it to our bosoms and carried it with us. * * * But you gentlemen who persecuted us by your infidelities until you drove us out of the Union, you who then claimed to be the only friends of the Union, which you had before denounced as a "league with hell and a covenant with death," you who follow up the war when the soldiers who fought it have made peace and gone to their homes, to you we have no concessions to make. Martyrs owe no apology to tyrants.

There is a certain sublimity of assumption in this which challenges admiration. Why the very men of whom we are talking, who broke their oaths of office to the nation—when we are speaking of relieving them we are told that they went out because we broke the Constitution and would not be bound by oaths. Did we break the Constitution? Did we drive them out? I invoke the testimony of Alexander H. Stephens, now a member of this House, who, standing up in the secession convention of Georgia, declared that there was no just ground for Georgia's going out ; declared that the election of a President according to the Constitution was no justifiable ground for secession, and declared that if under the circumstances the South should go out she would herself be committing a gigantic wrong and would call down upon herself the thunders and horrors of civil war.

Thus spoke Alexander H. Stephens in 1860. Over against anything that may be said to the contrary I place his testimony that we did not force the South out; that they went out against all the protests and the prayers and the humiliation that a great and proud nation could make without absolute disgrace.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me a moment?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman has used a term that touches the honor of more men than one in this House and in the South. I desire, therefore, to ask him this question: Whether the war did not result from a difference of views between gentlemen of the North and gentlemen of the South with regard to what was the true construction of the Constitution? That being so, I desire to ask him further whether the oath of fidelity to the Constitution was best observed by those people of the section which he represents, those of his own party, who declared that there was a law higher than the Constitution and declined to obey that instrument, or by those who observed faithfully their constitutional obligations, and who, when raids were made upon them, merely defended themselves, as they understand it,

FROM UNCONSTITUTIONAL AGGRESSION ?

I wish to say further for myself and for those who are here with me that, the Constitution having been amended—the “higher law” party having incorporated in that instrument the abolition of slavery and certain other features which we have now sworn to support along with the rest of the instrument—if in the future we fail to observe that oath before high Heaven, then we may be declared perjured; then we may be declared rebels; then we may be declared traitors.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman has understood me he cannot fail to see that I have not used the word in any offensive sense, but in its plain and ordinary acceptation, as used in the law. We held that the United States was a nation, bound together by a bond of perpetual union; a union which no State or any combination of States, which no man or any combination of men, had the right, under the Constitution, to break. The attempt of the South to overthrow the Union was crime against the Government—the crime of rebellion. It can be described by no other name. It is so known to the laws of nations. It is so described in the decisions of the Supreme Court.

The gentleman from North Carolina calls
THE WAR ON ONE SIDE A RAID.

I will never consent to call our war for the Union "a raid," least of all a raid upon the rights of any human being. I admit that there was a political theory of State rights—a theory held, I have no doubt, by gentlemen like the gentleman of Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] who spoke a moment ago—believed in as sincerely as I believe the opposite—which led them to think it was their duty to go when their State went. I admit that that greatly mitigates all that the law speaks of as a violation of an oath. But I will never admit (for history gives the lie to the statement in every line) that the men of the Union were making a "raid" upon the rights of the South.

Read the Republican platform of 1856 and of 1860. What did we contend for in those years? Simply that slavery should not be extended into any Territory already free. That was all. We forswore any right or purpose on our part in time of peace to touch slavery in any State. We only claimed that in the Territories, the common heritage of all the Union, slavery should never travel another inch; and, thank God, it no longer pollutes our soil or disgraces our civilization.

Now that slavery,

THE GUILTY CAUSE OF THE REBELLION.

is no more, and that, so far as I know nobody wants it restored—I do not believe these gentlemen from the South desire its restoration——

Mr. HILL. We would not have it.

Mr. GARFIELD. They would not have it, the gentleman from Georgia says. Then let us thank God that in the fierce flames of war the institution of slavery has been consumed; and out of its ashes let us hope a better than the fabled Phoenix of old will arise—a love of the Union high and deep, “as broad and general as the casing air,” enveloping us all, and that it shall be counted no shame for any man who is not still under political disabilities to say with uplifted hand, “I will be true to it and take the proffered amnesty of the nation.” But let us not tender it to be spurned. If it is worth having, it is worth asking for.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I close as I began. Toward those men who gallantly fought us on the field I cherish the kindest feeling. I feel a sincere reverence for the soldierly qualities they displayed on many a well-fought battle-field. I hope the day will come when their swords and ours will be crossed over many a doorway of our children, who will remember the glory of their ancestors with pride. The high qualities displayed in that conflict now belong to the whole nation. Let them be consecrated to the Union and its future peace and glory. I shall hail that consecration as a pledge and symbol of our perpetuity.

But there was a class of men referred to in the speech of the gentleman yesterday for whom I have never yet gained the Christian grace necessary to say the same thing. The gentleman said that amid the thunder of battle, through its dun smoke, and above its roar they heard a voice from this side saying, "Brothers, come." I do not know whether he meant the same thing, but I heard that voice behind us. I heard that voice, and I recollect that I sent one of those who uttered it through our lines—a voice owned by Vallandigham. [Laughter.] General Scott said, in the early days of the war, "When this war is over, it will require all the physical and moral power of the Government

TO RESTRAIN THE RAGE AND FURY OF THE NON-COMBATANTS."

[Laughter.] It was that non-combatant voice behind us that cried "halloo!" to the other side; that always gave cheer and encouragement to the enemy in our hour of darkness. I have never forgotten and have not yet forgiven those Democrats of the North whose hearts were not warmed by the grand inspirations of the Union, but who stood back finding fault, always crying disaster, rejoicing at our defeat, never glorying in our victory. If these are the voices the gentleman heard, I am sorry he is now united with those who uttered them.

But to those most noble men, Democrats and Republicans, who together fought for the Union, I commend all the lessons of charity that the wisest and most beneficent men have taught. I join you all that you may express to stay in this Union, to heal its wounds, to increase its glory, and to forget the evils and bitternesses of the past; but do not, for the sake of the three hundred thousand heroic men who, maimed and bruised, drag out their weary lives, many of them carrying in their hearts horrible memories of what they suffered in the prison-pen—do not ask us to vote to put back into power that man who was the cause of their suffering—that man still unaneled, unshrived, unforgiven, undefended. [Great applause.]

IN EVERY ASPIRATION

THE SHADOW OF A DEAD CONFEDERACY.

In the House of Representatives, Jan. 13, 1876.

MR. BLAINE:

Mr. SPEAKER, before proceeding with the remarks which I shall address to the question before the House, I desire to say that in the discussion on the point of order that was raised just prior to the adjournment last evening I did not intend to be understood and hope no gentleman understood me as implying that the honorable Speaker intended in any way to deprive me of the right to speak. I did not so understand the Speaker, nor did I understand it to be the motive or object of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL.] I say this much in justice to myself and in justice to the honorable incumbent of the chair.

From the tone of the debate on the opposite side of the Chamber, Mr. Speaker, one would certainly imagine that the Republican party, as represented in Congress, was trying to inflict some new punishment or add some fresh stigma to the name of Jefferson Davis, as well indeed as to lay some additional burden on those other citizens of the South who are not yet fully amnestied. It may therefore not be unprofitable just to recall to the attention of the House the precise question at issue, and how it came here, and who it was that brought it here.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania introduced a bill to confer special honor on Jefferson Davis; for what honor can be higher than the full panoplied citizenship of the United States of America? He has lost it by his crimes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes in hot haste, without debate, without amendment, to drag every gentleman up to say "Aye" or "No" upon a bill declaring him to be entitled now and henceforth to all the rights and all the honors of American citizenship. From that we dissent. We did not bring the question here. We are not seeking to throw any fresh element of an inflammatory kind into any discussion or difference that may be between two parties or two sections, and whatever of that kind has grown from this discussion lies at the door of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and those who stand with him.

Remember, Mr. Speaker, it is no proposition to punish but a proposition to honor, and while we disclaim any intention or desire to punish Jefferson Davis, we resist the proposition to honor him. And right as a preliminary matter, I desire to set myself for a moment to the constit point suggested by the honorable gen from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] who addressed the House last evening. He sees and appreciates the magnitude of the crime laid at the door of Jefferson Davis, and he clearly pointed out that neither the gentleman from New York nor the gentleman from Georgia had palliated or dared to palliate the crimes with which I charged him. But he is bothered by the scruple that because we are permitted to punish for participancy in insurrection or rebellion we cannot make any discrimination or distinction. Why, the honorable gentleman must have forgotten that this is precisely what we have been doing ever since the disability was imposed. We first removed the disabilities from the least offensive class; then in the next list we removed those next in order of guilty participancy, and so on, until in 1872 we removed the disability from all, except the Army and Navy officers, members of Congress, and heads of Departments. Why, sir, are we not as much justified to day in excepting Jefferson Davis as we were in 1872 in excepting the seven hundred and fifty of whom he constitutes one? Therefore I beg to say to my honorable friend, whose co-operation I crave, that that point is res adjudicata by a hundred acts upon the statute-book. We are entirely competent to do just what is proposed in my amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on the question of the treatment of our prisoners and on the great question as to who was to blame for breaking exchange, the speech of the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has left me literally nothing to say. He exhausted the subject. His speech was unanswerable, and I undertake to say that as yet no gentleman has answered one fact that he alleged—no gentleman in this House can answer one fact presented by him. I shall not therefore at any length dwell upon that. But in connection with one point in history there is something which I should feel it my duty, not merely as a member of the Republican party which upheld the administration that conducted the war, but as a citizen of the American Union, to resist and resent, and that is, the allegations that were made in regard to the manner in which Confederate prisoners were treated in the prisons of the Union. The gentleman from Georgia says:

I have also proved that with all the horrors you have made such a noise about as occurring at Andersonville, greater horrors occurred in the prisons where our troops were held.

And I could not but admire the "our" and the "your" with which the gentleman conducted the whole discussion. It ill comported with his later profession of Unionism. It was certainly flinging the shadow of a dead Confederacy a long way over the dial of the National House of Representatives; and I think the gentleman from New York fell into a little of the same line. Of that I shall speak again. The gentleman from Georgia goes on to say that—

The atrocities of Andersonville do not begin to compare with the atrocities of Elmira, of Camp Douglas, of Fort Delaware; and of all the atrocities both at Andersonville and at Elmira the Confederate authorities stand acquitted.

Mr. HILL. I certainly said no such thing. I stated distinctly that I brought no charge of crime against anybody. But I also stated distinctly that according to the gentleman's logic that result followed.

Mr. BLAINE. But that is not the reported speech at all.

Mr. HILL. I stated distinctly that I was following the gentleman's logic.

Mr. BLAINE. I am quoting the gentleman's speech as he delivered it. I quote it as it appeared in the Daily Chronicle and the Associated Press report. I do not pretend to be bound by the version which may appear hereafter, because I observed that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] spoke one speech and published another, [great laughter,] and I suppose the gentleman from Georgia will do the same. I admit that the gentleman has a difficult role to play. He has to harmonize himself with the great Northern Democracy and keep himself in high line as a Democratic candidate for Senator from Georgia; and it is a very difficult thing to reconcile the two. [Laughter.] The "barn-burner Democrats" in 1853 tried very hard to adhere to their anti-slavery principles in New York and still support the Pierce administration; and Mr. Greeley, with that inimitable humor which he possessed, said that they found it a very hard road to straddle, like a militia general on parade on Broadway, who finds it an almost impossible task to follow the music and dodge the omnibuses. [Laughter.] And that is what the gentleman does. The gentleman tries to keep step to the music of the Union and dodge his fire-eating constituency in Georgia. [Great laughter.]

Then here is another quotation:

We know our prisoners suffered in Federal hands, and we know how if we chose to tell. Thousands of our poor men came home from Fort Delaware and other places with their fingers frozen off, with their toes frozen off, with their teeth fallen out.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman will allow me to answer. I said that these things were necessary incidents of the horrors of all prisons.

Mr. BLAINE. But the gentleman states that that was a fact? I do not understand him to back down from that assertion?

Mr. HILL. No, sir. I saw it with my own eyes.

Mr. BLAINE. Now, the gentleman from the Elmira district, [Mr. WALKER,] and I honor him for it, was not held in leash as his colleague from New York [Mr. Cox] was by party fidelity and Southern sympathy, and came out like a man and vindicated his constituents. The gentleman from Georgia makes this charge of ill-treatment of Confederate prisoners at Camp Douglas.

* * * * *

Now Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the remark of the gentleman from New York, who, as I said, delivered one speech and published another.

Mr. COX. I did not change anything in my speech or in my colloquy with you.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman will have time to answer. I say the gentleman from New York delivered one speech and printed another.

Mr. COX. Go on with your talk; you are getting used up on this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from New York stated that "he had it on the authority of sixty and odd gentlemen here, many of them having been in the service of the Confederacy during the war, that no order was issued at anytime in the South relative to prisoners who were taken by the South as to rations or clothing that did not apply equally to their own soldiers, and that any ex parte statements taken by that humbug committee on the conduct of the war could not controvert the facts of history." The gentleman therefore stands up here as denying the atrocities of Andersonville. He seconds the gentleman from Georgia and gives the weight of whatever may be attached to his word to denying that fact. Now, the gentleman himself did not always talk so. I have here a debate that occurred on the 21st of December, 1864, in which, while the proposition was pending in the House for retaliation, the gentleman, then from Ohio, said:

This resolution provides for inflicting upon the rebel prisoners who may be in our hands the same inhumane, barbarous, horrible treatment which has been inflicted upon our soldiers held as prisoners by the rebels.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

Continued the enraged gentleman at that time—it does not follow that because the rebels have made brutes and fiends of themselves that we should do likewise.

Mr. COX. That is good sense.

Mr. BLAINE. "There is," he says, "a certain law of retaliation in war, I know; but," continued the gentleman, "no man will stand up here and say, after due deliberation, that he would reduce these prisoners thrust into our hands into the same condition exhibited by these skeletons, these pictures, these anatomies brought to our attention and laid upon the desks of members of Congress." Then the gentleman says: "It does not follow because our prisoners are treated in the way represented, and no doubt truthfully represented." That is what the gentleman said in 1864; but when a solemn committee of Congress, made up of honorable gentlemen of both sides of the House, bring in exactly the statements which verify all this, then the gentleman states "that the authority was a humbug committee."

Mr. COX rose.

Mr. BLAINE. Wait; you will have plenty of time.

Mr. COX. I did not get up to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BLAINE. Now the gentleman takes his side among the great defenders of Andersonville, and states there has been nothing made out against Andersonville except upon ex parte statements.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while I do not wish to be interrupted, I would like, by a nod, if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] will be good enough to tell me—for he is a well-practiced lawyer and I am not one at all; and when witnesses are in doubt they are allowed time to reflect and refresh their memory—I ask him to tell me after reflection whether he recollects having introduced this resolution into the Confederate Senate.

Mr. HILL. Which?

Mr. BLAINE. The following:

Senator Hill, of Georgia, introduced the following resolution in the Confederate Congress in October, 1862: "That every person pretending to be a soldier or officer of the United States who shall be captured on the soil of the Confederate States after the first day of January, 1863, shall be presumed to have entered the territory of the Confederate States with intent to incite insurrection and to abet murder; and, unless satisfactory proof be adduced to the contrary before the military court before which the trial shall be had, he shall suffer death. And this section shall continue in force until the proclamation issued by Abraham Lincoln, dated Washington, September 22, 1872, shall be rescinded."

Did the gentleman introduce that resolution?

Mr. HILL. Do you want an answer?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I will say this: I state precisely and frankly, as I stated to the gentleman day before yesterday, that I do not recollect being the author of that resolution. I have no doubt the resolution was introduced, and I will state this: that at the time there was a belief in the Confederacy—

Mr. BLAINE. I did not yield for a speech. I only wanted to know that. * * * *

Mr. Speaker, what does this mean? What did the gentleman from Georgia mean when, from the committee on the judiciary, he introduced the following:

2. Every white person who shall act as a commissioned or non-commissioned officer, commanding negroes or mulattoes against the Confederate States, or who shall arm, organize, train, or prepare negroes or mulattoes for military service, or aid them in any military enterprise against the Confederate States shall, if captured, suffer death.

3. Every commissioned or non-commissioned officer of the enemy who shall incite slaves to rebellion, or pretend to give them freedom, under the aforementioned act of Congress and proclamation, by abducting, or causing them to be abducted, or inducing them to abscond, shall, if captured, suffer death.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have searched somewhat, but in vain, for anything in the world that rivals this. I did find, and have here in my minutes, the proclamation of Valmeseda, the Captain-General of Cuba, who was recalled by Spain because of his atrocious cruelties to the inhabitants of that island; and the worst thing in all the atrocities laid to his charge was that he proclaimed "that every man or boy over fifteen years found away from his house, not being able to give a satisfactory reason therefor, should suffer death." He copied it from the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a copy of the Atlanta Constitution, printed on the 24th of January, 1875. We are told that all these allegations against Jefferson Davis should be forgiven because they are all of the dead past.

We are told that we should not revive them, that there should be nothing in the world brought up in any way to disturb the beautiful serenity of the Centennial year, and that to make any allusion to them whatever is to do an unwelcome and unpatriotic act. The very last declaration we have from Jefferson Davis authentically, in the life which the gentleman from Georgia held the other day as a text book, reads thus:

Time will show, however, the amount of truth in the prophecy of Jefferson Davis—

Says the biographer, made in reply to the remark that the cause of the Confederacy was lost. Mr. Davis said:

It appears so, but the principle for which we contended is bound to reassert itself, though it may be at another time and in another form.

Now I have here, of the date of January 24, 1875, a speech by Hon. B. H. HILL, in the Atlanta Constitution, and it is said to have been the "grandest speech" he ever delivered.

Mr. HILL. Oh, that is a mistake.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman says it is a mistake. I know he has delivered some very grand speeches, but the editor characterizes this as the grandest of them all. I quote from him:

Fellow-citizens, I look to the contest of 1876 not only as the most important that ever occurred in American history, but as the most important in the history of the world; for if the people of the country cannot be aroused to give an overwhelming vote against this Republican party it will perpetuate itself in power in the United States by precisely the same means that the President has taken in Louisiana, and the people will be powerless to prevent it except they go to war. [Applause.] If we fail with the ballot-box in 1876 by reason of force, a startling question will present itself to the American people. I trust we will not fail. I hope the Northern people have had a sufficient subsidence of passion to see this question fairly.

Then the gentleman goes on to say—

If we must have war—
why his voice is always for war.

Mr. HILL. Never, never!

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman says—

If we must have war; if we cannot preserve this Constitution and constitutional Government by the ballot; if force is to defeat the ballot; if the war must come—God forbid that it should come—but if it must come; if folly, if wickedness, if inordinate love of power shall decree that America must save her Constitution by blood, let it come; I am ready. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. BLAINE. Not now. There will be plenty of time. And then the gentleman said in another speech of May 12:

He impressed upon the colored men of the country the truth that, if the folly and wickedness were consummated in war, they would be the greatest sufferers. If peace was preserved they were safe, but as sure as one war had freed them, just as sure another war would re-enslave them.

Now that was precisely the kind of talk we had here by folios and reams before the rebellion. Oh, yes; you were for war then. The gentleman in his speech says that the Union now is an unmixed blessing, providing the Democratic party can rule it, but that if the Republican party must rule it he is for war. Why, that is just what Jefferson Davis said in 1861.

I have here very much more of the same kind. I have been supplied with very abundant literature emanating from the gentleman, more, indeed, than I have had time to read. He seems to have been as voluminous as the Spanish Chroniclers. In one speech he says:

I must say a word about this list of disabilities removed. I would rather see my name recorded in the Georgia penitentiary than to find it on a list of the removal of disabilities. Why, my friends, do you not know that when you go to that Congress and ask for a removal of disabilities you admit that you are a traitor?

Mr. HILL. What do you read from?

Mr. BLAINE. From a report in a Cincinnati Daily Gazette, giving an account of a great meeting in 1868, at which Howell Cobb, Robert Toombs, and the Hon B. H. HILL made speeches. And there the gentleman declared that he would rather have his name on the list of the Georgia penitentiary than on a list of the removal of disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to stir up more needless ill-blood, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] yesterday, apparently without much thought, spoke of a class of men in the Southern States who had

And States
Now with and case from pers.
per was liber
of is at, in with this and ation adness tlemen
Mr. Spe aid brie bid I sho people,
eat it.
r. Sir. report ing the S that th
now that racy prot
of the ast them leman fro
ing his St protest ched the committed perjury, and I would like to address the gentleman a question that he can answer when he gets the floor.

Mr. HILL. Will you not allow me to answer it now?

Mr. BLAINE. No, sir; not now. Suppose you inaugurate a great war if the Republican party retains power, and you and all these gentlemen, who sympathize with you upon this floor, and who had taken an oath to bear true allegiance to the Government of the United States, and that you took that oath without mental reservation, then revolt against the country; what would that be? Would it have any relation to perjury?

But, Mr. Speaker, you see the effect of the speeches of the gentleman from Georgia. They are very tremendous down there. The very earth quakes under him. One of his organs says:

We assert without fear of contradiction that Mr. HILL in his bitter denunciation of scalawags and carpet-baggers has deterred thousands of them from entering the ranks of the radical party. They dare not do so for fear of social ostracism, and to-day the white population of Georgia are unanimous in favor of the Democratic party.

And when he can get the rest of the States to the same standard he is for war.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman cannot, by withholding his speech here and revising it and adapting it to the northern Democracy, erase his speeches in Georgia. I have quoted from them. I have quoted from Democratic papers. There is no accusation that there is any perversion in Republican papers or that he was misrepresented. But the gentleman deliberately states that in a certain contingency of the Republican party having power he is for war; and I undertake here to say that, in all the mad, hot wrath in the Thirty-sixth Congress that precipitated the revolt in this country there is not one speech to be found that breathes a more determined rebellion against lawful authority or a guiltier readiness to resist it than the speech of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. Speaker, I have not much time left. I said briefly in my first speech that God forbid I should lay at the door of the Southern people, as a people, these atrocities. I repeat it. I lay no such charge at their door. Sir, I have read in this "ex parte humbug report" that there were deep movements among the Southern people about these atrocities; that there was a profound sensibility. I know that the leading officers of the Confederacy protested against them; I know that many of the subordinate officers protested against them. I know that an honorable gentleman from North Carolina, now representing his State in the other end of the Capitol, protested against them. But I have searched the records in vain to find that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] protested against them. They were known to the Confederate Congress; they were known at the doorway of your Senate and along the corridors of your Capitol. The honorable and venerable gentleman in my eye at this moment who served in the Confederate Congress, and who had before served in the Senate of the United States, himself brought them to the attention of the Confederate Congress, and I class him with great gladness among those whose humanity was never quenched by the fires of the rebellion. I allude to Hon. Henry S. Foote.

My time is running and I have very little left. I confess—and I say it to the gentleman from Georgia with no personal unkindness—I confess that my very blood boiled, if there was anything of tradition, of memory, of feeling, it boiled, when I heard the gentleman, with his record, which I have read, seconded and sustained by the gentleman from New York, arraigning the administration of Abraham Lincoln, throwing obloquy and slander upon the grave of Edwin M. Stanton, and demanding that Jefferson Davis should be restored to full citizenship in this country. Ah! that is a novel spectacle; the gentleman from Georgia does not know how novel; the gentleman from New York ought to know. The gentleman from Georgia does not know and he cannot know how many hundred thousands of northern bosoms were lacerated by his course.

Mr. HILL. I never said it, Mr. BLAINE; you are mistaken.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no; you accused the administration of Mr. Lincoln with breaking the cartel and violating the honor of the Government, and a thousand other things; the speech as published in the papers show it. And as soon as he made it the gentleman from New York run to him in hot haste to congratulate him, sympathizing, I suppose, with the assault.

Mr. HILL. Upon that subject I read nothing but published letters and documents, and of northern origin at that.

Mr. BLAINE. I repeat, that proposition strikes—I might say almost terror into northern hearts; that here, in an American Congress, the gentleman who offered that resolution in the Confederate Congress, who in his campaign for a seat in this House comes here breathing threatenings and slaughter, who comes here telling you that in a certain contingency he means war, advising his people to be ready for it—that gentleman, profaning the very altar of patriotic liberty with the speech that sends him here, arraigning the Administration that conducted the war and saved the Union—that gentleman asks us to join with him in paying the last full measure of honor that an American Congress can pay to the arch enemy of the Union, the arch-fiend of the rebellion.

Suppose Jefferson Davis is not pardoned; suppose he is not amnestied. Oh! you cannot have a centennial year without that! No man on this side has ever intimated that Jefferson Davis should be refused pardon on account of any political crimes; it is too late for that; it is because of a personal crime.

If you ask that there may be harmonious and universal rejoicing over every forgiven man, release all your criminals; set free every man who has been sentenced for piracy or for murder by your United States courts; proclaim the jubilee indeed.

Mr. HEREFORD. And the whisky convicts!

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, that reminds me of one thing which in the haste and pressure of my hour I might have forgotten. The gentleman from Georgia aimed to be very humorous about General Grant, and said that the logic which I had presented the other day in regard to Jefferson Davis made General Grant responsible for McDonald and Joyce. The gentleman might have thought that he was witty, but I could not see it.

Mr. HILL. I know you could not.

Mr. BLAINE. It was not so witty as the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.] It was more grim. If Jefferson Davis, the moment the crimes of Andersonville had been brought to his attention, had arraigned the offenders with all competent authority, and had issued an order that "no guilty man should escape," there would be some little consistency in the gentleman's position. It was therefore ill-conceived levity, and in very bad taste, for the gentleman to introduce General Grant's name in that connection.

But I am authorized, if the gentleman desires it—not authorized especially to mention it here, but I mention it on the authority of General Grant, whom the gentleman from Georgia impugned in connection with the exchange of prisoners—

Mr. HILL. No, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. To say that one thing touching the exchange of prisoners was that the Davis government observed no honor in regard to it; and General Grant states that the brigade of Carter L. Stephenson, that was dislodged at Chattanooga, was made up of paroled prisoners from Vicksburg, and that Stephenson himself was one of them. He states that the paroled prisoners of one day in front of his line were taken the next. But in stating this he was careful to say that, as to Lee and the two Johnstons and Pemberton, and the other leading Confederate generals, their word was honor itself; but that for the Davis executive government there was no honor in it—none whatever. The gentleman has got enough of General Grant by this time, I hope.

Now in regard to the relative number of prisoners that died in the North and the South respectively, the gentleman undertook to show that a great many more prisoners died in the hands of the Union authorities than in the hands of the rebels. I have had conversations with surgeons of the Army about that, and they say that there were a large number of deaths of rebel prisoners, but that during the latter period of the war they came into our hands very much exhausted, ill-clad, ill-fed, diseased, so that they died in our prisons of diseases that they brought with them. And one eminent surgeon said, without wishing at all to be quoted in this debate, that the question was not only what was the condition of the prisoners when they came to us, but what it was when they were sent back. Our men were taken in full health and strength; they came back wasted and worn—mere skeletons. The rebel prisoners, in large numbers, were, when taken, emaciated and reduced; and General Grant says that at the time such superhuman efforts were made for exchange there were 90,000 men that would have reinforced your armies the next day, prisoners in our hands who were in good health and ready for fight. This consideration sheds a great deal of light on what the gentleman states.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] puts a letter into my hands. I read it without really knowing what it may show:

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Virginia, March 21, 1863.

MY DEAR SIR: If the exigencies of our army require the use of trains for the transportation of corn, pay no regard to the Yankee prisoners. I would rather they should starve than our own people suffer.

I suppose I can safely put it in writing: "Let them suffer." The words are memorable, and it is fortunate that in this case they can be applied properly and without the intervention of a lying quartermaster.

Very truly, your faithful friend,

ROBERT OULD.

Colonel A. C. MYERS.

That is a good piece of literature in this connection. Mr Ould, I believe, was the rebel commissioner to exchange. When the gentleman from Georgia next takes the floor I want him to state what excuse there was for ordering the Florida artillery, in case General Sherman's army got within seven miles of Andersonville, to fire on that stockade.

Mr. HILL. That was just to keep your Army from coming. That is all.

Mr. BLAINE. Upon this point letters have flowed in upon me—letters which, without pretending to any extraordinary tenderness, I say in this presence I could not read without unbecoming emotion.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow me to say—

Mr. BLAINE. I have a letter which states that at Andersonville they had stakes put up with flags in order that the line of fire might be properly directed from the battery of Florida artillery.

Mr. HILL. Oh, that is not so.

Mr. BLAINE. There is that order.

Mr. HILL. That is said to be a forgery. I do not know whether it is genuine or not. You have the records; we have not; you will not let us see them. You merely say what they are. Let us see the whole of them.

Mr. BLAINE. Let us take one single case. I suppose the gentleman would deny that they ever used bloodhounds at Andersonville.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no; though I do not myself know the fact.

Mr. BLAINE. Did the gentleman ever hear of Colonel James H. Fannin, of the first Georgia reserves, who was on duty at Andersonville?

Mr. HILL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLAINE. He says "that Surgeon Turner, the owner of the dogs, belonged to the first regiment of reserves of my company. Then he goes on to tell how the dogs were obtained and how used; and here is one of the returns made by Wirz:

Twenty-five men more escaped during the month, but they were taken by the dogs before the daily returns were made out.

The gentleman is a very able lawyer—

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Has not the time of the gentleman from Maine expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. Hoskins in the chair.) The time of the gentleman from Maine has not expired.

Mr. HANCOCK. He commenced ten minutes before one o'clock.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I ask that the fifty-seventh rule of the House be read. I should like to have it read, because the gentleman from Maine is constantly violating the rules of this House.

Mr. BLAINE. In what respect?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is out of order.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope it will not be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker of the House set the dial exactly at the time the gentleman from Maine commenced his speech, showing exactly when his hour will expire, and the present occupant of the chair when that time is reached will notify the House.

Mr. BLAINE. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. About two minutes.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman is inconsistent. I should like to get him to admit something. He does not deny that bloodhounds were used at Andersonville.

Mr. HILL. I understood they were; I do not know; farm dogs, not bloodhounds.

Mr. BLAINE. Here are four or five Georgia witnesses. I conclude in the two minutes left me by saying that in all the evidence I have adduced I have never asked to bring in one piece of Union testimony; the whole of it is from Confederate prisoners.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the administration of Martin Van Buren, that went down in a popular convulsion in 1840, had no little of obloquy thrown upon it because it had ventured to hunt the Seminoles in the swamps of Florida with bloodhounds.

A MEMBER. No bloodhounds there.

Mr. BLAINE. Blood-thirsty dogs were sent after the hiding savages, and the civilization of the nineteenth century and the Christian feeling of the American people revolted at it. And I state here, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] cannot deny it, that upon the testimony of witnesses as numerous as would require me all day to read bloodhounds were used; that large packs of them were kept, and Georgia officers commanded them; that they were sent after the poor unfortunate, shrinking men who by any accident could get out of that horrible stockade. I state, sir, that the civilization of the world stands aghast at what was done at Andersonville. And the man who did that was sustained by Jefferson Davis, and promoted. Yet the gentleman says that was analogous to General Grant sending McDonald to the penitentiary.

Mr. Speaker, in view of all these facts I have only to say that if the American Congress, by a two-thirds vote, shall pronounce Jefferson Davis worthy to be restored to the full rights of American citizenship, I can only vote against it and hang my head in silence, and regret it. [Applause.]

PRACTICABLE AMNESTY.

In the House of Representatives, Jan. 14, 1876.

MR. BLAINE:

MR. SPEAKER, the object of this side of the House is not to become obstructive, is not to delay legislation by those means with which in the last Congress we were made so familiar. We have no desire to filibuster, although the civil-rights bill, which was designed to give the rights of manhood to the colored members, was ordered to be reported regularly from a committee, and for seventeen consecutive Monday mornings filibustering cut off the chance to report it; and one of the chief parliamentary glories of my honorable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] was that by extreme use of this power he prevented the consideration of that bill. We design no such process. We simply desire to have a vote upon the question whether Jefferson Davis shall be included in this general amnesty; and in addition to that, if my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS], who smiles with that winsome smile to which I am always ready to respond, will allow me, he will observe that my amendment is better than his in another respect. I will read it in the original terms in which I offered it:

"That all persons now under disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, with the exception of Jefferson Davis, late President of the so-called Confederate States, shall be relieved of such disabilities upon their appearing before any judge of the United States and taking and subscribing, in open court, the following oath, duly attested:"

Now the gentlemen's amendment makes it necessary that an oath be taken in any court in any State, a court of probate for instance—any small court. I think that this is a matter with which the United States is dealing. It is a governmental matter between the Government of the United States and some of its erring children. They are coming back to the United States to be reclothed and rehabilitated with the full rights and glories of American citizenship. I think that important transaction should be cognizable only in courts of the United States. In that respect I claim that my amendment is better than that of the gentleman from Massachusetts. As to the oath proposed in the two amendments, there is no difference between them, or if there is any difference it is merely verbal.

I hold in my hand a letter which I endeavored to have this morning the poor privilege of reading, and which I could not get, but again under the rules of the House, always beneficent; and which I have no doubt will always be beneficent as administered by the honorable occupant of the chair, I have that privilege. This morning I received a letter which I commend to gentlemen from the South. With that fascinating eloquence which my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] possesses, he called your attention to the great value in this centennial year of having no man in the length and breadth of the land under the slightest political disabilities, and why except poor Jefferson Davis! I have here a letter written to me without any request, and, so far as I know, without any expectation that it would be made public; but I am sure that even if it be a private letter the gentleman writing it will pardon me for reading it. It is as follows:

"RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA,
"January 12, 1876.

"MY DEAR SIR: I observe there is excitement in the House on the amnesty proposition.

"In 1870 I was impeached and removed from office as Governor of this State solely because of a movement which I put on foot according to the Constitution and the law to suppress the bloody Ku-Klux. This was done by the Democrats of this State, the allies and the echoes of Northern Democrats. I was also disqualified by the judgment of removal from holding office in this State. The Democratic legislature of this State and its late constitutional convention were appealed to in vain by my friends to remove this disability. The late convention, in which the Democrats had one majority by fraud, refused by a strict party vote to remove my disabilities thus imposed; and I am now the only man in North Carolina who cannot hold office.

"I think these facts should be borne in mind when the Democrats in Congress clamor for relief to the late insurgent leaders. Pardon the liberty I have taken in referring to this matter, and believe me, truly, your friend,
"W. W. HOLDEN.

"HON. JAMES G. BLAINE."

Now, gentlemen, what have you to say to that? It is purely a political impeachment; not prosecution, but persecution; persecution of a man for opinion's sake. And it is to-day within the design of the Democratic party to remove Governor Ames, of Mississippi, from his chair by impeachment, and to disqualify him from holding office. The legislation proposed here has this end, that two friends of the Union, one a Union man of North Carolina, and the other as gallant a Union soldier as ever tied sash around his body, are to be disfranchised and disabled men, and poor Jefferson Davis is to be let free to enjoy the Centennial at Philadelphia. [Laughter.]

* * * * *
Now I wish to make this proposition that I may bring my bill before the House by unanimous consent, and I will yield to any gentleman to move an amendment to it. I will give to that side of the House all I have asked for this side. Now, if it be the case that gentlemen will refuse that proposition, then it is because they do not want any bill passed. I am for a practicable amnesty. I am for an amnesty that will go through.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. I object.
Mr. BLAINE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will end this matter, which I have within my power. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

THE 128th VOLUME.

THE MOST EMINENT authors of the day, such as Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Max Muller, Prof. Huxley, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Prof. Tyndall, R. A. Proctor, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, Jas. A. Froude, Mrs. Muloch, Mrs. Oliphant, Miss Thackeray, Jean Ingelow, Geo. MacDonald, William Black, Anthony Trollope, R. D.

Blackmore, Matthew Arnold, Henry Kingsley, Thomas Carlyle, W. W. Story, Robert Buchanan, Tennyson, Browning, and many others, are represented in the pages of

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.

In 1876 it will furnish to its readers the productions of the foremost authors above named and many others, embracing the Serial and Short Stories of the LEADING FOREIGN NOVELISTS, and an amount unapproached by any other periodical in the world of the most valuable literary and scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the leading Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers, and Editors, representing every department of knowledge and progress.

THE LIVING AGE (in which "EVERY SATURDAY" has been merged) is a WEEKLY MAGAZINE, giving more than Three and a Quarter Thousand double column octavo pages of reading matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its amount of matter, with freshness owing to its weekly issue, and with a SATISFACTORY COMPLETENESS attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical, and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature, and from the pens of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS.

"It reproduces the best thoughts of the best minds of the civilized world upon all topics of living interest."—PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics, and science of the day."—THE METHODIST, NEW YORK.

"The best of all our eclectic publications."—THE NATION, NEW YORK.

"And the cheapest. A monthly that comes every week."—THE ADVANCE, CHICAGO.

"A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction."—HON. ROBT. C. WINTHROP.

"Its publication in weekly numbers gives to it a great advantage over its monthly contemporaries in the spirit and freshness of its contents."—THE PACIFIC, SAN FRANCISCO.

"Indispensable to every one who desires a thorough compendium of all that is admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."—BOSTON POST.

"Ought to find a place in every American home."—NEW YORK TIMES.

Published weekly at $8.00 a year, free of postage. Now is the time to subscribe, beginning with the New Volume and New Year. Address LITTELL & GAY, Boston.

Club Prices for the Best Home and Foreign Literature.

["Possessed of THE LIVING AGE, and one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation."—PHIL. EVE'S BULLETIN.]

For $10.50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the American $4 monthlies (or HARPER'S WEEKLY or BAZAR, or APPLETON'S JOURNAL, weekly) will be sent for a year, both postpaid; or for $9.50 THE LIVING AGE and Scribner's ST. NICHOLAS. Address as above.

SAVE MONEY

By sending $4.75 for any $4.00 Magazine and THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $6.00,) or $5.75 for the Magazine and THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $3.00.) Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

$77

A WEEK guaranteed to Male and Female Agents in their locality. Costs NOTHING to try it. Particulars free. P. O. VICKERY & CO., Augusta Maine.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.

AGENTS WANTED.

All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at anything else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, etc., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay; now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer.

G. STINSON & CO., Portland, Me.

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL POSTAL GUIDE.

Revised and Published Quarterly by Authority of the Post-Office Department.

NO. 4 FOR OCTOBER NOW READY,

CONTAINING

TWO ALPHABETICAL LISTS of all the Post Offices in the United States.

LISTS OF MONEY ORDER and Letter Carrier Offices.

FULL DIRECTIONS about Money Orders and Registered Letters.

RATES of Foreign and Domestic Postage.

HOURS OF ARRIVAL AND CLOSING of Mails in all the Principal Cities.

DISTANCES by shortest Mail Routes between the Principal Cities.

RULINGS of the Post-Office Department during the last quarter, including

THE NEW LAW about postage on Third Class Matter, and

All the information required by those who use the Mails.

TERMS: Single copies, 50 cents; for sale at the News Stands and Book Stores. Subscriptions, $1.50 a year, received at any Post-Office, or on application to the publishers.

H. O. HOUGHTON AND COMPANY,
Boston.

H. O. HOUGHTON AND COMPANY, New York.

1876.

Vol. 6.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A
CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,
A Complete Set—Three Volumes—of the Republic,
HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A
CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,
A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING
THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,
BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,
A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE FIFTH VOLUME,
Which closes with the December number of 1875, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

JA
3
R419

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. VII.—No. 2.

AUGUST, 1876.

Whole No. 42.

Contents:

	PAGE
The New Conspiracy—Vital Issues of 1876 Considered.....	65
The Republican Party: Has it been Faithful to Its Trust?.....	76
The Theory of the Right to Ignore the State a Fallacy.....	85
The Bloody Shirt.....	89
Governor Hayes' Letter Accepting the Nomination for the Presidency.	91
What our Public Schools have Done for the Nation.....	93
The First Vote.....	94
Tilden and Tweed.....	95
The True Inwardness of Democracy.....	96
Democratic Political Slander.....	97
The Manufacture of Paper Money.....	99
A Warning to the South.....	102
Education in the Public Schools.....	103
General Hayes on the Currency Question.....	104
The Ideal and the Real—Democratic Stagnation.....	105
Democratic Falsehood.....	107
Work and Vote.....	108
What Democrats think of Hayes and Wheeler.....	109
General Hayes in Military and Civil Life.....	111
Official Integrity.....	112
A Remarkable Centennial Celebration.....	113
The Work of the Forty-fourth Congress.....	116
Cheap Buncombe.....	118
Review of the Month.....	119
Executive and Department Doings.....	121
The Utopian System.....	129

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

July, 1876.

Vol. 7.

PROSPECTUS.

Vol. 7.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its seventh volume with the July number.

Its publishers are pleased to announce that it has grown steadily in public favor and that it is regarded by all good citizens who have consulted its pages as a power for good throughout the land.

Its past course—consistent, fearless, patriotic—is the index of its future. It will defend the right, denounce the wrong, and endeavor to point out, at all times, the true path for all who love their country to follow.

A sentinel upon the watch-tower of freedom, it will be found at its post of duty to give the word of warning, and sound the alarm should any danger threaten the peace of the Nation.

It will favor the maintenance, by all legitimate means, of free schools, devoid of sectarian influences, and will oppose any attempt to divide the school funds, believing that such division, whether made in the interest of the Catholic Church or its opponents, will ultimately destroy the system of free education, and that civil and religious toleration on which our institutions rest.

It will do all within its power to develop true friendship between the citizens of the North and the South, and for this purpose will advocate the recognition of justice and equality before the law as the only means to secure lasting friendship and its two allies, peace and security.

The Presidential contest of 1876 will be one of the most important in our history. On its issue depends the future policy of the Government. The vital question to be answered by the people is, "Shall the party that proved faithless in war be trusted in peace, and those who saved the country be set aside for those who endeavored to destroy it?"

On this question THE REPUBLIC will take its position at the head of the loyal column, and will do its best to keep the old flag flying until the voice of the nation shall announce that Republicanism—the synonym of justice and liberty—has again triumphed over the enemies of good government.

THE REPUBLIC calls upon its friends to aid it in the great work of the present and future. It desires each subscriber to send in at least one additional name to help swell its ranks, and thus add to its power and activity. Is it asking too much—in consideration of the valuable material furnished the cause—to ask that our friends everywhere exert themselves to secure for THE REPUBLIC as many new subscribers as possible?

To the Republican press of the country the magazine sends greeting and cheer. The signs of the times indicate a glorious victory in November. Let no effort be relaxed to make it complete and effective. Insist upon thorough organization, a personal canvass of all doubtful or close districts, the distribution of well-considered documents, and the practice of that vigilance which alone can secure success. If our brethren of the press will but do their duty as faithfully as in the past, victory will be certain.

For their generous confidence and warm support the publishers of THE REPUBLIC return thanks, and hope in the future, as in the past, to deserve by well-doing the good-will so often expressed.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VII. WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST, 1876. No. 2.

THE NEW CONSPIRACY.

WHAT IS MEANT BY THE RESTORATION OF THE CONFEDERATE DEMOCRACY TO POWER—THE VITAL ISSUES OF 1876 CONSIDERED.

The surrender at Appomattox closed the war and yielded the dominion of the Confederacy to the undisputed authority of the National Government; but in the transfer of the conflict from the field to the forum the nation was confronted with consequences of the struggle as grave and momentous as the war itself. Eleven States were found in social and political chaos and all form of civil government therein destroyed. The highest considerations of statesmanship and sound policy dictated that they should be speedily reconstructed and restored to their constitutional relations in the Union; but how was this to be accomplished? Four millions of emancipated slaves and five millions of disloyal citizens may be said to have comprised the entire population out of which the proposed governments were to be formed. In the nature of things the conduct of the late Confederate in this new and wholly changed relation of citizenship became a subject of anxious inquiry. He had surrendered the sword of rebellion at home and the arts of diplomacy abroad, and sworn to renew his allegiance; but could he be trusted to found free and loyal governments on the basis of a complete and veritable freedom for all, and to aid in securing within those States the results of the nation's victory?

FALSE TEACHINGS.

Unfortunately there was little in his antehad imbued his mind with the most pernicious heresies. The disciple of Calhoun, or the devotee of Davis, Slidell, and Yancey, he was indoctrinated with a measure of political poison which the fire of battle intensified and consecrated rather than destroyed. These teachings constituted his very best conception of the nature of the Government and his rights and duties as a citizen. The impracticability of maintaining them by rebellion was settled, but the deep-seated convictions which prompted that effort remained unchanged.

Yet, notwithstanding these embarrassments which attended the experiment of reconstruction and made wise and prudent men falter in the adoption of a policy, the sworn enemy, who had just surrendered his treason with a broken heart and had given no evidence that he could be trusted as a worthy citizen, was promptly restored to all the rights and privileges he had forfeited, and the States he was destined to control were readmitted to the Union with largely increased political power.

THE VITAL ISSUE.

But there were national considerations quite as vital as those peculiarly local to the South. In 1861 the Representatives in Congress from the slave States numbered 74 against 159 from the States then free, while under the present apportionment they have

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its seventh volume with the July number.

Its publishers are pleased to announce that it has grown steadily in public favor and that it is regarded by all good citizens who have consulted its pages as a power for good throughout the land.

Its past course—consistent, fearless, patriotic—is the index of its future. It will defend the right, denounce the wrong, and endeavor to point out, at all times, the true path for all who love their country to follow.

A sentinel upon the watch-tower of free lorn, it will be found at its post of duty to give the word of warning, and sound the alarm should any danger threaten the peace of the Nation.

It will favor the maintenance, by all legitimate means, of free schools, devoid of sectarian influences, and will oppose any attempt to divide the school funds, believing that such division, whether made in the interest of the Catholic Church or its opponents, will ultimately destroy the system of free education, and that civil and religious toleration on which our institutions rest.

It will do all within its power to develop true friendship between the citizens of the North and the South, and for this purpose will advocate the recognition of justice and equality before the law as the only means to secure lasting friendship and its two allies, peace and security.

The Presidential contest of 1876 will be one of the most important in our history. On its issue depends the future policy of the Government. The vital question to be answered by the people is, "Shall the party that proved faithless in war be trusted in peace, and those who saved the country be set aside for those who endeavored to destroy it?"

On this question THE REPUBLIC will take its position at the head of the loyal column, and will do its best to keep the old flag flying until the voice of the people shall announce that Republicanism—the synonym of justice and liberty—has again triumphed over the enemies of good government.

THE REPUBLIC calls upon its friends to aid it in the great work of the present and future. It desires each subscriber to send in at least one additional name to help swell its ranks, and thus add to its power and activity. Is it asking too much—in consideration of the valuable material furnished the cause—to ask that our friends everywhere exert themselves to secure for THE REPUBLIC as many new subscribers as possible?

To the Republican press of the country the magazine sends greeting and cheer. The signs of the times indicate a glorious victory in November. Let no effort be relaxed to make it complete and effective. Insist upon thorough organization, a personal canvass of all doubtful or close districts, the distribution of well-considered documents, and the practice of that vigilance which alone can secure success. If our brethren of the press will but do their duty as faithfully as in the past, victory will be certain.

For their generous confidence and warm support the publishers of THE REPUBLIC return thanks, and hope in the future, as in the past, to deserve by well-doing the good-will so often expressed.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VII.

WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST, 1876.

No. 2.

THE NEW CONSPIRACY.

WHAT IS MEANT BY THE RESTORATION OF THE CONFEDERATE DEMOCRACY TO POWER—THE VITAL ISSUES OF 1876 CONSIDERED.

The surrender at Appomattox closed the war and yielded the dominion of the Confederacy to the undisputed authority of the National Government; but in the transfer of the conflict from the field to the forum the nation was confronted with consequences of the struggle as grave and momentous as the war itself. Eleven States were found in social and political chaos and all form of civil government therein destroyed. The highest considerations of statesmanship and sound policy dictated that they should be speedily reconstructed and restored to their constitutional relations in the Union; but how was this to be accomplished? Four millions of emancipated slaves and five millions of disloyal citizens may be said to have comprised the entire population out of which the proposed governments were to be formed. In the nature of things the conduct of the late Confederate in this new and wholly changed relation of citizenship became a subject of anxious inquiry. He had surrendered the sword of rebellion at home and the arts of diplomacy abroad, and sworn to renew his allegiance; but could he be trusted to found free and loyal governments on the basis of a complete and veritable freedom for all, and to aid in securing within those States the results of the nation's victory?

FALSE TEACHINGS.

Unfortunately there was little in his antecedents to inspire confidence. The education that made secession and rebellion easy had imbued his mind with the most pernicious heresies. The disciple of Calhoun, or the devotee of Davis, Slidell, and Yancey, he was indoctrinated with a measure of political poison which the fire of battle intensified and consecrated rather than destroyed. These teachings constituted his very best conception of the nature of the Government and his rights and duties as a citizen. The impracticability of maintaining them by rebellion was settled, but the deep-seated convictions which prompted that effort remained unchanged.

Yet, notwithstanding these embarrassments which attended the experiment of reconstruction and made wise and prudent men falter in the adoption of a policy, the sworn enemy, who had just surrendered his treason with a broken heart and had given no evidence that he could be trusted as a worthy citizen, was promptly restored to all the rights and privileges he had forfeited, and the States he was destined to control were readmitted to the Union with largely increased political power.

THE VITAL ISSUE.

But there were national considerations quite as vital as those peculiarly local to the South. In 1861 the Representatives in Congress from the slave States numbered 74 against 159 from the States then free, while under the present apportionment they have 106 to 185 from the North. Thus, a solid Southern vote, which the Democracy have determined to secure in the election next November at all hazards, with only 40 Representatives from the North, will give the South undisputed control of that body, while it will require only 10 votes from the North to also give it control of the Senate. According to this basis it will be seen furthermore that with the addition of only 47 electoral votes to the 138 belonging to the South that section will be enabled to elect a President and Vice President and enter upon absolute control of the Government. It was this alarming possibility, which now presents itself in a practical and threatening form, that made men doubt the wisdom of any system of Southern restoration which might ever enable the rebel citizen to gain the ascendancy and take possession of the Republic. A brief experience of ten years has demonstrated that the fears and misgivings of those times were indeed well founded. Not content with the usurpation of authority in half the States of the South by means that trample under foot every essential principle of reconstruction and hold the laws of God and man in utter defiance, they propose now, by the same nefarious system, to usurp the authority of the nation.

This being the manifest spirit of the combined master element of the South, which to-day is better organized and more thoroughly united and determined than at any time since it surrendered on the field, it is pertinent to inquire with what temper it approaches the National Capital.

SLAVERY VERSUS FREEDOM.

It is well known that two distinct sets of ideas have long divided the North and the South. The North has ever been jealous of her institutions of freedom and protected all her citizens alike in their enjoyment. Freedom of speech, freedom of political thought and action under the widest latitude, and a patriotic, paramount loyalty to the nation have been held as cardinal tenets among her people. The South has ever been exclusive, intolerant, illiberal, domineering, and sectional. Her inheritance of freedom was subordinated to the more "sacred" inheritance of slavery, by which every principle of Government, every right and duty of the citizen, and every sentiment of loyalty and patriotism was determined. The National Government was regarded only as an instrument to be manipulated for the protection and extension of the "divine" institution, and when at last an indignant and outraged people protested against this high abuse, the Government was declared a failure and its dissolution demanded.

BOURBONISM ALIVE AND DEFIANT.

But we are told that the sad lessons of the war and the correcting influences of time, accompanied by a wholly changed condition of affairs, have worked a corresponding improvement in the sentiments and aspirations of the Southern Democracy, and that they may now be as fully trusted with all the interests of the Government as the loyal men of the North who have ever been its friends. Would that an impartial inquiry, seeking only to find the truth, might sustain this assumption; but a familiar acquaintance, based upon personal experience and observation, with the temper of the old slaveholding element of the South and its expectations staked upon Democratic ascendancy, shows that no more dangerous and fatal delusions could be entertained.

'Tis true, slavery and secession, the primal causes of Southern alienation, are dead and buried, but it is equally true that their authors and advocates, and terrible consequences, still survive. The Hills, Gordons, and Lamars who led the Confederates into rebellion with enthusiastic ardor continue to be their chosen leaders, and are supported with all the zeal and devotion of former days. The loss of thousands of their bravest sons and millions of treasure, with ruined homes and universal impoverishment and sorrow inflicted upon them, has not taken a scintilla of their confidence from the authors of their misfortunes; and why? Simply for the reason that they still believe the "Lost Cause" to have been just and righteous, and hold it in affectionate remembrance as the palladium of their lost liberties.*

*The South is to-day ruled over by the miserable thrall of Yankeedom; but they cannot muzzle our chivalry and patriotic devotion to the "Lost Cause." We have fought for our rights, but in God's dispensation we are vanquished, but not cowed. Slavery was a divine institution, and we must have that institution or the South will ever be bankrupt. They speak of our cause as the "Lost Cause." If so

The politician who seeks their favor and has exhausted every other expedient without success, can appeal to this fond sentiment with unerring assurance. It is the sentiment of the hustings, the church and the school, and unites society in its tender ties as the only remaining emblem of common sufferings in a common cause. Every idea of human liberty, every principle by which they would govern the State and the Nation, every sense of justice toward their fellow men, every conception of their duty as citizens, and every hope they have for themselves or for the nation, is limited by the traditions, teachings, and prejudices of the Past; and to dissent from these and adopt the more enlightened and progressive views shall it be lost forever? No! a new generation has sprung up, and at a not far distant day there will be "stars and bars" floating proudly over our Sunny South. In the next political campaign we must, even if in the minority, support a Southern man who will build up our interests and hurl the Yankee pickpockets from our midst. We are to-day united to the Puritanical host by an artificial tie; but we are a distinct people, and God and the right will enable us to show to the world the truth and the equity of our claims. Our statesmen now in Congress are the cream of that body, and are the only element that reflects credit on the United States. Is it not better to hang on to the "Lost Cause" than to stay in a government of corruption?—[Extract from an address delivered by Rev. J. Taylor Martin at Charlotte, N. C., May 5, 1876, Confederate memorial day.]

We bow not in the spirit of cravens; and while we bend to the "higher-law" authority, that pollutes our Republic as transmitted to us by our fathers, respect for ourselves, our posterity, and the good opinion of mankind forbid our enrolling ourselves as the whining slaves, or silent slaves, of the conquering power. We have surrendered none of our convictions, and still claim the right of VINDICATION! In looking back at our past actions and motives, and the wrongs we have suffered and are still suffering, we confess that we have no regrets for the choice we made between the "higher-law" license of majorities in the Union and the sacred security of self-government in the States—between the Federal and Confederate Governments. We are not conscious of a solitary dereliction of duty either as citizens or soldiers, and feel that truth, reason, and religion exculpate us from wrong-doing. We know we were right, and though crushed to earth we should ever remember, and teach our children to remember, our CAUSE WAS JUST! We are still proud of the cause and glory in the fight we made. Posterity will yet decide that, though we lost all but honor, to save honor it was better to have fought and lost than not to have fought at all."—[Extract from an address by ex-Governor Benjamin G. Humphries, of Mississippi, before a reunion of the 13th Mississippi Confederate infantry, at Meridian, November 22, 1875. Governor Humphries was a Confederate major general, and was elected Governor of Mississippi in 1865 and served until 1868, when he was again nominated for that office. He is probably the most popular Democrat in the State.]

of the North meets with a visitation of calumny, denunciation, and proscription that the most courageous men will shrink from encountering.

A WAR OF INVASION AND VANDALISM.

Kindred to this feeling, and to add to its intensity, is a deep sense of the imagined injuries inflicted by the North. The war is looked upon as a savage vandalism, which despoiled their property, murdered their sons, and suppressed their dearest rights wholly without cause—a crusade of oppression and robbery that perpetrated the most atrocious wrongs upon an unoffending, innocent, and blameless people; and this belief in the great wrongs of the North, and their own unmerited suffering, is as strong to-day as it was ten years ago, and stubbornly refuses to be reconciled except upon its own terms.

HOW THE SITUATION IS ACCEPTED.

If the modifying influence of time has perceptibly improved this well known temper it is difficult to discover the character or extent of the change. In every instance where new conditions have been prescribed they have been accepted only in empty form and no further than the force of necessity required, and the best is regarded only as an unmixed evil and is pointed to as evidence of continued Northern innovation and oppression.

The thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution were accepted only in this spirit, and are endured under a standing protest and menace which holds them in utter disregard and contempt. As was said by the Mobile Register, (Democratic,) in its issue of the 14th of June last, "those amendments to the Constitution stand a reproach to the honor and discretion of the country."*

*We have to contend with the blunder of the XVth Amendment while it stands as best we can. Ridiculous appeals to the reason and judgment of the negro have been the cause of incalculable injury in the inflation of his vanity, and making him believe he was of real consequence as a governing element in the body politic. Now that the negro in this State is down, and his personal self-conceit well knocked out of him, it is, probably, a fit time for the white people to impress upon him that the white people will, in future, control the politics of this State, and that he should keep himself in his proper sphere, and leave to the intelligent white man the exclusive use of Statecraft for the best interest of both races. Impress him continually with the

But beneath this superficial recognition of right principles the cherished sentiments of a lifetime of hostility to free institutions and national supremacy, and the grievances of war, lie undiminished, and are but awaiting the opportunity to assert themselves without compromise in the administration of the Government. With this unconquerable spirit defiant as ever in the Southern Democracy, it is not difficult to foreshadow their inexorable policy. Maddened by defeat, desperate of impoverishment, relentless in hostility, barren in principle, beggared in honesty, faithless in promise, and ravenous for the spoils of office, their accession to power would signal an era of national prostitution, spoliation, and revenge unexampled in the history of free governments. Traitors would succeed patriots in public places; the policy of the Confederacy supplant the policy of the nation; and retaliation upon the North for its imagined wrongs, and payment of the South for its losses, become the controlling objects of their policy. This species of plunder would be justified as a measure of peace, reconciliation, and justice, and the reorganization of the Government under the Confederate theory be demanded to restore to the South the constitutional rights and liberties wrenched from her by a relentless enemy!

Thus the victory of the nation in war would be turned into a triumph of treason in peace, and traitors be enabled to accomplish within the Union what they failed to without, and reward themselves from the national treasury for the losses entailed by their defeat.

And let it not be said that this picture of the impending crisis is overdrawn. The present Confederate House has given us a foretaste of a policy even more alarming and ruinous than has here been depicted, and at a time, too, when but one branch of Congress is in control of the Democracy, and it is impossible that their wicked schemes can be immediately realized. What, then, may not be expected when the South gets control of the Government, and intrenches itself in power as it did before the war?

idea of his unfitness for the ballot, and his proper place on election day away from the polls.—Meridian (Miss.) Mercury, November 20, 1865.

A FEW IMPORTANT FACTS.

Some idea of the magnitude of the proposed raid on the Treasury may be formed by examining a few of the proposed "measures of relief" introduced in the House. The first in order is a bill presented by Mr. Scales, of North Carolina, (H. R. 3145,) entitled a "bill to refund certain direct taxes on land collected from citizens in the late insurrectionary States under the act of August 5, 1861."

The law of 1861 levied a direct tax of $20,000,000, and apportioned the same among the several States, according to population, for payment. All of the States but those in insurrection assumed their quotas and paid them, excepting a small balance still due. The amount apportioned to the South was as follows:

States.	Quota.	Uncollected.
Virginia	$937,550	$260,396
North Carolina	576,194	173,144
South Carolina	363,570	140,869
Georgia.....	584,367	502,167
Florida	77,522	71,027
Alabama.....	529,313	529,313
Mississippi.....	413,084	343,137
Louisiana.....	385,886	75,022
Texas.....	355,016	197,055
Arkansas	261,886	102,983
Tennessee	669,498	66,654
Total	$5,153,886	$2,661,776

When the war closed the collection of this tax South was begun, and continued until July, 1866, when Congress passed an act suspending further collection until January 1, 1869. No effort has been made to collect any portion of this tax since 1866, but, not satisfied with this generous and magnanimous forbearance on the part of the Government, it is now proposed by Mr. Scales to refund to the tax-payers the $2,492,100 collected, alleging as reasons that said taxes "were taken from a people greatly impoverished by the war, and wholly unable to pay the same, and that the burdens of taxation may be made equal, and that all the people alike in said States may be equally relieved by the act of suspension." It seems not to have occurred to these selfish economists that there remains still another "inequality of burdens" imposed by the crisis that demanded this assessment that is not relieved by the bill in question. Not only did the loyal people of the North pay the bulk of the twenty millions assessment, but mortgaged their property and their sacred honor for two thousand six hundred millions more, and gave the priceless lives of half a million of their bravest sons to save the Union from destruction by those who are now asking for this relief. Who will repay their taxes and repair their losses? By what system of equity and justice are they to be indemnified?

THE COTTON-TAX JOB.

Akin to this measure is the scheme to refund the tax collected on raw cotton in the Gulf States during the years 1865-'66-'67, when the law under which it was levied was repealed. The aggregate amount of this tax, as appears by the books in the Treasury Department, is $68,072,088.

For several years past a determined combination has been at work to secure the refunding of this tax. At first steps were taken to test its constitutionality in the Supreme Court of the United States, but in the decision of the case the court stood equally divided in opinion, which in effect affirmed the law. Then a raid was organized to push the scheme through Congress, and zealous Southern Representatives have vied with one another to secure this appeasing act of plunder for the gratification of their anxious constituents.

HOW IT WOULD WORK.

Ostensibly the bill (H. R. 232) proposes to "refund the tax to the parties who actually produced the cotton," but in fact it is a gigantic job of lobbyists and speculators who have managed to get nearly all of the original claims into their own hands by agreeing to pay a trifling per cent. on their face value if the bill should become a law. The immense sum to be refunded and the cheapness of the purchased claims, with the encouragement offered in Congress, make this the most popular scheme for the lobby ring now pending, and its final passage may be accepted as certain if the South gets possession of Congress.

The present plan proposes to issue bonds of the United States in sums of one hundred, five hundred, and one thousand dollars, payable at the Treasury of the United States to bearer at the end of thirty years from date, in gold, bearing interest at the rate of five per centum per annum, payable semi-annually in gold. The annual interest on this sum would be $3,403,619, and in thirty years would aggregate $102,108,570, thus swelling the claim, principal and accumulated interest, to the enormous amount of $170,180,958.

This is demand No. 2, to relieve an impoverished people, equalize the burdens of taxation, and make loyalty endurable!

SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

But there is another class of demands compared with which the foregoing might be regarded as real luxuries. These comprise the rebel losses during the war.

Under an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1871, the "Southern Claims Commission" was created and empowered to "receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of such claims as should be brought to them of those citizens who remained loyal adherents to the cause and the Government of the United States in States proclaimed as in insurrection against the United States during the rebellion."

It will be observed that this law confines claims exclusively to "loyal adherents," &c., signifying that the Government holds itself responsible to no others for losses sustained by the war. The Southern Claims Commission has adhered strictly to this principle, as will be seen by a few of the eighty standing interrogatories propounded to all claimants:

"Did you ever do anything or say anything against the Union cause; and if so what did you do or say, and why?"

"Were you at all times during the war willing and ready to do whatever you could in aid of the Union cause?"

"Which side did you take when the insurgent States were seceding from the Union in 1860 and 1861?"

"Did you adhere to the Union cause after the States had passed into rebellion or did you go with your State?"

"What were your feelings concerning the battle of Bull Run or Manassas, the capture of New Orleans, the fall of Vicksburg, and the final surrender of the Confederate forces?"

The law allowed two years in which to file claims of this character, and the reports of the Commissioners show that 22,298 have been presented for allowance. Of this number 9,222 have been examined, and about half thereof reported favorably to Congress, to be paid, leaving still 13,076 claims unadjusted. The gross value of all claims filed is $60,258,150.

As has been shown "loyalty" is a test of the validity of claims under this general act, yet it has repeatedly occurred before the Commission that the most violent secessionists and rebels have endeavored by wholesale deception and perjury to prove themselves loyal and to recover on claims that were fraudulent upon their face. False swearing doubtless has carried a few such claims successfully through, but most of them have been rejected as unworthy.

But what becomes of the

TENS OF THOUSANDS of other rebel claimants who have not dared to venture before an "iron-clad" commission, but who regard themselves as equally entitled with loyal men to compensation for private property taken or destroyed by the Union armies. Before what "commission" are they to obtain redress? This question they promptly answer for themselves and the country by electing a tribunal where disloyalty commands a premium rather than works a disability. A peep into the files of the House shows how thoroughly ready they are to improve their opportunity. There, among the various bills under consideration, are scores providing for the special relief of this class of claimants; and it is significant that not half a dozen even suggest "loyalty" as an excuse for their payment. The character of these claims may be judged by examining the following briefs made from the face of the bills as introduced, and showing the name of the introducer, the amount and the purpose of the appropriation:

By Mr. Caldwell, Tenn. A bill to pay the Christian Church, Union City, Tenn., $1,800 for the appropriation of the church for Government purposes.

By Mr. Haralson, Ala. A bill to pay the Medical College of Alabama $50,000 for loss sustained by military occupancy.

By Mr. Clark, Mo. A bill to pay the University of Missouri $17,475 for damages done by soldiers of the Union army.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Cooper's Chapel, Tennessee, $1,441.66 for use and occupation of said building by military forces of the United States.

By Mr. Wilson, W. Va. A bill to pay the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Clarksburg, West Virginia, $2,100 for the use and occupancy of said church by Union soldiers.

By Mr. Faulkner, W. Va. A bill to pay the M. E. Church at Harper's Ferry $3,000 for the occupancy and destruction by United States troops.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay La Grange Synodical College, Tennessee, $34,300 for rent and destruction of building by United States troops.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Shelby Medical College at Nashville $20,604.90 for rent and for property taken from said building during the war.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay St. Cecilia Academy at Nashville $4,250 for supplies taken therefrom by the Union army.

By Mr. Faulkner, W. Va. A bill to pay the Methodist Episcopal Church at New Creek, W. Va., $1,000 for converting said house of worship into a bakery for Federal soldiers.

By Mr. Tucker, Va. A bill to pay Washington and Lee University (formerly Washington University) $17,484 for injury done to said university in June, 1864.

By Mr. Faulkner, W. Va. A bill to pay the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mill Creek $1,040 for the use and abuse of said church by Federal soldiers.

By Mr. Riddle, Tenn. A bill to pay Cumberland University, Tennessee, $10,000 for property appropriated by Union soldiers.

By Mr. Faulkner, W. Va. A bill to pay the Baptist Church of Charlestown, W. Va., $1,400 for the conversion of said church to the use of the army.

By Mr. Gunter, Ark. A bill to pay the Christian Church at Fayetteville, Arkansas, $2,464 for property taken from said church and used during the war.

By Mr. Durham, Ky. A bill to pay Madison Female Academy $10,325 for damage done said institution by Union troops.

By Mr. Bright, Tenn. A bill to pay the Presbyterian Church of Murfreesborough, Tennessee, $10,000, said church having been used as a hospital for sick and wounded Union soldiers.

By Mr. Hunton, Va. A bill to pay Fairfax county $1,595 for timber cut from the poor-house tract of land by Federal soldiers.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Andrew J. Duncan, of Nashville, $39,229, on account of property taken and used by United States military forces.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay D. W. Glassie and others $9,000 for occupation, consumption, and destruction of their property by the armies of the United States.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Mrs. Sarah A. Turner $12,400 for damage done to property at her home in Rutherford county, Tennessee.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Elihu S. Marshall $5,000 for property taken from him by the United States army.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Martha A. Stevens, Tennessee, $2,478 for claims against the Government.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Duncan Marr $8,024 for wood and brick taken from him at Clarksville, Tennessee.

By Mr. Bright, Tenn. A bill to pay Wm. Park $1,304.05 for property taken from him at Nashville, Tennessee.

By Mr. Bright, Tenn. A bill to pay Thos. Hoard $58,995 for supplies taken and used by the army of the United States from the farm of said Hoard, (the battle-ground of Stone's River,) near Murfreesborough, Tennessee.

By Mr. Atkins, Tenn. A bill to refund to the citizens of McNairy county, Tennessee, certain sums of money, aggregating $20,000, (estimated,) the same having been a forced loan under a special order by Col. J. W. Harney, 48th Illinois volunteer troops, issued December 14, 1862.

By Mr. Wells, Miss. A bill to pay Mrs. Priscilla Burwell, of Vicksburg, $6,250 for rent of property by the United States army.

By Mr. Whitthorne, Tenn. A bill to pay Walter Akin, Maury county, Tennessee, $4,700.50.

By Mr. Whitthorne, Tenn. A bill to pay A. J. Reed $9,603.75 for forty-five bales of cotton taken from him by Gen. Mitchell and Gen. Draper, of the United States army.

By Mr. Davis, N. C. A bill to pay Amelia Ann Whitaker $1,950 for stores taken and used by the United States army.

By Mr. Faulkner, W. Va. A bill to pay the county of Randolph, Virginia, $1,200 for damages done the court-house, jail, clerk's office, roads and bridges during the occupancy by Federal troops.

By G. Wiley Wells, Miss. A bill to pay A. Burwell, Vicksburg, $3,000 for wood and lumber taken from his farm near Vicksburg.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Rosetta Freel $3,100.70 for destruction of property by United States military forces.

By Mr. Caldwell, Tenn. A bill to pay F. L. Sidebottom $3,958 for property appropriated by the United States army.

By Mr. Ely, Ala. A bill to pay William Stewart $2,500 for rent and damage of furniture by certain officers of the army at Mobile.

By Mr. Willshire, Ark. A bill to pay John Jackson, $3,665.80 for property taken from him by the United States army while operating in the State of Arkansas.

By Mr. Faulkner, W. Va. A bill to pay Carey Thompson $2,000 "for property taken during the late civil war by the United States army."

By Mr. Terry, Va. A bill to pay Philip A. Wellford $3,150 for private property taken possession of by officers of the United States at Richmond, April 18, 1865.

By Mr. Willis, N. Y., (Democrat.) A bill to pay Mrs. Sarah A. Gayle, Amita county, Miss., $15,700 "for certain cotton and salt belonging to her and taken by the United States Government."

By Mr. Willis, N. Y., (Democrat.) A bill to pay Horace D. Mead, of Yazoo county, Miss., $24,267 for certain cotton taken from him by United States authorities.

By Mr. Willis, N. Y., (Democrat.) A bill to pay James M. Watson, of Rankin county, Miss., $9,100 for certain cotton taking from him by the United States Government.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay John Morrisson, of Memphis, $4,600 for rent and damage of property by United States military authorities.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Elizabeth Burke, of Memphis, $2,000 for loss of property by the United States military forces.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay R. Dudley Frayser $25,400 for rent of his cotton shed and store house in Memphis and for buildings destroyed by United States military authorities.

By Mr. Atkins, Tenn. A bill to pay James A. Heard, of Memphis, $10,000 for 59 bales of cotton taken by the authorities of the United States from his farm in Clarke county, Miss.

By Mr. Gause, Ark. A bill to pay the treasurer of Prairie county, Ark., $30,000 for use and destruction of the court-house and jail by the Federal army during the late war.

By Mr. Morgan, Mo. A bill to pay Mary J. Josling and Lavinia Scott $15,000 for their mill, woolen factory, and dwelling destroyed by Union soldiers under military orders.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Mrs. Sallie Garrett, of Tennessee, $1,730.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Samuel Mosby, of Tennessee, $26,951.74.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay John Allen, of Tennessee, $3,179.20.

By Mr. Harris, Va. A bill to pay Mrs. Cellie Stockton, of Virginia, $1,950 for stores and supplies taken for the use of the United States army.

By Mr. Terry, Va. A bill to pay George C. Wedderburn and J. S. Newberry $1,400 for rent of farm and destruction of property by United States military forces.

By same. A bill to pay C. C. Campbell $6,000 for property taken by United States army under General Stoneman.

By Mr. Morey, La. A bill to pay certain parties named $60,366 for expenses in dredging the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi river in 1859.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay the financial agent of Davidson county, Tennessee, the sum of $36,416.45 in full settlement of claim of said county on account of the occupancy by United States troops of the county court-house.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Mr. H. Howard, Tennessee, $970 on account of property burned by United States army.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Randall Brown, of Nashville, $1,600 for property taken by rebel forces.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay John T. Stratton, of Memphis, $5,236.67 for use of a cotton shed by United States army.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Joseph Tagg, of Memphis, $3,500 for buildings destroyed by United States military authorities.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Ann E. Connell $16,816.31 for buildings and material used and destroyed by United States military authorities at Memphis.

By Mr. Gunter, Ark. A bill to pay Joseph C. Schaller, of Little Rock, $3,264 for cattle and sheep taken by Union soldiers.

By Mr. Goodin. A bill to pay Nicholas White $9,000 for the use and occupancy of his property at Newport News, Virginia, by United States army.

By Mr. O'Neill. A bill to pay James Milinger $19,893.75 for the use and destruction of his property at Nashville, Tenn.

By Mr. Hunton, Va. A bill to pay Ann S. McKenzie $1,500 for property taken by Federal soldiers and destroyed in Fairfax county, Virginia.

By Mr. Darrell, La. A bill to pay Mrs. E. W. F. Chevis $15,895 for property taken from her plantation by the army under command of General N. P. Banks.

By Mr. Darrell, La. A bill to pay John B. Bronssard $850 for oxen, horses, and mules furnished the United States army.

By Mr. Darrell. A bill to pay Lessien Bronssard $4,600.25 for horses, cows, corn, and wood furnished the United States army.

By Mr. Ellis, La. A bill to pay Amalie H. Smith $4,602 for fuel, cattle, and hogs taken from her by the army of the United States in 1862 and 1863.

By Mr. Caldwell. A bill to pay A. E. Lunsford, of Lauderdale county, Tennessee, $5,400 for 18 bales cotton taken by United States troops.

By Mr. Hancock, Texas. A bill to pay Santiago de Leon $2,988 for mules, horses, wagons, and harness taken for the use of the United States Government, at Brownsville, Texas.

By Mr. McFarland, Tenn. A bill to pay

James and Wm. White for 96 bales of cotton taken in 1864, (estimated value $45,000.)

By Mr. Thornburg, Tenn. A bill to pay Hardin Scaggs $235 for supplies furnished the Federal troops.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Peter Targurana $103,740 in payment for two steamboats taken by officers of the United States Government after the close of the war.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Lucia Jameson, of Memphis, $7,650 for rent of storehouse occupied by United States authorities during the war.

By Mr. Darrell, La. A bill to pay Neville Bronssard $600 for beef, cattle, and horses furnished the Union army under General Franklin.

By Mr. Darrell, La. A bill to pay P. J. Francis $9,682.70 for horses, cattle, hogs, and farming implements taken from his estate by troops under General Banks.

By Mr. Darrell, La. A bill to pay Mrs. Raymond Riu $3,000 for cattle and horses taken from her and used by the United States army under General Banks.

By Mr. Darrell, La. A bill to pay J. P. Lewis $1,000 for horses furnished the army under General Banks.

By Mr. J. B. Clark, Mo. A bill to pay William Morrison, of Lexington, Mo., $30,000 for foundery stock, supplies, fixtures, and so forth, burned and destroyed by order of General Lewis Merrill December 22, 1861.

By Mr. Young, La. A bill to pay Reuben S. Jones, of Memphis, $18,492.50. (No purpose stated.)

By Mr. Young. A bill to pay Emmarrilla J. Carr, of Memphis, $1,804 for rent of her dwelling occupied by United States authorities in said city.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay W. B. Hamlin, of Memphis, $36,200, in full payment for property destroyed in Lee county, Arkansas, by Federal troops.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Martha M. Parker, of Memphis, $2,762.50 for rent and damages to property by United States authorities.

By Mr. Rea, Mo. A bill to pay Lawson Moore, of Mo., $2,241.50 for property taken, used, and destroyed by United States troops near Independence, Mo., in 1864.

By Mr. Clark, Mo. A bill to pay Thomas B. Wallace, Lexington, Mo., for destruction of dwelling-house and out-buildings by order of Colonel James A. Mulligan, then in command of United States forces. (No amount given.)

By Mr. Hancock, Texas. A bill to pay David C. Burnet, of Texas, $2,500 for timber taken by United States troops stationed at Fort Lincoln in the fall and winter of 1849.

By Mr. Caldwell, Tenn. A bill to pay W.

W. Waggoner $12,410 for certain quartermaster stores taken from him by United States troops at Will's Point, Tenn.

By Mr. Clymer, Penn. A bill to pay Andrew M. Sallade, of Atlanta, Ga., $17,705.40 for hardware and other goods furnished the United States army.

By Mr. Douglas, Va. A bill to reimburse Essex county, Virginia, for loss of its jail destroyed by fire while occupied by United States troops; and appropriates $3,020 for that purpose.

By Mr. Hunton, Va. A bill to pay Louisa Summers $10,588.75, for property belonging to her taken and used by the United States army near Anandale, Fairfax county, Virginia, during the late war.

By Mr. Milliken, Ky. A bill to pay John M. Elder, of Kentucky, $14,862.50, for 53 bales cotton destroyed by the United States army in the late rebellion, in Talbot county, Georgia.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Charlotte M. Gailer, of Memphis. $400, for damage done her property by Union troops during the war.

By Mr. Hyman, N. C. A bill to pay $7,000 to reimburse Jones county, North Carolina, for destruction of court-house by United States forces in 1863, "the said court-house not being then, or at any other time, used by the authorities of the (so-called) Confederate States for any purposes of the war."

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Mary Maguire, of Shelby county, Tennessee, $1,500 "for property appropriated and destroyed by the United States army during the late war."

By Mr. Warren. A bill to pay Mrs. Amelia A. H. Richards, of Fairfax county, Virginia, $6,335 "for stores and supplies taken for the use of the army of the United States during the late war."

By Mr. Ellis, La. A bill to pay Philip Rhor, of Virginia, $1,600 for tobacco seized by the Federal army in 1864.

By Mr. Candler, Ga. A bill to pay John A. Richardson, of Fayette county, Georgia, $10,000 for property taken and destroyed at Atlanta, Georgia, by United States troops.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay William Park $1,304.05 for property taken and used by the army at Nashville, Tennessee.

By Mr. Bright, Tenn. A bill to pay Ann P. James $12,000 for the occupation and use of her property by the army under General Rosecrans.

By Mr. Bright, Tenn. A bill to pay John E. Baurran, of the Rock City Mills, Nashville, Tennessee, $16,302.16 for the use and occupation of his mills by the United States authorities.

By Mr. Bright, Tenn. A bill to pay

Robertson Popp and William L. Vance for one hundred bales of cotton, (estimated value $50,000,) seized by the United States army, on the Yazoo river, in 1864.

By Mr. Sinnickson, N. J. A bill to pay James R. Thompson, of Virginia, $3,295 for supplies furnished the United States troops during the late war between the States.

By Mr. Dibrell, Tenn. A bill to pay J. M. Bragg and others in Tennessee $6,650 for supplies taken by the Federal armies.

By Mr. Dibrell, Tenn. A bill to pay Joseph J. Cummings $1,200, "the value of his tannery buildings burned by soldiers of the United States army, by order of General Elliott, near Sparta, Tennessee."

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Andrew Morrison $4,645 on account of property used by the United States.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay James H. Charlton, Davidson county, Tennessee, $9,412 on account of property taken from him and used by the army of the United States.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay Georgetown E. Welkinson, of Nashville, $5,000 "on account of property used in the construction of the defenses of Nashville."

By Mr. Wells, Miss. A bill to pay A. Burwell $75,000 for property destroyed at Vicksburg.

By Mr. Wells, Miss. A bill to pay A. Burwell $35,150 for 140 hogsheads and 14 boxes of sugar taken and appropriated by the United States authorities.

By Mr. Scales, N. C. A bill to pay $17,000 to Davidson county, North Carolina, on account of the destruction by fire of the court-house while occupied by United States troops.

By Mr. Singleton, Miss. A bill to pay Joseph R. Shannon, Louisiana, $17,000 for the use of the steamer Shannon while employed in the military service of the United States.

By Mr. Hunton, Va. A bill to pay Aquilla Lockwood, of Virginia, $1,100 for the use and occupancy of his property for military purposes.

By Mr. Hunton, Va. A bill to pay Septimus Brown, of Virginia, for damage to his real estate, in the erection of forts, etc. (No amount stated.)

By Mr. Goode, Va. A bill to pay $65,000 to William and Mary College, of Virginia, "for destruction of their buildings and other property destroyed without authority by disorderly soldiers of the United States."

By Mr. Dibrell, Tenn. A bill to pay John Eastwood, of Gallatin, Tennessee, $351.50 for moneys taken from him by the United States forces.

By Mr. Dibrell, Tenn. A bill to pay B. F. Martin, Charleston, Tennessee, $550 for the use and occupation of his warehouse, stables, etc., by United States troops.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Edgar McDavitt $2,180 for rent of his cotton shed and storehouse in Memphis, Tennessee.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay Samuel H. Duns court, Memphis, $5,236.67 for rent of his cotton shed and storehouse by military authorities.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay E. T. Keel, Memphis, $832 for rent of his storehouse in Memphis.

By Mr. Blount, Ga. A bill to pay Antoine Poullain $2,032.38 for the use of his dwelling and other property in Augusta, Ga.

By Mr. Cabell, Va. A bill to pay A. Bostwick, Halifax, Virginia, $750 for commissary and other stores impressed and taken from him by the officers of Gen. Wright's corps.

By Mr. Boone, Ky. A bill to pay R. C. Smith, of Kentucky, $3,322.86 for property destroyed by Federal gunboats and soldiers.

By Mr. Hunton, Va. A bill to pay R. L. Rotchford, of Fairfax, Virginia, $1,372.49 for the sale of his property under the confiscation act.

By Mr. House, Tenn. A bill to pay John H. Galbraith, Davidson county, Tennessee, $1,600 for property taken and destroyed by United States forces during the war.

By Mr. Caldwell, Tenn. A bill to pay James A. Bowling, of Haywood county, Tennessee, $3,000 for property taken and used by the army during the late war.

By Mr. Blount, Ga. A bill to pay Harriet B. Fulton, of Bibb county, Georgia, the sum of $24,750 for horses, mules, cattle, etc., taken by United States troops.

By Mr. Cabell, Va. A bill to pay Thomas B. Doe, of Danville, Virginia, $6,200.34 for commissary and other supplies taken by the soldiers of the Sixth United States Army Corps.

By Mr. Ellis, Va. A bill to pay W. H. Tegarden, of Mississippi, $12,334 for damage done to his property by United States troops.

By Mr. Riddle, Tenn. A bill to pay Hiram Lyles $1,000 for a fine stable horse taken by Gen. Gillem on his march through East Tennessee.

By Mr. Riddle, Tenn. A bill to pay John O. Cage, of Tennessee, $— for property taken by United States troops during the war.

By Mr. Warren, Mass. A bill to pay Jos. Anderson, Tennessee, $5,000 for lumber used by the United States troops in building pontoons, etc.

By Mr. Knott, Ky. A bill to pay Jacob Kaufman $11,350 for goods and stores taken from him by the rebel General Morgan.

By Mr. Blackburn, Ky. A bill to pay O. Perry $59,677 for wood and lumber taken and used by the military authorities of the United States.

By Mr. Stowell, Va. A bill to pay P. O. Lipscomb, of Virginia, $400 for corn furnished the Sixth Army Corps.

By Mr. Walker, Va. A bill to pay Susanah Cook, of Virginia, the sum of $2,000 for property taken and destroyed by troops of the United States.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay John Pittman, of Memphis, $6,300. (No consideration given.)

By Mr. Brown, Texas. A bill to pay Sylvanus Sanford, of Cass county, Texas, with interest since 1862, the sum of $16,709.15 for seven hogsheads of granulated sugar taken by United States military authority.

By Mr. Young, Tenn. A bill to pay James S. Leath, Tennessee, $2,000. (No consideration mentioned.)

By Mr. Morgan, Mo. A bill to pay Mary J. Josling and Lavinia Scott $15,000, in full compensation for their mill, woolen factory, and store occupied and destroyed by Union soldiers.

The aggregate of these one hundred and forty claims is $1,582,269, and they average $11,301 in value. Such is the character of some of the House bills examined. In the Senate no inquiry has been made extending beyond two bills which are somewhat striking in their provisions. The first, introduced by Mr. Merrimon, of North Carolina, proposes to "repeal so much of section 3480 of the Revised Statutes as forbids the payment of the accounts, claims, and demands therein named, and to appropriate $400,000 to pay the same when duly established." The accounts, claims, and demands referred to are any against the United States which accrued or existed prior to April 13, 1861, in favor of any person who "promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion."

It is well known that the amount of claims barred by this act far exceeds $400,000, although there are no definite figures available fixing the exact sum, and that the claimants voluntarily forfeited their rights and inflicted the loss upon themselves by joining the rebellion.

The other proposition referred to comes from Mr. Johnston, of Virginia. He claims to have found two hundred and six "loyal" citizens in Loudoun county, Virginia, whose property was destroyed in conformity with an order by Major General Sheridan, November 27, 1864, and asks an appropriation of $199,228 for that purpose. The order referred to says:

"This section has been the hot-bed of lawless bands who have from time to time depredated in small parties on the line of army communication, on safeguards left at houses, and on troops. Their real object is plunder and highway robbery. To clear the country of these parties that are bringing destruction on the innocent as well as their guilty supporters by their cowardly acts, you will consume and destroy all forage and subsistence, burn all barns and mills and their contents, and drive off all stock. This order must be literally executed, bearing in mind, however, that no dwellings are to be burned, and that no personal violence be offered the citizens. The ultimate result of the guerilla system of warfare is the total destruction of all private rights in the country occupied by such parties. This destruction may as well commence at once and the responsibility of it must rest upon the authorities at Richmond, who have acknowledged the legitimacy of guerilla bands."

These two bills added to the above amount swell the appropriations to be made on special account alone to $2,181,497.

A BIG BONANZA.

But this skirmishing about the Treasury, whereby only a few thousands or millions are carried off at a time, is found to be too slow and aggravating to satisfy the demand, and while it feeds a few in the front leaves the great army of claimants starving in the rear. It is but the scent of blood to the hungry lion, and something must be done to appease his devouring appetite. In this desperate emergency the intrepid Confederate Riddle, of the 4th district of Tennessee, shows himself equal to the demand and leads the clamoring army in the charge. The plan he proposes is not peace-meal or cowardly in any sense, but a bold, comprehensive scheme, the very daring and magnitude of which challenges admiration. It means plunder by the wholesale under the cover of legalizing statutes.

The bill in question (H. R. 2364) is entitled "a bill directing compensation to be made for the use and occupation of all property by the United States during the late war," and specifically sets forth its objects in the first section, as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow compensation to all citizens of the United States for the use and occupation of their property by the United States army, or any part thereof, during the late civil war in the same manner and under the same regulations as compensation is now allowed for quartermasters' stores used by said army: Provided, however, That the affidavit of the claimant, supported by the competent testimony of any reputable citizen, shall be sufficient proof to establish the fact of use and occupation of such property by said army. But it is not the intention of this act to limit the parties to the amount of proof herein specified, but other additional testimony may be taken to establish the fact of the use and occupation and the rental value of the property occupied."

During four long years the immense army of the Union was marched and encamped exclusively on Southern territory, and the property it occupied in that time may be said to be co-extensive with the area of the Confederate States. From Washington, Cincinnati, and Cairo, south to the Gulf of Mexico, scarcely a landlord or planter could be found who had not at some time during the war been quartered on by the Union troops and sustained damages, which, when aggregated, would be simply fabulous.

THE HIGH CARNIVAL COMPLETED.

But bold, aggressive, and ruinous as is this scheme of plunder, it still remains for the concluding bill to open full wide the Southern flood-gates and complete the carnival of jobbery and robbery in the Treasury of the Nation. The bill presented by Mr. Riddle covers the "use and occupation" of rebel property by the Government. This bill (H. R. 553) proposes to "adjust and settle the claims of citizens of the United States for stores and supplies taken or furnished during the rebellion for the use of the army of the United States and for other purposes."

It will be noticed that nothing is said about loyal citizens as being the only proper claimants, but all citizens, whether they were loyal or disloyal, are to appear on a common footing and be paid without distinction. Nor is there any limit fixed to the "stores and supplies taken or furnished" short of the entire amount, whatever that may be. It means in effect that the Government shall pay for every head of cattle; every bushel of corn or other grain; every pound of meat, flour, meal, and commissary stores and quartermaster's supplies of every kind whatever, foraged, used, or destroyed by our soldiers during the war!

THE GRAND TOTAL.

And what would be the grand aggregate of claims accruing under these wholesale raids upon the Treasury? A reasonable estimate may probably be reached by taking the 22,293 sworn loyal claimants as a basis. The total amount claimed by this class, as appears in the preceding pages, is $60,258,150, making the average value of each claim $2,702 40. It will not be regarded as extravagant to say that the number of disloyal claimants South stand as forty to one loyal, and using the same average value of $2,702 40 per claim, as above, the total to be appropriated on account of these two bills alone would swell to the sum of $2,410,326,000.

RECAPITULATION.

Direct tax	$2,661,776
Special relief bills	2,181,497
Cotton tax	68,072,088
Use and destruction of property	1,205,163,000
Supplies used or destroyed ...	1,205,163,000
Total	2,483,241,361

. In round numbers, an amount equal to the national debt at the close of the war.

THE WRECK OF GOVERNMENT.

When the national resources and credit have thus been exhausted, and bankruptcy and dishonor have followed these multiplied bounties to traitors, then, and not until then, will the nation have paid the debt of Southern restoration and contentment demanded by that section and contemplated as certain under Democratic ascendancy. Are loyal men prepared to give up the warfare and surrender to the enemy after having sacrificed so much of life and treasure upon the field to avert these evils, or will they again rise in their might and forever destroy this new conspiracy while yet it is within their power? Require the terms of Confederate surrender to be strictly kept, without compensation for past treason or reward for future loyalty, and demand that life, liberty, and perfect political freedom be protected throughout the South at any cost, to the end that the faith and integrity of the nation may be maintained unimpaired, its honor untarnished, its loyalty unrepached and unrepachable, and the enjoyment of peace and prosperity, assured by a loyal, enlightened, and economical government, be secured throughout our fair land as the best inheritance of the people and the highest attributes of the Republic.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY—HAS IT BEEN FAITHFUL TO ITS TRUST?

The Republican party, as a political organization, dates its history from 1856. It came into power March 4, 1861, and from that time to the present it has been responsible for the administration of national affairs.

Has it been faithful to its trust? This question has been passed upon by the people three times since 1861. First, in 1864, in Mr. Lincoln's re-election; second, in 1868, at the election of General Grant; third, in 1872, when the people returned the present incumbent by the largest popular majority ever given to a President. Thus it would appear that up to 1872, at least, the people had an abiding faith in Republicanism, and by their votes proclaimed to the world that the party had been faithful to its trust. Has it done anything since the last popular indorsement to forfeit the confidence and goodwill of the American people? It has not, for the record shows that its services have been as faithfully performed since 1872 as they were before. If it has made mistakes it has been quick to correct them, and in this it has shown a desire to conform to the wishes of a nation that has intrusted it with power for the past fifteen years. This prompt reflection of the popular will has been a leading trait in the character of Republicanism. All its public measures have been based upon public wants, and to discover these wants and to administer to them have been the chief aim and object of the party.

As we are on the eve of a political campaign whose issues are to shape the future policy of the nation it is well to briefly review the past history of the Republican party, and to again ask the question, "Has it been faithful to its trust?"

A nation without credit at home and abroad, its treasury nearly bankrupt, its currency insecure, its navy scattered, its army small and demoralized, its authority repudiated and defied in eleven States, its Southern forts and arsenals in the hands of insurgents, a powerful political party, which had been instrumental in bringing about this disastrous state of affairs, holding sufficient influence to prevent unity of action, is a fair picture of the condition of the trust when Republicans came into power.

Democracy had abandoned all hopes of saving the Union—had announced its willingness to see its bonds severed—had proclaimed its determination to make no efforts to stay the tide that was sweeping the nation to certain destruction, when the loyal people called the Republican party into power, and gave into its hands a trust which Democracy was about to betray.

Therefore, to the Republican party, to its wisdom and fidelity, its patriotism and courage, the people owe the existence of the Union. If it had no other claim on the gratitude of the nation than this one of preserving its nationality it should outweigh all the claims of Democracy, and entitle it to the confidence and support of every loyal American citizen.

But it has other claims. It has not only organized the means for saving the nation, in the face of the greatest rebellion of modern times, but it has, by the operation of wise laws and a liberal policy, developed a growth of material prosperity rarely equaled in the history of nations.

To fully comprehend the advancement made during a single decade of Republican ascendancy let us briefly compare the condition of the country in 1860 with its condition in 1870, as shown by the ninth census. It should be remembered that this growth was in the face of a terrible civil war and the results which followed its close. In view of this fact the people may well be proud of the Republican party and challenge the world for a party record equally honorable.

INCREASE IN PRODUCTS OF MANUFACTURES.

The substantial growth in the products of manufactures from 1860 to 1870 illustrates the industrial prosperity of the nation. It is safe to assume that the increase of products of manufactures to June 30, 1876, would be upward of $3,000,000,000. The following table shows the increase from 1860 to 1870:

States.	Products of manufactures.		Increase.
	1860.	1870.
Eastern....	$468,669,287	$1,009,116,772	$540,517,485
Middle....	798,926,290	1,783,113,923	984,187,633
Western....	346,675,298	1,072,933,354	726,258,056
Southern....	193,462,52	253,618,436	60,155,916
Pacific.....	71,229,988	89,342,482	18,112,493
Total.....	1,876,893,37	4,208,924,971	2,331,931,594

GROWTH IN TRUE WEALTH.

The increase of the true wealth of the nation for the same time will better illustrate the character of the Government which in a large measure has been instrumental in bringing it about. This increase shows the wonderful growth of the nation under a single decade of Republican rule, and disposes of the charge so often made by Democracy that Republicanism has impoverished the country. No better evidence can be found of the fallacy of this assumption than that contained in the impartial returns of the ninth census.

From this we tabulate the following:

States.	True wealth.		Increase.
	1860.	1870.
Eastern....	$1,863,842,765	$4,039,875,247	$2,176,032,482
Middle....	4,150,920,784	12,181,738,740	8,030,817,956
Western....	3,966,735,763	9,536,453,603	5,569,717,840
Southern....	5,268,209,219	8,343,007,549	3,074,798,330
Pacific....	235,805,250	721,439,961	485,634,711
Territories	73,094,297	245,883,367	172,789,070
Total..	16,159,616,068	30,068,518,507	13,908,902,439

* Decrease. Value of slaves included in 1860.

It will be seen from the wealth of every section, of the Southern, has in degree, the total increase 000,000,000. The loss of value of which was in 1860, partially accounts for the decrease of the true wealth.

rule, of $3,128,501,392, while the Southern States, during the same period, show a decrease in the assessed valuation of real estate amounting to $365,111,106.

The question may be asked, Why has not the Republican party advanced the material interests of those States in the South where it has had control? The answer is, because it has met the organized opposition of the intelligent, wealthy, and business elements of those States. Its control has been the control of a majority out off by deep-rooted prejudice from the sympathy and support of an influential minority. Thus, insurmountable obstacles have been placed in its way. Its efforts to build up have been met by counter efforts to tear down, and this conflict, carried on through a series of years, has borne its natural results, the paralyzation of industry and the stoppage of growth. At the North active party opposition against a State administration ceases when the ballot announces the people's choice. At the South the opposition of Democracy is intensified by the elevation of Republican officials. The choice of the people is disregarded, the minority refuse to cheerfully submit to the decree of the ballot-box, and thus the administration of government lacks that co-operation of effort on the part of all classes essential to a complete development of State interests.

We have already shown the material prosperity which the Union has developed. This far outweighs the money expenditures made necessary by four years of war. The compensation for the bloodshed cannot be found in dollars and cents. The elevation of the human race, the extinction of human bondage, the erection of free States throughout the world, and the future preservation of hundreds of thousands of lives which would be sacrificed in the defense of separate nationalities are among the legitimate fruits which will spring up from the graves of the Union defenders.

REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES.

As the Democratic party has arraigned the Republican party for an extraordinary increase of the national revenues and expenditures since 1860, and have carefully concealed the causes which led to the increase, a brief review of the items of expenditure since 1860 to the present time may not be out of place:

NET REVENUE OF THE GOVERNMENT, INCLUDING PREMIUMS AND INTEREST RECEIVED.

From March 4, 1789, to July 30, 1860	$1,806,354,650 53
From June 30, 1860, to June 30, 1875	4,725,187,816 22
Total	6,531,542,466 75

NET EXPENDITURES, INCLUDING PAYMENTS FOR PREMIUMS AND INTEREST.

From March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1860	$1,731,734,673 73
From June 30, 1860, to June 30, 1875	6,740,521,315 68
Total	8,472,255,989 40

ITEMS OF EXPENDITURE.

From March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1860.
War	$552,534,463 79
Navy	347,733,003 88
Indians	84,091,969 79
Pensions	79,713,465 20
Miscellaneous*	465,237,077 08
Premiums	5,834,626 94
Interest	196,590,068 09

Net expenditures

From June 30, 1860, to June 30, 1875.
War	$3,575,284,220 35
Navy	585,124,614 01
Indians	76,042,153 59
Pensions	292,271,046 50
Miscellaneous	743,924,941 55
Premiums	59,738,167 73
Interest	1,408,186,171 95

Net expenditures

Net expenditures from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1875

The tables submitted now at a glance the extraordinary expenditures directly due to the rebellion. The work required of the army and the magnitude of military operations can only be realized by a comparison of the expenditures. The army expenditures for the years 1861, 1863, 1864, and 1865 amounted to $2,713,594,222 83, or nearly five times as much as the entire army expenses of the Government from 1789 to 1860, a period of seventy-one years. The army expenditures of a single year, 1865—the close of the war—were $1,036,904,400 06, or within a fraction of $3,000,000 for every day in the year.

The nation has been required to pay for the item of interest one during the past fourteen years $1,305,426,627 38, as against $196,590,068 09, the amount paid from 1789 to 1860, or more than seven and a half times as much as the entire amount of interest paid by the Government in seventy-one years.

*Includes civil service, foreign relations, light-house, and public buildings expenditures, and the cost of collecting the internal revenues.

The pension payments, also directly chargeable to the rebellion, show that $262,814,830 28 have been paid out, or more than three times the entire pension payments of the Government for the seventy-one years prior to 1860. In view of these facts is it not rank demagoguery to charge the increase of revenue and expenditures to the extravagance of the Republican party?

If the expenditures shown are without parallel in our history the means employed, the honesty and energy displayed, the statesmanship which entered the measures necessary to carry the Government through the most dangerous period of its existence, must be regarded as without parallel in the history of nations.

If a party is to be judged by the weight of its responsibilities when the Republican party in its administration of public affairs cannot fail to invoke the favorable judgment of impartial minds. The magnitude of its labors can only be measured by their priceless results, and these will grow in value as generation follows generation.

The wisdom and sagacity which developed the internal revenue system and our present currency system should entitle the Republican party to the gratitude of the country. The first made possible the immense revenues necessary to prosecute the war to a successful issue. The latter made the payment of the taxes uniform throughout the country; provided a safe currency of equal value in all the States; protected industry, by removing its earnings from the possibility war, will fail to discover that the payment of these countless millions was regarded as oppressive, or checked for a moment the growth of a nation's prosperity.

To show the amount collected under the internal revenue system and by direct tax since 1861 to 1875, we submit the following:

Year.	Internal revenue.	Direct tax.
1862	$1,795,331.73
1863	$37,640,787.95	1,485,103.61
1864	109,741,134.10	475,648.96
1865	209,464,215.25	1,200,573.08
1866	309,225,813.42	1,974,754.12
1867	266,027,537.43	4,200,233.70
1868	191,087,589.41	1,768,145.86
1869	159,356,460.88	765,665.61
1870	184,699,756.49	229,102.88
1871	143,098,153.63	580,355.37
1872	130,642,177.72
1873	113,729,314.14	*315,254.51
1874	102,409,784.90
1875	110,007,493.59
Total	2,066,331,218.89	14,810,189.37

*Balances due in 1871, collected in 1872 and 1873, and covered into the United States Treasury in the latter year.

Since July, 1866, internal revenue taxes have been gradually reduced, until the amount of taxes repealed now reaches an aggregate of two hundred million dollars per annum, a reduction of two-thirds of the internal revenue tax of 1866.

The other principal source of revenue to meet the expenditures of the Government was the customs revenue. From this source the following amounts were collected from 1861 to 1875, inclusive:

Year.	Customs revenue.
1861	$39,592,125.64
1862	49,050,397.62
1863	69,059,642.40
1864	102,316,152.99
1865	84,928,260.60
1866	179,046,651.58
1867	176,417,810.88
1868	164,464,399.56
1869	180,048,426.63
1870	194,538,374.44
1871	206,270,408.05
1872	216,370,286.77
1873	188,089,522.70
1874	163,103,883.69
1875	157,167,722.35
Total	2,170,460,215.90

During the war period, from June 30, 1861, to June 30, 1865, the net expenditures of the Government far exceeded the net ordinary revenue. The following table will show the ordinary receipts and expenditures for the five years named :

Year.	Receipts.	Expenditures.
1861.....	$41,476,299.49	$62,616,055.79
1862.....	51,919,261.09	458,379,896.81
1863.....	112,094,845.51	694,004,575.56
1864.....	243,412,971.20	811,283,679.14
1865.....	322,031,158.19	1,217,704,199.28
Total.....	770,934,635.48	2,241,988,406.57

To the above receipts should be added $33,561,924.24 received as premiums, and to the expenditures should be added $176,034,714.75 paid for interest and $1,717,900.11 paid as premiums, making the total net receipts for the five years named $804,496,559.72, and the total net expenditures for the same time $3,419,741,021.43, or more than four times the amount of the receipts. It will thus be seen that the expenditures exceeded the receipts during the five years of war, $2,615,244,461.71.

To meet this excess the nation was forced to look outside of its ordinary revenues, and the amount needed was provided by its loans and Treasury notes. These loans make up the bulk of our present national debt. The following shows the yearly payment for interest from 1861 to 1875 :

Year.	Interest.
1861.....	30
1862.....	84
1863.....	62
1864.....	69
1865.....	30
1866.....	91
1867.....	91
1868.....	71
1869.....	80
1870.....	00
1871.....	93
1872.....	72
1873.....	44
1874.....	21
1875.....	57
Total.....	1,408,136,171.95

RECEIPTS FROM ALL SOURCES FROM JUNE 30, 1861, TO JUNE 30, 1875, INCLUSIVE.

Customs.....	$2,170,460,215.90
Internal revenue.....	2,066,331,218.88
Direct tax.....	14,810,189.37
Public lands.....	24,436,276.73
Miscellaneous.....	252,540,413.58
Premiums.....	196,670,028.05
Total.....	4,725,148,342.49

OFFICIAL INTEGRITY, REDUCTION OF DEBT, ETC.

Yet, with these immense receipts and expenditures, made necessary by the suppression of the Democratic slaveholders' rebellion, the records show a degree of official integrity without a parallel in the history of governments.

A very careful calculation of losses sustained was embodied in an official letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in 1872. As equal honesty has been practised in all the departments since the date of this letter, it may be safely taken as a basis for present calculations. According to this letter, the per cent. of losses to the Government in the collection of internal revenue since March 3, 1869, was less than one-fiftieth of one per cent. of the amount collected, or less than two dollars in ten thousand.

In the collection of the customs for the same time the loss was $28,000 out of $553,000,000, or the one-hundredth part of one per cent., or less than five dollars in every one hundred thousand.

The loss to depositors, through our national banking system, was the one hundredth and eighty-sixth part of one per cent.—equivalent to five dollars and three-eighths in every one hundred thousand.

The money entries on the books of the United States Treasurer, covering time from June 30, 1861, to January 9, 1872, showed the immense sum of $55,000,000,000, and out of this vast amount the loss was about $55,000, or less than one ten-thousandth part of one per cent., or one dollar in one million of money transactions.

On the 28th June, 1876, Senator Anthony in calling the attention of the Senate to an official report on defalcations, said :

"The aggregate statement of the disbursements of the Treasury under the list is a paper exceedingly creditable to the American Government. I do not mean to any particular party, but to the financial history of the United States. There have been disbursed since 1834—I can hardly read such big figures—$13,936,870,072.03, of which is marked upon these books $22,266,000, being about half a million of dollars a year, and a great part of this is nominal, not real.

"The losses on the $1,000 of disbursements were, in the administration of Jackson, $10.55; Van Buren, $21.15; Harrison, $10.37; Polk, $8.34; Taylor and Fillmore, $7.64; Pierce, $5.86; Buchanan, nearly 6 98; Lincoln, $1.41; Johnson, 48 cents; Grant, the first four years, 40 cents; the second four years, 26 cents—showing a constant decline, which is owing in a large degree to the improved manner of keeping the accounts; and that is due very largely to the Committees on Finance and Appropriations, who have introduced legislation here which has compelled much greater accuracy and responsibility. The average percentage of losses during this whole period on the disbursements is $1.59 on the thousand. I do not believe that the aggregate of any class of corporate or private business, banking, commercial, or any other kind, can show so small a percentage of loss as this, and it is gratifying that the percentage of loss is continually decreasing, coming down from $21.15 in the administration of Van Buren to an average of twenty three cents on the thousand dollars, or only about one-sixtieth as much under the present Administration. This is exclusive of the Post Office, which administers its own revenue. In the Post Office the loss has gone down from $11.18 on the $1,000 in Jackson's administration, and $26.19 in Van Buren's, to $1.59 for the first term of Grant and $1.01 for the second, with an average of $3.51 for the whole period."

The excess of expenditures over receipts, or that which far exceeded the ordinary revenues, and which were met by pledges of public faith, ceased with the close of the war. The public debt had reached its highest point in 1866, being at that time, June 30, $2,773,236,173.69. Since then the revenues of the nation have exceeded the expenditures, leaving a balance each year for the redemption of the public debt. From June 30, 1866, to June 30, 1875, the public debt has been reduced $599,711,641.74. This reduction has taken place in the face of reduced taxation. Under the acts of Congress dated July 13, 1866, March 2, 1867, Feb. 3, 1868, March 1 and July 20, 1868, July 14, 1870, May 1 and June 6, 1872—the Internal Revenue taxation has been reduced from its highest point, in 1866, $309,226,813.42, to $110,007,493.58, June 30, 1875. In this reduction of the public debt, and this descending scale of taxation, we have at a single fifteen years of Republican rule. They may safely be held up, as being without a parallel in our history, if not in the history of nations. To carry on these operations through a long series of years, without infringing upon the constitutional rights of a single citizen, or without oppressing the industrial interests of the country, has required the highest degree of administrative and legislative talent, and the highest order of executive integrity. It should be borne in mind that these heavy financial responsibilities were forced upon the country by treasonable Democracy, and that the part performed by the Republican party was simply the execution of an imperative duty which it owed to the Union, to freedom, to humanity, and to the world's civilization.

With these figures before us, with a clear remembrance of those terrible years of sacrifice and suffering, when the hopes of the nation centered in the courage and patriotism of the Republican party, with at least $150,000,000 of yearly expenditures to remind us of a party that betrayed the nation, and with a burdensome public debt, which a loyal people are nobly bearing—who that loves his country, or wishes to see it continue in the path of peace and prosperity, can give his vote or influence to the support of a party that stands to-day as responsible for the rebellion, as it did when its recognized head, James Buchanan, folded his arms and gave it the sanction of his official encouragement, by the admission that he had no power to coerce.

OUR NATIONAL CURRENCY SYSTEM.

We have shown the immense financial operations of the Government during the fifteen years ending June 30, 1875. To those measures which led to the adoption of our present national currency the success of these operations is largely due. Under the old State banking system, financial embarrassments would have attended the collection of the taxes, irredeemable paper money would have become nearly worthless, gold needed for custom duties and for the payment of interest on our bonds would have become exorbitantly high, the credit of States and individuals would have been destroyed, and before the close of the war, even if success had been possible, universal bankruptcy would have stared us in the face.

Therefore to the adoption of our present currency system the nation is largely indebted for the success of its financial operations. It gave to the country a currency of uniform value; it pledged the faith of the nation for the security of the circulating medium; it removed the possibility of loss on the part of the bill holder by making the Government the redemption agent; it united the moneyed interests of the country with the efforts of the Government to maintain its existence, by making the currency, and through this, prosperity, wholly dependent upon the credit and integrity of the nation.

Under the old State banking system every financial disturbance entailed heavy losses on holders of bills, while panics like those of 1837 and 1857 wrecked hundreds of banks and entailed hardships upon thousands of individuals holding their notes. Under the present national system, these losses, which generally fall upon the workingmen, are impossible. A bank may be badly managed; it may fail; yet its notes, being secured by a deposit of United States bonds, are as valuable as the notes of the best managed bank in the country. They continue to circulate, or if the holder desires it, they may be redeemed by the United States. Thus the circulating notes, under the present system, may be considered absolutely safe. Not a dollar has been lost by the holder on the bill of a broken national bank since the organization of the system. All that is now needed to make the national currency system as perfect as any ever devised by human wisdom is the redemption of its notes in coin or its equivalent. If hostile legislation does not interfere to change or cripple the present plans of Republican administration the resumption of specie payments will be soon brought about without shock or detriment to business interests.

As a comparison of the old system and the present one may be of value, we present the following statement, exhibiting by sections the bank circulation, the amount per capita, and the ratio of circulation to wealth and to capital in 1862 (State bank system) and in 1874:

	Ratio of circulation to bank capital.		Ratio of circulation to wealth.		Circulation per capita.		Bank circulation.*
	1862.	1874.	1862.	1874.	1862.	1874.	1862.	1874.
States and Territories.
			Per ct.	Per ct.
			51.7	67.4	$31.45	$20.90	$65,516,155	$109,705,018
			53.1	64.2	12.66	9.97	82,372,091	128,052,872
			66.3	79.5	2.81	6.17	71,098,403	86,885,704
			125.4	90.8	6.86	2.49	18,084,564	77,174,850
			79.3	2.00	1,902,706
Total States and Territories..			1.5	1.1	7.59	238,671,210	848,791,152

*National bank notes, June 30, 1875, $351,889,008; old demand and legal tender notes, $375,841,687.50; fractional currency, $42,129,424.19; total paper currency, $769,840,119.69. Total circulation per capita, $18.38.

It will be admitted that our currency is safe not only in times of business prosperity, but in the midst of financial panics. Founded upon the credit of the Government, nothing but the loss of public credit could affect materially the value of our currency. To maintain this credit, to strengthen it at home and abroad, has been the object of the Republican party. Under its wise management our national credit has steadily improved. Our securities are sought for as among the best and safest in the world, and if the party whose administration has brought about so favorable a result is continued in power, we may confidently look forward to the refunding of our national debt at a low rate of interest, thus in this single item saving annually millions of dollars to the Government. We appeal to true citizens everywhere, to all who desire to maintain the credit of the nation, to all who appreciate a good currency, that is gradually approaching a gold basis, to all who are in any way interested in maintaining public faith, to lay aside petty prejudices and local issues, and earnestly support the party that has rendered noble service to the Republic. Its overthrow means the loss of public credit, the paralyzation of business enterprise, the depreciation of national securities, and eventually a repudiation of national obligations.

A SUMMARY OF ACHIEVEMENTS.

To do justice to a review of Republican achievements would fill a volume. A brief summary will be a fitting conclusion to the statements already made.

During the period of Republican ascendancy we have seen the nation increase in population from 1860 to 1870, 7,115,050, with an estimated increase, up to the present time, of 11,500,000. We have seen an increase of the products of manufactures during the same time of $2,231,931,594, with a probable increase, up to this time, of over $3,000,000,000. We have seen an increase in the true wealth of the Northern States, up to 1870, $13,908,902,439, which to-day may be estimated at $20,000,000,000. We have seen the assessed valuation of real estate increase in ten years $3,128,501,392, which at the present time would make it over $4,000,000,000. We have seen the Government successfully conducting financial operations of great magnitude, and improving its credit, while meeting obligations which bore heavily upon its resources. We have seen a defective State currency system supplanted by one of a national character, safe, sound, and effective, and destined to become, at no distant day, the most perfect currency system ever devised by man. Yet these items of growth and improvements are but a few of the many that could be presented if time permitted.

The homestead acts; the building of the Pacific railroad; the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments, and the legislation necessary to enforce their provisions; the reconstruction of the Southern States; the settlement of the Alabama claims and the vexed San Juan boundary; establishment of life-saving stations; protection to immigrants; encouragement of labor; advancement of science and education; and above all, the crowning work of the century—the abolition of human slavery—are items in the long list of Republican triumphs which will insure the gratitude of posterity, and ever command the admiration of the world.

Is a party record, so glorious and praiseworthy, to be destroyed by the breath of slander, or blotted out from the hearts of a grateful people by the efforts of partisan malice? Is a party that has given such transcendent evidence of its ability to govern wisely, and justly, and honestly the affairs of a great nation to be laid aside just as the fruits of its noble labors are ripening to the touch? No! We speak for the American people—who are not ungrateful, who still bear in remembrance the services of the past, who are yet unwilling to trust a country saved by loyal blood and treasure in the hands of those who encouraged its destruction—when we say that despite the efforts of Democracy, and the schemes of bad men, the Republican party will still be supported by the loyal element of the country as the only party that has been faithful to its trust, and that is able to protect the nation's honor while advancing the nation's prosperity.

It would be an act little short of national suicide to turn over to Democratic hands the administration of our national affairs. Democracy before the war was under the complete influence of Southern sentiment, during the war it aided and abetted the Southern cause, since the close of the war, through the period of reconstruction, it has done all within its power to obstruct the course of justice and to encourage the disloyal element in secret and open defiance of the Federal authority. If in any of its measures the Republican party has fallen short of the complete success promised, the failure can be traced directly to the obstruction placed in its way by Democracy.

The present policy of the Democratic party if indorsed by the people must inevitably lead to national bankruptcy, through the destruction of our credit and the prostration of our industries. Under the mockery of reform the pauper element of Europe would overrun the free labor of America; our currency, through its irredeemable character, would become worthless; our securities would sink in value and cease to be quoted in the money markets of the world; and a financial panic, involving general ruin to the agricultural, manufacturing, and mercantile interests, would of necessity follow.

The bills introduced in the Democratic House of Representatives calling for payment of Southern claims, the efforts to secure the repeal of wise laws, the legislative obstructions which have been placed in the way of necessary appropriation bills, and the spirit of opposition which has been manifested against those measures which have been sanctioned by the loyal sentiment of the nation since the close of the war, all go to show that Democracy is not in sympathy with the nation and could not, if intrusted with power, advance its interests or protect its honor.

A moment's reflection ought to convince the unprejudiced mind that Democracy cannot be trusted. Within its ranks the most dangerous elements of society are found united. It is not claimed that every Democrat is disloyal, but it is claimed and it cannot be denied that every disloyal man in the nation is a Democrat. The Republican party has none of this class within its ranks; and this thought, of itself, should prompt good citizens everywhere to stand by the party that represents, not only the intelligence and virtue of the nation, but the loyal sentiment on which its existence depends. The practical question for the people to answer in the present campaign is, "Ought the Government in time of peace to be intrusted to those who were its secret and open enemies in time of war?" This is the vital issue before the people. On its proper settlement depends the peace and prosperity of the nation.

THE THEORY OF THE RIGHT TO IGNORE THE STATE A FALLACY.

When a first principle is laid down by a writer, and he argues from it to a given conclusion, and tells us that his conclusion is logically derived therefrom, and we have unbounded confidence in the soundness of his first principle, there is often great danger of our accepting his conclusion upon insufficient evidence. For our conclusion to be legitimately derived from our first principle we must suppose that all the factors affecting and entering into the problem have been given their exact value. We shall presently find that those who hold the citizen has a right to ignore the State, and who also hold that such right is legitimately derived from the law of equal freedom, that is, the freedom of each limited only by the like freedom of all, overlook the value of an important element which enters into the question.

Mr. Herbert Spencer, in his "Social Statics," tells us, "as a corollary to the proposition that all institutions must be subordinated to the law of equal freedom we cannot choose but to admit the right of the citizen to adopt a condition of voluntary outlawry." We here see that Mr. Spencer does not base his argument by which he arrives at this conclusion upon any bad faith or shortcomings of the State towards the citizen, but upon the law of equal freedom. Much could be said tending to show that the theory of the right to ignore the State is practically the State's right doctrine logically carried out which led to the attempted secession of the Slave States from the Union, resulting in the war of the rebellion. But if the theory cannot be shown to be philosophically unsound, to be in conflict with the law of equal freedom independently of the State's right doctrine, it would be useless to combat it from any other stand-point whatever. And if the right to ignore the State is not a corollary from the law of equal freedom, it must be shown that Mr. Spencer has left out some element that should have been taken in, that he has not considered all the factors entering into the problem. A person to sever his connection with a thing, corporation, or institution implies a previous connection with such corporation or institution, in some way or other. This is a truth which we may suppose will not be questioned by any one capable of formulating a logical train of thought of ordinary simplicity. It will be well, therefore, to at once briefly examine the nature of the citizen's connection with the institution called the State, which it is claimed he has the right to ignore. What is meant by the State and what constitutes a citizen I think should be definitely understood at the threshold of the discussion. Whether our definition of what is meant by the State be broad enough or not to suit all, I feel sure it is one upon which there will probably be found no difference of opinion as far as it goes. The State, then, we may consider an institution or mutual safety confederation whose sole function is for the purpose of protecting those composing it, the guaranteeing to every citizen all the freedom he wills, provided he infringes not the equal freedom of any other citizen. But to more fully illustrate the connection of the citizen with the State let us introduce for a moment a witness cross-examined by Mr. Spencer: "Your hypothesis," asks Mr. Spencer of the witness whom he cross-examines, "implies that men when they entered into the social state * * * entered into it voluntarily; does it not?"

"It does."

"Then they must have considered the social state preferable to that under which they had previously lived?"

"Necessarily."

"Why did it appear preferable?"

"Because it offered greater security."

"Greater security for what?"

"Greater security for life, for property, for the things that minister to happiness."

"Exactly; to get more happiness, that must have been the object. If they had expected to get more unhappiness they would not have willingly made the change, would they?"

"No."

"Does not happiness consist in the due satisfaction of all the desires? in the due exercise of all the faculties?"

"Yes."

"And this exercise of the faculties is impossible without freedom of action. The desires cannot be satisfied without liberty to pursue and use the objects of them?"

"True."

"Now, it is this freedom to exercise the faculties within specified limits which we signify by the term rights, is it not?"

"It is."

"Well, then, summing up your answers, it seems that, by your hypothesis, man entered the social state voluntarily, which means that he entered it for the sake of obtaining greater happiness; which means that he entered it to obtain fuller exercise of his faculties; which means that he entered it to obtain greater security for such exercise; which means that he entered it for the guaranteeing of his rights?" * * *

"Then to say that men formed themselves into communities to prevent the constant violation of their claims to life and property is to say that they did it for the preservation of their rights?"

"It is."

"Wherefore either way we find that the preservation of rights was the object sought."

This is a fair statement of the case, and represents in a strong light the true purposes of social organization. Again, Aristotle says "the State is nothing else but an association of equal beings seeking in common a happy and comfortable existence." A citizen, then, is an individual belonging to this mutual-safety confederation, association, or institution which we call the State, and from his own testimony it is shown that by belonging to it he must derive certain benefits or advantages, consisting in the better security for life, for property, and for those things that minister to happiness.

The State being a combination of individuals or social units for purposes of mutual protection or better preservation of their rights, it follows that there must be some means of protection, some agent employed whose duty it shall be to stand guard over the community, or that portion of it engaged in other occupations than that of giving protection. Now, the objects sought by social organization, better security, better preservation of individual rights, may be had in either of two ways. There may be an alternation of guard duties by each citizen, or the community may employ a certain number of its own members, if any choose to engage, whose sole specialized function shall be to stand guard over and afford protection to the others. In the evolution of society the latter method is that which probably always comes gradually to be adopted. Let it now be borne in mind that our first principle, "the freedom of each limited only by the like freedom of all," implies that no one has complete freedom. The complete freedom of all belongs only to the ideally perfect social state, which universal humanity will probably never reach. If men could live in the presence of each other with complete freedom of action, there would be no necessity for the existence of the agent which we call government. But we cannot even think of the existence of government, without also thinking of the existence of something else antagonistic to the happiness of those employing it. Indeed, it would be as easy for us to think of an effect without a cause as to think of the existence of government without also thinking of the imperfections of men's moral constitutions making it necessary. Now, it is perfectly clear that those whose specialized duty is to afford protection cannot have as great a sense of security, and in fact will not have as great security for life, as those they are guarding or protecting. The very existence of government, too, implies vicarious suffering; and, having employed a certain number of our neighbors to ward off impending evils which we acknowledge would afflict us without intervention of some kind, we cannot equitably drop connection with them on our own account; for those rendering such important service as that of shielding us from danger have as much right to put a price upon their services as those accepting them. That is to say, in a social organization such as we are considering, relations become established that cannot equitably be dissolved by any single individual social unit without his claiming for himself greater freedom than some other individuals of the society. It may be said, however, that those employed in this service which gives less security for life were free to contribute no more than their pro rata of such service to the general security. But whether such service be performed alternately by each citizen, or whether society employs a certain number of its members who make the function of affording protection a specialized duty, does not alter the fact that a member employed and injured in the performance of his duty is not as free to drop connection with the State as the citizen who has been protected, and enjoys that security for life and for property which he entered into the social state to obtain, and which has been bought by vicarious suffering.

There have been within the past few years in India villages and districts almost depopulated by tigers. If we suppose, now, a colony of Europeans to settle in some district there uninhabited by the natives, and the settlers to agree among themselves to employ a given part of their number to protect the remainder in carrying on their agricultural, industrial, and commercial pursuits against the ravages of tigers and other wild beasts; and if we further suppose those so employed after awhile to succeed in destroying nearly all of these enemies, but in doing it receive various physical injuries, will any one capable of the smallest appreciation of justice say that these maimed and injured members are as free to drop connection with the society as those who have been protected in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness? We cannot think so. If, then, the citizen cannot equitably withdraw from a society without its consent under these circumstances, he cannot without cause under any circumstances where the combination is for protective purposes; for, if a principle is true of a hundred persons combined or associated together for a definite purpose, it must be equally true of a hundred thousand or a hundred millions associated together for similar purposes. Well, so long as it may be necessary to employ the agent we call government to give better security for life, for property, and for the things that minister to happiness, there must of necessity be that vicarious suffering implied by the existence of armies, navies, and policemen. The very fact of a man living in a community physically sound and in possession of property, while his neighbors around him carry various disabilities contracted in shielding him from evil, shows that he has fared better than they. But for this protection which secures to him greater happiness and greater exercise for his faculties than would have been possible without it, he may hold that the sacrifices which he has made toward paying for his protection are equivalent to the services rendered for that purpose. Such temporary sacrifices, however, are not equivalent to the services rendered in giving protection, as we shall presently see. Security for the lives and for the property of certain individuals implies, as has already been stated, that pain and insecurity must be borne by certain other individuals. Or, putting it another way, those efficiently protected we may consider permanently benefited, whilst, in many cases, those engaged in the specialized duty of giving protection are permanently injured. Can any one reasonably say, then, that a human life may actually be valued at a certain sum, or that even a limb may be so valued? Can we justly say that society owes nothing to the orphaned child whose father has been killed that other individuals might repose in security? Can we justly assert that society owes nothing more than his wages to the date of disability to the man who has lost a limb or become otherwise disabled in its service? No, we have services of themselves to so has lost a a limb in the society that and, much less exact calcula-to those who use who have abled for us, e conclusion are not the e State, even as been vol-ll the time, rming what s legitimate harges were then made against it as a cause for claiming the right to ignore it. We call protection its legitimate function, because, as already stated, there is no difference of opinion on this point. But the moment we assign to it other functions, then there immediately arises a difference of opinion, and frequently a very serious difference. If A voluntarily combines with B, C, and Z for a definite purpose he cannot, without some qualification, limitation, or changing of the originally-defined purpose of the combination without his sanction, justly withdraw from it, unless it can be shown that all the other members are equally free to withdraw. And this we know would be next to impossible in almost any social organization of which we can form any conception. Having accepted the service of the State's agent (Government) to give us protection we cannot equitably say to the State, as soon as the evil has been removed from our doors, that our obligations to it immediately cease, because its agent is composed of sentient beings like ourselves, who also have rights that cannot justly be ignored. Any section of our race once organized into a society is very much like an individual of one of the more complex organisms, in this: that the failure of any one of its members to perform its specialized function affects more or less all the other members in the healthy performance of their specialized functions. We have seen, too, that in any society in which government is absolutely necessary it is impossible for all the members to be equally free to drop connection with it, for the reason that the very nature of the association implies, as has been shown, vicarious suffering and sacrifices which must render some more unfit than others to get along without the continued existence of some kind of social organization. It cannot be logically held that the duties of the State to the citizen are any more binding than the duties of the citizen to the State. Hence, then, it follows that if the citizen has a right to ignore the State the State has a right to refuse protection to the citizen. Mr. Spencer nowhere in his social statics goes so far as this.

If it is true, as we have endeavored to show, that the citizen has no right to ignore the State it must be equally true, for it is a logical sequence, that the State has no right to ignore the Government, which holds to it the same relations that it holds to the citizen. States are but individuals in their collective or organized capacity, and the Government over all—that is the nation—is but a larger collection and more extensive organization, and the duties of the smaller combinations to it are equally binding with those of the citizen to the State. The theory of secession is a defective one, whether it is applied to the citizen in his right to withdraw from the authority of the State or the State in its right to withdraw from the authority of the nation. To admit the first is to admit the last—to deny the first is to deny the latter. Both are equally repugnant, opposed to reason, common sense, and good government.

As the State protects the citizen and secures to him the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, so the nation protects the State, and makes it possible, through this protection, for it to protect its citizens. Independent States, without superior power over them, would be in the same condition as independent individuals without the protection of society, the weaker ones would be at the mercy of the stronger, and each would be a law unto itself without power to compel others to respect its rights or to defend itself against despotic encroachment. Under a well-organized State the weakest individual has the same rights before the law as the strongest, and the power of the State compels the recognition of those rights; so, under a well-organized nation like our own, the weakest State has equal rights with the strongest, and the power of the nation exercised over all compels each State to recognize and respect the rights of the others. On this theory of mutual protection the American Union is based, and to acknowledge the theory of secession as a correct one would be to destroy all hope of government among men, and to defeat the very object for which society was organized, mutual protection.

THE BLOODY SHIRT.

That those who realize that the nation was saved from destruction through the devotion of the loyal adherents to the Union should sometimes refer to the history of the war is to be expected. The retrospect has its lessons, its admonitions, and its warnings. It brought about changes not only in the mutual relations of the citizens of the Republic, but also in our position as regards foreign States. State policy is forever changing, and never so much as when it has to be shaped by the results of a war. The conquered generally have to succumb to the victor; the victor usually endeavors to dictate his policy. Never in the history of the world can be found an instance where the vanquished have so soon been called into the councils of the prevailing party as is presented in the legislation of the last few years of the United States. But though clemency is commendable and equality before the law the heritage of all American citizens, future generations will never fail to draw experience from the history of the American civil war. It is as necessary to draw inferences therefrom as it is to cite the counsel of our patriots and sages. It has entailed upon us a debt, to meet which all our financial policy has to be shaped. It has given to the nation wards and pensioners whose care requires not only grievous taxation but armies of officials. It has cast loose upon the social system four millions of people to degrade and debase whom was the business and interest of those who raised their hands against the parent government. Any statesman who is chosen to participate in the councils of the nation and who would ignore the issues of the war in shaping the policy of the country is not only incapable but unworthy of the trust. Those few statesmen left who passed through the ordeal of the battle for the Union naturally recognize the terrible legacy it has left the people, and pause when any movement is made that aims to curtail its benefits or negate the truths it has established. Naturally they shudder when they see efforts made to debase or lower the public credit by those whose avowed effort is to place the bonds of the Confederate government on the same basis as the Union loan. Naturally they feel shocked at the proposition to place the soldiers who wore the grey side by side on the pension rolls with the gallant boys in blue. Naturally they feel appalled when they see those from whom the shackles of slavery have been broken denied equality of rights guaranteed them by law written in heroes' blood. When these issues are presented to them, as they are daily, naturally they turn over the pages of the history of the war, draw in new inspiration from hallowed memories, and feel that though the sword is sheathed there are many victories that peace has yet to gain. To keep these problems before the people, to provide for the burden the war has made inevitable for years to come, the statistics of history must be relied upon, and it is idle, cruel, and the very height of folly to cry out bloody shirt when statesmen find it necessary to stand on the watch towers of the nation and give timely warning of threatening storms. There is entirely too much sentimentality on this subject. If the slightest allusion is made to the record of any person who was prominent in the Confederate cause a howl goes up throughout the land that we must forget and forgive everything and everybody. If the logical sequences of the war are sought to be carried out, and to do so intelligently the records of filthy prison dens, the haunts of pirates, and the scenes of conspirators have to be looked into, it will not do to cry out blatantly, Bloody Shirt! The war has left records, traces, scars, and wounds that, like Banquo's ghost, will not down at the mere bidding. It is in vain to cry, like Lady Macbeth, "Out damned spot," the stain is on the palm. There is another side to the bloody shirt business, and it is of no use to deny it. Those persons, however honest now or heretofore, who by force of circumstances or by inclination fought against the Union, have by the very fact been taught in a school that has had more or less influence on their judgment and powers of reason; they see things from a different stand-point than do those who never swerved from their country's flag. It is impossible to be otherwise. They have acquired opinions that in their very nature will not allow them to appreciate the broad, luminous doctrines that have become, by the fire of the cannon, welded into the American Constitution and have created what must be recognized as the fundamental law of the land. There is a restless spirit in the land that will not admit or recognize this American system; that will not admit and will not recognize that we are a nation; that still insists that the organic law of the land can be set aside by State enactments and is subservient to municipal codes. The duty of the Republican party is to root out this political heresy, and if in carrying out their mission it is sometimes necessary to hold up pictures that these incredulous students have placed in the family photograph album, it will not do to cry out bloody shirt every time the book is opened and portraits of heroes and martyrs are displayed. Be it as it may, it may as well be understood plainly that these lessons will have to be read, this history will have to be consulted, until every man in the country, however humble, whatever may have been his previous condition, shall be able to sit at his own fireside unmolested, shall be in practice as well as in theory equal before the law; and more than that, shall be able and free, without let or hinderance, to cast his vote for whomsoever he pleases. It is plain that the Republican party has to assert and maintain this, and for doing so the sneer is thrown at them of aiming to flaunt the bloody shirt. Now it is plain that the party opposed to the Republicans take a contrary view, try to make municipal law supreme and paramount, to which the national will must succumb; it is plain that the rights of freemen are to be circumscribed and narrowed down by local legislation. This local legislation is but the outgrowth of doctrines that have been proven to be pernicious to the public weal, but they have been bred in the bone and cannot be gotten out of the flesh until the good sense of a rising generation becomes reconciled to the logic of events. When Republicans say, what is as plain as the sun at noonday, that the opposition to the organic law of the Republic is the effect of a cause, and that cause was disloyalty to the Union, they state but a truth, and though the heavens fall it had better be stated. A disease must be properly diagnosed before a remedy can be understandingly prescribed. The Republican party, which is the only true reform party that ever handled the reins of government, has the duty to repel every new invasion on the rights of the people, and it is poor argument to simply meet them with the cry of bloody shirt. They may pertinently answer that the shirt has no stains upon it from their hands; they may reply that from no act, desire, or wish of theirs was the shirt made bloody; they may reply that when the body of a brother is stabbed his raiment is very likely to become saturated with his blood, and that though the blow may be forgiven and the wound healed, still the scar should be a lesson to him who gave the blow fully as much as to the stricken. While it is true that those who were at enmity with the Government and sought its life cannot fully comprehend the true theory of the American system, just so true is it that those who were always with the people and for the people are the best to understand their wants, their rights, their privileges, and their powers.

Because the Republican party are of the people, are with the people; because they understand their rights; because they maintained them; because they always stood up for the privileges of the people and never against them; because they knew the power of the people and never sought to destroy it, therefore are they the fit party and the only safe party to trust, because in spite of clamor, in spite of being accused of shaking a bloody shirt, they have the courage and the manhood to stand up for the rights of the people they are the party to trust. As for the cry of bloody shirt, it is a mere effort to turn people aside from main issues. It is the cry of mad dog, it involves no principle, discusses no theory, it is simply a whine uttered by the demagogue under the smart of being detected pandering to the tastes of the country's enemies, or found fawning in the smiles of the hero of an hour.

GOVERNOR HAYES' LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

The following is the letter of Governor Hayes, accepting the Republican nomination for the Presidency:

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 8, 1876.

Hon. Edward McPherson, Hon. William A. Howard, Hon. Joseph H. Rainey, and others, Committee of the Republican National Convention:

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your official communication of June 17, by which I am informed of my nomination for the office of President of the United States by the Republican National Convention at Cincinnati, I accept the nomination with gratitude, hoping that under Providence I shall be able, if elected, to execute the duties of the high office as a trust for the benefit of all the people. I do not deem it necessary to enter upon any extended examination of the declaration of principles made by the convention. The resolutions are in accord with my views, and I heartily concur in the principles they announce. In several of the resolutions, however, questions are considered which are of such importance that I deem it proper to briefly express my convictions in regard to them.

The fifth resolution adopted by the convention is of paramount interest. More than forty years ago a system of making appointments to office grew up, based upon the maxim "to the victors belong the spoils." The old rule, the true rule, that honesty, capacity, and fidelity constitute the only real qualifications for office, and that there is no other claim, gave place to the idea that party services were to be chiefly considered. All parties, in practice, have adopted this system. It has been essentially modified since its first introduction. It has not, however, been improved. At first the President, either directly or through the heads of departments, made all the appointments. But gradually the appointing power in many cases passed into the control of members of Congress. The offices in these cases have become not merely rewards for party services but rewards for services to party leaders. This system destroys the independence of the separate departments of the Government. "It tends directly to extravagance and official incapacity." It is a temptation to dishonesty. It hinders and impairs that careful supervision and strict accountability by which alone faithful and efficient public service can be secured. It obstructs the prompt removal and sure punishment of the unworthy. In every way it degrades the civil service, and the character of the Government. It is felt, I am confident, by a large majority of the members of Congress to be an intolerable burden and an unwarrantable hinderance to the proper discharge of their legitimate duties. It ought to be abolished. The reform should be thorough, radical, and complete; we should return to the principles and practice of the founders of the Government, supplying by legislation, when needed, that which was formerly established by custom; they neither expected nor desired from the public officer any partisan service; they meant that public officers should owe their whole service to the Government and to the people; they meant that the officer should be secure in his tenure as long as his personal character remained untarnished and the performance of his duties satisfactory. If elected, I shall conduct the administration of the Government upon these principles, and all constitutional powers vested in the Executive will be employed to establish this reform. The declaration of principles by the Cincinnati Convention makes no announcement in favor of a single Presidential term. I do not assume to add to that declaration; but believing that the restoration of the civil service to the system established by Washington and followed by the early Presidents can be best accomplished by an Executive who is under no temptation to use the patronage of his office to promote his own reelection, I desire to perform what I regard as a duty in stating now my inflexible purpose, if elected, not to be a candidate for election to a second term.

On the currency question I have frequently expressed my views in public, and stand by my record on this subject. I regard all the laws of the United States relating to the payment of the public indebtedness, the legal-tender notes included, as constituting a pledge and moral obligation of the Government which must in good faith be kept. It is my conviction that the feeling of uncertainty inseparable from an irredeemable paper currency, with its fluctuations of value, is one of the great obstacles to a revival of confidence and business and to a return of prosperity. That uncertainty can be ended in but one way, the resumption of specie payments. But the longer the instability connected with our present money system is permitted to continue the greater will be the injury inflicted upon our commercial interests and all classes of security. If elected I shall approve every appropriate measure to accomplish the desired end, and shall oppose any step backward. The resolution with respect to the public school system is one which should receive the hearty support of the American people. Agitation upon this subject is to be apprehended until by constitutional amendment the schools are placed beyond all danger of sectarian control or interference. The Republican party is pledged to secure such an amendment. The resolution of the convention on the subject of the permanent pacification of the country, and the complete protection of all its citizens in the free enjoyment of all their constitutional rights, is timely and of great importance. The condition of the Southern States attracts the attention and commands the sympathy of the people of the whole Union in their progressive recovery from the effects of the war. Their first necessity is an intelligent and honest administration of government which will protect all classes of citizens in all their political and private rights. What the South most needs is "Peace," and peace depends upon the supremacy of law.

There can be no enduring peace if the constitutional rights of any portion of the people are habitually disregarded. A division of political parties, resting merely upon distinctions of race, or upon sectional lines, is always unfortunate and may be disastrous. The welfare of the South, alike with that of every other part of the country, depends upon the attractions it can offer to labor, to immigration, and to capital; but laborers will not go, and capital will not venture, where the Constitution and the laws are set at defiance, and distraction, apprehension, and alarm take the place of peace-loving and law-abiding social life. All parts of the Constitution are sacred, and must be sacredly observed—the parts that are new no less than the parts that are old. The moral and material prosperity of the Southern States can be most effectively advanced by a hearty and generous recognition of the rights of all by all, a recognition without reserve or exception. With such a recognition fully accorded it will be practicable to promote, by the influence of all legitimate agencies of the General Government, the effort of the people of these States to obtain for themselves the blessings of honest and capable local government. If elected, I shall consider it not only my duty, but it will be my ardent desire to labor for the attainment of this end. Let me assure my countrymen of the Southern States that, if I shall be charged with the duty of organizing an administration, it will be one which will regard and cherish their truest interests, the interests of the white and the colored people, both and equally, and which will put forth its best efforts in behalf of a civil policy which will wipe out forever the distinction between the North and South in our common country; with a civil service organized upon a system which will secure purity, experience, efficiency, and economy; a strict regard for the public welfare solely in appointments, and the speedy, thorough, and unsparing prosecution and punishment of all public officers who betray official trusts; with a sound currency; with education unsectarian, and free to all; with simplicity and frugality in public and private affairs, and with a fraternal spirit of harmony pervading the people of all sections and classes, we may reasonably hope that the second century of our existence as a nation will, by the blessing of God, be pre-eminent as an era of good feeling and a period of progress, prosperity, and happiness.

Very respectfully, your fellow citizen,
R. B. HAYES.

WHAT OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS HAVE DONE FOR THE NATION.

Our fathers, the founders of the Republic, were men who understood the science of government and the doctrine of liberty. The addition of a new Power to the States of the world, without a monarch or a favored class of hereditary nobility, was regarded as an experiment which time alone would justify or destroy. It was indeed a problem in whose solution all humanity was interested, inasmuch as the foundation on which the whole political structure was to rest was the equality of all men before the law, and the consequent security of life and property and the rights of the individual. The Republic was born of blood and sacrifice when the world was fighting for dominion. No gushing theories of human perfection, borrowed from foreign enthusiasts, disturbed the stern minds of the men who battled for independence. Nor was there any intention of making this country the theater to try the revolutionary philosophy of France. American statesmen beheld from afar the struggle of the French people, and witnessed their defeat from two causes: First, the lack of popular intelligence and political knowledge; and secondly, the crushing influence of a political sacerdotalism inspired from Rome, which was adverse to popular liberty and enchained and misled the leaders of the people.

With such an example before them our fathers were likely to learn a profitable lesson. Church and State were eternally separated, and the proper measures taken for public instruction; and it was announced as an axiom that the stability and prosperity of the Republic depended upon the intelligence of its citizens. From that time till 1855 the efforts of the free States to make provision for the education of their youth were proportionate to their population. But the zeal of the South in the same direction materially lessened; and there grew up amid the white communities of masters and people who believed in the peculiar institution, the slaves, who were ignorant as cattle, and the mean whites, who despised both learning and labor. The breaking out of the rebellion; the ejection of the Democratic party from power; the succession to power of the Republican party, which fought the war and saved the Union; the emancipation of the slaves and their citizenship; and the reconstruction of the South, followed as historic sequences. Next to the grand old principle of human freedom, which the Republican party has wrought out, stands the avowal of the necessity of public education for the purpose of preserving it. And one of the earliest duties undertaken by Republicans was that of making provision for educating all within the States. This was a great work and proceeded well until it was unfortunately discovered in the South that general education would destroy the claim of the slave power, and put the colored man on the plane of independence.

The work, however, was carried on in the North, East, and West with increasing vigor, and with a determination to protect it from assault. Immense progress was made both in the method and in the means of education, and both have been utilized in our public schools. The country feels the advantages of public schools in the formation of character, and in the intelligent adaptation of the people to the quiet performance of the duties of citizenship. This was observed by Professor Goldwin Smith, of Cornell University, who was formerly Professor of Modern History at Oxford, England. He came here a stranger; but being by profession an educator, he examined the system of public education prevailing amongst us from the stand-point of one who understood his subject, and was well qualified to give an opinion. Mr. Smith's testimony to the influence of our public schools is not only pleasant to read, but, as that of a faithful observer, confirms the views of Republicans of the importance of education as developing a manly manhood and that peculiar attitude of mind which makes the American citizen a conservator of public order, fitting him for the position he is to occupy as a part of the Government of the Nation or State. Mr. Smith says:

"It has been truly said that secular education does not mean irreligious. A secular school here is different from a religious school, but not opposed to it. What branch of education in the common schools has any tendency to corrupt children's moral sense? I am not a blind worshipper of the Americans or their institutions, but I tell you that the influence of their common schools is good, morally as well as intellectually. Though there are bad things and bad men in America the influence of these schools is good, and they tend in the main to produce not "clever devils," but a law-loving and God-fearing nation; and if you ask about manners, I tell you I have been in the United States in the midst of exciting political contests, when the struggle has been going on between North and South, and that I saw meetings of both parties and torchlight processions on both sides of the streets, and not on one side or the other did I observe the slightest discourteous interruption of their opponents. I say those schools will not do everything, then, for I know very well that a moral and religious teacher must exert his influence in order to train the character of the child; but the effect of the schools, upon the whole, is to produce a moral as well as an intelligent population, and if the morality and intelligence of the nation are promoted by their common school system, so is their wealth."

These words are worth remembering. And Republicans should resolve to do their utmost to preserve the public schools in their independence and integrity.

THE FIRST VOTE.

At the next general election there will be a large number of young men who will cast their first ballot. Many of this class of voters will form opinions and mark out a political course that will be pursued throughout their lives, while others, of less consideration, will vote now and hereafter as circumstances may direct. As the first vote is the first recognition of manhood by the State, it is important that that vote should be considered and duly weighed before it is placed in the box, and that the young man who casts it may be conscientiously convinced that he is voting right, and that he is not giving his support to the promulgation of errors that may eventuate in detriment to or destruction of the Government. With the voters rest the responsibility, and they alone are accountable for good, bad, or indifferent officers that may be elevated to power. It therefore behooves every young man who is about to step into the political arena to consider well the responsibility that is thus thrust upon him. Although unsought there is no escaping it, and no man should shrink from it. If there ever was a time when our country needed the cool, calm, and decided action of her wise and patriotic sons, that time is now. The spirit of treason is abroad, and as the campaign progresses this spirit will become more apparent. The late rebel element is defiant, and, united with the Democracy, every effort, both fair and unfair, will be made to carry the election for Tilden and Hendricks.

Judging from the past, we know what to expect in the future, and all good citizens should co-operate to secure a fair expression at the polls in November next. To young men who are to cast their first ballot we would say: Study carefully the history of the two parties for the past fifteen years. Compare the records of each since 1861, and then decide as to which party we are indebted for a united country and a substantial Government. Decide within your own mind which party has been guilty of treason and which remained loyal to the old flag, and by force of arms sustained and perpetuated the Government under which we now live. Determine which party furnished the soldiers and statesmen that prosecuted the war and reconstructed the Government that it did not perish in the first century of its existence. Discriminate as to the present position of the two parties on the important questions of finance, labor, free schools, Church and

State, and all other questions that concern the welfare and prosperity of our people as a nation. This done, you will be able to vote intelligently, and to deposit your first ballot for the party of the Union.

TILDEN AND TWEED.

Samuel J. Tilden and William M. Tweed were formerly bosom friends. Evidence is fast accumulating that a portion of the money stolen by Tweed was used by Tilden and his fellow-politicians to run the Democratic machine. Tweed had special favors shown him while confined on the island. While at Ludlow-street jail he was permitted to go about the city in charge of an officer. It will be remembered that he escaped from custody while at his home in New York. Some power from behind the throne helped him. Circumstances point to Tilden as that power. Certain it is that as Governor of New York he has made no effort to discover his whereabouts. Not a dollar of reward has been offered for his capture. Even the Democratic sheriff who allowed him to escape still holds his position.

The following letters may throw a little light on the relationship existing when Tweed was in his glory between himself and the present candidate for Democratic honors on the so-called reform ticket:

NO. 15 GRAMERCY PARK,
August 12, 1866—11 A. M.

MY DEAR SIR: I decided to go to Philadelphia in the morning, and shall not be able to see you before I leave. Mr. Richmond is at the St. Nicholas somewhat ill. If well enough he will come on the 2 P. M. train. Whether he is there to-day or not I hope you will not fail to be in Philadelphia.

Very truly, your friend,

S. J. TILDEN.

Hon. Wm. M. Tweed.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to present to your attention the case of Mr. Samuel Allen, a very old friend of ours, who is in great need of a small appointment under your department, for which he has applied. He would be content with something for a time of not a very high rank. You will know him so well that I need add nothing. He used to be a very efficient and useful worker, and is an entirely reliable man, and I should be personally glad if you could help him.

Truly yours,
Hon. Wm. M. Tweed.

S. J. TILDEN.

NEW YORK, September 8, 1868.

The National Broadway Bank will pay to order of William M. Tweed five thousand dollars.

(Signed) WILLIAM M. TWEED.
Indorsed "Pay S. J. Tilden or order."

WILLIAM M. TWEED.

For deposit in the Bank of North America.
S. J. TILDEN.

It would be well if the friends of Samuel, the Reformer, would rise and explain what he did with the $5,000 received from Tweed. As the Democrats cast over 50,000 fraudulent votes in the city of New York in the fall of 1868 the receipt of this money from Tweed, the head of the Ring, looks suspicious, to say the least.

REFORM.—The Democrats are in favor of civil service reform. They have shown it in the House of Representatives. Every Union soldier suspected of being a Republican has been "bounced." There might be some compensation for this if Democratic Union soldiers took their places, but when ex-Confederate soldiers are quartered on Uncle Sam, as the best that can be done in the line of reform, even good-natured people will be found to object.

THE MIGHTY TRIO.—When two such illustrious ex-pounders as John Morrissey and John Kelly promise reform under Samuel J. Tilden, who can be so soulless as to doubt the genuineness of the reform movement. There must be hope for a nation that has in reserve such a mighty trio of reformers as Morrissey, Kelly, and Tilden. Oh, for a return of Tweed, the innocent, that a quartette might be formed to sing the praises of the Centennial year.

THE TRUE INWARDNESS OF DEMOCRACY.

If there was any chance for Mr. Tilden to be elected as a reformer that chance must be sadly interfered with when he explains his connection with his railway bonds. The charge has been made, and the people will bear in mind that no authentic denial has been given. But it is as a reformer that Mr. Tilden's friends delight to view him. As he looms up "the great ring smasher," ugly letters are published showing his connection with the Tweed ring, and with the acceptance of funds, it is said, to import repeaters from New York to Philadelphia for the purpose of increasing the Democratic vote. The loudest shrieker for Mr. Tilden as a reformer, who roars so loud that people cannot help recalling his unsavory name, is Charles A. Dana, of the New York Sun. He becomes absolutely oppressive by his demonstrations. He is a reformer himself and therefore knows what he is about. He has been a reformer ever since he was a disappointed applicant for office in the New York custom-house under a Republican administration. Mr. Dana is confiding to the last degree, if not a little indiscreet. He speaks of office-holders and reform; of the effect of the votes of men in office for Hayes and Wheeler; and what Mr. Tilden will do with them when he becomes the reform President. The Sun says:

"ONE OUT OF EIGHTY THOUSAND.—The Republicans propose to elect Hayes President in place of Grant. The whole number of public offices is estimated to be eighty thousand. One is to be changed, and seventy-nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine left in! One drop in the pail of sour milk is to be changed—will that make the whole pail sweet?

"Whereas, if Tilden is elected, the great majority of the public officers will stand not upon the order of their going, but go at once. This would be civil service reform in earnest; not a reform of one eighty-thousandth part, but a reform of the whole body.

"This view of the matter makes it very plain how electors who want to give their support to reform should vote. Those who desire one eighty-thousandth part of reform can vote for Hayes, while those who are for entire reform will vote for Tilden."

The true inwardness of which is the old Democratic war-cry, "To the victors belong the spoils." And Mr. Tilden being a reformer of most magnificent proportions, though otherwise a very small man, intends to resort to the vulgar but very common practice of the Democratic party of turning out of office, if he has a chance, eighty thousand Republicans and replace them with Democrats. This is reform with a vengeance. Ugh!

THE REFORMER.—The New York Times makes some revelations regarding Tilden's private affairs which indicate that he has not always been a hard-money man. We extract as follows:

"The revelations concerning Tilden's shin-plaster mill in Northern Michigan continue. There were fifty-eight companies engaged in the manufacture of the 'currency,' the returns of two of which are thus stated:

Iron Cliff, (Tilden's).....	$4,552,094.00
New York, (Tilden's).....	2,113,666.66

"The whole amount of the currency issued in Michigan was over $100,000,000, and it had an exclusive run from 1863 until 1874, when some persons were indicted for counterfeiting it, and the court discharged the prisoners on the ground that the currency itself was fraudulent and illegal, and it was no crime to counterfeit it. At the same time the revenue officers began to demand the internal revenue tax, and began to take evidence as to the amount in circulation. The tax was 10 per cent., and for the twelve years Tilden's share amounted to at least $10,000,000. But by some secret manipulation a bill was smuggled through Congress on the night of March 3, 1875, remitting this tax, except for the last year. Here was the apostle of hard money talking and writing to the people upon the destructive demoralization of paper money, and pointing out the glories of hard money, while for twelve years he was running two mills for the manufacture of rag money, and palming it off on the miners as better than gold. Sam also had several stores in the neighborhood of the mines, where groceries and dry goods and a variety of other articles were for sale, and Sam made his notes legal tender in exchange for these goods. His notes being legal tender only at his own stores, the unfortunate holders had to make all their purchases from Tilden, who thus pocketed a handsome extra profit on the sale of his wares."

THURLOW WEED does not think Tilden would make a good President, even if he could be elected, as he could only be by the union of the Democracy with rebellion—a union which, if successful, would throw the Government into the hands of those who attempted to destroy the country.

DEMOCRATIC POLITICAL SLANDER.

England may have its elections, and there may be fighting and bribery, but the slander which afflicts this country is an element not to be found in British politics. No political speaker ventures to indulge in it, and however heated the contest, the press studiously abstains from villainous charges and scandalous aspersions from a wholesome fear of the law. Nor is there the slightest chance of politicians setting themselves to calumniate public men. If a charge is made and published it must be proved; for it has been purposely made dangerous and expensive to all of that class who are willing to tell what they know to the detriment of others from partisan motives or to aid the party to which they belong by attacking political opponents high in office or in public esteem. The law and the courts in England are relied upon to meet slanders. There is no occasion to pass the court by and ask Parliament to investigate a case by a special committee, where Whigs favor the Whigs, and Tories the Tories. Men stand in wholesome dread of slander because a slanderer has few friends, and a Parliamentary committee is not the tribunal before which a slander should be tried. The people of the United States might learn a useful lesson on this subject. Mean men have charged Blaine, Morton, Conkling, and Bristow with conduct which, if proved, would disqualify them for the Presidency. Blaine, in the midst of a Herculean defense, in which he fought the Democracy single handed, was stricken with sudden and dangerous illness. Morton took the slanderers at their word, and proved himself a war governor of which the nation may be proud. Conkling was not the man to destroy himself for a fee in a patent case. And no mule or "Mary Merritt" cases could make Bristow any other than he is—the man that introduced the element of backbone in politics, and when the revenue fell short, struck with all his might at the men who were guilty of fraud and brought them before the courts, where they were convicted and punished.

The Democrats have joined hands and hearts with the ex-Confederates of the House of Representatives to render this session odious and notorious for bogus investigations and slanderous charges. The expenses of their investigating committees will far exceed a million dollars; and for this Democratic indulgence the people will have to pay. The investigations have been so numerous that nothing else has been done, and the session is drawing to a close with the appropriation bills in a chaotic state and unpassed. Democrats have always shown a desire to attempt to blacken the character and villify Republicans. The Democratic members of committees have taken as evidence the infamous statements of men who would have been put out of any decent court in Christendom. These statements were taken at irregular meetings, during the absence of Republican members, who are in the minority, and without cross-examinations by the Republicans charged, and the statements have been given to the Democratic press for publication and comment as if they were true! Will the people tolerate this infamy? Is it not time that the reign of slander terminated? Will not the people rally round the Republican candidate for President and other Republican candidates throughout the country, and destroy the last hope of the Democracy to accomplish the country's ruin? It all depends upon the people. If they are faithful to their trust and do their duty the assembling again of a Democratic-ex-Confederate House of Representatives will be an impossibility, and the insidious and dirty working of Democratic committees never be repeated.

Just how these committees work Mr. Clymer's may serve as a notable instance. It was Mr. Clymer's committee that investigated Lawrence Harney's charge of bribing Speaker Kerr with $450 for securing a captain's commission for A. P. Green in the regular army. Mr. Strouse, a Democratic member of the House when Mr. Harney was a doorkeeper, appeared as a witness before Mr. Clymer's committee to testify against Harney and in favor of Mr. Kerr. But he had been true to his instincts as a Democrat notwithstanding. He had the misfortune to be cross-examined when the following incident was revealed. He had been paid upward of $300 for his influence in securing an army commission for a person who did not pass the surgeon's examination, and the amount was returned by Mr. Strouse with the profoundest regret as a serious loss of official emolument. Mr. Clymer's committee acquitted Mr. Kerr, and Mr. Danford, a Republican member of the committee, took the opportunity to express himself in language which Republicans only can utter. Mr. Danford agreed with the conclusion of the committee, but charged upon the Democratic party the responsibility of the production of such men as Harney, a thorough falsifier and detractionist from the life-long good character of public men that should weigh in the balance, and the searching of junk-shops for old telegrams to show evidence relevant and irrelevant against the character of men in public and private life, as instanced by buying up the waste paper of a telegraph office to find evidence for Congressional investigating committees.

He challenged the Democracy to an issue like that, but said most emphatically that Mr. Harney is a bad man, and that the apparent truth of his story should guide them in consulting probabilities before they put another man on the witness stand to defame a public man, or no member of Congress would be safe from attack, no matter how pure his life had been before. He scouted the idea of a conspiracy in the matter, and charged it to Harney's inherent badness, and deprecated the indiscriminate attacks that had been made on even the President as degrading to our institutions and our nationality. He fully, entirely, and positively exonerated Mr. Kerr, and said the question was decided in a manner that must be not only pleasing to Mr. Kerr's friends, but thoroughly and entirely satisfactory to his family.

This is the way Republicans say what they mean. It has the ring of the true metal, and there is no room for slander in the heart of a Republican. Republicans have an inborn hatred of slander; and they repudiate it with all the scorn that arises from a profound patriotism, and a determination to serve the people without resorting to what they abhor, even to acquitting a Democrat when convinced of his innocence as an example to Democrats to go and do likewise to Republicans whom they know to be not guilty of the charges made against them.

RECONCILIATION.—It was no careless or hasty selection which secured for William A. Wheeler the second place on the ticket. He may be less known than he ought to be, in his native State as well as in the country at large; but wherever he is known his name elicits a warmth of attachment and esteem such as few public men have ever merited or enjoyed. Honest and moderate men of both political parties in the South have learned to respect in Mr. Wheeler one who appreciates the gravity of the problems with which the friends of Southern progress have to deal, and who discerns a nobler triumph than mere partisan advantage in the reconciliation of social and political elements whose interests are substantially the same.

TWO QUESTIONS.—Is our present system of national currency worth sustaining? If it is, then the party that created it and protects it must be sustained by the people in November next.

Are our national bonds worth protecting and the credit of the nation worth sustaining in the markets of the world? If so, there can be but one answer to the question, "Which party can best protect our bonds and our credit?" Common sense ought to dictate that the party which guarded both during the rebellion and since its close is the only party that can be trusted to protect them at the present time.

THE NEW LEADERSHIP.—The names of Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler are amply sufficient guarantees that the party has shaken off the influences which threatened to paralyze it; that it has repudiated the corruption which its so-called leaders have suffered to stain its record and make its honest members hang their heads for shame. A campaign under such leadership will be an aggressive, enthusiastic, and united one.

THE MANUFACTURE OF PAPER MONEY.

The history of the system in vogue in the Treasury Department, inaugurated and carried into successful operation by a Republican administration, which took charge of the reins of government at a time when the country was threatened with a great civil war, and when the Departments in Washington were almost in a state of chaos, would be very interesting were the materials at hand to cover such an extended narrative. But as this is almost impossible just now, a sketch will be given simply of the methods of securing the interests of the Government in the printing, issue, redemption, and accounting of public securities.

THE PRINTING OF PAPER MONEY.

When the people of the North actually realized that war had begun they also discovered that the state of the finances would not permit the Government to take very stringent steps to protect itself. To remedy this, action was taken by Congress authorizing the issue of sixty million dollars in United States notes, payable in gold. These are known as the "old demand notes."

The suspension of specie payments by the banks, in December, 1861, was followed by the withdrawal of gold, silver, and even copper coin from circulation. Then the difficulty of making payment of small sums became so great that the people were driven to the use of postage and revenue stamps and the checks of individuals and corporations as substitutes.

To remedy this Congress on the 17th of July, 1862, passed an act authorizing payments in stamps of the United States, but prohibiting the circulation of notes of individuals and corporations. These stamps were exchangeable for United States notes.

Complaints were soon made, however, against this form of currency, it being subject to great losses, as was shown subsequently by the fact that while about twenty million dollars were issued there still remain some four million dollars outstanding, most of which will never be received at the Treasury.

To replace postal and revenue stamp currency the Secretary of the Treasury was by act of March 3, 1863, empowered to issue a new fractional currency in like amounts—the same to be printed in the Treasury. A little more than twenty-three million dollars were thus printed and issued. This is known as the second issue of fractional currency.

To replace the "old demand notes" the first issue of what were termed "greenbacks" was authorized by act of July 25, 1862, of which there were printed nearly six hundred and seventy million dollars—the original act having been amended to admit of this large issue.

Following these issues came the—

One-year notes of 1863.

Two-year notes of 1863.

Two-year coupons of 1863.

Compound interest notes of 1863.

Compound interest notes of 1864.

Third issue of fractional currency.

Fourth issue of fractional currency.

United States notes of 1869.

Fractional currency, fourth issue—second series.

Fractional currency, fourth issue—third series.

United States notes of 1874.

The total paper money issued and redeemed since the beginning of the war, and outstanding on the 30th June, 1875, was as follows:

Issued	$2,081,224,564 45
Redeemed	1,662,767,805 76

Outstanding	418,456,758 69
-------------------	----------------

Thus it will be seen that the printed securities of the Government amounted in fifteen years to the enormous sum, in round numbers, of two thousand and eighty-one million dollars. Of this sum, which has been in the pockets of the people, there are nearly sixteen hundred and seventy-three million dollars now retired.

Prior to 1869 there was considerable difficulty found in preventing counterfeiting; and the printing of the early issues by Government was done under circumstances very discouraging to those who were compelled to devise systems for a work that required the greatest perfection in a thousand details, without precedents to guide them. Yet the greatest credit is due for the success with which their efforts have been crowned.

The skilled workmen of the country were then in the employ of private corporations, and most of the work was necessarily given to the bank-note companies, they possessing the greatest facilities for the prompt execution of contracts. Gradually, however, the Government became its own printer, and to-day the major part of the work is done in the Treasury by Government employes.

DISTINCTIVE PAPER.

One of the sources of weakness in the printing of securities was found to be the facility with which the paper on which the securities were printed could be obtained by counterfeiters; and to afford the greatest protection against fraud an act was passed authorizing the making of a special kind of material known as "distinctive paper," to be used exclusively by the Government. All of the current notes, fractional currency, bonds, and stamps are printed on this kind of paper.

On the adoption of this material the mill in which it is manufactured was placed under the surveillance of the Treasury, which maintains a force of watchmen to guard against tampering with its manufacture. An agent of the Treasury is in charge as superintendent, who receives the paper from the manufacturer as soon as it is made, and stores or forwards it as directed. Every precaution is taken to prevent the loss of paper, and none but those employed are allowed access to the grounds. The mills are at Glen Falls, West Chester, Pa. In the manufacture of this "distinctive paper" short pieces of red silk are mixed with the pulp in an engine, and the finished material is conducted to a wire without passing through any screens which might retain the silk threads. By an arrangement above the wire cloth a shower of short pieces of fine blue silk thread is dropped carefully upon the paper while it is being formed. The lower side, on which the blue silk is deposited, is the one used for the back of the notes, and from the manner in which the threads are applied must show them more distinctly than the upper side, although they are embedded deep enough to remain fixed. Each sheet is registered as soon as it is manufactured.

As soon as the paper is transferred to the care of the superintendent a report is made by the manufacturer and another by the superintendent, stating the date, size of paper delivered, number of sheets, and for what it is to be used. These reports are forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury, and are examined and recorded in the currency division, where the accounts are kept of all paper of this character used for Treasury purposes. The accounts of this office relating to paper embrace every variety used in printing Government securities, and reach every distinct class of issues by denomination; so that any information relating to paper or printed money can be obtained by reference to the records. This system serves as a check also upon the manufacturer, the superintendent, the express companies as forwarders, the bank-note companies in New York and Washington, Carpenter & Co., Philadelphia, and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in the Treasury, so far as paper and printing are concerned; and in the matter of paper after it is printed—when it becomes money—it forms a check upon the United States Treasurer, Register of the Treasury, and Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The accounts take each sheet of the paper as soon as it is manufactured, follows it through the various offices and processes of printing to its issue as money, and also, after redemption from circulation, to its final destruction by the Secretary of the Treasury. The success with which these accounts have been kept is evident from the fact that, while the printing and deliveries of money have run into the billions, it has been done without the loss of a cent to the Government by fraudulent issues or otherwise.

ADDITIONAL PRECAUTION AGAINST FRAUD.

The printing is principally done in the Treasury, but a portion of the work on each note is done outside. This is to avoid the possibility of fraud by combination, which might be possible if all the work was performed in one building or by one company or establishment. In the printing bureau of the Treasury the checks adopted against the possibility of fraud are also of the most elaborate kind, and apparently they are amply sufficient to prevent either mistake or loss.

After the securities receive the finishing touch in the printing bureau they are delivered to the Treasurer if money, to the Register if bonds, and to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue if stamps. Sheets spoiled in printing or otherwise imperfect are delivered to the division of currency of the Secretary's office. This completes the work, and the money, bonds, and stamps are then placed in the vaults of the various offices designated for issue when needed, except the spoiled imprints, which are counted and destroyed by a committee appointed for that purpose.

THE ISSUE AND REDEMPTION OF PAPER MONEY.

When a remittance of mutilated money is received by the Treasurer the package is delivered to experienced counters in his office who examine and count the contents, throwing out counterfeits when found. These counters are ladies, whose quick perceptions and nimble fingers are found to be much better suited to the work than those of men. The counters are held responsible for the detection of counterfeits and for losses while in their hands. They account each day for the amounts they receive. If they pass a counterfeit they are compelled to pay the amount, as the issue of new money is made upon their report.

After this count each note is cut in two through the center, put up in duplicate packages of perhaps $4,000, and cancelled by the punching of holes in each stack of half notes. These are then delivered, one half to the Register and the other end or half to the Secretary's office—the upper or left half of each greenback, and the right halves of fractional currency going to the Register, while the opposite ends are sent to the Secretary. Each note is then examined and counted in these two offices, making three counts in all, and if errors are found the Treasurer's office rectifies them. After this the duplicate lots are delivered to a committee of four, one representing the Secretary, the second the Register, a third the Treasurer, and the fourth the people generally. When internal revenue stamps are to be destroyed another agent is added for that office. A schedule of the lots prepared to be destroyed is delivered to this committee, who check off each lot as it is thrown into a large boiler which, when filled, is sealed up, and the chemicals previously thrown in acted upon by a flow of steam and water, produces decomposition and reduces the paper to a pulp. It is, however, allowed to remain in this state forty-eight hours, when the seal is broken, the pulp examined, and certificates of destruction are signed by the committee. These certificates are sent to the Treasurer, Register, Comptroller, and Secretary, and form the vouchers of these officers in the settlement of their accounts.

The printing, issue, and redemption of internal revenue stamps, bonds, and national bank notes are carried on with very little variation, as herein indicated. Nothing has been left undone that was deemed necessary to render the obligations of the Government of every form as safe to the people as it is possible to render them; and on reflection it will be admitted that the checks and guards are so numerous, and so well arranged, that it is almost impossible that any "irregularity" can occur without immediate detection.

THE "FIRST" VOTE.—Some half a million young Republicans have arrived at the age of manhood since the last Presidential election, and will cast their first Presidential vote in November next. Mr. Hayes will have the entire lot. He is "young in years and younger in spirit," and the magnetism of youth will attract to him the full first vote. With the vote will come the youthful enthusiasm of each, with the will to work for victory.

OUR CANDIDATES.—The foremost of the candidates is a man of plain, unobtrusive manners, unimpeachable honesty, keen intelligence, and robust common sense. The second place on the ticket has been given to one whose ability as a legislator and whose influence as a clear-headed, far-seeing statesman are worthy of the noblest era of our history and the highest standards of our public life. The Convention has given the Republican party a ticket and a platform on which it can and must win.

Republicans undertake the work in the South it will remain undone, and there will grow up a dangerous class for which the Democracy must be held responsible. The Republican party conferred freedom on the slaves who were loyal, when their masters were fighting against the Union; and Republicans were prepared to educate them. The blacks made wonderful advances while the opportunity was given them. But the Democratic party saw that if they were educated it could not control them; and Southern Democrats resorted to intimidation or worse to prevent the colored people being taught. The success resulting from these outrages led to their application to the black voters intending to exercise the right of the franchise, and as the votes of the black men were needed to count, the Democracy either cast the black men's ballots for their friends, or counted in Democratic candidates without the trouble of being voted for.

On the success of the Republican party in November next depends the doing away of this injustice, and the stopping of these murderous deeds. If the strong arm of the Government can reach across the seas to protect an American citizen, Republican statesmen will devise means to protect the citizens of the Republic within its own borders, that the advantages of education and the rights of the franchise may be secured for every citizen in the land, however humble or obscure.

GENERAL HAYES ON THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

In the Ohio campaign of 1875, General Hayes took a decided stand in favor of hard money and an early return to specie payments. The contest was mainly on that issue. The Democratic candidates, Mr. Allen, for Governor, and General Cary, for Lieutenant Governor, opposed the Republican policy of hard money. Governor Allen claimed that the greenback was not only a bond or note of promise to pay money, but that it was money itself "to pay all debts, including United States bonds." General Cary savagely attacked the bondholders and wealthier classes, and appealed to the passions of the ignorant in speeches calculated to deceive and prejudice the popular mind against the Republican policy of specie resumption. Senator Sherman, General Woodford, of New York, Carl Schurz, and General Hayes warned the country against the evils of a fluctuating paper currency. Hayes spoke nearly every evening during the canvass, and his voice was persistently in favor of hard money. A reporter writing from Ohio to the New York Times said: "Hayes meets the money question squarely everywhere. On this subject no man in the canvass has been more positive, more manly, or more firm." The result was a victory for Hayes, who was elected Governor by a handsome majority over Allen, the Democratic candidate. The inflation and repudiation movement was struck a blow from which, says the New York Times, it never recovered. The victory for sound money in Ohio defeated the inflationists in Pennsylvania, and has so far prevented the Democratic House of Representatives from repudiating the pledge of 1875. Had the contest been other than what General Hayes and the other advocates of hard money made it innumerable ills might have come upon the country. At best the uncompromising advocates of honest money have had a long, hard task in holding the country to its successive small advances toward resumption. To that inestimably important end General Hayes contributed as much as any one man in the country.

—♦—
NO APOLOGIES TO MAKE.—Personally the Republican nominees have nothing to extenuate or explain, and their public life has been identified neither with the men who have betrayed the trust which the party confided to them, nor with the scandals which have marked the recent history of all sections of American politics. Neither of them has excited violent animosities, and both of them have done such service to the Union and to their party as will secure for them the warmest support of Republicans of all shades of opinion.

THE IDEAL AND THE REAL—DEMOCRATIC STAGNATION.

The world moves, and the evidence of its progress is everywhere before us. This idea seems to have been prevalent in the minds of some of the gentlemen who recently attended the meeting of the trustees of Hampden-Sidney College, Va., for the purpose of conferring degrees. After the degrees had been conferred and the delivery of the speeches by the graduates, a Centennial address was spoken by Dr. Hoge. He said :

"You behold the traces of the mother mellowed by time. The years between youth and manhood vanish to-day. Anticipation and realization meet together. As the evening becomes the morning star memory becomes hope, and the glory of the past is the dawn of brighter glory."

This is a pretty thought, prettily expressed; but its meaning is that progress is continuous; that the achievements of the present will soon become those of the past; and that using all moral and material advancement as the stepping-stone for exertion, we reach forward to higher aims and nobler achievements in what lies beyond us in future. There is indeed a golden chain which connects the PAST with the PRESENT; and the brighter glory which labor has yet to develop, for the welfare and elevation of man in the FUTURE, will nevertheless be bound together by the same golden links, that the full fruition of what has been bestowed in time may be secured and preserved.

There is truth in this ideal view of man, and what concerns him. It is of interest to the student, the graduate, and to the men fighting the battles of the world and beating down all opposition. But if it is true when applied to ethics, is it possible that it could be untrue when applied to politics; to the science of Government; to man as a citizen, responsible for the formation of correct political opinions or the acceptance of correct political principles; and of the performance of his duty to the State and to his fellow men?

This question appears to have been answered by Senator Stevenson, of Kentucky, in his oration before the Society of the Alumni. It was an able and feeling appeal to the young men present, in which Mr.

Stevenson reviewed the scenes in the institution where he was a student forty-seven years ago. He called upon his audience to consider the living present, and said :

"American independence and Hampden-Sidney College had been born the same year. Twins at their birth, they had been allies in life for the freedom and salvation of man. The question as to each is whether from this time we shall advance or decline. We are cowards if we do not boldly look the future in the face. The Constitution purchased by the red blood of our fathers is to be preserved. We must pass away. To you younger men is committed the trust which patriotism and liberty impose. Dead empires show the certain decay of that prosperity which is only material. I come to depress nobody. All dangers increase responsibility. Is there not a cloud? Is nothing different from what it was in the days of our fathers?"

It is true that the generation passing away will be succeeded by the generation of young men, whose right training, whether in college, school, or home, is of unspeakable importance. But there is the same sad inconsistency in the address of Senator Stevenson which marks the leaders of the Democratic party in the South and in the North. If he and other Democrats are to be held before the youth of to-day as examples for imitation, there is indeed danger to the future of the country. "The Constitution purchased by the red blood of our fathers is to be preserved." Did the Senator hold this view when he entered the Confederacy with the avowed intention to destroy the Constitution? Could the fathers ever have imagined the outbreak of the rebellion in the South, and the consequent war for the purpose of preserving slavery? This is 1876—the Centennial year. The authors of American Independence never imagined a bloody civil strife between the South and the rest of the Union, for the great hope of all of them was the preservation of their mighty work. But the authors of the rebellion thought otherwise, and they became responsible for the additional bloodshed which desolated the land, and caused the vast debt to be inflicted upon the people. The authors of the Constitution provided for the growth of the country and for the progress that has ensued. In adapting the names of scores of its high officers and public men our public scandal and our shame."

This is what General McClernand said of Republicans! The Republican party inherited the war. The leaders of the Democracy had allowed the preparations for rebellion to mature without taking measures to prevent them. And when the people lost faith in the Democratic party and cast it out of power the Republican party, ever true and loyal to freedom and the Union cause, succeeded the Democracy, and moreover succeeded in saving the Union. If the preservers of this Republic are greater than the founders of empires does not the Republican party deserve the credit for its stupendous efforts in putting down the rebellion? And if the Republican party preserved the Republic can its record be otherwise than good and noble and patriotic? Yet General McClernand says of its record that it is—

"A record of horrible incapacity, venality, waste, fraud, and the party which had been powerless to break down and trample under foot its corruptionists, with stupendous effrontery pledged itself to a reform of which it has become incapable."

The "stupendous effrontery" is on the side of the Democracy whose record shows its sympathies were with disloyalty. That General McClernand was able to speak of "the whole Union" was due to the courage, wisdom, and endurance of Republicans. And it seems to be something more than effrontery in General McClernand to charge the Republican party with fraud and incapacity, when a Confederate House of Representatives has stopped the legislation of the nation through its imbecility and ignorance in the conduct of public affairs, and the Democratic party is consenting to the plot to cripple the public service by the House recklessly refusing to appropriate sufficient money to carry on the business of the Government.

Had the South prevailed in its rebellion, and founded a slave empire, what "heritage of liberty" would the Democracy have preserved and transmitted to us? We should like to hear General McClernand reply.

WORK AND VOTE.

The other day an article appeared in a Virginia journal alleging that a particular locality in the South was so prolific that labor was superfluous. The land surrounding the city where the paper is published is unquestionably of a superior quality; and the inhabitants of the city number some 25,000 souls. But the city had little evidence of prosperity. Business men complained of heavy taxation and the ruinous State debt. The State debt crushed out the life of trade and commerce. Farmers with good crops needed railway accommodation to dispose of them at remunerative prices; traders had lost heart because they were losing money; and when the stranger looked at the unenterprising character of the people and the absence of that energy which denotes freedom and manhood, he saw at once how deep and extensive was the curse of slavery, as it had made the people dislike labor. This dislike of physical labor had extended to mental labor as applied to scholarship and to politics. A dark political pall seemed to hang upon the brows of the community. The Republican party had been fraudulently overcome by the Conservatives. Conservatives had come in upon the cry of being the exponents of Democratic doctrine, and claimed respectability for so doing. Voters were caught by this clap-trap appeal. They took their opinions upon trust, and followed their leaders without taking the trouble to inquire. This had been the political and commercial ruin of the place. The people are now calling to Conservatives to re-found the Republican party, by joining with Republicans, white and black, and thus become affiliated with the only men who can give the country prosperity.

Knaves and fools only despise labor. Wise men are industrious from choice; for they know that nothing lasting, nothing valuable can be achieved without it. The Presidential contest in which we are engaged will demand of all the most persistent effort and the most faithful example. Republicans in the South are beginning to discover that in spite of the grievous wrongs they have endured the future is big with hope if a united and manly effort be made. For instance, it is said that Democrats have for sometime been having things pretty much their own way in Tennessee. A few sturdy Republicans have put their shoulders to the wheel, and invited their friends to do likewise. Hence, they say, it is more than brag to speak of carrying the State for the Republican party, which will insure for it prosperity, and peace, and order. But they are aware that the Democracy cannot be beaten without labor.

A genuine Republican is just the man to pledge his hand and heart to assist, and as the invitation goes from county to county in Tennessee, and the most prominent Republicans come forward to help, the State will be one vast hive of workers in the Republican cause—the cause of humanity and freedom, which cannot fail. Other States, too, will catch the spirit of vigorous resistance to Democratic oppression and injustice. And when Republicans are awake to the best interests of the Union, and all do their utmost for the common good, the political darkness of the Democratic past, which has pressed upon the people like a nightmare, will give place to sunlight and concord of States. Then the true principle of brotherhood will be developed in reality, because it will be based upon the divine principle which the Republican party recognizes and advocates, viz: to do to others as we would they should do to us, and to grant and defend the rights and equality of all men before the law which the Constitution guarantees and which every Republican claims for himself.

WHAT DEMOCRATS THINK OF HAYES AND WHEELER.

The utter imbecility of the majority of the present House of Representatives has been demonstrated by the chaotic confusion in which the public business is found at the end of the fiscal year. When the rebellion was on the eve of breaking out, Howell Cobb, as Secretary of the Treasury, reported to Congress that 1860 was a most prosperous year; that the harvest had been bountiful and the commerce of the country larger than ever. Having placed on record these facts, which could not be gainsaid, he retired from office and went home to assist his State to secede from the Union. Other prominent Southerners had seats in Congress, and they rose in their places one after another to avow their treason and disappear from association with Northern men. This was the case with Southerners generally, who recrossed Mason and Dixon's line with peculiar fervor, resolving to return and capture Washington, dissolve the Union, and do many more wonderful exploits of the same character, as they whipped the mudsills of the North out of their boots and called the roll of slaves at Bunker Hill.

This was the programme of the rebellion; but unfortunately, although the Southern heart was fired to a white heat, the programme was too extensive to carry out. A war was fought, however, which lasted more than four years, and slavery was the prize; but the history of the Union, which never was dismembered, does not give the victory to the South; and as to slavery, that Southern idol, it perished in the light of a purer day.

The Republican party, which conducted the war and which was the party of freedom and union, know that the war has been fought by the number of noble men who sleep the sleep of heroes, having sealed their patriotism with their blood, and by the vast debt incurred in the preservation of the Union which the survivors are pledged to pay. Republicans know and feel this to-day, and those who live at Bunker Hill have never heard the call of the slave roll yet. But the Democracy are like that famous monarch who never did a wise thing; and the ex-Confederate Democrats profess to have made the discovery that the people who fought the war have become convinced that they were wrong, and, as they were chiefly Republicans and fair-minded, they were disgusted with their record of opposing the South, and were only too willing to wipe it out and forget it, that the South might forgive them for saving the Union.

With this discovery Confederates came to Congress highly elated. They felt that the North was sorry and desired to forget the war; and consequently the South was ready to forgive, and turn out of office or destroy the reputation of every Republican as a proof of it. The Congressional Democracy, which reached very low down and tickled the diaphragms of the Democratic party, were so convinced of the truth of what the South said of Republicans that, without guile, they joined the ranks of the Congressional Confederates, and both became the standard-bearers of that flag which carries death and dismay to Republicans in the South, white and black, that will not acknowledge and vote for Democratic supremacy. And these standard-bearers have earned the fame of the most blunderheaded of Bourbons, who never learned anything and forgot nothing, so that the problem of their alliance is a little mixed upon the question of their political erudition.

These Democrats and Confederate allies assumed the control of Congress, and very soon showed their utter incapacity for public affairs. They were unable to disconnect themselves from the past. With Republicans alleged to be sorrowing and with arms extended to take Messrs. Lamar and Hill, the loveliest of the rebel brotherhood, to their bosom, Southerners could not interpret the public sentiment, but hoped it would come round all right at last, that they might be friends with the North. So they became devotedly magnanimous. All they wanted was the supreme control of the country they fought to destroy; and such Republicans as were mean enough to dispute their supremacy they would punish by excepting from their affection and would on no account befriend. Off they went upon their journey, as time was precious. They traveled in the old ruts and opposed all Republican legislation, in order to re-establish the political condition of the days when the Democratic party was banished from power because it deserved it. True, the road was rough and the task was difficult. Strangely, the people did not sanction downright disloyalty uttered in Congress and elsewhere. Nor did the Confederates in the South receive public approbation for their denial of the rights of citizenship to Republicans. Indeed, the nation complained of the vulgar and stupid trick of rebels asking restoration because they were such, and attempting to demonstrate that the Republican party was wrong in saving the Union, and should make way for the Democratic party, in which the rebels found shelter, as it and they only had been loyal to the Constitution.

This was hard work, but every Confederate had an inward conviction that the days of the Republican party were numbered; that it was born to die; that the only imperishable thing under the sun which the people loved and longed to behold was a full return to the glory of Democratic ascendancy, when a Democratic President would grace the White House, a Democratic Administration put back the hands of time, and a Democratic majority be found in the House and the Senate. Then would the country shine forth in its prosperity. Republican statesmen and soldiers should take back seats and witness the undoing of the work of the last sixteen years. Soft money would be plentiful and taxation light. The public debt would be repudiated and the Southern war debt paid, together with the slave-owners of the South for the slaves emancipated. The South would rise in its majesty. The Slave Power, defiant in its grandeur, with none to make it afraid or curb it, would deal with the "niggers" reduced to slavery hopeless and eternal. In a word, all the blessings, moral, political, and social, that culminated in 1860 would be transplanted to the Centennial year 1876; the progress of the country would be stopped; and the fires of discontent rekindled in the land, and be ready to burst forth with increasing volume and with a hundred-fold the desolating power of the war.

Such was the dream of the Confederate of the Democratic party. Its leaders talked wildly of corruption, of the rottenness of the Republican party, of its weakness, of the indifference of its best men, and of the necessity of a Democratic-Confederate succession.

The star of Democracy stood over the White House, and thither all wise men would proceed. Alas! the day came for the meeting of the nominating convention at Cincinnati. The Republican delegates were expected to nominate for the offices of President and Vice President the men who were to kill the Republican party and make room for the nomination of the standard-bearers of the Democracy, who would fascinate the country. But Hayes and Wheeler were nominated; and, while the sturdiest rebels began to quake, there was a sense of general discomfiture throughout the Democratic camp. This is shown by those quiet little communications which Democrats were heard to make to one another.

The nomination of Hayes was so unexpected that it sorely perplexed them. Had Blaine or Conkling or Bristow or Morton been the man they would have known the opponent they would have had to deal with, but Hayes had disconcerted them, as they frankly and openly admit.

"He is a first-class fellow," said Sunset Cox, recalling his acquaintance with him in Congress.

"I dread Hayes' nomination more than that of anybody else," said Ben Hill, of Georgia.

"It's a respectable ticket," said another well-known Democrat.

"Well, it has knocked us all to pieces," said one of the officials of the House. "We'll have to take Tilden now to carry New York, and if we take Tilden the West will bolt and nominate a soft-money ticket." Another Democrat said: "We have got to keep our eyes wide open at St. Louis. We've got to nominate the best kind of a man, and we've got to put him on the right kind of a platform."

Shortly after Mr. Hill had expressed his dread of Hayes' nomination he became still more communicative to his friends, though his spirits did not rise. He seemed to become more dejected the more he thought of the situation; and, with almost streaming eyes, he at last threw his soul into his words, as he uttered in a tone of disgust—

"By G—d, they've got us again!"

This little historic record is worth preserving for the events which are to follow.

Since these remarks were uttered the nomination of Tilden has been made at St. Louis. Republicans may now go to work and make the fears of the Democrats true by securing a Republican victory.

GENERAL HAYES IN MILITARY AND CIVIL LIFE.—Of his military character, one who served with him in nearly all of his campaigns has written as follows:

"As an officer he was noted not only for strict loyalty to his superiors, but for gallantry in battle and alacrity in the discharge of every duty, however perilous or arduous. The first suggestion of his nomination for Governor was strongly disfavored by the General, who put a quietus upon the movement in that direction as soon as heard of it. He generally preferred to remain in the military service as long as the rebellion lasted, and no political promotion was any temptation for him to leave it while the triumph of the national arms was incomplete. During the war he was nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Second District, and directly afterward received a letter importuning him to return home and make the canvass. General Hayes replied to this letter as follows:

IN CAMP, October 2.

Yours of the 29th ult. is received. Thanks. I have other business just now. Any man who would leave the Army at this time to electioneer for Congress ought to be scalped.

Truly yours, R. B. HAYES.

Notwithstanding this refusal to leave the field to co-operate with his friends in securing his political preferment, he was handsomely elected, defeating Joseph C. Butler, the Democratic candidate by a majority of 2,455.

In 1868 he was re-elected, his competitor being Theodore Cook, and his majority over that gentleman was 2,556. In Congress his industry, sound judgment, and fidelity to the interests of his constituents were conspicuous, and gave him a position of great prominence and influence with his fellow-members. Though not apparently ambitious of oratorical display, and seldom occupying the time of the House with even a short speech, his unobtrusive and thoroughly efficient discharge of his duty won for him not only respect but reputation, and he was regarded both in Washington and in Ohio as one of the ablest and best members on the floor. He took a deep interest in all the great and agitating questions then before Congress, including those relating to the reorganization of the lately revolted States, and acted uniformly in accord with the Republican line of policy in reference to the measures.

OFFICIAL INTEGRITY.

The cry of official corruption has been the peculiar hobby of the Democratic party since it was driven from power by an indignant people whose confidence it had betrayed. From time to time wholesale charges of official corruption have been made against the Republican party and its administration of affairs. There has been nothing definite in these charges, but they have been uttered so persistently that many, ignorant of the true facts, have been willing to believe them. In order to give an air of authority to these Democratic falsehoods a Democratic Senator called for a statement of the official defalcations as they appeared upon the books of the Treasury. The Senator wanted only those which had occurred since the Republican party came into power, but the resolution was so amended as to call for those under previous Administrations also, running back to 1834. As many of the balances found due the United States were more technical than real, and if classed among criminal defalcations would work injury to some of the best men of the nation, living and dead, the Senate declined to print them, to which no objections were offered. The justice of this course will be apparent to all when it is stated that such names as Washington Irving appear in the list owing the United States sums ranging from one cent to ten dollars. Riggs and Corcoran, Baring Brothers, even the English Government, were down for small amounts. In lieu, therefore, of the complete list, a summary of the well known defalcations will be published, and from this the country can judge how unjust have been the charges raised against the Republican party.

The remarks of Senator Anthony on the subject give valuable information, which, in these times of political defamation, may be of service to Democracy. He said:

"The aggregate statement of the disbursements of the Treasury under the list is a paper exceedingly creditable to the American Government. I do not mean to any particular party, but to the financial history of the United States. There have been disbursed since 1834—I can hardly read such —$13,936,870,072.05, of which is marked upon these books $22,266,000, being about half a million of dollars a year, and a great part of this is nominal, not real.

"The losses on the $1,000 of disbursements were, in the administration of Jackson, $10.55; Van Buren, $21.15; Harrison, $10.37; Polk, $8.34; Taylor and Fillmore, $7.44; Pierce, $5.86; Buchanan, nearly $6.98; Lincoln, $1.41; Johnson, 48 cents; Grant, the first four years, 40 cents; the second four years, 26 cents—showing a constant decline, which is owing in a large degree to the improved manner of keeping the accounts; and that is due very largely to the Committees on Finance and Appropriations, who have introduced legislation here which has compelled much greater accuracy and responsibility. The average percentage of losses during this whole period on the disbursements is $1.59 on the thousand. I do not believe that the aggregate of any class of corporate or private business, banking, commercial, or any other kind, can show so small a percentage of loss as this, and it is gratifying that the percentage of loss is continually decreasing, coming down from $21.55 in the administration of Van Buren to an average of twenty-three cents on the thousand and dollars, or only about one-sixtieth as much under the present Administration. This is exclusive of the Post Office, which administers its own revenue. In the Post Office the loss has gone down from $11.18 on the $1,000 in Jackson's administration, and $26.19 in Van Buren's, to $1.59 for the first term of Grant and $1.01 for the second, with an average of $3.51 for the whole period. I move that this statement, which I think is creditable to the Government and to all parties, be printed; and that the adverse report of the Committee on Printing on the rest of the document lie over until the return of the Senator from West Virginia."

Here we have the results of an official investigation, called for by a Democratic Senator. From the figures given it will be seen that no Republican need blush for shame over the official integrity of his party. On the contrary, he has reasons to be proud over a record that has had no equal since the formation of the Government.

THE QUESTION.—Shall the Government be ruled in time of peace by men who tried to destroy it in time of war? This is the question to be settled in the Presidential canvass. All other issues are side ones, and amount to nothing compared with this one important question.

A REMARKABLE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The celebration of the Fourth, which took place in the town of Virgil, Cortland county, N. Y., was in all probability the most remarkable that occurred in any section of the country on that day. It was remarkable, not from the manner of conducting the festivities which followed the programme usual on such occasions, but from the fact that the four principal actors of the day had not only been present but had actually assumed the same character on the same ground fifty years ago. They were the chief marshal, Colonel Wm. Squires; the chaplain, Deacon Nathan Bouton; the reader of the Declaration of Independence, Doctor F. Hyde; and the orator of the day, Colonel M. Frank.

The latter gentleman has for a number of years been a resident of Washington, having been called here to assume a position under Senator Boutwell, then Secretary of the Treasury. Colonel Frank is a thorough going, life-long Republican, and was for many years one of the leading members of that party in the State of Wisconsin, where he resided up to the time of his coming to Washington.

A copy of the Cortland Standard and Journal, of the 11th instant, has been received containing a full report the oration, a perusal of which shows that notwithstanding his years the Colonel still retains his mental faculties vigorous and unimpaired. It is a polished and masterly production, as the following extracts of general interest will show:

A half century ago to day I attempted to describe the progress that had been made during the preceding fifty years. I dwelt with enthusiasm on the advancement of our country in the direction of national greatness; the diffusion of education among the people; the rapid development of our agricultural resources; our progress in the arts, and in labor-saving machinery. A collection of agricultural implements, machinery, and household articles common fifty years ago would make an interesting exhibition for this centennial year. Improvements which were then regarded as triumphs of genius and skill have since passed into comparative insignificance. Among the new implements of husbandry then being introduced was the grain cradle, which rendered nearly obsolete the old classic sickle. The threshing-flail was the same in kind as employed by the Romans two thousand years ago. The only instrument for mowing was the common scythe, which had undergone no material changes during many generations. Fifty years ago the popular thoroughfares between city and country were the turn-pikes. A drive on these privileged roads was deemed one of the luxuries of travel, except the exacting toll-gates sometimes ruffled the temper of pleasure riders.

During this period the New York and Erie canal, connecting the waters of the western lakes with the Hudson river, was regarded the wonder of the age—the greatest internal improvement achievement in America. This State enterprise was for a number of years the principle travel-route between the East and the almost illimitable West. The packet boat, moving four miles per hour, was as much the admiration of the then traveling public as the modern palace car, with a speed of forty miles per hour.

On our half century anniversary a compliment was paid to American genius and skill as having well nigh reached the limit of art, invention, and improvement, leaving only to the succeeding half century the finishing of what had already been outlined. But how finite is the human mind to unfold the future. Then we had not in all this land one foot of railroad, not a locomotive, nor a telegraph line. Since then a new era has dawned on every department of industry. The necessity for hand labor has been reduced five hundred per cent. by the introduction of machinery, while at the same time the conveniences, the comforts, and luxuries of life have been greatly multiplied. Science has brought into action many hitherto undiscovered forces; man now stands leisurely by and directs the machinery that performs the labor drudgery before required of human hands.

Had any one predicted fifty years ago that before this centennial year journeyings on land would be performed at the rate of sixty miles per hour, and that words would be conveyed to distant States with almost the rapidity of thought, such prediction would have been treated as coming from a disordered mind, and unworthy of notice. So of many other discoveries and inventions, the products of our day, the suggestion of their coming realization would have been deemed visionary.

In the progress of the world's improvements the United States have contributed a large share. The telegraph, by the aid of which news is transmitted on land and beyond the seas with the speed of electricity is the invention of an American. Steam as a propelling power in navigation is American. The cotton gin, without which the manufacture of cotton goods would necessarily be limited, or produced at much cost, is the product of American skill. The reaper and the mower, now indispensable to successful farming, are American. The sewing machine, a necessity in every household, is American. The rotary printing press, by which the newspaper is worked off with marvelous rapidity, to be scattered over the country as plentiful as autumn leaves is American. The planing mill and the grain elevator are American. The manufacture of ice, producing it under a tropical sun, is the product of American mind. A vast number of other improvements and inventions in manufactures and machinery, of but little less importance, are of American origin, mostly within the past fifty years.

Our progress, too, in governmental science, has been in correspondence with the advance of education and the growth of liberal ideas. Old limitations to political rights have been extended, and the people invested more fully with the privilege of self government. Laws incompatible with the genius of our free institutions have been abolished, and new ones enacted, more in consistency with the welfare of the people.

At this point the inquiry naturally arises, will a like progress mark the coming half century, as during the past? Discoveries and improvements are with rare exceptions the result of educated mind. If the education of the people continues to go increasingly on, it is reasonable to expect progress in art and invention during the next fifty years, as in the past. Science in its investigations is limitless in material things. It searches through the arena of nature, and brings into activity elements of power that have lain dormant through all the centuries of the past. It goes to the ocean depths; it scans the empyrean of the heavens, and pushes inquiry among the stars.

Although the unfoldings of the past may seem to have exhausted the power of man for further achievement, still there is a boundless field yet to be explored. Among the possibilities that may be reached at no distant period a few are suggested: Motive power, more simple and convenient than steam for driving machinery, and adapted to plowing on the farm; agencies for generating heat, which shall relieve the poor from the burdensome expenses of wood and coal; new facilities for safe travel, transcending the speed of railway locomotives; cheap light, surpassing a hundred street lamps; simple means for fertilizing the soil, increasing its productiveness an hundred fold; new and inexpensive building material, supplying the deficiency of our decreasing lumber forests; an enlarged sphere of activity and employment for women, which shall command respect and be consistent with female delicacy and refinement, thus making available a large industrial element now contributing but little to the general stock of wealth; an extension of her legal rights, giving her a voice in matters involving the taxation of her property; in the management of the public schools, in which her children are educated, and in the protection of her family from licensed demoralization; also a better understanding of the laws of health, leading to an avoidance of much sickness and suffering, and increasing the average longevity of human life; the discovery of effective remedies for the treatment of diseases now deemed incurable; more economical methods of living; cheapening expenses without abridging family luxuries, or interfering with the enjoyments, the culture, and the refinement of society.

If it be said, these suggested possibilities of the ensuing half century are chiefly chimerical, it may be answered, the same might have been said with equal force fifty years ago to-day, in respect to the discoveries, inventions, and improvements since then realized.

In the direction of civil progress the field is broad and capable of improvement: Laws for the government of the people, adapted to a higher condition of civilization and refinement, which no statesmanship has ever yet devised; the reorganization of law courts, making them tribunals of equity; abolishing useless forms and technicalities; setting aside the rigorous rulings of law and evidence to the end that the adjustment of differences between parties shall not be mere trials of professional skill as men play games at chess.

In the direction of moral and religious advancement, less adherence to denominational lines between those who hold in unity the essentials of the Christian faith; talent, time, and money expended for higher purposes than building up fragmentary religious sects and parties; more of right action; less of theologic theory; more of God, less of creed. Methods for the moral training of the young, which shall better fit coming generations for the true mission of life. Although all truth is eternal, without beginning and without end, still there is undeveloped truth yet to be applied to the education of children and youth which shall change the moral structure of society. If this be not so—if there be agencies yet unemployed, then this world will never be prepared for the promised millennial era. "All the space between man's mind and God's mind is filled with truth." What a vast domain yet to be occupied? What heights of moral grandeur yet to be reached? Is man always to occupy so low a scale in the order of being? Are there no undeveloped possibilities yet to be brought into action which shall give the world the semblance of a new creation? Man was created "a little lower than the angels;" can it be that angels are but a little remove above the average man as now developed?

* * * * *

Legislators of the present day have a weighty responsibility; demands are made to remove some of the landmarks that guided our forefathers through the perils of our early history, and which have been recognized through later times. By the blessing of heaven we have grown from infancy to vigorous manhood. And now, since we have become a great nation, strong in national resources and defenses, men who have outgrown the moral teachings of the past assume we can stand alone, and have no further need to acknowledge the Divine Being in the way our fathers were accustomed to do. They would have our civil institutions divorced from the higher law, and they ask there shall be no recognition of God in governments, State or National. And now comes the request for the removal of the Bible from the public schools, where it has had an undisturbed place a hundred years. Every enlightened Christian nation on the globe acknowledges the Bible as its moral and religious standard. Then why exclude a book universally accepted by the Christian world from the schools of the land, where its influence is needed to shape the character of those to whom the destinies of this great commonwealth are to be committed? The law of the State very properly prohibits and confiscates immoral publications, but why single out the Bible and put it on the list of expurgated books? Of what has the Bible been guilty that there should come the demand at this late day to bar the doors of education against its admission? The Bible by the common respect of mankind, and by the right of long possession, is entitled to retain its place in the schools, to be read without note or comment, and allowed to be its own interpreter.

* * * * *

When we commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of our National Independence one-half of the States of this Union were slave and half nominally free. We were reproached by the enlightened nations of Europe with being false to our professions of freedom and of equal rights. The Declaration of Independence proclaimed to the world the inalienable right of all men to liberty; but this right was denied to the weak and defenseless. The Constitution guaranteed freedom of speech and liberty of the press; but these rights were refused to the people of the South by statutory enactments, and to the North by a despotic public opinion. The pulpit and the press in the nominally free States dared give no utterances as to the wrong of chattel slavery. Proscription and sometimes personal violence were visited upon those who publicly expressed their convictions of the wickedness of selling men and women like cattle in the market.

The people of the Northern States were compelled to do the bidding of the South. A law of Congress made it an offense, punishable with fine and imprisonment, to obey the precepts of the Divine Law. To feed, clothe, and give a cup of cold water to a thirsty, famishing human being, guilty of no crime but that of loving liberty better than bondage, was held to be a misdemeanor. Whenever property claimed in a human being escaped to a free State, the free-State citizen was required to pursue the fleeing chattel, and aid in returning it to the alleged owner. The highest judicial officer, the Chief Justice of the United States, uttered the declaration, "the negro has no rights which white men are bound to respect."

But this unnatural condition of human affairs could not always last. After long and weary years the cry of crushed humanity reached the throne of Eternal Justice; the day of deliverance came, but not in the way man's wisdom had devised. By the blow of one man the shackles of the enslaved were broken, and more than three millions of people were invested with the rights to which they were entitled by God and nature. The name of Abraham Lincoln will be honored while time endures.

A REVERSIBLE TICKET.—Here we have a platform for the millions! Hard money or soft money; greenbacks or gold; resumption and anti-resumption; free schools as you like them; the whole world invited to our shores, and good-will expressed for everybody, except the Chinese. All in one platform, and that Democratic. Tilden the head and Hendricks the tail, the only reversible ticket that has been put in the field. Both ends are calculated to suit any and all tastes. Anything to beat the Republican party! If this reversible ticket fails, then, indeed, the star of Democracy goes down forever.

QUERY.—If Democracy has added sixty millions of dollars to the debt of New York city in ten years, how long would it take it to reduce the public debt $600,000,000? As the Republican party has exceeded this sum in less than ten years, reform Democracy ought to do even better. Could it?

not prove to be and will never have the fame of another pass of Thermopylæ. Debates have been held on the Hawaiian treaty, on the state of the currency, on the silver bill, on internal improvements, on the public buildings in charge of the General Government, on the affairs of the District of Columbia, and on many other topics of the deepest interest. Some days since General Hendee, of Vermont, from the Committee on District Affairs, made a most effective speech, in which he set forth the condition of affairs in the District of Columbia under the management of the present commissioners. He showed the partisan character of the investigations and of the reports and speeches of the Democracy, especially that of Judge Buckner, of Missouri. He fully vindicated the commissioners in every particular, and showed how faithfully, wisely, and economically they had managed the affairs of this District, which had been put into their hands at a time of great confusion, distress, and clamor. The speech of Judge Hendee is well worth a perusal for the amount of information in regard to the affairs of the District. It was delivered in the House Saturday, July 1, 1876.

INVESTIGATIONS.

The investigations are dragging their slow length along. Some reports have been made and some yet remain to be prepared. But as a rule they have amounted to very little in giving to the country a fair interior view of the situation. Immense sums have been scrutinized, and at a large ratio of expense of time, money, strength, the derangement of business, and the delay of action, both private and public.

VISITORS TO THE CAPITAL.

During the past month large numbers of strangers, on their way to or from the Centennial Exposition, have thronged the capital and visited the public buildings and other points of interest. Every day witnesses in the halls of Congress a new tide of travelers who have come up from remote regions or from foreign lands to behold the legislative body of the Republic in Congress assembled. This circumstance gives a lively air to everything about the capital.

THE IMPEACHMENT.

The trial of General Belknap, after having been delayed over and over again by the discussion of preliminary questions, was fairly begun on Thursday, the 6th of July. It has been since daily prosecuted, the managers resting their case on the Fort Sill affair for conviction. At this present writing (Friday, July 14) the defense are examining witnesses to rebut the testimony of the prosecution. The extent of time is uncertain, and it cannot be known when the trial will be concluded. These matters, taken together with the deadlock on the appropriations, give promise of a very protracted session, notwithstanding the extreme heat of the weather and the progress of the Presidential canvass. Unless a sudden caprice shall seize upon Congress to get away and cut the gordian knot of legislative perplexity by a summary adjournment the session will be protracted even to the autumn.

CHEAP BUNCOMBE.—After the Democratic platform had been adopted some keensighted wire-puller discovered that not a plank had been devoted to the soldiers and sailors. This was an oversight, so the chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, Mr. Dorsheimer, got off the following bit of buncombe:

Mr. Dorsheimer—Your committee have also had referred to them and recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the soldiers and sailors of the Republic, and the widows and orphans of those who have fallen in battle, have a just claim upon the protection and gratitude of their fellow-citizens.

As this resolution is rather indefinite, not mentioning on which side the soldier fell, it met with general support. If the time should ever come when the heirs of ex-Confederates should apply for pension, Democracy can point with pride at this resolution as showing its early regard for the boys in gray. It is possible that Union soldiers were referred to, but this construction would hardly agree with the Democratic practice in the House of Representatives, where wounded Union soldiers were discharged to make room for those who had served in the Confederate army. With such treatment before them it is hardly possible that this piece of buncombe will capture a single vote in the loyal States.

CROW AND LEEK.—Roasted crow and boiled leek form the staple dish at Democratic boarding-houses just now.

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

NATIONAL.

...The subject first in chronological order, as well probably as first in importance in the current review, is the Democratic National Convention which assembled at St. Louis June 27, 1876. Only a moderate degree of interest in the action of this convention had been awakened throughout the country, and its session seemed to be more a matter of party custom, in which the forms of a Presidential nomination were observed, than an earnest choice of a ticket which stood a real chance of being elected. The nomination of Hayes and Wheeler at Cincinnati had completely handicapped the Democracy, and every feature of their convention betrayed their own lack of confidence and hope in the result of the November election.

The convention was permanently organized by electing General John A. McClelland, of Illinois, president.

The platform adopted urges immediate reform in national and local government; reaffirms the faith of Democracy in the permanence of the Federal Union; demands the supremacy of the civil over the military; separation of Church and State; opposes sumptuary laws and denounces corruption in the National and in Southern State Governments; demands the repeal of the resumption clause of the currency act of 1875, and seeks specie payment through a thorough system of government economies.

"Reform" is made the burden of the platform, and is to be the battle-cry of the Democratic campaign. A more glaring attempt to swindle the American people has never been attempted. The history of Democratic administrations attests that Democracy is incapable of reform of any kind whatever. Reform is contrary to every principle of its existence and practices. During the forty years before the war, when it held absolute sway in governmental affairs, and when incapacity, corruption, and robbery were its chief characteristics, a condition that was as the midnight of evil compared with the light of the present day, no measures of reform were ever thought of or adopted. Public thieves of all grades were secure from publicity and punishment; and the bigger the thief the more certain his security and protection. The country was compelled to await the inauguration of the Republican party to attain an ascendancy of political forces that were self-governing, self-purifying, and self-protecting. The very principles of Republicanism have ever been a guarantee of wise, just, and upright government. If rascals have obtained positions by a betrayal of its confidence, the Republican party has been most vigilant in detecting them, most vigorous in punishing them. If unwise measures have been adopted, it has at all times been equal to a just estimate of their value, and ready to make any modification or change that the true interests of the people demand. In truth, the Republican party was born of the spirit of honest reform, and has ever been the guardian of this great trust since the first day of its ascendancy in the Government.

The convention nominated Samuel J. Tilden, Governor of New York, for President; and Thomas A. Hendricks, Governor of Indiana, for Vice President, and then adjourned.

INDIAN OUTRAGES.

...To the record of the month is to be added the ineffable sadness of an unparalleled Indian massacre. On the 25th of June General G. A. Custer, with companies C, E, F, I, and L, of the Seventh United States Cavalry, under his immediate command, and companies A, G, and M, under General Reno, made an attack upon 2,500 Sioux warriors, commanded by Sitting Bull, in camp on the Little Big Horn river, Montana Territory. It appears that the Indians were thoroughly prepared for the engagement, and when the fire was opened rushed to the front with such resistless force and ferocity that the troops were utterly powerless to resist. General Custer and every officer and man of his command were quickly cut down, and not a single one was allowed to live to tell the awful story of the disaster. General Reno also suffered heavily, losing half his men in killed and wounded, but was enabled to hold his position until relieved by the approach of General Terry with a force of infantry and cavalry. The total loss in this desperate and unequal engagement was as follows :

Commissioned officers killed.....	14
Enlisted men killed	237
Civilians killed	5
Indian scouts	3

Total 259

Custer was a young and dashing officer, who had done the country valuable service during the late civil war, but in this instance, it appears, took entirely too great risk, and fell a victim of his daring courage.

CONGRESS.

...Comparatively little progress has been made by Congress since our last review. Although a session of seven months has already elapsed, and the fiscal year closed June 30th, the Government was left without a cent of money for its conduct during the current year. The general appropriation bills had been held back by the House until an unusually late date, when they were rushed through with provisions that would wreck the Government if permitted to be enforced. These bills have been in conference committees of the two houses for several weeks past, and are difficult of adjustment, owing to the persistence of the Democracy to cripple the public service by inadequate and ruinous appropriations; and this is called economy and reform! The surplus appropriations for the past year have been twice extended for a period of ten days to avoid a complete "dead lock" in Government business, and to give the conference committees time to agree.

...The Senate has passed a resolution to appoint a committee of three Senators to investigate the Chinese question and report at the next session.

HAYES' ACCEPTANCE.

Gov. R. B. Hayes, Republican nominee, is a discreet and able man. The Governor's opinion in favor of civil service is a good one. He would be a good man, and worth, and at of preferment.

He is decided in favor of specie payment; counsels peace and observance of law in the South, and intimates that this must be had at any cost; declares that he would not if elected consent to be a candidate for a second term; and pledges a frugal, impartial, and honest administration of the Government. In conclusion he says:

"With a civil service organized upon a system which will secure purity, experience, efficiency, and economy, and a strict regard for the public welfare solely in appointments, and the speedy, thorough, and unflinching prosecution and punishment of all public officers who betray official trusts, with a sound currency, with education unsectarian and free to all, with simplicity and frugality in public and private affairs, and with a fraternal spirit of harmony pervading the people of all sections and classes, we may reasonably hope that the second century of our existence as a nation will, by the blessing of God, be pre-eminently an era of good feeling and a period of progress, prosperity, and happiness.

"Very respectfully, your fellow-citizen,
"R. B. HAYES."

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTIONS.

...The Republicans of Louisiana assembled in State Convention in New Orleans on the 2d of July, and remained in session seven days. A heated contest existed between two wings of the party, each struggling for the ascendancy to control the nominations and the organization of the party thereafter. On the sixth day a nomination for Governor was reached, and on the second ballot Hon. S. B. Packard was chosen. Ex-Governor Henry C. Warmoth was his principal contestant.

The entire nominations are as follows:

Lieutenant Governor, C. C. Antoine.

Secretary of State, E. Honore.

Superintendent of Public Education, Wm. G. Brown.

Auditor of Public Accounts, George B. Johnson.

Attorney General, Wm. H. Hunt.

...The State Republican Convention of North Carolina was held at Raleigh on July 12th, and on the first ballot Hon. Thomas Settle, a judge of the Supreme Court of the State, was nominated for Governor, receiving 176 votes to 65 for Hon. O. H. Dockery. Hon. W. A. Smith was nominated for Lieutenant Governor, J. W. Albertson for Secretary of State, John Reilly for State Auditor, W. H. Wheeler for Treasurer, Tazewell Hargraves for Attorney General, and Rev. J. C. Carson for Superintendent of Public Instruction. Judge Settle made a speech accepting the nomination, and immediately resigned his seat on the bench to enter the canvass.

SOUTHERN OUTRAGES.

...A terrible slaughter of colored people by white ruffians occurred at Hamburg, S.C., on the 6th of July. It appears that on the Fourth a company of colored State militia were parading the streets of Hamburg, and were halted, when two white Democrats approached in a buggy and demanded that the ranks be broken to allow them to pass. This was not promptly done, and the whites grew furious at the delay and threatened revenge. The next day complaint was made before a justice of the peace, and on the following day a trial of the militia officers was to be had on the charge of obstructing the public highway. The town of Hamburg was filled with armed ruffians, who had assembled in fact to take the arms from the militia, peaceably if they could, but forcibly if they must. The colored men, seeing the danger, gathered in their armory and prepared to defend themselves and their rights by fighting if necessary. This aggravated the whites still more, and immediately they determined to assault the building, and opened fire with long-range rifles. A piece of artillery was brought from Augusta, Ga., and placed in position, and several rounds of cannister fired into the building. At this assault the colored militia returned the fire, killing one white man and wounding another. At last the building was stormed, and the poor colored men within tried to make their escape by running away. A number were shot down while fleeing for their lives, and others were taken prisoners and then brutally murdered. The scene is said to have been indescribably horrible. On the night of the 6th an attack was made on the town of Hamburg, a colored village of about one thousand inhabitants, with only two or three white families, and the place literally sacked and destroyed. Men, women, and children were driven out of town in the midst of promiscuous firing; houses were entered and robbed, the furniture destroyed, and scarcely one of the inhabitants allowed to remain in their homes. The next morning the beautiful village was covered with desolation, and the poor residents scattered in the forests and country for refuge. The number of killed and wounded cannot be definitely ascertained, but together exceeds a hundred. A terrible state of affairs is said to exist in that vicinity on this account, and the State authorities seem to be unable to protect the people from the malignant incursions of the white line rebel Democracy, who delight in this auspicious opening of the campaign in the Palmetto State.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

EXECUTIVE.

NO WHISKY SECRETS.

The following letter will produce a healthy effect throughout the country. It will fall like a bombshell among those who believe that the President had a few secrets on the whisky business that he preferred to keep within the doors of the Cabinet. Grant is as honest as he is modest. He would not rob anyone of justly-earned laurels; but we are inclined to believe that when the story of the whisky frauds and their prosecutions is fully known the President will loom up as the man who planned the assault on the Whisky Ring and led the Government forces to crush it. The following explains itself:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, July 12, 1876.

Hon. B. H. Bristow:

DEAR SIR: Through the press I learn that the committee of Congress investigating whisky frauds have summoned you as witness, and that you, with great propriety as I think, have declined to testify, claiming that what occurs in Cabinet, or between a member of the Cabinet and the Executive officially, is privileged, and that a committee of Congress have no right to demand answer. I appreciate the position you have assumed on this question, but beg to relieve you from all obligation of secrecy on this subject, and desire, not only that you may answer all questions asked relating to it, but wish that all members of my Cabinet, and ex-members of my Cabinet since I have been President, may also be called upon to testify in regard to the same matter.

With great respect, your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.
CIRCULAR TO COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1876.

The Department has recently had under consideration the question as to what descriptions of fish are the products of the inland lakes lying between the United States and Canada, and of the rivers flowing into them, as distinguished from fish which are the products of the sea fisheries of Canada, with the view of establishing some practical guide by which collectors of customs may determine, under certain circumstances, from the character of the fish themselves, without regard to other proofs, whether they are or are not entitled to free entry under the treaty of Washington.

The following extract from a communication addressed to the Department by Professor Spencer F. Baird, United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, under date of the 10th instant, embodies the desired information:

"So far as relates to the fishes of the inland lakes and of the rivers running into them, likely to be imported into the United States, there is but little difficulty—these consisting of brook trout, the salmon trout, the land-locked salmon, the white-fish, the lake herring, (a species of white-fish,) the muscalunge or large pike, the sturgeon, and the black bass; although the brook trout, the muscalunge, the sturgeon, and the black bass are frequently found elsewhere than within the limits mentioned.

"Possibly the simplest rule to apply would be that of excluding from free entry all fish from points west of Montreal, unless they can be shown to have been captured in the St. Lawrence river, east of Lake Ontario.

"Fish shipped from points east of Montreal and on the Atlantic seaboard would, in reasonable probability, be entitled to free entry, unless they embrace salmon-trout, white-fish, lake herring, or cisco, which are exclusively found in lakes or their inlets; and therefore, unless under very exceptional circumstances, would be necessarily dutiable.

"I am unaware whether the provisions of the treaty embrace fresh fish as well as those that are prepared for temporary preservation. If fresh fish come in free, then the subject is very much simplified, as, so far as my knowledge extends, it is only the white-fish and the lake trout that are ever offered in a salted condition, the other species commanding a much higher price as fresh fish. The fish which are strictly maritime, about which there would never be any question, are the mackerel, cod, haddock, hake, pollock, cusk, whiting, and ling, as also the sea-trout from Newfoundland and Labrador."

These views are not absolutely mandatory upon collectors of customs, but are published for their information, with the expectation that they will be applied as far as practicable.

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

EXECUTION OF BONDS BY FIRM.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26, 1876.

To Collectors of Customs and others.

The following act of Congress, "relating to the execution of custom-house bonds," approved June 20, 1876, is published for the information and guidance of officers of the customs, and all other persons concerned:

"Be it enacted, &c., That when any bond is required by law to be executed by any firm or partnership for the payment of duties upon goods, wares, or merchandise imported into the United States by such firm or partnership, the execution of such bond by any member of such firm or partnership, in the name of said firm or partnership, shall bind the other members or partners thereof in like manner and to the same extent as if such other members or partners had personally executed the same. And any action or suit may be instituted on such bond against all the members or partners of such firm as if all of the members or partners had executed the same."

This statute is similar in its provisions to the 25th section of the act of March 1, 1823, under which, in article 787 of the Regulations of 1874, this Department instructed collectors of customs that a merchant belonging to a firm, entering as principal into a bond for duties, in the name of the firm, thereby binds his partner or partners in the trade.

The provision contained in the section cited having been omitted from the Revised Statutes, and other portions of the act having been reproduced therein, the Department in its letter to the collector of customs at Baltimore, dated May 22, 1875, (Printed Decisions 2261,) directed the discontinuance of the practice then authorized by the Regulations, and required that bonds should be signed by all resident partners.

Those instructions will no longer be regarded, and the practice formerly authorized as aforesaid will be revived and hereafter continued as provided for in the act quoted above, and in the Regulations cited.

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

REDEMPTION AND EXCHANGE OF INTERNAL-REVENUE DOCUMENTARY AND PROPRIETARY STAMPS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF
INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 12, 1876.

The act approved July 12, entitled "An act relative to the redemption of unused stamps," provides "that the fourteenth section of the act passed February eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy five, entitled 'An act to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and all unused stamps shall be redeemed when properly presented, as was done prior to the passage of the aforesaid act: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no allowance shall be made for documentary stamps, except those of the denomination of two cents, which, when presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, are not found to be in the same condition as when issued by the Internal Revenue Department, or, if so required by the said Commissioner, when the person presenting the same cannot satisfactorily trace the history thereof from their issue to their presentation as aforesaid."

In accordance with the above provision of law, the public is hereby notified that the redemption of documentary stamps will be resumed, subject to all the limitations imposed by the act.

Stamps which are in the same condition as when issued by this Department may be forwarded to this office for redemption or exchange. If for redemption, they must in every case be accompanied by a claim, made out upon the form prescribed for that purpose, which will be furnished upon application.

If the evidence is satisfactory, the amount or value, after deducting the sum of five per cent., as required by section 3426, Revised Statutes of the United States, will be refunded.

Stamps which the owner desires exchanged need not be accompanied by a claim, but a letter stating such desire should invariably accompany the stamps.

The stamps will be transmitted at the risk and expense of the owner.

It should be distinctly understood that the limitations imposed by the act above quoted will, under no circumstances, be departed from, and it will be useless to forward stamps which have been canceled, or which are not, in every respect, in the same condition as when issued by this office. The abrasion of the gum upon the backs of stamps will be deemed such a change from the original condition as to necessitate their rejection by this office, as required by the terms of the act.

In all cases where stamps of larger denominations than twenty dollars are presented, their history from their issue by the Government to their presentation should be traced by means of sworn statements from each owner through whose hands they have passed.

Claims should invariably be sworn to, and the blanks therein should be carefully filled out, so far as the affiant is able to do so, but the date of purchase and name of person from whom purchased will not be insisted upon.

Claims will be acted upon by this office in the order in which they are received, and in all cases as early after their receipt as the condition of the public business will permit.

H. C. ROCKES,
Acting Commissioner.

THE PUBLIC DEBT STATEMENT.

The following is a recapitulation of the public debt statement, issued July 1:

DEBT BEARING INTEREST IN COIN.
Bonds at 6 per cent.	$984,999,600 00
Bonds at 5 per cent.	711,846,800 00
Total principal.....	1,696,846,400 00
Total interest.....	38,068,587 39

DEBT BEARING INTEREST IN LAWFUL MONEY.
Navy pension fund at three per cent.	14,000,000 00
Interest.....	210,000 00

DEBT ON WHICH INTEREST HAS CEASED SINCE MATURITY.
Principal.....	3,902,402 25
Interest.....	214,973 31

DEBT BEARING NO INTEREST.
Old demand and legal-tender notes.....	$69,839,201 60
Certificates of deposit	3,840,000 00
Fractional currency.....	34,446,606 59
Coin certificates.....	24,681,400 00

Total principal.....	465,807,196 29
Total unclaimed interest.....	20,444 84

TOTAL DEBT.
Principal.....	2,180,396,067 15
Interest.....	38,514,004 54
Total.....	2,218,909,071 69

CASH IN THE TREASURY.
Coin.....	73,625,584 97
Currency.....	13,004,141 73
Special deposit held for redemption of certificates of deposit as provided by law.....	32,840,000 00
Total.....	119,469,726 70

Debt, less cash in the Treasury
June 1, 1876.....
July 1, 1876.....

Decrease of debt during the month
---	--

Decrease of debt since June 1, 1876.....
--	--

RECEIPTS, LOSSES, AND RATIO OF LOSS PER $1,000 TO AGGREGATE OF RECEIPTS—CONTINUED.

PERIOD.	MISCELLANEOUS— Continued.		NET TOTAL.			GROSS TOTAL.
	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Receipts.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Receipts.*	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.
January 1, 1834, to December 31, 1837.....	$172,259 16	$2 74	$133,002,971 77	$1,383,825 41	$10 40	$135,985,960 92	$1,383,825 41	$10 17
January 1, 1838, to December 31, 1841.....	127,625 40	4 76	94,125,596 95	392,328 24	4 16	129,948,548 91	392,328 24	3 01
January 1, 1842, to June 30, 1845.....	175,043 85	20 43	87,498,012 09	429,981 39	4 91	116,736,004 87	429,981 39	3 68
July 1, 1845, to June 30, 1848.....	10,390 87	86	122,537,147 61	18,109 98	14	201,807,506 45	18,109 98	08
July 1, 1849, to June 30, 1853.....	60,521 50	4 79	207,581,775 49	276,270 58	1 38	211,908,612 91	276,270 58	1 30
July 1, 1853, to June 30, 1857.....	81,724 73	2 20	282,172,927 80	213,001 78	1 75	282,179,829 58	213,001 78	1 75
July 1, 1857, to June 30, 1861.....	155,227 50	13 09	196,863,373 20	194,003 83	98	312,359,679 56	194,003 83	62
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1865.....	53,943 01	80	729,458,335 99	508,498 60	69	4,670,460,137 61	508,498 60	10
July 1, 1865, to June 30, 1869.....	181,621 19	1 97	1,716,418,954 31	2,562,721 90	1 49	4,042,316,438 46	2,562,721 90	63
July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1873.....	107,497 85	1 95	1,457,382,842 50	954,698 68	65	2,576,045,585 22	954,698 68	57
July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1876.....	35,591 01	69	583,261,862 25	322,183 92	55	1,420,222,898 62	322,183 92	22
Total.....	1,161,634 89	2 51	5,611,033,789 95	7,255,619 41	1 29	14,100,631,205 09	7,255,619 41	51
January 1, 1834, to June 30, 1861.....	$782,901 82	$4 53	$1,123,931,795 00	$2,907,521 31	$2 58	$1,390,936,145 18	$2,907,521 31	$2 06
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1876.....	378,643 07	1 80	4,437,101,994 95	4,348,098 10	96	12,708,645,059 91	4,348,098 10	94

* Includes receipts for loans.

DISBURSEMENTS, LOSSES, AND RATIO OF LOSS PER $1,000 TO AGGREGATE DISBURSEMENTS.

PERIOD.	WAR.		NAVY.		INDIANS.		PENSIONS.
	Disburse- ments.	Losses, on $1,000	Disburse- ments.	Losses.	Disburse- ments.	Losses, on $1,000	Disburse- ments.	Losses, on $1,000
1901-1902	24,429,848 64	101,239 23	24,275,852 24	6212,405 91	12,085,456 75	4130,251 56	10,872,957 03	17,906 63
1902-1903	24,920,331 48	144,291 93	24,920,331 48	101,239 23	12,870,740 60	4,215 61	10,230,404 48	101,951 64
1903-1904	28,550,831 62	115,646 69	28,550,831 62	115,646 69	4,572,354 42	10,585 29	6,630,769 55	11,553 34
1904-1905	30,771,937 67	141,483 87	30,771,937 67	141,483 87	5,044,583 30	11,728 92	8,112,345 31	71,196 44
1905-1906	50,843,720 68	377,505 69	50,843,720 68	377,505 69	11,417,403 40	60,497 61	8,318,428 22	1,257 41
1906-1907	52,645,968 19	183,310 62	52,645,968 19	183,310 62	11,922,013 17	38,049 97	5,316,877 56	18,840 51
1907-1908	814,253,968 21	1,079,039 44	814,253,968 21	1,079,039 44	14,325,403 42	982,417 05	4,577,353 08	4,649 51
1908-1909	120,173,925 90	98,422 02	120,173,925 90	98,422 02	13,169,317 75	130,542 02	23,923,779 07	23,000 45
1909-1910	85,967,323 16	140,954 06	85,967,323 16	140,954 06	13,135,153 04	73,973 97	84,810,848 02	94,540 67
1910-1911	62,430,212 00	20,670 77	62,430,212 00	20,670 77	25,643,359 29	23,537 44	120,676,926 67	230,828 93
1911-1912	816,252,950 98	2,572,627 77	816,252,950 98	2,572,627 77	15,077,118 91	2,676 34	54,484,630 88	542,373 57
1912-1913	243,437,501 22	1,147,130 86	243,437,501 22	1,147,130 86	144,927,354 09	1,493,020 42	343,346,708 13	227,335 52
1913-1914	572,816,449 66	1,385,486 91	572,816,449 66	1,385,486 91	71,087,005 00	1,240,830 01	82,140,565 21	255,018 03
1914-1915					73,229,959 03	23,790 41	231,244,184 64	1 21

DISBURSEMENTS, LOSSES, AND RATIO OF LOSS PER $1,000 TO AGGREGATE DISBURSEMENTS—CONTINUED.

NOTES.—1. In cases where the accounts of defaulting officers, embraced more than one period, the losses, unless known to have occurred in other periods, have been charged to the periods in which the accounts were opened in this statement. In cases of defaulting officers, however, for want of other information, the losses have been charged to the periods in which they are reported on the books, though doubtless in several instances they actually occurred in previous periods. No losses of the latter kind, however, have been included unless known to have occurred within the period covered by this statement. 2. No deductions have been made for amounts which may be collected hereafter, though a large percentage of the recent losses will doubtless be yet recovered. 3. In preparing this statement, the receipts and disbursements since June 30, 1848, have been obtained by fiscal years, as in the published official reports, the losses have in all cases been classified by calendar years, it not being practicable to separate the losses occurring in the fractional years of each period, but the periods compared being of the same length, the result is substantially correct.

REGULATIONS EXEMPTING DISTILLERS OF BRANDY FROM APPLES, PEACHES, OR GRAPES EXCLUSIVELY, FROM A PORTION OF THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 3264 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 8, 1876.

By virtue of the authority vested in me by section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States I do hereby, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, or grapes, from so much of the provisions of section 3264 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as requires that the assistant to be designated to assist the collector in the making of surveys of distilleries shall be specially designated in each instance for the purpose of making each survey.

Hereafter surveys of distilleries of apples, peaches, or grapes exclusively, may be made by the collector, with the aid of an assistant designated generally for the purpose of making any and all surveys of such distilleries.

Surveys of grain and molasses distilleries will continue to be made as heretofore, with the aid of a specially-designated assistant.

Collectors of districts in which the distillation of fruit prevails are requested to forward immediately to this office the names of a sufficient number of suitable persons for designation as assistants under the terms of this circular.

In all instances, when practicable, deputy collectors should be nominated for this purpose.

D. D. PRATT,
Commissioner.

Approved—
LOT M. MORRILL,
Secretary of the Treasury.

LOCKS FOR WAREHOUSES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 24, 1876.

To Collectors of Customs:

The Department is informed that, as a general rule, customs bonded warehouses having more than one entrance are secured by the use of Government locks for each entrance, the number of locks thus required ranging from two to thirty or upwards.

This practice will be discontinued forthwith, and for the sake of economy in the use of locks, and the better security of merchandise in warehouses, collectors are hereby instructed to cause secure inside fastenings to be placed on all the entrances except one, or at most two, in each of the warehouses in their several districts, thereby rendering unnecessary the use, in any case, of more than two locks for each warehouse, and to report the number of locks thereby becoming unnecessary, (which locks they will retain subject to the further order of the Department,) and also the number of locks necessary for use in their respective districts under the foregoing instructions, designating in such report each warehouse and the number required therefor.

The use of the locks now on hand will, subject to the foregoing restrictions, be continued until further orders; provided, however, that when the same are in the collector's opinion defective or unsafe, immediate report of that fact shall be made to the Department.

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1876.

The chief of the Bureau of Statistics furnishes the following statement of our imports and exports for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1876. (The returns for June not being all in the figures for that month are partly estimated.)

Domestic exports of merchandise, (specie value).....	$522,000,000
Foreign exports of merchandise, (specie value).....	14,000,000
Total.....	536,000,000
Imports of merchandise.....	460,000,000

Excess of exports over imports.... 76,000,000

In the previous year the imports of merchandise exceeded the exports by over $19,000,000—a favorable showing in 1876, as compared with 1875, of about $95,000,000. Our exports of specie and bullion in 1876 exceeded the imports by $53,000,000.

TRIPPLICATE INVOICES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 29, 1876.

To Collectors of Customs and Naval Officers:

Naval officers will hereafter compare each triplicate invoice, transmitted by a consular officer in accordance with the provisions of sections 2855 and 2857 of the Revised Statutes, with the original invoice presented by the importer on entry.

Collectors of customs will furnish naval officers with triplicate invoices immediately on their receipt, to be returned without unnecessary delay by the naval officer for file in the collector's office, according to the usual practice, after the completion of the comparison above prescribed.

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

GENERAL POST OFFICE.

POSTAGE RATES TO BRITISH INDIA AND THE FRENCH COLONIES.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF FOREIGN MAILS,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 21, 1876.

On and after July 1, 1876, British India (comprising Hindostan, British Burmah, and Aden) and the French colonies in America, Africa, Asia, and Oceanica, become a part of the general postal union formed by the treaty of Berne, subject to all the provisions of said treaty, and to an additional postage charge to cover the expenses of sea transportation beyond the limits of the general postal union as originally formed by the Berne treaty.

The rates of postage to be levied and collected in the United States on and after the 1st of July, 1876, on the prepaid correspondence sent to, and on the unpaid correspondence received from British India and the French colonies are as follows: For prepaid letters, 10 cents per 15 grammes, ($\frac{1}{2}$ ounce.) For unpaid letters received, 20 cents per 15 grammes, ($\frac{1}{2}$ ounce.) For postal cards 4 cents each. For newspapers, if not over four ounces in weight, 4 cents each. For books, other printed matter, patterns of merchandise, local and commercial documents, pamphlets, music, visiting cards, photographs, catalogues, prospectuses, announcements, and notices of various kinds, whether printed, engraved, or lithographed, 4 cents per each weight of two ounces or fraction of two ounces. For the registration fee on all correspondence, 10 cents.

All provisions and restrictions of the general postal union treaty, concluded at Berne October 9, 1874, apply as well to the correspondence exchanged with British India and the French colonies as to the correspondence exchanged with the original postal union countries. British India comprises Hindostan, British Burmah, and Aden. The French colonies are as follows: America—Martinique, Guadeloupe and dependencies, French Guiana, St. Pierre, and Miquelon. Africa—Senegal and dependencies, Gaboon, Reunion, Mayotte and dependencies, Ste. Marie de Madagascar. Asia—French establishments in India (Pondicherry, Chandernagor, Karikal Mahe and Yanaon) and in Cochin China. Oceanica—New Caledonia and dependencies, Marquesas Islands, Tahiti, and the Archipelago subject to the protectorate of France.

Correspondence for British India should be forwarded to the exchange offices of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or Chicago.

Correspondence for the French colonies should be forwarded to the exchange offices of New York or Boston.

By order of the Postmaster General:

JOSEPH H. BLACKFAN,
Superintendent of Foreign Mails.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

THE INDIAN TRUST FUND.

The discovery of frauds and deficiencies in the Indian trust fund appears to have been left for the argus eye of Mr. Chandler to unearth, with clear wisdom and thorough research, frauds as plain as the light of day. An act of the present session of Congress directs the transfer of the Indian trust funds, heretofore held by the Secretary of the Interior, to the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. Before complying with this request Secretary Chandler caused an inventory to be made of the various stocks, bonds, and other securities constituting the funds. It was then found that in addition to the $870,000 alleged to have been taken while Jacob Thompson was Secretary of the Interior under President Buchanan's administration, $1,506,466.66 was invested by Secretaries of the Interior under Democratic Administrations prior to 1861 in bonds of the Southern States, bearing from five to six per cent. interest. The bonds were almost, if not entirely valueless, while the transaction itself was wholly illegal, as the law, which was enacted in 1841, says: "All funds held in trust by the United States, and the annual interest accruing thereon, when not otherwise required by treaty, shall be invested in stocks of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than five per centum per annum." This law has been in force ever since. In some cases the interest which has been accruing on these worthless bonds amounts to more than the principal itself, while in all cases the interest is very large. Congress has annually been making appropriations to meet the accruing interest on these worthless bonds, which were held in trust for the various Indian tribes. The interest on the bonds abstracted under Thompson's secretaryship amounts to $456,946.76. Thus the Government has been defrauded up to July 1, 1876, of between four and five million dollars. The whole amount of the defalcation is $2,376,466, and the interest actually paid by the Government upon these worthless bonds is $200,800. Nearly a million of the investment was made by Jake Thompson, in addition to the $870,000 previously reported as taken by him.

THE Democratic platform is not a declaration of principles, but a stump speech; not the clear enunciation of a definite policy, but a string of false and reckless assertions, garnished with all the verbose rhetoric and glittering utterances of a campaign ranter.—Albany Journal.

THE UTOPIAN SYSTEM.

For glittering generalities Democracy is entitled to bear off the palm. To the average Democrat the following plank in the St. Louis platform must be quite as easily understood as if it was printed in Greek. Listen to the Bourbon wire-pullers:

"We demand a judicious system of preparation by public economies, by official retrenchments and by wise finance which shall enable the nation soon to assure the whole world of its perfect ability and its perfect readiness to meet any of its promises at the call of the creditor entitled to payment. We believe such a system well devised, and above all intrusted to competent hands for execution, creating at no time an artificial scarcity of currency, and at no time alarming the public mind into a withdrawal of that vaster machinery of credit by which 95 per cent. of all business transactions are performed—a system open to the public and inspiring general confidence, which would, from the day of its adoption, bring healing on its wings to all our harassed industries, set in motion the wheels of commerce, manufactures, and the mechanic arts, restore employment to labor, and renew in all its natural sources the prosperity of the people."

Stopping Indian appropriations, and thus exciting an Indian war, may be part of this "judicious system of preparation by public economies," but the people will be at loss to discover when all the expenses are paid just where the economy comes in.

It is hardly possible that the average reader will fully comprehend just what kind of a system Democracy proposes to bring about "wise finance." However, it matters little, for it depends upon its being "well devised," and even then would amount to nothing unless "intrusted to competent hands for execution." Of course the modest allusion is intended that none but Democratic hands are competent to run this carefully-concealed system that the platform hints at.

Here is a chance for the Democrats of the House of Representatives to cover up their short-comings and reinstate themselves in public favor. If they will only impart to the American people the details of this Utopian system that is "open to the public," that is "inspiring general confidence," and which would, if only adopted by the nation, "bring healing on its wings to all our harassed industries, set in motion the wheels of commerce, manufactures, and the mechanic arts, restore employment to labor, and renew in all its natural sources the prosperity of the people."

This is a most pleasing picture; but it looks very like the one held up by Tilden to the idle men of New York in the election of 1874. He told them all that was needed to make work plenty and money easy in New York was to elect him Governor. "Out of Democracy will come the power that will remove the paralysis from labor and set in motion the wheels of industry."

The paralysis still continues. In fact, instead of growing better times have grown worse. Thousands of men are idle, and wages have sunk lower than ever. Democracy deceived the people, and now seeks to carry out the deception on a larger scale. It hopes to play the same card on the nation that won in New York.

The platform of the party is in keeping with its true character. It is all things to everybody; devoid of principle; seeking by wordy statements to hide from the people its designs. It is a sham from first to last, and, like the man who stands upon it, unworthy the support of the American people.

THE Albany Journal, speaking of the much that is said of Mr. Tilden's success and power in accomplishing his objects, declares that the simple truth is that he is successful when he is not seriously opposed and never successful when he is.

THE kid-glove Democracy, of which Tilden is the chief, have not the confidence and cannot obtain the votes of the masses. His nomination will disrupt and disorganize the Democratic party. It means defeat.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE only man who refused to pay his hotel bill at St. Louis last week was W. T. Pelton, nephew of Governor Tilden. The proprietors of the Planters' House sue him for $325.

UNION REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL Executive Committee

1006 F Street, Northwest,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Hon. SIMON CAMERON, Chairman; Hon. A. H. CRAGIN, Hon. JOHN A. LOGAN, Hon. J. R. WEST, Hon. S. W. DORSEY, Hon. T. C. PLATT, Hon. JAY A. HUBBELL, Hon. J. M. RUSK, Hon. C. H. SINICKSON.
Hon. J. M. EDMUNDS, Secretary.
Hon. JACOB TOME, Treasurer.

The Union Republican Congressional Executive Committee desire to call attention to the following list of Campaign Documents issued by the Committee, and now on hand. The Committee ask a careful examination of the list, and are prepared to receive and fill orders for such as may be required.

LIST OF DOCUMENTS.

- No. 1. Growth of the Nation Under Republican Rule. 8 pp.
- No. 2. Vaticanism in Germany and in the United States. 8 pp.
- No. 3. Can the Nation Trust the Democratic Party? 16 pp.
- No. 4. Record and Platform of the Democratic Party. Speech by Senator Morton at Urbana, Ohio, August 7, 1875. 8 pp.
- No. 5. The National Finances and the Currency, 1875. 8 pp.
- No. 6. High and Low Tariffs and their Effects. 4 pp.
- No. 7. Our Currency: Its Volume and Character. Also, Taxes: Who Pays Them? 4 pp.
- No. 8. Vaticanism in Germany and in the United States. (In German.) 8 pp.
- No. 9. The People a Nation. 8 pp.
- No. 10. The Southern Question: The Conspiracy to Rule or Destroy the Nation. 12 pp.
- No. 11. Growth of the Nation Under Republican Rule. (In German.) 8 pp.
- † No. 12. Labor and Wages. 4 pp.
- * Amnesty Debate. (Blaine, Garfield, and Hill.) 32 pp.
- * Senator Morton's Speech on Mississippi. 24 pp.
- Record of the Democratic Speaker. 8 pp.
- † "The Bible the Security of American Institutions." Sermon by Rev. Dr. Rankin. 8 pp.
- † "Religious Liberty." Sermon by Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman. 32 pp.
- *† "An Irredeemable Paper Currency." Speech by Hon. J. G. Blaine. 8 pp.
- * "Centennial Celebration of American Independence." Speech by Hon. M. L. Townsend. 8 pp.
- * Senator Gordon's Civil-Service Reform. (Debate in the Senate.) 16 pp.
- * Belknap's Impeachment. Escape of Witness Marsh. (Mr. Bass' speech in the House.) 8 pp.

Those marked thus * having been taken from the "Congressional Record," can be distributed through the mails under the frank of Senators or Members. Of those marked thus † our supply is exhausted; but as we have the stereotype plates, we can print new editions if necessary.

In sending for supplies, address

J. M. EDMUNDS, Secretary.

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, on the receipt of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS, will send, to any address, one copy of each of the above-mentioned documents, postage paid. On the receipt of ONE DOLLAR they will send the documents and THE REPUBLIC MONTHLY MAGAZINE each month to, and including, December, 1876. Address

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING CO.,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

EXCELS IN EVERY FEATURE!

History. . Biography. . Sketches.
Select Miscellany.

THE GUARDIAN.

A LITERARY AND FAMILY JOURNAL,

Devoted to Odd-Fellowship, the Arts and Sciences, and General Literature.

Published monthly at Chicago, Ills., by THE GUARDIAN PUBLISHING CO.

Vol. I, No. 11, Circulation over 30,000.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

50 cents per annum in advance.

In clubs of 5 or more, 40 cents.

Single copies 5 cents.

Sample copies sent free to any address upon application.

As the Official Organ of Odd Fellowship it is without a rival.

ONLY 50 CENTS A YEAR.

It contains 16 large pages of clear, legible reading matter, the selection of which is adapted to the wants of our age and country, and consequently must elevate the standard of morality wherever they can secure the attention of a reader.

ONLY 50 CENTS A YEAR.

The title-page of each number is embellished with a life-like portrait of some member of eminence in the Order of Odd Fellowship, with an interesting and reliable biographical sketch of his life as an officer and fellow-citizen.

ONLY 50 CENTS A YEAR.

It gives the most extensive Lodge information of any paper published, having immediate advices monthly from nearly every jurisdiction in existence.

ONLY 50 CENTS A YEAR.

Each number contains a first class story—moralizing, entertaining, and instructive—from our most popular authors at home and abroad.

ONLY 50 CENTS A YEAR.

It is an entirely original publication, traversing in the wake of no other journal issued, but guided by its own particular compass: is pursuing a remarkably successful course in its own particular way. It has already succeeded to popularity exceeding the expectations even of its managers.

Send for a sample copy. For further information address

S. L. HURST, Sec'y,
112 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

1876.

Vol. 7.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 7.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A
CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,

A Complete Set--First Three Volumes--of the Republic.

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A
CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,

A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING
THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,
BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE SIXTH VOLUME,

Which closes with the June number of 1876, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

1876.

Vol. 7.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 7.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,

A Complete Set--First Three Volumes--of the Republic

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,

A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING

THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,

BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE SIXTH VOLUME,

Which closes with the June number of 1876, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

JA
3
R419

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. VII.—No. 1.

JULY, 1876.

Whole No. 41.

Contents:

	PAGE
The New Volume of the Republic.....	1
Proceedings of the National Republican Convention.....	2
Onward	11
An Encouraging Outlook	12
The Two Parties	13
Extradition—Message of the President.....	14
Rebels on Investigating Committees	15
The Chinese in America.....	17
Why a Sectional South Cannot be Trusted	25
Democratic Courtesy	27
Historical Facts for the Advocates of State Sovereignty.....	28
The Truth of History and the Horrors of Andersonville.....	33
Patriotism and Slanders.....	37
The Amnesty Debate and Mr. Hill.....	38
Education in France	40
Poverty in the South—Georgia and Texas.....	41
Let us Have Peace	43
Is this Hostility to the South?.....	45
A Republican Success Necessary to Protect the Public Credit.....	46
A Dozen Points.....	47
General Grant—The Sioux Brave “Take Things”.....	48
Borrowing Trouble	48
The Work of the Forty-fourth Congress.....	49
List of Delegates to the National Republican Convention	52
Speaker Kerr’s Vindication.....	55
Review of the Month.....	56
Executive and Department Doings.....	61
European Railways	64

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

July, 1876.

PROSPECTUS. Vol. 7.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its seventh volume with the July number.

Its publishers are pleased to announce that it has grown steadily in public favor and that it is regarded by all good citizens who have consulted its pages as a power for good throughout the land.

Its past course—consistent, fearless, patriotic—is the index of its future. It will defend the right, denounce the wrong, and endeavor to point out, at all times, the true path for all who love their country to follow.

A sentinel upon the watch-tower of freedom, it will be found at its post of duty to give the word of warning, and sound the alarm should any danger threaten the peace of the Nation.

It will favor the maintenance, by all legitimate means, of free schools, devoid of sectarian influences, and will oppose any attempt to divide the school funds, believing that such division, whether made in the interest of the Catholic Church or its opponents, will ultimately destroy the system of free education, and that civil and religious toleration on which our institutions rest.

It will do all within its power to develop true friendship between the citizens of the North and the South, and for this purpose will advocate the recognition of justice and equality before the law as the only means to secure lasting friendship and its two allies, peace and security.

The Presidential contest of 1876 will be one of the most important in our history. On its issue depends the future policy of the Government. The vital question to be answered by the people is, "Shall the party that proved faithless in war be trusted in peace, and those who saved the country be set aside for those who endeavored to destroy it?"

On this question THE REPUBLIC will take its position at the head of the loyal column, and will do its best to keep the old flag flying until the voice of the people shall announce that Republicanism—the synonym of justice and liberty—has again triumphed over the enemies of good government.

THE REPUBLIC calls upon its friends to aid it in the great work of the present and future. It desires each subscriber to send in at least one additional name to help swell its ranks, and thus add to its power and activity. Is it asking too much—in consideration of the valuable material furnished the cause—to ask that our friends everywhere exert themselves to secure for THE REPUBLIC as many new subscribers as possible?

To the Republican press of the country the magazine sends greeting and cheer. The signs of the times indicate a glorious victory in November. Let no effort be relaxed to make it complete and effective. Insist upon thorough organization, a personal canvass of all doubtful or close districts, the distribution of well-considered documents, and the practice of that vigilance which alone can secure success. If our brethren of the press will but do their duty as faithfully as in the past, victory will be certain.

For their generous confidence and warm support the publishers of THE REPUBLIC return thanks, and hope in the future, as in the past, to deserve by well-doing the good-will so often expressed.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

Subscription Paid

FOR ONE YEAR.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VII.

WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY, 1876.

No. 1.

OUR SEVENTH VOLUME.

With this number THE REPUBLIC enters upon its seventh volume. On the threshold of the most important political campaign in our history the publishers of the magazine feel the weight of the responsibilities which the new volume imposes upon them. Yet strong in the consciousness of being engaged in the cause of justice and good government, animated by a just pride in the work of the Republican party, impressed with the belief that no other organization can replace it, or secure to the people so much of personal liberty and respect at home and abroad, and encouraged by the liberal support which has been given to the magazine by the leading citizens of every State and Territory, the publishers of THE REPUBLIC are determined to take no steps backward, but to make the seventh volume even better than the ones preceding it.

The work is an unselfish one. Every dollar of profit goes toward improving the magazine and extending its field of usefulness. Its leading articles are the gratuitous contributions of able political writers, who have no selfish ends to serve, but who labor for the perpetuity of the Republican party because they see in it the only safety for the nation, the preservation of its liberties, the growth of intelligence, the protection and encouragement of free labor, and through these vital elements of national strength, the advancement of civilization throughout the world.

THE REPUBLIC calls upon loyal citizens everywhere for their support. By contributing to its subscription list they aid in the great work in which it is engaged. In return they receive a fund of information necessary to an enlightened knowledge of public affairs to be found in no other periodical.

The information imparted through THE REPUBLIC, will be of especial value to those citizens who expect to take an active part in the pending campaign. To such its value cannot be overestimated. Its facts will be reliable; its advice the result of experience and wisdom; and its conclusions as safe as human sagacity can make them.

To its exchanges throughout the country THE REPUBLIC sends greeting. Their friendly notices and words of confidence have inspired it to greater efforts to increase its usefulness. From their columns it has gained a knowledge of the strength of the loyal sentiment throughout the country, and on this knowledge it bases the belief that the victory this fall will be even more decisive than that of 1872.

Hard work is to be done everywhere. Organization must be complete to be effective. There must be no drones in the hive. Men, women, and children who love their country and who desire to see it prosper must do all they can to contribute to the general work. They may not, as individuals, do much, but as organizations they can mould public opinion, and keep burning brightly the camp fires of patriotism throughout the land. THE REPUBLIC will labor to this end, and it calls upon its friends to extend to it the support which its labors require, and which it hopes by well-doing to deserve.

THE WORK OF THE CINCINNATI CONVENTION.

A good beginning is a safe guarantee of successful results. The delegated representatives of the Republican party have done their work well. The country, from Maine to Oregon, gives a hearty indorsement to the nominees for President and Vice President. The great majority of the body-politic, whose highest aspirations are to see the cardinal principles of Republicanism sustained in their purity and strength, are inspired with new life and a nobler patriotism. This first important political work of the Centennial year is the harbinger of a new era in the life of the nation. Men have been selected whose social and political records are without a stain or a blemish. The impress of their lives will become a mark of distinction upon the national policy. Men in and out of office will be made to feel that honest purposes and acts are the safest avenues to public confidence and high respect. Character rather than wealth will be made the standard of worth, and its attainment will become more the ruling principle in the future than it has been during the period that has elapsed since the close of the demoralizing war, from the effects of which the country is still so sadly suffering. The people accept the nominations under an inspiring conviction that wiser ways and better days are coming.

THE CONVENTION.

First Day's Proceedings.

At six minutes before noon, Wednesday, June 14th, Governor Morgan called the convention to order, and introduced Rev. Dr. Mullin, of Covington, Ky., who opened the proceedings with prayer. Exposition Hall was filled to its utmost capacity, there being about 7,000 persons present, and about as many more were refused tickets of admission. The arrangements for the delegates and the press were good. The platform was placed near the center of the hall, and elevated about six feet above the floor.

THE OPENING ADDRESS, BY GOVERNOR MORGAN.

Mr. Morgan followed the prayer with an address, saying: The day and hour had arrived when the representatives of the Republican party were invited to assemble to nominate candidates for President and Vice President. The tion are the most many years. In the midst of a war the Union. He pro-ling political events owing out of that suggested by the national committee that the party would not fulfill its whole duty unless it specifically declared for a constitutional amendment prohibiting slavery. This was received with great satisfaction. The amendment was ratified by twenty-nine States. Lincoln proclaimed it, and from that hour the sun has not risen upon a slave. [Applause.] The chairman urged an adherence to honest money, and suggested a constitutional amendment making the Presidential term six years, and the incumbent ineligible for re-election. [Applause.] He referred to General Grant as the splendid soldier and patriot. [Partial applause.] The chairman also favored the elevation of the civil service by instituting all needful and proper reforms, and said the candidates now nominated should be men whose lives give assurance of their sympathy.

POMEROY TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN.

At the conclusion Governor Morgan, in the name of the National Committee, nominated Hon. Theodore M. Pomeroy, of New York, for temporary chairman. The nomination was unanimously adopted, and Messrs. Baldwin, of Michigan, and Van Zandt, of Rhode Island, were appointed to conduct the temporary chairman to the platform. Mr. Pomeroy came forward amid great applause, and after saying "I thank you most heartily for the compliment conferred by calling me to preside over the temporary organization of this convention," he addressed the convention as follows:

SPEECH OF MR. POMEROY.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: I thank you most heartily for the compliment conferred by calling me to preside over the temporary organization of this Convention. I have been so long withdrawn from practical participation in political affairs that it is in obedience to custom rather than my own inclination that I occupy even a few moments of your time in the consideration of the political situation and of the principles so long and so successfully intrusted to the keeping of the Republican party. Events have chased each other so rapidly from the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln to the closing year of the administration of General Grant, fraught with such fundamental changes in the whole theory and practice of government, that the consideration of them in the briefest manner is precluded upon an occasion such as this. Brief as may be considered the existence of the Republican party none other in the history of the nation has for so long a consecutive period controlled its government without encountering popular defeat and still withstanding popular jealousy of political ascendancy long continued by any party, it is within the power of this convention to designate the coming President of the United States. Our folly may concede what the wisdom of the opposition cannot achieve—our defeat at the polls in November. But such defeat can come from no other source. We are not met here as contending factions within the party to test, under various leaderships, our relative strength, but as representatives accepting a high responsibility, to extract from the crucible of conflicting opinions that type of American statesmanship which shall be accepted as a worthy embodiment of the principles of the party. Men as well as measures are to be weighed in the balance during the coming canvass, and neither must be found wanting to insure success. The Republican party cannot continue to live by reason of its splendid achievements of the past, nor the Democratic party expect to be returned to power upon its glittering promises of reform in the future. The former has but to present men—representatives of its principles; the latter must discover both men and principles. In former days, when party ties were firmer, when the immediate pressure of impending national calamities hedged us about and compelled party fidelity, the platform carried along the man, whoever he might be. Party ties are looser now, and no platform is buoyant enough to float an unworthy candidate.

The necessity of the continuance of the administrative policy of the Republican party, while not so apparent in immediate results, is as commanding, respecting future consequences, as at any time in its history. We are told that it has accomplished its mission, and therefore has no longer a claim to live. Well, if it has, and the time for its dissolution has come, it can die triumphantly, exclaiming with the apostle of old, "I have fought a good fight, and have kept the faith." It has fulfilled many missions; it fulfilled the mission of its birth in neutralizing the disastrous effects of the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, in saving to freedom the great Territories of the Northwest and bringing California into the sisterhood of States, undefiled by slavery and adorned like a bride in the glitter of her golden promise. It fulfilled the mission of its youth in accepting the irrepressible conflict, and it was a mission worth living for, to have saved a nationality like ours, to have found 4,000,000 slaves and to have raised them to the dignity of American citizenship, and to have reconstructed the Federal Constitution so as to place the liberties of the citizen and the credit of the nation upon foundations strong enough to endure anything except the infelicity of a Democratic administration.

The mission of the manhood of the Republican party, our mission of to-day, is to establish on sure foundations, and make secure for the coming ages, the fruits of the war debt and of taxation through which the present has been achieved. The benefits to be derived by the individual citizen from the fourteenth and fifteenth constitutional amendments are to be secured through such appropriate legislation as Congress may devise. I ask the freedmen of the South if they are ready to accept the Democratic party as the source of power from which is to flow the appropriate legislation to give effect to those amendments. I ask a candid public if the only anarchy that exists in the South to-day is not the anarchy caused by the opposition of the Democratic party, as such, to the principles adopted in the work of reconstruction, and now a part of the fundamental law of the land?

The Democratic party claims to accept the situation respecting the sacredness of the national debt and the inviolability of the national credit, and yet twenty million dollars of taxation will not make good the annual loss to the American people from the undefined and undefinable attitude and intentions of that party in regard to the payment of the principal of the public debt. In the prosecution of the war to overthrow the rebellion, for the purpose of procuring the ready money to pay the army and navy and to provide the immense material of war, it became necessary to suspend specie payments, to make a forced loan from the people by declaring the greenback a legal tender in payment of public and private indebtedness, and yet, while claiming to be in favor of resumption of specie payments at some indefinite time and by means of some undefined process, although eleven years have passed since the close of the war, it bitterly opposes the payment of this forced loan or the taking of the first practical step toward resuming our position among the solvent nations of the civilized world.

No, gentlemen, the late war was not a mere prize-fight for national supremacy; it was the outgrowth of the conflict of irreconcilable moral, social, and political forces. Democracy had its lot with the moral, social, and political forces of the cause which was lost; the Republican party with those which triumphed and survived. The preservation of the results of that victory devolves upon us here and now. Democracy has no tradition of the past, no impulses of the present, no aspirations for the future fitting it for this task. The reaction of 1874 has already spent itself in a vain effort to realize the situation. It has simply demonstrated that no change in the machinery of the Government can be had outside of the Republican party without drawing with it a practical nullification of the great work of reconstruction of the financial chaos and administrative revolution. The present House of Representatives has succeeded in nothing except the development of its own incapacity.

From the inception of the Republican party in 1855 it has kept pace with the progress of the times, accepting the early added responsibility of war, emancipation, taxation, and reconstruction, until the brightest pages of American history are but the lifestay of the Republican party. Of the whole mass of its constitutional amendments and legislative enactments it takes the responsibility, without apology. It has often erred, but it has never feared to act; and through its action the nation has lived. There has been corruption, but when it was discovered the order went forth, "Let no guilty man escape," and the order has been executed. There has been want of harmony, but a platform unwavering in its declaration of principles, with candidates worthy of it, will weld together, as of old, into an unconquerable army the great liberty-loving, law-abiding majority of the voters of the United States, and stamp with enduring success the results of the deliberations of this convention.

The speech was well received, as it deserved to be. It elicited earnest applause from every part of the building. The reference to the order, "Let no guilty man escape!" was received with especial fervor, which was renewed when he said that the order had been executed. In conclusion Mr. Pomeroy asked the further pleasure of the convention.

OTHER TEMPORARY OFFICERS.

On motion, Irving M. Bean, of Wisconsin, and H. H. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, were appointed temporary secretaries, and E. W. Hicks appointed sergeant-at-arms.

NOMINATION OF COMMITTEES.

The roll of States and Territories was then called for the nomination of committees on resolutions, credentials, organization, and rules of order of business. On motion, it was agreed to pass in the roll-call the States and Territories in which there are contesting delegations.

RESOLUTION ON ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. McPherson, of Pennsylvania, offered a resolution that when the convention adjourns it be to 11 o'clock to-morrow, at which time it will proceed to the nomination, with two speeches of ten minutes each, or one of twenty minutes, for each nominee.

THE GERMAN REPUBLICAN SENTIMENT.

Mr. Vance, of New York, offered a series of resolutions from the Republican Germans, indicating the German sentiment on the school, Sabbath, immigration, and other questions.

NEW YORK REFORMERS.

Mr. Curtis, of New York, presented the address of the Republican Reform Club of New York, which he asked to have read. Objection being made, the question was put to the convention, which was decided by an overwhelming vote to hear it. Mr. Curtis in response to calls to take the platform, proceeded to the stage amidst loud applause from both the floor and the galleries, and read the address of June 6 as heretofore published. The reference of the address to return to specie payments and thorough civil service reform elicited cheers. Reference to oligarchy of Federal office-holders in connection with a New York Senator called forth applause from the galleries and partial applause from the floor.

The conclusion of the reading was followed by prolonged and tumultuous applause and cries of "speech," "speech." Amid which Mr. Curtis returned to his seat.

The Reform Club's address was referred to the Committee on Resolutions without debate.

RESOLUTIONS — WOMEN'S RIGHTS — REFERENCE WITHOUT DEBATE.

Mr. Mason, of New York, offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas we remember with gratitude the services of the loyal women of the country—

Resolved, We favor bestowal of political rights on all loyal citizens regardless of sex. [Laughter and applause.]

Referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

On motion of Mr. Pierce, of Mass., it was resolved that all addresses, memorials, and resolutions be referred without reading or debate.

OTHER ADDRESSES.

Senator Logan, Governor Noyes, Rev. Mr. Garnett, (colored,) of New York, Fred. Douglas, (colored,) of Washington, and Wm. A. Howard, of Michigan, made short and appropriate addresses. Mr. Howard said the success of the Republican party depended on enlisting the sympathies of all classes in it. Two classes have been heard from, and now he came forward to represent the great party of cripples. He referred to his election in the early days of the party. Since then the party had been making a history with a rapidity never approached by any other. It is the party of liberty. The Democratic party claims the right of liberty, also the liberty to murder the negroes and assassinate white men's reputations. Mr. Howard, during part of his speech, occupied his seat rising frequently as he warmed up to his subject, and standing until his limbs were exhausted. Michigan, he said, had never trailed the Republican banner. She will triumphantly cast her vote for the candidate of this convention. But he earnestly urged that while they stand by the sentiment, "Let no guilty man escape," to see to it also that no honest man shall have his reputation assassinated. [Great applause.]

THE GERMANS.

A. J. Dittenhoffer, of N. Y. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the National German Republican convention, recently assembled in this city, over which I had the honor to preside, and in which twenty States were represented, I desire to present the following resolutions, to three of which I desire to call particular attention: First, advocating, in view of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in declaring State legislation on the subject of the protection of immigrants unconstitutional, that the National Government legislate on the subject. Second, demanding a revision of treaties between the foreign governments affecting naturalization and expatriation. Third, demanding non-sectarian schools [cheers] and

TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY,

[applause,] as recommended by the President of the United States in his message. [Applause.] I ask the permission of this convention that a committee of three, of which the Hon. Simon Wolf is chairman, be allowed to attend the session of the Committee on Resolutions and discuss them.

The secretary then read the resolutions, they being referred to the committee. They are as follows:

The German Republican delegates of the United States in convention assembled, in the city of Cincinnati, June 12 and 13, 1876, have adopted the following declaration of principles for the coming campaign, and present the same to the National Republican convention for its favorable consideration.

First. We declare our unalterable adherence to the principles of the Republican party, recognizing in their perpetuation the only safeguard of the Republic.

Second. Free, non-sectarian schools; compulsory education, and taxation of church property, as expressed in the late message of the President of the United States.

Third. No recognition of any system of worship by the State or Federal Government, Sunday being recognized by the individual and not in the Constitution of the United States. All legislation seeking to abridge the personal rights of the citizen, with respect to its observance, is unconstitutional.

Fourth. The protection of immigrants by the Federal power is an indispensable necessity; legislation fostering and protecting this important factor in the prosperity of the Republic must be at once devised, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court declaring State legislation unconstitutional.

Fifth. In a republic there can be but one class of citizens. The laws must give the same protection abroad as at home. Any discrimination between those adopted and those native-born are unjust, and such legislation and is unworthy of American statesmanship. Therefore we demand a revision of existing treaties with foreign Governments, especially that of Germany, affecting naturalization and expatriation.

SAVORS OF KNOW-NOTHINGISM,

Sixth. The honor and integrity of the Republic lies primarily in a regulated system of civil service, based on moral character and capacity, and not solely on political service.

Seventh. Opposition to all inflation and repudiation heresies, and no step backward on the road to resumption.

Eighth. The maintenance of every amendment to the Constitution by the Federal power, and especially the rigid enforcement of every law affecting citizens South.

Ninth. The Nation is supreme, and not the State.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Credentials.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

Mr. Loring, from the Committee on Permanent Organization, reported as follows:

PRESIDENT, EDWARD M'PHERSON, OF PENNSYLVANIA;

secretary, Irving M. Bean, of Wisconsin. Also a long list of vice presidents. (Mr. McPherson had been replaced on the Committee on Resolutions by Wm. B. Mann, of Philadelphia.) The name of Ben. Wade as one of the vice presidents elicited applause.

After some discussion of the motion to postpone the consideration of the report on permanent organization until after the contesting delegations had been settled, the motion was tabled and the report was adopted.

Mr. Pomeroy appointed Mr. Orton of New York, Mr. Donnan of Iowa, and Mr. McCormick of Arizona, a committee to conduct the permanent president to the chair.

M'PHERSON'S ADDRESS.

Mr. McPherson on taking the chair said: "Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Convention, no one of you knows better than myself how entirely unworthy I am of this high honor. It has come to me not only unsought, but with a feeling of absolute and uncontrollable surprise. But I have been reared in the school of duty, and in the politics of Pennsylvania it is a fundamental doctrine that every Republican shall do his whole duty. [Applause.] And therefore I am here to accept this honor tendered by your committee and ratified by yourselves as an honor tendered to the great old Commonwealth which has sent me as one of its delegates to this convention since 1856. In no one of the great contests has she ever faltered, [applause,] and in this Centennial convention she has turned an inflexible, defiant face to the enemy. She says no truce with treason, malignity, hate, or anything that is not national. [Applause.] She has determined to roll up for the nominees of this convention a majority such as will entitle her to continue to be what she has long been—and I say it with all respect—foremost in the Republican caucus." [Cheers.]

The Committee on Rules reporting that they were not ready to report, the convention adjourned until 10 o'clock Thursday, June 15.

Second Day's Proceedings.

At 11:08 President McPherson called the convention to order, and presented Rev. Geo. Beecher, who opened the proceedings with prayer.

George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, presented a memorial of the National Woman's Suffrage Association. As this paper must go to the Committee on Resolutions, Mr. Hoar moved that Mrs. Sara J. Spencer be heard by the convention for ten minutes. Agreed to. [Applause.]

Mrs. Spencer came forward. She proceeded to present in a concise form the claims of the women citizens to practical recognition, and criticised the failure of the speakers yesterday to plead for them. The conclusion of her brief speech was received with applause.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. Cessna, from the Committee on Rules and Order of Business, made the following report:

To the Honorable the President and Members of the Republican National Convention: Your committee to whom was referred the matter of rules and order of business beg leave to submit the following rules, including the order of business for the government of this convention, as follows, to wit:

Rule 1. Upon all subjects before the convention the States shall be called in alphabetical order, and next the Territories and the District of Columbia.

Rule 2. Each State shall be entitled to double the number of its Senators and Representatives in Congress, according to the late apportionment, and each Territory and the District of Columbia shall be entitled to two votes. The votes of each delegation shall be reported by its chairman.

Rule 3. The report of the committee on credentials shall be disposed of before the report of the committee on platform and resolutions is acted upon, and the report of the committee on platform and resolutions shall be disposed of before the convention proceeds to the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President.

Rule 4. In making the nomination for President and Vice President in no case shall the calling of the roll be dispensed with when it shall appear that any candidate has received the majority of votes cast. The president of the convention shall announce the question to be, "Shall the nomination of the candidates be made unanimous?" but if no candidate shall have received a majority of the votes, the Chair shall direct the vote to be again taken, which shall be repeated until some candidate shall have received a majority of the votes cast, and when any State has announced its vote it shall so stand until the ballot is announced, unless in case of a numerical error.

Rule 5. When a majority of the delegates of any two States shall demand that a vote be recorded, the same shall be taken by the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, the secretary calling the roll of States and Territories in the order heretofore stated, and the District of Columbia.

Rule 6. In the record of the votes by States the vote of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia shall be announced by the chairman, and in case the votes of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall be divided the chairman shall announce the number of votes cast for any candidate or for or against any proposition.

Rule 7. When the previous question shall be demanded by the majority of the delegates from any State, and the demand seconded by two or more States, and the call sustained by a majority of the convention, the question shall then be proceeded with and disposed of according to the rules of the House of Representatives in similar cases.

Rule 8. No member shall speak more than once on the same question, nor longer than five minutes, unless by leave of the convention, except that delegates presenting the name of a candidate shall be allowed ten minutes in presenting the name of such candidate.

Rule 9. The rules of the House of Representatives shall be the rules of this convention, so far as they are applicable and not inconsistent with foregoing rules.

Rule 10. A Republican national committee shall be appointed, to consist of one member from each State, Territory, and District represented in this convention.

The roll shall be called, and the delegation from each State, Territory, and District shall name through their chairman a person to act as member of such committee.

JOHN CRESSNA, Chairman,
R. A. DAWSON, Secretary.

THE PLATFORM.

The Committee on Resolutions reported the following platform, which was read by General Hawley:

When, in the economy of Providence, this land was to be purged of human slavery, and when the strength of the Government of the people, by the people, for the people, was to be demonstrated, the Republican party came into power. Its deeds have passed into history, and we look back to them with pride, incited by their memories and high aims for the good of our country and mankind; and, looking to the future with unfaltering courage, hope, and purpose, we, the representatives of the party in National Convention assembled, make the following declaration of principles:

First. The United States of America is a nation, not a league. By the combined workings of the National and State Governments under their respective Constitutions the rights of every citizen are secured at home and protected abroad and the common welfare promoted.

Second. The Republican party has preserved those governments to the hundredth anniversary of the nation's birth, and they are now embodiments of the great truths spoken at its cradle, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that for the attainment of these ends governments have been instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; until these truths are cheerfully obeyed, or if needed be vigorously enforced, the work of the Republican party is unfinished.

Third. The permanent pacification of the Southern section of the Union, the complete protection of all its citizens in the free enjoyment of all their rights, are duties to which the Republican party is sacredly pledged. [Applause.] The power to provide for the enforcement of the principles embodied in the recent constitutional amendments is vested by those amendments in the Congress of the United States, and we declare it to be the solemn obligation of the legislative and executive departments of the Government to put into immediate and vigorous exercise all their constitutional powers for removing any just causes of discontent on the part of any class, and securing to every American citizen complete liberty and exact equality in the exercise of all civil, political, and public rights. [Applause.]

To this end we imperatively demand a Congress and Chief Executive whose courage and fidelity to these duties shall not falter until these results are placed beyond dispute or recall. [Applause.]

Fourth. In the first act of Congress signed by President Grant the National Government assumed to remove any doubts of purpose to discharge all just obligations to public creditors, and solemnly pledged its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for redemption of the United States notes in coin. [Cheers.] Commercial prosperity, public merits, and national credit demand that this promise be fulfilled by a continuous and steady progress to specie payment. [Loud and long continued applause.]

Fifth. Under the Constitution the President and heads of Departments are to make nominations for office, the Senate is to advise and consent to appointments, and the House of Representatives is to accuse and prosecute faithless officers. The best interests of the public service demand that this distinction be respected, that Senators and Representatives who may be judges and accusers should not dictate appointments to office. The invariable rule for appointments should have reference to the honesty, fidelity, and capacity of appointees, giving to the party in power those places where harmony and vigor of administration require its policy to be represented, but permitting all others to be filled by persons selected with the sole reference to efficiency of public service and the right of citizens to share in the honor of rendering faithful service to the country.

Sixth. We rejoice in the quickened conscience of the people concerning political affairs, and will hold all public officers to a rigid responsibility, and engage that the prosecution and punishment of all who betray official trust shall be speedy, thorough, and unsparing. [Cheers.]

Seventh. The public school system of the several States is the bulwark of the American Republic, and with a view to its security and permanence we recommend an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the application of any public funds or property for the benefit of any school or institution under sectarian control. [Great cheering, continued several minutes. In response to repeated calls General Hawley read the plank a second time, and the delegates and audience repeated cheers.]

Eighth. The revenue necessary for current expenditures and the obligations of the public debt must be largely derived from the duties upon importations, which, so far as possible, should be adjusted to promote the interest of American labor and advance the prosperity of the whole country. [Cheers.]

Ninth. We reaffirm our opposition to further grants of the public lands to corporations and monopolies, and demand that the national domain be devoted to free homes for the people.

Tenth. It is the imperative duty of the Government to modify existing treaties with European Governments, that the same protection shall be afforded to adopted American citizens that is given to native-born, and all necessary laws be passed to protect emigrants in the absence of power in the State for that purpose.

Eleventh. It is the immediate duty of Congress to fully investigate the effect of the emigration and importation of Mongolians on the moral and material interests of the country.

Twelfth. The Republican party recognizes with approval the substantial advance recently made towards the establishment of equal rights for women by the many important amendments effected by Republican legislatures in the laws which concern the personal and property relations of wives, mothers, and widows, and by the appointment and election of women to the superintendence of education, charities, and other public trusts; the honest demands of this class of citizens for additional rights and privileges and immunities should be treated with respectful consideration. [Applause.]

Thirteenth. The Constitution confers upon Congress sovereign power over the Territories of the United States for their government, and in the exercise of this power it is the right and duty of Congress to prohibit and extirpate in the Territories that relic of emand such nd and the tions in all the nation

ailors must will always ves for the kindest re-

cate all sec-

We thereat the Dem-ope of suc-
f a united rts of those
the nation,
tion of the t a success
tional strife nd human

Democratic aracter and
th treason,
he House of nd opportunity of the nation's recent foes; with reasserting and applauding in the National Capitol the sentiments of unrepented rebellion with sending Union soldiers to the rear with deliberately proposing to repudiate the plighted faith of the Government; with being equally false and imbecile upon the overshadowing financial question; with thwarting the ends of justice by its partisan mismanagement and obstruction of investigation; with proving itself, through the period of its ascendancy in the lower house of Congress, utterly incompetent to administer the Government. We warn the country against trusting a party thus alike unworthy, recreant, and incapable. [Cheers.]

Seventeenth. The National Administration merits commendation for its honorable work in the management of domestic and foreign affairs, and President Grant deserves the continued and hearty gratitude of the American people for his patriotism and his immense service in war and in peace. [Cheers.]

NOMINATIONS FOR PRESIDENT.

The following names were then presented of gentlemen as candidates for the Presidency. The record of each was presented in a brief address by the gentleman presenting the name, and occasionally by other friends:

Hon. Marshall Jewell, by Mr. Kelly, of Connecticut.

Hon. Oliver P. Morton, by R. W. Thompson, of Indiana.

Hon. B. H. Bristow, by General Harlan, of Kentucky.

Hon. J. G. Blaine, by Mr. Ingersoll, of Illinois.

Hon. Roscoe Conkling, by Mr. Woodford, of New York.

Hon. R. B. Hayes, by Governor Noyes, of Ohio.

Hon. J. F. Hartranft, by Mr. Bartholomew, of Pennsylvania.

The convention then adjourned until ten o'clock Friday.

Third Day's Proceedings.

The Republican National Convention completed its labors Friday by nominating Governor Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for the Presidency, and Hon. William A. Wheeler, of New York, for the Vice Presidency. The balloting began as soon as the Convention met in the morning. Before the result of the first ballot was announced Mississippi wished to correct her vote, which raised a question whether this could be done under the rules adopted the day before on this subject. After a brief explanation, the correction was allowed, and the result of the ballot was announced by the Secretary. There was no choice, the highest number of votes being given for Mr. Blaine, which was with reas al Cap million rears ate the being radad-ng the mem prov-

and terly ent
g
and ion uk en re

rt-
]

THE WORK OF THE CINCINNATI CONVENTION.

A good beginning is a safe guarantee of successful results. The delegated representatives of the Republican party have done their work well. The country, from Maine to Oregon, gives a hearty indorsement to the nominees for President and Vice President. The great majority of the body-politic, whose highest aspirations are to see the cardinal principles of Republicanism sustained in their purity and strength, are inspired with new life and a nobler patriotism. This first important political work of the Centennial year is the harbinger of a new era in the life of the nation. Men have been selected whose social and political records are without a stain or a blemish. The impress of their lives will become a mark of distinction upon the national policy. Men in and out of office will be made to feel that honest purposes and acts are the safest avenues to public confidence and high respect. Character rather than wealth will be made the standard of worth, and its attainment will become more the ruling principle in the future than it has been during the period that has elapsed since the close of the demoralizing war, from the effects of which the country is still so sadly suffering. The people accept the nominations under an inspiring conviction that wiser ways and better days are coming.

THE CONVENTION.

First Day's Proceedings.

At six minutes before noon, Wednesday, June 14th, Governor Morgan called the convention to order, and introduced Rev. Dr. Mullin, of Covington, Ky., who opened the proceedings with prayer. Exposition Hall was filled to its utmost capacity, there being as sis-tes was

and

AN. with our ves ted ites
The most

In war pro-nts hat
the ties

that the party would not fulfill its whole duty unless it specifically declared for a constitutional amendment prohibiting slavery. This was received with great satisfaction. The amendment was ratified by twenty-nine States. Lincoln proclaimed it, and from that hour the sun has not risen upon a slave. [Applause.] The chairman urged an adherence to honest money, and suggested a constitutional amendment making the Presidential term six years, and the incumbent ineligible for re-election. [Applause.] He referred to General Grant as the splendid soldier and patriot. [Partial applause.] The chairman also favored the elevation of the civil service by instituting all needful and proper reforms, and said the candidates now nominated should be men whose lives give assurance of their sympathy.

POMEROY TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN.

At the conclusion Governor Morgan, in the name of the National Committee, nominated Hon. Theodore M. Pomeroy, of New York, for temporary chairman. The nomination was unanimously adopted, and Messrs. Baldwin, of Michigan, and Van Zandt, of Rhode Island, were appointed to conduct the temporary chairman to the platform. Mr. Pomeroy came forward amid great applause, and after saying "I thank you most heartily for the compliment conferred by calling me to preside over the temporary organization of this convention," he addressed the convention as follows:

SPEECH OF MR. POMEROY.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: I thank you most heartily for the compliment conferred by calling me to preside over the temporary organization of this Convention. I have been so long withdrawn from practical participation in political affairs that it is in obedience to custom rather than my own inclination that I occupy even a few moments of your time in the consideration of the political situation and of the principles so long and so successfully intrusted to the keeping of the Republican party. Events have chased each other so rapidly from the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln to the closing year of the administration of General Grant, fraught with such fundamental changes in the whole theory and practice of government, that the consideration of them in the briefest manner is precluded upon an occasion such as this. Brief as may be considered the existence of the Republican party none other in the history of the nation has for so long a consecutive period controlled its government without encountering popular defeat and still withstanding popular jealousy of political ascendancy long continued by any party, it is within the power of this convention to designate the coming President of the United States. Our folly may concede what the wisdom of the opposition cannot achieve—our defeat at the polls in November. But such defeat can come from no other source. We are not met here as contending factions within the party to test, under various leaderships, our relative strength, but as representatives accepting a high responsibility, to extract from the crucible of conflicting opinions that type of American statesmanship which shall be accepted as a worthy embodiment of the principles of the party. Men as well as measures are to be weighed in the balance during the coming canvass, and neither must be found wanting to insure success. The Republican party cannot continue to live by reason of its splendid achievements of the past, nor the Democratic party expect to be returned to power upon its glittering promises of reform in the future. The former has but to present men—representatives of its principles; the latter must discover both men and principles. In former days, when party ties were firmer, when the immediate pressure of impending national calamities hedged us about and compelled party fidelity, the platform carried along the man, whoever he might be. Party ties are looser now, and no platform is buoyant enough to float an unworthy candidate.

The necessity of the continuance of the administrative policy of the Republican party, while not so apparent in immediate results, is as commanding, respecting future consequences, as at any time in its history. We are told that it has accomplished its mission, and therefore has no longer a claim to live. Well, if it has, and the time for its dissolution has come, it can die triumphantly, exclaiming with the apostle of old, "I have fought a good fight, and have kept the faith." It has fulfilled many missions; it fulfilled the mission of its birth in neutralizing the disastrous effects of the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, in saving to freedom the great Territories of the Northwest and bringing California into the sisterhood of States, undefiled by slavery and adorned like a bride in the glitter of her golden promise. It fulfilled the mission of its youth in accepting the irrepressible conflict, and it was a mission worth living for, to have saved a nationality like ours, to have found 4,000,000 slaves and to have raised them to the dignity of American citizenship, and to have reconstructed the Federal Constitution so as to place the liberties of the citizen and the credit of the nation upon foundations strong enough to endure anything except the infelicity of a Democratic administration.

The mission of the manhood of the Republican party, our mission of to-day, is to establish on sure foundations, and make secure for the coming ages, the fruits of the war debt and of taxation through which the present has been achieved. The benefits to be derived by the individual citizen from the fourteenth and fifteenth constitutional amendments are to be secured through such appropriate legislation as Congress may devise. I ask the freedmen of the South if they are ready to accept the Democratic party as the source of power from which is to flow the appropriate legislation to give effect to those amendments. I ask a candid public if the only anarchy that exists in the South to-day is not the anarchy caused by the opposition of the Democratic party, as such, to the principles adopted in the work of reconstruction, and now a part of the fundamental law of the land?

The Democratic party claims to accept the situation respecting the sacredness of the national debt and the inviolability of the national credit, and yet twenty million dollars of taxation will not make good the annual loss to the American people from the undefined and undefinable attitude and intentions of that party in regard to the payment of the principal of the public debt. In the prosecution of the war to overthrow the rebellion, for the purpose of procuring the ready money to pay the army and navy and to provide the immense material of war, it became necessary to suspend specie payments, to make a forced loan from the people by declaring the greenback a legal tender in payment of public and private indebtedness, and yet, while claiming to be in favor of resumption of specie payments at some indefinite time and by means of some undefined process, although eleven years have passed since the close of the war, it bitterly opposes the payment of this forced loan or the taking of the first practical step toward resuming our position among the solvent nations of the civilized world.

No, gentlemen, the late war was not a mere prize-fight for national supremacy; it was the outgrowth of the conflict of irreconcilable moral, social, and political forces. Democracy had its lot with the moral, social, and political forces of the cause which was lost; the Republican party with those which triumphed and survived. The preservation of the results of that victory devolves upon us here and now. Democracy has no tradition of the past, no impulses of the present, no aspirations for the future fitting it for this task. The reaction of 1874 has already spent itself in a vain effort to realize the situation. It has simply demonstrated that no change in the machinery of the Government can be had outside of the Republican party without drawing with it a practical nullification of the great work of reconstruction of the financial chaos and administrative revolution. The present House of Representatives has succeeded in nothing except the development of its own incapacity.

From the inception of the Republican party in 1855 it has kept pace with the progress of the times, accepting the early added responsibility of war, emancipation, taxation, and reconstruction, until the brightest pages of American history are but the lifestay of the Republican party. Of the whole mass of its constitutional amendments and legislative enactments it takes the responsibility, without apology. It has often erred, but it has never feared to act; and through its action the nation has lived. There has been corruption, but when it was discovered the order went forth, "Let no guilty man escape," and the order has been executed. There has been want of harmony, but a platform unwavering in its declaration of principles, with candidates worthy of it, will weld together, as of old, into an unconquerable army the great liberty-loving, law-abiding majority of the voters of the United States, and stamp with enduring success the results of the deliberations of this convention.

The speech was well received, as it deserved to be. It elicited earnest applause from every part of the building. The reference to the order, "Let no guilty man escape!" was received with especial fervor, which was renewed when he said that the order had been executed. In conclusion Mr. Pomeroy asked the further pleasure of the convention.

OTHER TEMPORARY OFFICERS.

On motion, Irving M. Bean, of Wisconsin, and H. H. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, were appointed temporary secretaries, and E. W. Hicks appointed sergeant-at-arms.

NOMINATION OF COMMITTEES.

The roll of States and Territories was then called for the nomination of committees on resolutions, credentials, organization, and rules of order of business. On motion, it was agreed to pass in the roll-call the States and Territories in which there are contesting delegations.

RESOLUTION ON ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. McPherson, of Pennsylvania, offered a resolution that when the convention adjourns it be to 11 o'clock to-morrow, at which time it will proceed to the nomination, with two speeches of ten minutes each, or one of twenty minutes, for each nominee.

THE GERMAN REPUBLICAN SENTIMENT.

Mr. Vance, of New York, offered a series of resolutions from the Republican Germans, indicating the German sentiment on the school, Sabbath, immigration, and other questions.

NEW YORK REFORMERS.

Mr. Curtis, of New York, presented the address of the Republican Reform Club of New York, which he asked to have read. Objection being made, the question was put to the convention, which was decided by an overwhelming vote to hear it. Mr. Curtis in response to calls to take the platform, proceeded to the stage amidst loud applause from both the floor and the galleries, and read the address of June 6 as heretofore published. The reference of the address to return to specie payments and thorough civil service reform elicited cheers. Reference to oligarchy of Federal office-holders in connection with a New York Senator called forth applause from the galleries and partial applause from the floor.

The conclusion of the reading was followed by prolonged and tumultuous applause and cries of "speech," "speech." Amid which Mr. Curtis returned to his seat.

The Reform Club's address was referred to the Committee on Resolutions without debate.

RESOLUTIONS — WOMEN'S RIGHTS — REFERENCE WITHOUT DEBATE.

Mr. Mason, of New York, offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas we remember with gratitude the services of the loyal women of the country—

Resolved, We favor bestowal of political rights on all loyal citizens regardless of sex. [Laughter and applause.]

Referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

On motion of Mr. Pierce, of Mass., it was resolved that all addresses, memorials, and resolutions be referred without reading or debate.

OTHER ADDRESSES.

Senator Logan, Governor Noyes, Rev. Mr. Garnett, (colored,) of New York, Fred. Douglas, (colored,) of Washington, and Wm. A. Howard, of Michigan, made short and appropriate addresses. Mr. Howard said the success of the Republican party depended on enlisting the sympathies of all classes in it. Two classes have been heard from, and now he came forward to represent the great party of cripples. He referred to his election in the early days of the party. Since then the party had been making a history with a rapidity never approached by any other. It is the party of liberty. The Democratic party claims the right of liberty, also the liberty to murder the negroes and assassinate white men's reputations. Mr. Howard, during part of his speech, occupied his seat rising frequently as he warmed up to his subject, and standing until his limbs were exhausted. Michigan, he said, had never trailed the Republican banner. She will triumphantly cast her vote for the candidate of this convention. But he earnestly urged that while they stand by the sentiment, "Let no guilty man escape," to see to it also that no honest man shall have his reputation assassinated. [Great applause.]

THE GERMANS.

A. J. Dittenhoffer, of N. Y. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the National German Republican convention, recently assembled in this city, over which I had the honor to preside, and in which twenty States were represented, I desire to present the following resolutions, to three of which I desire to call particular attention: First, advocating, in view of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in declaring State legislation on the subject of the protection of immigrants unconstitutional, that the National Government legislate on the subject. Second, demanding a revision of treaties between the foreign governments affecting naturalization and expatriation. Third, demanding non-sectarian schools [cheers] and

TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY,

[applause,] as recommended by the President of the United States in his message. [Applause.] I ask the permission of this convention that a committee of three, of which the Hon. Simon Wolf is chairman, be allowed to attend the session of the Committee on Resolutions and discuss them.

The secretary then read the resolutions, they being referred to the committee. They are as follows:

The German Republican delegates of the United States in convention assembled, in the city of Cincinnati, June 12 and 13, 1876, have adopted the following declaration of principles for the coming campaign, and present the same to the National Republican convention for its favorable consideration.

First. We declare our unalterable adherence to the principles of the Republican party, recognizing in their perpetuation the only safeguard of the Republic.

Second. Free, non-sectarian schools; compulsory education, and taxation of church property, as expressed in the late message of the President of the United States.

Third. No recognition of any system of worship by the State or Federal Government, Sunday being recognized by the individual and not in the Constitution of the United States. All legislation seeking to abridge the personal rights of the citizen, with respect to its observance, is unconstitutional.

Fourth. The protection of immigrants by the Federal power is an indispensable necessity; legislation fostering and protecting this important factor in the prosperity of the Republic must be at once devised, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court declaring State legislation unconstitutional.

Fifth. In a republic there can be but one class of citizens. The laws must give the same protection abroad as at home. Any discrimination between those adopted and those native-born are unjust, and such legislation and is unworthy of American statesmanship. Therefore we demand a revision of existing treaties with foreign Governments, especially that of Germany, affecting naturalization and expatriation.

SAVORS OF KNOW-NOTHINGISM,

Sixth. The honor and integrity of the Republic lies primarily in a regulated system of civil service, based on moral character and capacity, and not solely on political service.

Seventh. Opposition to all inflation and repudiation heresies, and no step backward on the road to resumption.

Eighth. The maintenance of every amendment to the Constitution by the Federal power, and especially the rigid enforcement of every law affecting citizens South.

Ninth. The Nation is supreme, and not the State.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Credentials.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

Mr. Loring, from the Committee on Permanent Organization, reported as follows:

PRESIDENT, EDWARD M'PHERSON, OF PENNSYLVANIA;

secretary, Irving M. Bean, of Wisconsin. Also a long list of vice presidents. (Mr. McPherson had been replaced on the Committee on Resolutions by Wm. B. Mann, of Philadelphia.) The name of Ben. Wade as one of the vice presidents elicited applause.

After some discussion of the motion to postpone the consideration of the report on permanent organization until after the contesting delegations had been settled, the motion was tabled and the report was adopted.

Mr. Pomeroy appointed Mr. Orton of New York, Mr. Donnan of Iowa, and Mr. McCormick of Arizona, a committee to conduct the permanent president to the chair.

M'PHERSON'S ADDRESS.

Mr. McPherson on taking the chair said: "Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Convention, no one of you knows better than myself how entirely unworthy I am of this high honor. It has come to me not only unsought, but with a feeling of absolute and uncontrollable surprise. But I have been reared in the school of duty, and in the politics of Pennsylvania it is a fundamental doctrine that every Republican shall do his whole duty. [Applause.] And therefore I the great work of reconstruction of the financial chaos and administrative revolution. The present House of Representatives has succeeded in nothing except the development of its own incapacity.

From the inception of the Republican party in 1855 it has kept pace with the progress of the times, accepting the early added responsibility of war, emancipation, taxation, and reconstruction, until the brightest pages of American history are but the lifestay of the Republican party. Of the whole mass of its constitutional amendments and legislative enactments it takes the responsibility, without apology. It has often erred, but it has never feared to act; and through its action the nation has lived. There has been corruption, but when it was discovered the order went forth, "Let no guilty man escape," and the order has been executed. There has been want of harmony, but a platform unwavering in its declaration of principles, with candidates worthy of it, will weld together, as of old, into an unconquerable army the great liberty-loving, law-abiding majority of the voters of the United States, and stamp with enduring success the results of the deliberations of this convention.

The speech was well received, as it deserved to be. It elicited earnest applause from every part of the building. The reference to the order, "Let no guilty man escape!" was received with especial fervor, which was renewed when he said that the order had been executed. In conclusion Mr. Pomeroy asked the further pleasure of the convention.

OTHER TEMPORARY OFFICERS.

On motion, Irving M. Bean, of Wisconsin, and H. H. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, were appointed temporary secretaries, and E. W. Hicks appointed sergeant-at-arms.

NOMINATION OF COMMITTEES.

The roll of States and Territories was then called for the nomination of committees on resolutions, credentials, organization, and rules of order of business. On motion, it was agreed to pass in the roll-call the States and Territories in which there are contesting delegations.

RESOLUTION ON ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. McPherson, of Pennsylvania, offered a resolution that when the convention adjourns it be to 11 o'clock to-morrow, at which time it will proceed to the nomination, with two speeches of ten minutes each, or one of twenty minutes, for each nominee.

THE GERMAN REPUBLICAN SENTIMENT.

Mr. Vance, of New York, offered a series of resolutions from the Republican Germans, indicating the German sentiment on the school, Sabbath, immigration, and other questions.

NEW YORK REFORMERS.

Mr. Curtis, of New York, presented the address of the Republican Reform Club of New York, which he asked to have read. Objection being made, the question was put to the convention, which was decided by an overwhelming vote to hear it. Mr. Curtis in response to calls to take the platform, proceeded to the stage amidst loud applause from both the floor and the galleries, and read the address of June 6 as heretofore published. The reference of the address to return to specie payments and thorough civil service reform elicited cheers. Reference to oligarchy of Federal office-holders in connection with a New York Senator called forth applause from the galleries and partial applause from the floor.

The conclusion of the reading was followed by prolonged and tumultuous applause and cries of "speech," "speech." Amid which Mr. Curtis returned to his seat.

The Reform Club's address was referred to the Committee on Resolutions without debate.

RESOLUTIONS—WOMEN'S RIGHTS—REFERENCE WITHOUT DEBATE.

Mr. Mason, of New York, offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas we remember with gratitude the services of the loyal women of the country—
Resolved, We favor bestowal of political rights on all loyal citizens regardless of sex.
[Laughter and applause.]

Referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

On motion of Mr. Pierce, of Mass., it was resolved that all addresses, memorials, and resolutions be referred without reading or debate.

OTHER ADDRESSES.

Senator Logan, Governor Noyes, Rev. Mr. Garnett, (colored,) of New York, Fred. Douglas, (colored,) of Washington, and Wm. A. Howard, of Michigan, made short and appropriate addresses. Mr. Howard said the success of the Republican party depended on enlisting the sympathies of all classes in it. Two classes have been heard from, and now he came forward to represent the great party of cripples. He referred to his election in the early days of the party. Since then the party had been making a history with a rapidity never approached by any other. It is the party of liberty. The Democratic party claims the right of liberty, also the liberty to murder the negroes and assassinate white men's reputations. Mr. Howard, during part of his speech, occupied his seat rising frequently as he warmed up to his subject, and standing until his limbs were exhausted. Michigan, he said, had never trailed the Republican banner. She will triumphantly cast her vote for the candidate of this convention. But he earnestly urged that while they stand by the sentiment, "Let no guilty man escape," to see to it also that no honest man shall have his reputation assassinated. [Great applause.]

THE GERMANS.

A. J. Dittenhoffer, of N. Y. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the National German Republican convention, recently assembled in this city, over which I had the honor to preside, and in which twenty States were represented, I desire to present the following resolutions, to three of which I desire to call particular attention: First, advocating, in view of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in declaring State legislation on the subject of the protection of immigrants unconstitutional, that the National Government legislate on the subject. Second, demanding a revision of treaties between the foreign governments affecting naturalization and expatriation. Third, demanding non-sectarian schools [cheers] and

TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY,

[applause,] as recommended by the President of the United States in his message. [Applause.] I ask the permission of this convention that a committee of three, of which the Hon. Simon Wolf is chairman, be allowed to attend the session of the Committee on Resolutions and discuss them.

The secretary then read the resolutions, they being referred to the committee. They are as follows:

The German Republican delegates of the United States in convention assembled, in the city of Cincinnati, June 12 and 13, 1876, have adopted the following declaration of principles for the coming campaign, and present the same to the National Republican convention for its favorable consideration.

First. We declare our unalterable adherence to the principles of the Republican party, recognizing in their perpetuation the only safeguard of the Republic.

Second. Free, non-sectarian schools; compulsory education, and taxation of church property, as expressed in the late message of the President of the United States.

Third. No recognition of any system of worship by the State or Federal Government, Sunday being recognized by the individual and not in the Constitution of the United States. All legislation seeking to abridge the personal rights of the citizen, with respect to its observance, is unconstitutional.

Fourth. The protection of immigrants by the Federal power is an indispensable necessity; legislation fostering and protecting this important factor in the prosperity of the Republic must be at once devised, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court declaring State legislation unconstitutional.

Fifth. In a republic there can be but one class of citizens. The laws must give the same protection abroad as at home. Any discrimination between those adopted and those native-born are unjust, and such legislation and is unworthy of American statesmanship. Therefore we demand a revision of existing treaties with foreign Governments, especially that of Germany, affecting naturalization and expatriation.

SAVORS OF KNOW-NOTHINGISM,

Sixth. The honor and integrity of the Republic lies primarily in a regulated system of civil service, based on moral character and capacity, and not solely on political service.

Seventh. Opposition to all inflation and repudiation heresies, and no step backward on the road to resumption.

Eighth. The maintenance of every amendment to the Constitution by the Federal power, and especially the rigid enforcement of every law affecting citizens South.

Ninth. The Nation is supreme, and not the State.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Credentials.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

Mr. Loring, from the Committee on Permanent Organization, reported as follows:

PRESIDENT, EDWARD M'PHERSON, OF PENNSYLVANIA;

secretary, Irving M. Bean, of Wisconsin. Also a long list of vice presidents. (Mr. McPherson had been replaced on the Committee on Resolutions by Wm. B. Mann, of Philadelphia.) The name of Ben. Wade as one of the vice presidents elicited applause.

After some discussion of the motion to postpone the consideration of the report on permanent organization until after the contesting delegations had been settled, the motion was tabled and the report was adopted.

Mr. Pomeroy appointed Mr. Orton of New York, Mr. Donnan of Iowa, and Mr. McCormick of Arizona, a committee to conduct the permanent president to the chair.

M'PHERSON'S ADDRESS.

Mr. McPherson on taking the chair said: "Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Convention, no one of you knows better than myself how entirely unworthy I am of this high honor. It has come to me not only unsought, but with a feeling of absolute and uncontrollable surprise. But I have been reared in the school of duty, and in the politics of Pennsylvania it is a fundamental doctrine that every Republican shall do his whole duty. [Applause.] And therefore I the great work of reconstruction of the financial chaos and administrative revolution. The present House of Representatives has succeeded in nothing except the development of its own incapacity.

From the inception of the Republican party in 1855 it has kept pace with the progress of the times, accepting the early added responsibility of war, emancipation, taxation, and reconstruction, until the brightest pages of American history are but the lifestay of the Republican party. Of the whole mass of its constitutional amendments and legislative enactments it takes the responsibility, without apology. It has often erred, but it has never feared to act; and through its action the nation has lived. There has been corruption, but when it was discovered the order went forth, "Let no guilty man escape," and the order has been executed. There has been want of harmony, but a platform unwavering in its declaration of principles, with candidates worthy of it, will weld together, as of old, into an unconquerable army the great liberty-loving, law-abiding majority of the voters of the United States, and stamp with enduring success the results of the deliberations of this convention.

The speech was well received, as it deserved to be. It elicited earnest applause from every part of the building. The reference to the order, "Let no guilty man escape!" was received with especial fervor, which was renewed when he said that the order had been executed. In conclusion Mr. Pomeroy asked the further pleasure of the convention.

OTHER TEMPORARY OFFICERS.

On motion, Irving M. Bean, of Wisconsin, and H. H. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, were appointed temporary secretaries, and E. W. Hicks appointed sergeant-at-arms.

NOMINATION OF COMMITTEES.

The roll of States and Territories was then called for the nomination of committees on resolutions, credentials, organization, and rules of order of business. On motion, it was agreed to pass in the roll-call the States and Territories in which there are contesting delegations.

RESOLUTION ON ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. McPherson, of Pennsylvania, offered a resolution that when the convention adjourns it be to 11 o'clock to-morrow, at which time it will proceed to the nomination, with two speeches of ten minutes each, or one of twenty minutes, for each nominee.

THE GERMAN REPUBLICAN SENTIMENT.

Mr. Vance, of New York, offered a series of resolutions from the Republican Germans, indicating the German sentiment on the school, Sabbath, immigration, and other questions.

NEW YORK REFORMERS.

Mr. Curtis, of New York, presented the address of the Republican Reform Club of New York, which he asked to have read. Objection being made, the question was put to the convention, which was decided by an overwhelming vote to hear it. Mr. Curtis in response to calls to take the platform, proceeded to the stage amidst loud applause from both the floor and the galleries, and read the address of June 6 as heretofore published. The reference of the address to return to specie payments and thorough civil service reform elicited cheers. Reference to oligarchy of Federal office-holders in connection with a New York Senator called forth applause from the galleries and partial applause from the floor.

The conclusion of the reading was followed by prolonged and tumultuous applause and cries of "speech," "speech." Amid which Mr. Curtis returned to his seat.

The Reform Club's address was referred to the Committee on Resolutions without debate.

RESOLUTIONS—WOMEN'S RIGHTS—REFERENCE WITHOUT DEBATE.

Mr. Mason, of New York, offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas we remember with gratitude the services of the loyal women of the country—

Resolved, We favor bestowal of political rights on all loyal citizens regardless of sex. [Laughter and applause.]

Referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

On motion of Mr. Pierce, of Mass., it was resolved that all addresses, memorials, and resolutions be referred without reading or debate.

OTHER ADDRESSES.

Senator Logan, Governor Noyes, Rev. Mr. Garnett, (colored,) of New York, Fred. Douglas, (colored,) of Washington, and Wm. A. Howard, of Michigan, made short and appropriate addresses. Mr. Howard said the success of the Republican party depended on enlisting the sympathies of all classes in it. Two classes have been heard from, and now he came forward to represent the great party of cripples. He referred to his election in the early days of the party. Since then the party had been making a history with a rapidity never approached by any other. It is the party of liberty. The Democratic party claims the right of liberty, also the liberty to murder the negroes and assassinate white men's reputations. Mr. Howard, during part of his speech, occupied his seat rising frequently as he warmed up to his subject, and standing until his limbs were exhausted. Michigan, he said, had never trailed the Republican banner. She will triumphantly cast her vote for the candidate of this convention. But he earnestly urged that while they stand by the sentiment, "Let no guilty man escape," to see to it also that no honest man shall have his reputation assassinated. [Great applause.]

THE GERMANS.

A. J. Dittenhoffer, of N. Y. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the National German Republican convention, recently assembled in this city, over which I had the honor to preside, and in which twenty States were represented, I desire to present the following resolutions, to three of which I desire to call particular attention: First, advocating, in view of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in declaring State legislation on the subject of the protection of immigrants unconstitutional, that the National Government legislate on the subject. Second, demanding a revision of treaties between the foreign governments affecting naturalization and expatriation. Third, demanding non-sectarian schools [cheers] and

TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY,

[applause,] as recommended by the President of the United States in his message. [Applause.] I ask the permission of this convention that a committee of three, of which the Hon. Simon Wolf is chairman, be allowed to attend the session of the Committee on Resolutions and discuss them.

The secretary then read the resolutions, they being referred to the committee. They are as follows:

The German Republican delegates of the United States in convention assembled, in the city of Cincinnati, June 12 and 13, 1876, have adopted the following declaration of principles for the coming campaign, and present the same to the National Republican convention for its favorable consideration.

First. We declare our unalterable adherence to the principles of the Republican party, recognizing in their perpetuation the only safeguard of the Republic.

Second. Free, non-sectarian schools; compulsory education, and taxation of church property, as expressed in the late message of the President of the United States.

Third. No recognition of any system of worship by the State or Federal Government, Sunday being recognized by the individual and not in the Constitution of the United States. All legislation seeking to abridge the personal rights of the citizen, with respect to its observance, is unconstitutional.

Fourth. The protection of immigrants by the Federal power is an indispensable necessity; legislation fostering and protecting this important factor in the prosperity of the Republic must be at once devised, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court declaring State legislation unconstitutional.

Fifth. In a republic there can be but one class of citizens. The laws must give the same protection abroad as at home. Any discrimination between those adopted and those native-born are unjust, and such legislation and is unworthy of American statesmanship. Therefore we demand a revision of existing treaties with foreign Governments, especially that of Germany, affecting naturalization and expatriation.

SAVORS OF KNOW-NOTHINGISM,

Sixth. The honor and integrity of the Republic lies primarily in a regulated system of civil service, based on moral character and capacity, and not solely on political service.

Seventh. Opposition to all inflation and repudiation heresies, and no step backward on the road to resumption.

Eighth. The maintenance of every amendment to the Constitution by the Federal power, and especially the rigid enforcement of every law affecting citizens South.

Ninth. The Nation is supreme, and not the State.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Credentials.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

Mr. Loring, from the Committee on Permanent Organization, reported as follows:

PRESIDENT, EDWARD M'PHERSON, OF PENNSYLVANIA;

secretary, Irving M. Bean, of Wisconsin. Also a long list of vice presidents. (Mr. McPherson had been replaced on the Committee on Resolutions by Wm. B. Mann, of Philadelphia.) The name of Ben. Wade as one of the vice presidents elicited applause.

After some discussion of the motion to postpone the consideration of the report on permanent organization until after the contesting delegations had been settled, the motion was tabled and the report was adopted.

Mr. Pomeroy appointed Mr. Orton of New York, Mr. Donnan of Iowa, and Mr. McCormick of Arizona, a committee to conduct the permanent president to the chair.

M'PHERSON'S ADDRESS.

Mr. McPherson on taking the chair said: "Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Convention, no one of you knows better than myself how entirely unworthy I am of this high honor. It has come to me not only unsought, but with a feeling of absolute and uncontrollable surprise. But I have been reared in the school of duty, and in the politics of Pennsylvania it is a fundamental doctrine that every Republican shall do his whole duty. [Applause.] And therefore I am here to accept this honor tendered by your committee and ratified by yourselves as an honor tendered to the great old Commonwealth which has sent me as one of its delegates to this convention since 1856. In no one of the great contests has she ever faltered, [applause,] and in this Centennial convention she has turned an inflexible, defiant face to the enemy. She says no truce with treason, malignity, hate, or anything that is not national. [Applause.] She has determined to roll up for the nominees of this convention a majority such as will entitle her to continue to be what she has long been—and I say it with all respect—foremost in the Republican caucus.” [Cheers.]

The Committee on Rules reporting that they were not ready to report, the convention adjourned until 10 o'clock Thursday, June 15.

Second Day's Proceedings.

At 11:08 President McPherson called the convention to order, and presented Rev. Geo. Beecher, who opened the proceedings with prayer.

George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, presented a memorial of the National Woman's Suffrage Association. As this paper must go to the Committee on Resolutions, Mr. Hoar moved that Mrs. Sara J. Spencer be heard by the convention for ten minutes. Agreed to. [Applause.]

Mrs. Spencer came forward. She proceeded to present in a concise form the claims of the women citizens to practical recognition, and criticised the failure of the speakers yesterday to plead for them. The conclusion of her brief speech was received with applause.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. Cessna, from the Committee on Rules and Order of Business, made the following report:

To the Honorable the President and Members of the Republican National Convention: Your committee to whom was referred the matter of rules and order of business beg leave to submit the following rules, including the order of business for the government of this convention, as follows, to wit:

Rule 1. Upon all subjects before the convention the States shall be called in alphabetical order, and next the Territories and the District of Columbia.

Rule 2. Each State shall be entitled to double the number of its Senators and Representatives in Congress, according to the late apportionment, and each Territory and the District of Columbia shall be entitled to two votes. The votes of each delegation shall be reported by its chairman.

Rule 3. The report of the committee on credentials shall be disposed of before the report of the committee on platform and resolutions is acted upon, and the report of the committee on platform and resolutions shall be disposed of before the convention proceeds to the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President.

Rule 4. In making the nomination for President and Vice President in no case shall the calling of the roll be dispensed with when it shall appear that any candidate has received the majority of votes cast. The president of the convention shall announce the question to be, "Shall the nomination of the candidates be made unanimous?" but if no candidate shall have received a majority of the votes, the Chair shall direct the vote to be again taken, which shall be repeated until some candidate shall have received a majority of the votes cast, and when any State has announced its vote it shall so stand until the ballot is announced, unless in case of a numerical error.

Rule 5. When a majority of the delegates of any two States shall demand that a vote be recorded, the same shall be taken by the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, the secretary calling the roll of States and Territories in the order heretofore stated, and the District of Columbia.

Rule 6. In the record of the votes by States the vote of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia shall be announced by the chairman, and in case the votes of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall be divided the chairman shall announce the number of votes cast for any candidate or for or against any proposition.

Rule 7. When the previous question shall be demanded by the majority of the delegates from any State, and the demand seconded by two or more States, and the call sustained by a majority of the convention, the question shall then be proceeded with and disposed of according to the rules of the House of Representatives in similar cases.

Rule 8. No member shall speak more than once on the same question, nor longer than five minutes, unless by leave of the convention, except that delegates presenting the name of a candidate shall be allowed ten minutes in presenting the name of such candidate.

Rule 9. The rules of the House of Representatives shall be the rules of this convention, so far as they are applicable and not inconsistent with foregoing rules.

Rule 10. A Republican national committee shall be appointed, to consist of one member from each State, Territory, and District represented in this convention.

The roll shall be called, and the delegation from each State, Territory, and District shall name through their chairman a person to act as member of such committee.

JOHN CRESSNA, Chairman,
R. A. DAWSON, Secretary.

THE PLATFORM.

The Committee on Resolutions reported the following platform, which was read by General Hawley:

When, in the economy of Providence, this land was to be purged of human slavery, and when the strength of the Government of the people, by the people, for the people, was to be demonstrated, the Republican party came into power. Its deeds have passed into history, and we look back to them with pride, incited by their memories and high aims for the good of our country and mankind; and, looking to the future with unfaltering courage, hope, and purpose, we, the representatives of the party in National Convention assembled, make the following declaration of principles:

First. The United States of America is a nation, not a league. By the combined workings of the National and State Governments under their respective Constitutions the rights of every citizen are secured at home and protected abroad and the common welfare promoted.

Second. The Republican party has preserved those governments to the hundredth anniversary of the nation's birth, and they are now embodiments of the great truths spoken at its cradle, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that for the attainment of these ends governments have been instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; until these truths are cheerfully obeyed, or if needed be vigorously enforced, the work of the Republican party is unfinished.

Third. The permanent pacification of the Southern section of the Union, the complete protection of all its citizens in the free enjoyment of all their rights, are duties to which the Republican party is sacredly pledged. [Applause.] The power to provide for the enforcement of the principles embodied in the recent constitutional amendments is vested by those amendments in the Congress of the United States, and we declare it to be the solemn obligation of the legislative and executive departments of the Government to put into immediate and vigorous exercise all their constitutional powers for removing any just causes of discontent on the part of any class, and securing to every American citizen complete liberty and exact equality in the exercise of all civil, political, and public rights. [Applause.]

To this end we imperatively demand a Congress and Chief Executive whose courage and fidelity to these duties shall not falter until these results are placed beyond dispute or recall. [Applause.]

Fourth. In the first act of Congress signed by President Grant the National Government assumed to remove any doubts of purpose to discharge all just obligations to public creditors, and solemnly pledged its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for redemption of the United States notes in coin. [Cheers.] Commercial prosperity, public merits, and national credit demand that this promise be fulfilled by a continuous and steady progress to specie payment. [Loud and long continued applause.]

Fifth. Under the Constitution the President and heads of Departments are to make nominations for office, the Senate is to advise and consent to appointments, and the House of Representatives is to accuse and prosecute faithless officers. The best interests of the public service demand that this distinction be respected, that Senators and Representatives who may be judges and accusers should not dictate appointments to office. The invariable rule for appointments should have reference to the honesty, fidelity, and capacity of appointees, giving to the party in power those places where harmony and vigor of administration require its policy to be represented, but permitting all others to be filled by persons selected with the sole reference to efficiency of public service and the right of citizens to share in the honor of rendering faithful service to the country.

Sixth. We rejoice in the quickened conscience of the people concerning political affairs, and will hold all public officers to a rigid responsibility, and engage that the prosecution and punishment of all who betray official trust shall be speedy, thorough, and unsparing. [Cheers.]

Seventh. The public school system of the several States is the bulwark of the American Republic, and with a view to its security and permanence we recommend an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the application of any public funds or property for the benefit of any school or institution under sectarian control. [Great cheering, continued several minutes. In response to repeated calls General Hawley read the plank a second time, and the delegates and audience repeated cheers.]

Eighth. The revenue necessary for current expenditures and the obligations of the public debt must be largely derived from the duties upon importations, which, so far as possible, should be adjusted to promote the interest of American labor and advance the prosperity of the whole country. [Cheers.]

Ninth. We reaffirm our opposition to further grants of the public lands to corporations and monopolies, and demand that the national domain be devoted to free homes for the people.

Tenth. It is the imperative duty of the Government to modify existing treaties with European Governments, that the same protection shall be afforded to adopted American citizens that is given to native-born, and all necessary laws be passed to protect emigrants in the absence of power in the State for that purpose.

Eleventh. It is the immediate duty of Congress to fully investigate the effect of the emigration and importation of Mongolians on the moral and material interests of the country.

Twelfth. The Republican party recognizes with approval the substantial advance recently made towards the establishment of equal rights for women by the many important amendments effected by Republican legislatures in the laws which concern the personal and property relations of wives, mothers, and widows, and by the appointment and election of women to the superintendence of education, charities, and other public trusts; the honest demands of this class of citizens for additional rights and privileges and immunities should be treated with respectful consideration. [Applause.]

Thirteenth. The Constitution confers upon Congress sovereign power over the Territories of the United States for their government, and in the exercise of this power it is the right and duty of Congress to prohibit and extirpate in the Territories that relic of barbarism, polygamy; and we demand such legislation as shall secure this end and the supremacy of American institutions in all the Territories. [Applause.]

Fourteenth. The pledges which the nation has given to our soldiers and sailors must be fulfilled; a grateful people will always hold those who periled their lives for the country's preservation in the kindest remembrance.

Fifteenth. We sincerely deprecate all sectional feeling and tendencies. We therefore note with deep solicitude that the Democratic party counts as its chief hope of success upon the electoral vote of a united South, secured through the efforts of those who were recently arrayed against the nation, and we invoke the earnest attention of the country to the grave truth that a success open sectional strife honor and human ge the Democratic e in character and hized with treason,

trol of the House of amph and opportunity of the nation's recent foes; with reasserting and applauding in the National Capitol the sentiments of unrepented rebellion; with sending Union soldiers to the rear; with deliberately proposing to repudiate the plighted faith of the Government; with being equally false and imbecile upon the overshadowing financial question; with thwarting the ends of justice by its partisan mismanagement and obstruction of investigation; with proving itself, through the period of its ascendancy in the lower house of Congress, utterly incompetent to administer the Government. We warn the country against trusting a party thus alike unworthy, recreant, and incapable. [Cheers.]

Seventeenth. The National Administration merits commendation for its honorable work in the management of domestic and foreign affairs, and President Grant deserves the continued and hearty gratitude of the American people for his patriotism and his immense service in war and in peace. [Cheers.]

NOMINATIONS FOR PRESIDENT.

The following names were then presented of gentlemen as candidates for the Presidency. The record of each was presented in a brief address by the gentleman presenting the name, and occasionally by other friends:

Hon. Marshall Jewell, by Mr. Kelly, of Connecticut.

Hon. Oliver P. Morton, by E. W. Thompson, of Indiana.

Hon. B. H. Bristow, by General Harlan, of Kentucky.

Hon. J. G. Blaine, by Mr. Ingersoll, of Illinois.

Hon. Roscoe Conkling, by Mr. Woodford, of New York.

Hon. R. B. Hayes, by Governor Noyes, of Ohio.

Hon. J. F. Hartranft, by Mr. Bartholomew, of Pennsylvania.

The convention then adjourned until ten o'clock Friday.

Third Day's Proceedings.

The Republican National Convention completed its labors Friday by nominating Governor Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for the Presidency, and Hon. William A. Wheeler, of New York, for the Vice Presidency. The balloting began as soon as the Convention met in the morning. Before the result of the first ballot was announced Mississippi wished to correct her vote, which raised a question whether this could be done under the rules adopted the day before on this subject. After a brief explanation, the correction was allowed, and the result of the ballot was announced by the Secretary. There was no choice, the highest number of votes being given for Mr. Blaine, which was

285. Governor Hayes had 61. The second ballot being taken, a protracted debate occurred on the right of four Pennsylvania delegates to vote independently, the rules under which the delegation acted requiring them to vote as a unit. In the end, the Convention sustained the decision of the Chair, allowing the delegates to vote as they pleased. The result of the ballot was then announced, which still showed no choice. The balloting still went on, until, on the sixth ballot, Blaine had 308 votes. The names of Morton and Bristow were then withdrawn, and the seventh and decisive ballot gave Governor Hayes 384 and Mr. Blaine 351. Governor Hayes was then declared the nominee of the Convention amid the wildest enthusiasm. For Vice President Hon. William A. Wheeler, of New York; Stewart L. Woodford, of New York; Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut; Theodore Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, and Marshall Jewell, of Connecticut, were successively nominated. The roll was called, and about half the States had responded, giving Mr. Wheeler 366 votes, when, on motion, his nomination was made unanimous. This completed its work, and the Sixth National Republican Convention adjourned with cheers for the ticket.

SUMMARY OF THE BALLOTS.

	7th ballot.
38	351
31	21
11	21
95	21
13	384
50	21
4	21
2	21

THE CANDIDATES.

Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio.

Rutherford B. Hayes, nominated at Cincinnati by the Republican National Convention for President of the United States, has had an active and important career. He was born in Delaware county, Ohio, October 4, 1822. After receiving a collegiate education at Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, he studied law in Columbus. With the preparation he thus received he entered the law school of Harvard College, where he graduated with credit. He began the practice of his profession in Cincinnati, and met with so much success that he was appointed solicitor of that city. His genial manners and abilities made him exceedingly popular in his profession, and his practice was rapidly growing when the war of the rebellion broke out. He was then just thirty-nine years old, in the prime of his life, and engaged in many important cases, but the call for troops was the signal for him to throw aside the advocate's gown and don the equipments of the soldier. He proffered his services at once, and on the 7th of June, 1861, was appointed major of the 21st Ohio Infantry Regiment. His first services were with Rosecrans in West Virginia, and for a time was judge advocate on that General's staff. In November, 1862, he was promoted to a lieutenant colonelcy, and took command of the 23d Ohio, and continued to command it during the spring campaign in West Virginia and the autumn campaign under General McClellan, until he was wounded at the battle of South Mountain. He was appointed colonel of the 79th Ohio in the same year, but was prevented by his wound from assuming command, and afterward was transferred back to his former regiment, the 23d. December 25, 1862, he was placed in command of the 1st Brigade, Kanawha division, and held it until Sheridan's victory at Winchester in September, 1864, when he took command of the division, leading it through the battles of the year. Whitelaw Reid, now editor of the New York Tribune, relates this anecdote of Col. Hayes at the battle of Winchester: He was leading his men when suddenly they came upon a morass some sixty yards wide; the water was waist deep, and in some places overgrown with heavy moss almost strong enough to bear the weight of a man, while the bottom was soft and miry. This seemed an impassable obstacle, and the whole line hesitated. Not so Colonel Hayes. He immediately spurred his horse into the slough under a thick fire of artillery and musketry. When about half-way across the animal mired hopelessly, and then the Colonel dismounted and waded out, being the first man to cross. All through the action he was exposed continually; men fell all around him, and his adjutant fell by his side.

In October, 1864, Colonel Hayes was appointed brigadier general for gallant and meritorious services at the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek. In the spring of 1865 he commanded an expedition against West Virginia, and was engaged in it when the war terminated. Afterward he was promoted to be major general for gallant and distinguished services. He was engaged in much severe service and participated in many battles, but always bore himself bravely. Before the close of the war he had been elected a member of Congress, and in 1866 was re-elected by a handsome majority. Although he was a good lawyer, and had often pleaded before the courts, General Hayes sat in Congress three sessions without making a single elaborate speech. He was noted, however, for his fidelity to Republican convictions and soundness of judgment. In 1867 he was unanimously nominated by his party for Governor of Ohio, and after a spirited contest, in which he took an active part, and which was complicated by the negro-suffrage question, he was elected over Allen G. Thurman by a majority of 2,983 in a total poll of 483,000, thus narrowly escaping defeat. He was renominated at the close of his term in 1869, and again elected by a majority of 7,518 over George H. Pendleton. In 1872 he was beaten for Congress by Banning, Liberal Republican. The next appearance of Mr. Hayes as a candidate was last fall, when he was nominated on the public-school platform after a sharp contest with Judge Taft, whose candidacy in opposition to Mr. Hayes was no fault of his own, but was due entirely to a letter Mr. Hayes wrote the night before the convention, of which the following is an extract: "I cannot allow my name to be used against Judge Taft. He became a candidate after I declined. He is a pure man and a sound Republican. I will not accept a nomination obtained with contest against him." The pith and point of the voluntary indorsement which Mr. Hayes gives to Judge Taft lies in the fact that the contest of the convention turned on an energetic effort to placate the Liberal Republican party by his nomination. The attempt failed, and Mr. Hayes became a candidate, accepting the nomination by telegraph the same day. In the bitter and hard-fought canvass which followed Mr. Hayes was successful, receiving a majority of 5,544 over Mr. Allen. Governor Hayes is not a brilliant man, but an able one, and will make an excellent President. He is no orator, but an efficient administrative officer. The last public office he held was that of Centennial commissioner, which he resigned when he became Governor.

William A. Wheeler, of New York.

Hon. William A. Wheeler, unanimously nominated for Vice President, is one of the best men who could have been chosen for the place, and one who will give satisfaction to the party throughout the nation. Like Gen. Hayes, who heads the ticket, his character is negative rather than positive. He has long been in public life, but until recently has achieved but slight distinction. Mr. Wheeler was born at Malone, Franklin county, New York, June 3, 1819. He had a common-school education, and spent a year in study at the University of Vermont, and, after passing seven years in a lawyer's office in his native county, was in 1849 admitted to practice. After a few years' practice he was elected district attorney as a Democrat, and when his term expired (he had changed his politics in the mean time) he was elected to the New York Assembly as a Whig. He was re-elected, but at the close of his second term retired to the practice of his profession. A short time afterward he became first the cashier of his local bank, a position he held for fourteen years, and at a later date became president of the Ogdensburg and Rouse's Point railroad, continuing in the supervision of the road for eleven years. At the death of the Whig party he became a Republican, and entered the State Senate in January, 1858, to take his seat in the first legislature fully controlled by the Republican party. Robert Campbell, a Republican, was at the time Lieutenant Governor, and the position of president pro tem., to which Mr. Wheeler was elected, was, in consequence, a purely honorary position. Through the sessions of 1858 and 1859 Mr. Wheeler served in the Senate, and in the fall of the last-named year he was elected to a seat in the Thirty-seventh Congress, carrying all three of the strong Republican counties—Clinton, Essex, and Franklin—of which the Sixteenth district was then composed. In all the debates and votes of that exciting war session he was uniformly on the side of the Union and liberty. After the close of the Thirty-seventh Congress Mr. Wheeler did not enter public service until 1867, when he was elected a member of the New York State Constitutional Convention, of which he was subsequently chairman. His only speech was made upon taking the chair, and it was radical to the core, and strongly pronounced in favor of negro suffrage. In 1868 he was re-elected a member of Congress, and has served continuously down to this day. He has been either chairman or a member of many important committees, and it was he who arranged the famous Louisiana compromise. He is a friend of public improvements and a good protectionist, whose nomination will be heartily seconded in Pennsylvania.

CONGRATULATORY DISPATCHES.

Immediately upon hearing of Governor Hayes' nomination the following dispatches passed over the wires:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1876.

To Gov. R. B. Hayes, Columbus, Ohio:

I offer you my sincerest congratulations on your nomination. It will be alike my highest pleasure, as well as my first political duty, to do the utmost in my power to promote your election. The earliest moments of my returning and confirmed health will be devoted to securing you as large a vote in Maine as she would have given for myself.

J. G. BLAINE.

To which Mr. Hayes replied:

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 16.

To Hon. J. G. Blaine, Washington:

Your kind dispatch has touched me most deeply, and I hardly know how to respond in fitting terms. The assurance of your sympathy and support nerves me for the contest in which we are about to enter. With your returning health and strength, I see an omen of Republican success. I trust that all trace of your recent illness will speedily disappear; that you may speedily be restored to your family and country. I send you my first dispatch since the nomination.

R. B. HAYES.

